Penrod and even violet and her sisters however did not care to get into unecess ary trouble with the glandelinians if they could help it, and too it would have been useless to argue with those Gargoylian cardes, and therefore they were trying to consider how best to avoid an engagement with them.They realized too that their numbers were too great! and they would be very difficult difficult to overcome if they risked a fight with them, and when they heard what the glandelinian chieftian threatened to do to them if they were captured, violet whispered something to Penrod while she grasped the reins of the horses that pulled the rig.The cavarly had deployed to their rear at the approach of the glandelinians with their frightful lances at the ready.Then the six horses started at the gallop and the cavarly followed but in a long menacing line so menancing that in truth the Gargoylian Guards were literally chilled, and were afraid to change, despite how their general raved cursed, and swore, and called them cowards, fraidy cats,and so on.As they reached a small glen Joice whispered to Penrod;

"Not the horses so at full speed Penrod dear.The glandelinians are afraid to follow, see how ...

...are not close quarters are of no avail against lances."

Penrod understood and too their own horses that drew the rig were good runners...

Penrod who personally drove for them on this emergency had selected the road that led to the plain within easy sight of the main christian lines so they made directly for it.A party of glandelinians who had been encouraged to try something by threatens of their officers easily crossed this path and tried to clash with the van of the christian cavarly but these were overcome readily by one of penrods well aimed hand grenades, which though it did not explode amongst them caused them to scatter in all directions to save themselves from any more. The glandelinians really were scared. One or two other glandelinian patrols in purple uniforms heard the approach of these children anvtheir cavarly escort but only stopped with bewildered looks to gaze around them, but instead of interfering they too beat a hasty retreat being afraid of the lances of the christian cavarly...

However the Gargoylian general himself had lost no time instarting the chase. He and a considerable number of his men who dared to follow rode their horses so fast that they might have over overtaken the christian cavarly and the little girls and used their carbines and pistols to good effect before they could have reached the plainbut from another location a great host of fierce Abyssinian cavarly suddenly appeared from another direction and then came a Dragoon of Blue Gray coated Calverinians from an opposite direction.There was nOOOO no use to fight for they were overwhelmed and to avoid massacre the glandelinians surrendered themselves as prisoners.In order to try and capture the beautiful brave little girls and destroy them, they had ran themselves into a trap.violet and her sisters now realized they were safe, and therefore theycontinued on toard the christian lines with the new cavarly following them with their sullen prisoners.There were a great number of of picketas toard the entrance to the christian lines, but they could recognize violet and her sisters anywhere and they and their cavarly escorts were allowed to pass after of course the usual customary challenge.They were soon within the christian lines.The Glandelinian general who had made the persuit and got captured with his troopers realized he was foiled and...was in a rage.He was very angry, angry at the Vivian Girls and angry at himself, because now that he had time to realize he remembered that he knew full well, the usual penalty for glandelinians caught chasing any children, and if he had only thought of it in time he would have recklessly fought to the last man than allow himself and his followers to be captured so easily. They would all face the firing squad for chasing the princesses, and even violet and her sisters could not intervene no matter who they were.However it was now too late for regrets, and he determined to face the penalty as all brave soldiers should if such a penalty came out to him

"What shall we do next since we're in the christian lines.shall we gather the troopers and go now or do as Rodney Graves said first."

"Let us find Jennie Turner and also see what sort of an undersea boat it was Penrod dear"said Violet."From what Rodney Graves said I imagine she can do a whole lot to help us..without our getting into a predicament and if we go and get her help we may be able to rescue the parents of Ervic and his sisters and you too Penrod dear"she added with a mischievious smile"may be able to terrorize the enemy by making another big raid.."

"I suppose we can't stop long enough to give the submarine a good looking over."Suggested Angeline" as they rode toard the direction where one of the soldiers pointed out the spot where the submarine was..

"No, we must regain the little boys parents first, and we must first see Miss Turner advice,for too she may be able to warn us of unseen dangers, which we know nothing about and too she can help us as much as possible."

"Of of course you'll punish the Glandelinians for pursuing us."said Ervic.

"Well we don't like to do it"said dear Catharine, "but according to the laws set down by our forchestors and which the Abbiennian Government won't change, we nor our parents have nothing to say.If they were decent soldiers and fought like a army should fight, and not make the worse of the war on children I and my sisters would interfere then under any conditions. No we heard what their general said and he meant it.He would have burned us if he had captured us.If lots of them are made an exap example of maybe we hope it'll care the other Glandelinians of doing such a thing in the future.Therefore since they're so bad, and it would be a sin for us to interfere with the law concerning their death penalty and they would burn us so cruelly why should we worry if they face the firing squad.They understand the laws of God and know it, and if they won't behave notwithstanding then it is their loss not ours."

"You are right"said Penrod ."They don't deserve consideration from anybody.

but will they really face the firing squad."?

"Sure that!"

"For persuading you and your sisters ?"

"It depends on their intention."said Violet."All of us heard including our soldier escort that the captain or general of our persuaders said, and so therefore if he really meant it, they will will face the firing squad or probably worse."

"It depends on whom they are brought before"said Joice."Some of our generals of the sentencing tribunals are awfully severe."

"And if they are charged with persuading us, and the captors witness against them it's too bad for them."said Hettie.

"I hope so"said Jennie with a sigh. "We are treated too mean already, and I'm afraid we are making fools out of ourselves as Dargar said sometimes. We should begin to be mean ourselves. We are justified you no know."

"We will"said Hettie."Hereafter we'll take no more fooling from the glandelinians."

The big pine trees near the small lake which held the Sum.Submarine were not far away from a big central opening in the vast christian christian linew and the Princesses reached them after a short travel in their rig..The huge trees however were not very close together, but nevertheless they were in three rows, and they were so high you would have to look straight up to see their tops.....There was a bi path leading throuh ho ever and beyond these big and beautiful trees they discovered a very beautiful scene.bordered by an immense green lawn and meadows was a great body of water fully two miles miles from shore to shore, the waters of which were beautifully blue and sparkling with little ravelets running across its smooth surface where the breezes touched it.The lake was formed by a small brooklet ruining running into it from some unknown source and in the center of the island appeared an immese Clear shaped something with a strange conning tower in the center.It was not it was not of great extent.There were no boats on either shore and no signs of life could be seen except in the tents around the body of water

"Well "said Violet gazing wistfully at the submarine"We have found the underseaboat.But if Jennie Turner is in the boat examining it how are we going to attract her."

Penrod himself considered the situation gravely... Then he tied his big white handkerchief to his rifle stock and standing at the waters edge waved it as if it were a flag as a signal.However for a time they could observe no response. Again Penrod waved the flag.

"I don't see what good that will do"said Daisy.

"Even if Jennie Turner and some of her followers are in that strange boat, and see us, and see who we are, they haven't any boats to come and get us, and if they bring the thing too close to shore they'll go aground." declared J Hettie...

But those on board the submarine did not need boats as the Vivian Girls soon discovered.The Submarine suddenly began moving tward them, and after it came close enough it swung into the same position it was in before, and then of all of a sudden an opening appeared at the base of the strange boat and from the opening came what appeared to be a slender shaft of steel, reaching out swiftly but steadily across the water,, in the direction of the place where they stood.The violet and her sisters and their brother and companion children this steel arrangement appeared to be a sort of triangle with the base nearest the water.. It came tward them however in the form of an arch stretching out from the underseaboat untill it ends and reached the shore and rested there,, while the other end still remained on the submarine....

Then they discovered that it was a bridge consisting of a steel footway just bread enough for two apoece to trod on, and two slender guide rails one on either side which were connected with the footway by steel bars. The strange bridge appeared to be rather frail and Violet and her sisters and Penrod and Penrod,and the four children feared it would not bear their weight, but Penrod at once called;

And he started to go across holding fast to the rail on either side. so the others summoned their courage and followed after.but before they had gone three steps farther, they all halted for the strange contraption of a bridge was again moving, and returning to the submarine.....

"We need not go across by ourselves after all."said Penrod.So they stood still in their places and let the steel bridge drew them onward.Indeed yhe the bridge drew them well into the sm submarine and soon they found themselves standing in a strange room where two hands onely dressed young boyscout boy-scouts stood on a steel platform to recieve them. Penrod was the first to step from the end of the bridge to the steel platform, followed by Violet,and her sisters , and the four others, and then the bridge disappeared with a slight slight clang of steel and a iron and steel slab covered the opening from which it had emerged.The two young boyscouts bowed profoundly to violet and her sisters and Penrod, saluted the other four, and then one of them said;;;

"Our fair girlscout General bids you welcome Oh Darlings of the Nation/ and Miss Jennie Turner is waiting to recieve you in the main room."

"Lead on"replied Penrod with dignity.

But instead of "leading on,"The platform of steel began to rise carrying them upward through a large square hole above which just fittedvit. A moment later they found themselves within the great interior of the immense submarine where all sorts of machinery was to be seen.Within this was all the machinery that was always supposed to be in an underseaboat.Oin the interior of the submarine, were a number of child scouts richly uniformed.These were much the same as other child scouts in different parts of the christian armies, except that they were not Vivianites and they seemed very merry and contented.They had beautiful heart shaped hats, splendid uniform coats and ample food, and yet by their expressions violet and her sisters decided decided that they were the sort of child scouts that the enemy would need to fear.At the time they entered the great engine room of the underseaboat the Vivian girls were met by two girlscouts in uniform and armed with strange and queer weapons that seemed about half way between pistols and rifles but were like neither. Their boy conductors bowed and left them, and the two girlscouts in uniform led the Vivian girls and Penrod and the four others into the main engine room.

In the engine room surrounded by a dozen or more boy and girlscout officers sat Jennie Turner.She too Ervic was a girl who looked older then violet and her sisters twelve or so at least, and she was elaborately uniformed as if she were a very high girlscout officer,indeed, but though very good looking, she was far from being as pretty as violet and her sisters ..But evidently Jennie Turner did not worry about this fact or was not at all envious for her air and manner betrayed her as very good natured. not at all proud and haughty, and only showed she had a high regard for everybody she knew."She was dangerous to those who were her enemies though . Ervic and his sisters at once decided that she was very good indeed and would give anything to have her as a close companion.Her hair was also golden, and as fair as hers in was hite, and her eyes were violet too.".Her eyes as she calmly examined the four stranger children had a very friendly look in them, and then she turned to violet and her sisters and said;;

"I know why you dear Princesses came, for some of my scouts have told me and I believe I could have some chance to help you".But it will will be a most difficult job though for I have consulted my Oracle which tells me that they may have been brought into that part of the Glandelinian army beyond Jennie Tory.We know nothing of that sector of the country possessed by the enemy and know nothing of the region of Jennie Tory .You are going upon a dangerous adventure I'm afraid my friends."

"Why we can get guides that will lead the way through the Territory of Jennie Tory."cried Penrod."It's a part of Calverinia anyhow whether we know the lay of the land or not."

"Oh indeed"answered Jennie Turner Scornfully."I suppose you will claim next that your fair sisters because they're angel possessed will be able to accomplish anything no matter how difficult."

"Of course "returned Penrod."There's no doubt of it."

Jennie Turner turned to violet,and her sisters.

"Do you make such a claim?"she asked.

By this time Violet and her sisters sisters had decided upon some adventure; or manner rather, for she they knew the character and military tatics of this militant girlscout leader who was haughty and disdainful tward the enemy, and who understood the dangers of any sort of adventure where they did not. She was superior to all others in her knowledge to dangers at any given place.

"I do not want to interfere with your po purpose if you decide upon it"she went on.you understand who and What I am, and your knowledge of that Princesses is well established so you must realize that I can see dangers where you do not.God alone understands understands what an awful big reward the of my generals would really and truly give for your destruction.Of course your Royal Arthority comes not only from your Beloved Parents but also from the very Arch Angels that possess you of whose band you may be celestial members traversing this world which happened to you even when you were first born.But I'm sorry these angels do not impart to you the warnings of such dangers unless they want to try your bravery.There are several countries and several different glandelinian armies in this broad land, each of which has its seperate and most wicked generals.put all these have combined a purpose to plan it to be frightfully dangerous not to approach the Glandelinian camps since you my dear friend Penrod made that famous raid because of poor Jennie.But your intention is surely very chid charitable for you desire to rescue the parents of these four strange foreign children.If the Glandelinians

If the Glandellinians want to try to make fools out of us it would interest the world if they could succeed succeed"she added disdainfully."But in the girl and boyscout troop force we understand that the Glandelinian generals do not understand our ways and therefore do not reign supreme as they believe.Therefore the Glandelinians are impudent to believe that I or any one else could be outwitted by them.But you will need me and other great leaders to accompany you.If you start on that journey alone; the powerful foe may capture you, Penrod dear, and your lovely sisters and destroy you.The Possession of your sisters would need a miracle to save them."

"Pap Pah. The Glandelinian curs.I do not fear them."declared Penrod.

"The Hanley Generals and their Confederates are dangerous."

"Our clever ideas could save us and our generals are greater than they. Let the Glandelinians try to interfere with out plan.Those that try to capture my sisters while I am with them will never return to their own lines. alive.I will see to that."

"Jennie Turner did not like this attitude, for it meant that violet and her sisters very eager for the adventure, and it made her heart ache for she didn't did not never wish to see these fair little girls always run themselves into unusual dangers.The she understood too the object of violet and her sisters in coming here was to have her help in some way to rescue the boys mother and father.She was greatly disappointed in the intention of the Vivian Girls for the reports of the scouts led her to imagine that the vivian girls would sent somewhat some someone and not surely go themselves too near the foe lines. Indeed Jennie Turner reflected that violet and her sisters surely would not be so daring at by heart as usually their adventures showed, and in any event it would be wise not to antegonize them on the plan but do as they wish and give them all the assistance they needed, for to try to turn them from their plan would only cause them to be offended.

"I do not like your intention Princesses"she said "but Your Wills be done. "I've learned a lot recently from a boyscout who I don,t understand who he really is but who goes by the name of "Adeldefob" and he has often pretended to rule thousands of child slaves, but learned lots of information concerning the enemy in the countries nearest to which they always menace where millions move to concentrate and noiknc nowledge the command of their wicked generals, and sometimes there had been no army at all to oppose them. The Glandelinian generals through the reports sent in by "Adeldefob"are well acquainted with your sisters Penrod, and would even give their lives for the destruction of the little Princesses. So when I learned through him there might be concentrations of dangerous armies of the enemy near Jennie Tory I thought our sisters would be wise and remain safely within the encampments.But I understand it is your business to do anything to cause the enemy to be put down and under, not ours and therefore we have to give in but darling Princesses you don't understand how our hearts ache every time you go out upon dangerous adventures.you say you cannot believe it is as dangerous as I believe but that it is full nonsense, but you must know I have never heard of the nature of these Glandelinian armies until now.It is true Princesses I can see in your faces that you are really angel possessed, and it gives me a strange feeling of awe to be in your presence but I must warn you you mustn't mustn't impose on them to save you from every danger for none of us mustn't do anything rash, and you put a law down on that yourselves.Of course I do believe my faith tells me that, that God Loves ydtthatuthe so you little girls so much he may let the angels do anything for you, but then surely you must be careful as maybe the Glandelinians are more dangerous than the evil spirits them selves.You say you are not afraid, and that the angels won't let fear come over you. I believe that, and what else I do believe is that you are the bravest little girls ever seen on the face of the earth.you seven little girls break all records in being successful spies, and often have foiled the enemy. I will give you very much aid all the aid in my power, but understand this she added, proudly rising from her stool to confront them;"You little girls being angel possessed should have strange powers as some angel possessed children do to cause all Glandelinians to flee from in you in the wildest panic.Maybe they don't see your condition or something."

Violet and her sisters looked at each other."

"We don't fear, fear no enemies but they surely don't fear us"said Violet."you believe they shouldn't be able to do anything to us because of our happy condition.That is not so though.If you only understood what happened to poor little Eben Jennie only two or three days ago you would have been shocked.."

"Jennie Turner was indignant at this speech.

"I do not about that"she said"If I had been in Jennie,s place I'd have torn torn that little snakes face so badly the wounds would never heal.They are [illegible] cowards for they flew the coop after that incident.some day they won't believe they're so little and mighty at all.If you my dear Penrod could only hear how many spies are searching for those boys, you would realized how we need to death they must be by this time .I have a captured photograph of those dirty brats."Jennie Turner drew it from a drawer of a small table and she gave it a supercilious look. Then she turned to Penrod and Violet and her sisters.

"I happen to now"said she"These race rascals well and I'll try to capture them as soon as possible.A battle is coming at Jennie Tory soon, so we must rescue the boys parents before that comes.We'll start for the enemys camp to night.Untill that time I shall retain you little Princesses as my beloved guests on board this magnificent submarine we captured and let you give it the once over."

She turned and glanced around the band of girl and boyscout officers who stood silently around her table..

"Jane Melfort"she continued I singling out one of the highest of her girl scout officers"Escort these dear little Princesses to a room and care for them and their brother. and give them food and lodging.As the four foriegners are being aided by them, let them therefore share the same room.you may alsow lead them anywhere around the interior of the underseaboat and show them that the machi machinery appears to be.After I have attended to what I must finish writing I will get ready to help them in their enterprise.put Heavens I wish something good would happen so they wouldn't have to do it."

She resumed her seat, and Jane Melfort bowed low, and said in a humble manner;

"I obey your Excellency's command."Then to The Princesses and Penrod she added"Follow me dears,"and turned to lead them.They followed after giving Jennie Turner a loving friendly look."

However since they came violet and her sisters noticed that all the child scouts now wore an expression of solemnity or of nervious irritation. They now did not appear to be happy.They said nothing however but glanced curiously at them. as they went tward the room selected for them. a Jane Melfort led the Princesses and Penrod to a unusally pretty bun room even for the interior of an underseaboat. he did not say anything to the beautiful children untill she had ushered them into the pretty room comfortably furnished, not did any of the solemn child scouts venture to say anything tothem either.When they were seated, Jane Melfort demanded if they were hungry and finding they were summoned a girlscout and ordered food to be brought. Jane was well acquainted with Violet and her sisters , and they with her and she feared exceedingly for them although in the land of Abbiennia if children are angel possessed, they never change in appearance nor would they grow old nor die, but would go to heaven straight at only the time not appointed by God--therefore unless these angel possessed person or children retain the ordinary of their years it would be difficult to say how many years any one had lived . Angel possessed children and persons usually live either longer than any other person and yet do not die then but go to heaven as if they disappeared disappeared like a spirit. Usually in some cases they do not suffer the loss of parents either. Jane though not really pretty had an attractive pleasant face, even though it was solemn and sad as the faces of all the girl and boyscouts in the submarine showed, and her uniform custom was very rich and elaborate as became any girlscout in waiting upon a friend and superior officer.. Violet and her sisters had observed Jane closely and now asked her in a gentle tone;

"Do you also believe that our attempt to rescue these childrens parten parents is as dangerous as Jennie Turner believes..

"I dare not say, she knows best."replied Jane in a low tone.

"Wha Why are you afraid to speak freely."inquired Violet....

"It's our fear of your danger if you go and do the mission."

"But there is sometimes something else wrong "protested voice. "not knowing whether spies would be amongst us disguised as one of us Jennie Turner doesn't want us to say anything loud."

"Are we not alone then in this submarine."

"Never can tell , Glandelinian spies if there are any can hear anything that we may say to each other----even the slightest whisper"declared Jane Melfort"but Jennie Turner is a wonderful girlscout, as she has told you, and as it is folly to try to oppose her, she can therefore do any thing you wish.She decides to go with you and share the danger with you."

Violet and her sisters and even penrod gazed into her eyes and observed that she desired to say more if she dared .So one closed the door and Penrod stayed outside to see that no one approached the door.

"We may now say things freely"said violet, but we need not say it loud, then no body can overhear us.Penrod will see to it nobody he doesn't know will approach the door."

"Jane Melfort brightened at this.

"Can I trust the f our strangers with you?"she demanded..

"Everybody can trust them."s e exclaimed Daisy.

"Sure they are true and honest, and if I and my sis sisters succeed in rescue n s rescuing their parents, Penrod also will make the enemy sorry they ever stole away any foreign people who have never offended them in any way."

"The glandelinians do not know our intention yet"declared Hettie"but as want you totell us why you,and all the girl and boyscouts are unhappy.Do you fear something about the Glandelinians?No.Well then don't fear about any spies for t here are none here to hear us saying anything,I assure you "

Jane mafort was thoughtf ul a moment; then she said;

"I shall trust your strange companions, P rincesses, for I believe they are true good catholic Christians a s we are otherwise you and your dear sisters who ca n read character would not have had them accompany you on the rescue miss ion. But I do not understand how you can do it, unless you trust in the aid of the possessing angels through the holo help of us God to give you plenty of hope for success and easy escape a terwards. If you understood of the dreadful punishments the Glandelinians inflict upon those who interfere with their wicked plans;; you would not wonder as are so unhappy at the thought of the dangerous adventure you are about toundertake. Of course we are not people who do not believe in the help of possession angels, but s ometimes dangers are so great that it might take miracles for these angels to save you and your sisters. And the question is will they do it.? That might be imposing on them you understand. Many of our once best generals are getting so cowed and f earful of some of the Manleys that they won't fight these glandelinian armies at all unless their christian armies are greater in numbers and have more artillery and cavarly."

"But we surely do not intend to enter the enemys lines nor go too near it."protested Jennie."We only have s come of the Gemini to discover where the childrens parents are located, and we'll come out with a great big force of cavarly and make a fierce attack which we hope will be a success."

"ut that move will be extremely dangerous."

"How"?

"Because o the enemy since Penrods desperate raid is on his guard everywhere.If they capture any one now they never display mercy.The glandelinian soldiery are fiercer, they love no one but themselves and you're in terrible danger if you startion any expedition.You ought to let a lot of spies try and recover the childrens parents and not try anything yourselves. If you u go and do it and escape then the angels sure must do more than they're gi ven credit for.Maybe even the angels don't wish you to make the attempt yourselves." and she trembled as she said it, as if still more afraid of thevterrible consequences.."

"B ut we don't intend to attempt it"declared Daisy."You don't understand us. We are not going even near the enemys lines ourselves.We won't even be within sight of them.Penrod will direct the assault and if it is not a success it ain't our f ault.We won't let him go near the enemy himself, and he said he wouldn't go either unless we do.So you see we are not going anything rash.We see too we have a lot to do also in this war torn land. First place we have got to prevent the enemy w from retaining a foothold on Jennie Lory, and save Big Girl School also. My idea is that neither of the christian armies confronting the various foe armies here are fit to move against the enemy, because the Manleys are too wise.So we'll have to leave the situation up to our Father or Uncle t as they understand what to d o.We proposed to move our armies off f rom this territory, leave Jennie Lory go and menance Big Girl School, but our father is afraid to try that move for fear our army on its retreat would be heavily attacked. But we must do s omething for these f our children, for surely we would do as much more we re our own parents captured."

Her sisters smiled at their little sisters strange council but Joice said in a very anxious tone;

"I surprise I am surprised Days Daisy that you suggest these things, when their parents are yet in the possession of the Glandelinians.That this should be do e there is no doubt, but unless the Gemini spies can help us it would be impossible.But just now too a dreadful ba ttle is sure to come at Jennie tory or Marie C ommann and if the enemy win f rightf ul things may happen to us all.Of course those dreadful enemy generals have so much pride and conciet that they believe they can overcome any christian army that moves again st them, but I believe my own fathers cooperation is very powerful although apparently not as great in powerful military movements and plans a s that possessed by our uncle Manson.He showed that to the enemy at Cei ermine, Evangeline St Claire, and Lebanon."

"I can't blame h im very much for d oing that."remarked Jennie Vivian"for the enemy did many cruel things there."

"One of the weakest things ever done by any one of my poor sisters" said P enrod bitterly and"and which I cannot get over with, is what happened to Jennie two or three days ago.It was indeed very cruel and very wicked for that boyscout Fred Lowden to impose as me and treacherously capture her and bring her into the enemy lines. I discovered also through the capture of a soldier who confessed because he wanted to save his own self that also had that Lowden boy, or his companions f a iled in that dias dastard plot the, meant also to poison my sisters if they had to poison every christian s oldier in the army."

"Do you know the reason ?"asked Jane Melfort.

"I don't s uppose there was any reason except downright heartlessness and supreme wickedness."Replied Angeline Vivian .

"And also"said Jane as some of us discovered that plot to do the posion ing is still going to be attempted."

"Tell us the reason"said Penrod earnestly.

"Well Princesses, that had been plotted since one of you little girls, I believe it was Violet f rustrated Gerald S tarring in his plot to carry very important papers to General Manley and o ther Glandelinian generals.Often I have I iscovered before that they had secretly visited our armies dis disguised as some of our own c ompanions, even while we spied on the enemy and they have often tried to detect you little girls, but so often have you changed your disguises that they could not trace you.They one time were in our lines as we f ound out disguised as three beautiful little girls, and they had wandered through our lines with the purpose of f inding you Princesses and slaying you in ambush.These three rascally boys only used their spying methods with the purpose to destroy you, and the glandelinian generals would have been very glad had they been successful.These Glandelinian boyscouts had taught their own following to even shadow you in se cret; and now to get you should they d iscover w ho you reallly are, and many other things which if it happ ended hamn happened would have caused your to al destruction.That Gerald Starring is the head of a ll the Glandelinian boy and girlscouts, but for fortunately never understood that you and your sisters were continually shadowed by any of us for your mutual protection so to at no one whom we didn't now were allowed to a pproach you either in the company street, in your tent or anywhere else.We w ould don't wish to have anything to h appen to you and your seven sisters Penrod dear because you and they have been always very good and kind to us. You built or constructed for us leaders these wonderful and magnificent troo p of boy and girlscouts, and taught us all how to be careful of all our beautiful uniforms and military clothing.We are always very grateful to you and you r sisters for the se favors, but we do understand that we cannot a lways trust whether all of our numbers are real friends or not as so many glandelinian child scouts had disguise as any one of us and easily get into our camps without detection.These three rascals are jealous of you and your sisters, and always try but secretly to discover what chan es you to be so successful every time you set out upon some enterprise.You will have to be careful and watch out for these boys for I'm afraid some day they may become more successful than suspected as they are more shrewd and clever than a ny of us are.We discovered how Fred Lowden managed to disguise as you Penrod.The three boys were within the christian lines, and without any of you finding it out or suspecting it in the least the three disguised themselves as you y oilet, you Jennie, and joice as much as possible and from Emperor Viviane headquarters stole your big photpgraph which you had hanging up on a wall.They were discovered in the act, and would have been apprehended by General Evans who suspected they were not the real little girls like you as he can read disguises.Frightened by his approach the three boys leaped out of the first story window of the house and escaped before it was too late to be overhauled.I myself witnessed that sad scene poor Jennie went through after that"continued Jane"and so did many of our followers and s at first thought it was Penrod having a quarrel with you and though as felt badly we couldn't interfere.We followed however, and then discovered the h oax and he would have rescued you ourselves a little later but you got away by yourself.General Manley and his Confederates were the only ones in his headquarters, who were glad that the Starring boys s ould attempt to carry through that sort of a plot, but they are awfully angry now, since Fred Lowdens face is so terribly torn, and it was declared by the doctor that he will carry the scars for life..The result of Fred Lowdens treachery, if it went through without his blunder in tearing you into that fury(you Jennie(s f eyes glazed fire)as she thought of it,) would have been terrible for If Penrod would have been suspected of treason no doubt he would not have been allowed to be with you and an opening would have been made in which the enemy could have murdered every one of you little girls at night. Manley is indeed cruel to all

...ge Cornwall in his mouth and a pistol and a sword, and ... said ll all the girls taken in his possession dreadfully. Sir Manly would give anything to ... you capture your little girls for Penrods said, for he believes you, and not Penrod made the raid . All the Glandelinian officers have discovered that too, last, and believe your little Princesses have raided everything about of the place and therefore have many patrols out trying to have you apprehended..That is why we fear for you so greatly when you intend to go out on this interprise."

"This story of the occurance of the few days ago again filled the hearts of violet, and her sisters with sorrow, and again filled Penrod with fury and indignation.

"I now understand"said Penrod"Why those rascally boys outs put over such a plot and when it failed so badly because Jennie scratched his face, and I wish h she had the claws of a tiger at the time(jennie smiled at this) they feared I and my followers would get after him and his companions so they made themselves scarce,,,,"

"Yes Jane Melfort"said"now that you know the situation of it all it is easy to understand. Even while you and your sisters are planning to try and capture those boys, and now to rescue these childrens parents from the enemy, the enemy we discovered have lots of agents secretly over in our lines who would attempt to either capture you themselves, or poison you.If they only could they believe they could deprive Emperor vivian of his military power, because they believe it is through you and your sisters that he is so powerful.Then if they were successful they could easily conquer him and his armies. Armies. Are they have another reason for wanting to capture you and your darling sisters, they fear that you and your sisters may in some way capture those three boys and punish them severely for their treacherious act upon poor Jennie.That is why they have many glandelinians in secret disguise within the christian lines to try to poision all the child scouts in the camp.Of course this attempt to poision us all has frightened us and our leaders now do all the cooking themselves, and allows no one in our quarter master provision stores but they themselves for our safety also lies in preventing you and your sisters from meeting all that horror."

"I suppose the glandelinians will attempt to get us with all their might." observed catherine.

"And would give anything if they had megical powers to help them."added Joice thoughtfully....."

"I do not see how the glandelinian spy agents can even get within our lines with their foul purpose to poison us. "said Angeline Vivian,

"They have many crafty ways, and I guess they mean to do it if they can"suggested Violet."you remember once don't you Jennie when we found that great big live Cobra in your bed, and how we slew it just on time before any of us were were bitten!"

"Yes"she nodded.

But Jane Melfort shook her head with a smile.

"They can not do that again."she said.

"Why not.!"

"I dare not tell you why, but you may understand yourselves."

"I do not believe they will attempt to poison us"Joice declared."I believe they will first attempt to destroy us by some other more cruel means.But we are glad for the warning and will watch for any suspicion or suspicious persons persons following us."

"Those glandelinians can do anything "warned Jane Melfort"They have long expected you and your sisters would interfere with thi them in this war and have been prap preparing for it in astonishing ways.I almost wish we could wipe out all those rascally glandelinian child scouts, for then we would be free from our more dreaded enemies, but under any conditions I do not wish to see any of you go on too dangerous an adventure, for in everything lies your only hope of future happiness and surely you do not deserve any thing wrong to happen to you."

"Penrod will take care of us ,whatever happens."Hettie assured her.but Jane not understanding the extent of Penrod power--which was in fact much greater than violet and her sisters imagined, could not be comforted much by this promise.It was evident however there would be exciting times on the next hour, if they really were to go out on the venture.

For some unknown reason though it was morning unusal darkness was settling down upon everything and when the gloom fell the interior of the great christian camps came lighted with brilliant and enormous camp fires which rendered it bright as day.violet and her sisters thought that the christian camps must surely be beautiful beautiful by night from the outer shore of the big body of water. Because of the recent successes of the beautiful Vivian Girls and because of their presence now within the christian lines there was good revely and feating in good meny of the camps early in the day though it was and the music of many great bands could be plainly heard within the very sub marine, where Penrod,and violet, and her sisters remained with bright Jane Melfort and where they were treated with more consideration then any one could have expected to be.Jane Melfort gave them indeed a nice morning meal, and when they wished to first give themselves a good washing before breakfast, showed them pretty washroom with comfortable little washstand washstands, and washstands, and wished them a very goodand hearty breakfast.

"What do you imagine of all this sisters!"Penrod demanded anxiously, when they were left alone to do their cleaning.

"I'm glad we came."was the reply."for although we may have to face excitement on the hour after, it is necessary that we should first learn of the lay of the land, because as Jane said the Glandelinian leadern are more after us than ever before, they are wild and lawless, and will do us even as much injustice and cruelty as possible.Despite all the dangers we may face our duty therefore is to liberate these poor Foriegn childrens parents from the glandelinians and secure for them their freedom, for would we not do so even more so if even our own parents were prisoners.I have no doubt that we can accomplish this in time.We can do it in too much haste however as it would only frustrate our attempt especially if the enemy get wise to our move."

"Just now though we are in a bad fix"asserted Penrod."If the Gemini fail to discover the location of the prisoners we would not be able to do anything for because it is so dangerous even our father forbade us this time under any condition to go too near the enemys lines, and we must obey. General Manley also may storm the christian lines and if he conquers the christian army he surely won't be nice to us if he managed to capture us, and if his Cond federates win s the battle, the y'll be worse.We can only hope and pray.ge sisters dear we must obey our fathers righteous will."

"Don't worry Penrod dear" said Joice with her sweetest smile"The nearest we'll go to the enemys lines is plain out of sight.I do not believe however we are inany danger if we go according to our plans, whatever happens, and the result of our adventure is sure to be very good."

Penrod was not worrying especially at first but some of the vivian Girls were not so much sure at some as Joice were and would not attempt anything of this sort but their heart went out to the poor boy and his three sisters and they were willing to rescue their parents if possible. put they did not see where they needed to worry as long as Penrod was with them.They had confidence in their brother, their their regular marvouls marvouls guardian who to them was a sort of a guardian angel in himself, and therefore the brave little girls enjoyed the excitement of the events in which they were to soon take apart. They didn't see why they should worry for they had often been in many unaccountable perils, and often had been seriously injured or handicapped, and frequently threatened with awful and frightful deaths in many forms and are yet alive healthy and happy.They were just finishing in the art of drying themselves when a soft strange grinding sound aroused them.The whole submarine seemed to tremble and sway, as it might do in an earthquake.. Joice stopped for a moment in her action of combing her hair, and Jennie was hurriedly replacing her bright green ribbon, she always love green ribbons and they surely made her appear prettier.

"What is it"said Hettie as she replaced her hair band.

"I'm not sure" answered Penrod,"But it feels as if the boat was going below the surface of the water.."

As soon as possible they finished their toilet, while not the creaking and swaying continued...2.2.2.2.2.2 Then they rushed into the small dining room(the boom) and found jane melfort awaiting them .

"Do not be alarmed said the girlscout"Jennie Turner who learned how to operate the submarine since she and her followers captured it has decided to submerge it just to see how it will do.But it proves she has a plan in her mind for us.""

"Do you mean she is submerging the boat under the water!"asked Daisy..

"Yes."

"What do you mean by submerging the boat!"said Angeline.

"Come here and see"was the reply..

Jane Melfort led them to a small window which faced the heaviestside of the great undersea boat, and they could observe that the great boat was already half way under the tatat water for the water of the lake was already half way covering the great boat. Through the glasses could be seen many swimming fishes, and tall stems of swaying seaweeds and other underwater plants, for the water was as as clear as cyr crystal and through it they could distinguish even the farther shore of the lake.

"Our friends who are to come here and help you in your enterprise are not here yet"said Jane as they were not eating their morning meal."They will come soon but not untill all of our boat is under the surface of the water.Then she'll raise it again and go and see them...""32

"won't the [illegible] submarine get stuck[illegible] under the water" Violet inquired most anxiously for she understood what an awful fate is in store for those who get trapped in a submarine under water in case it failed to rise.

"No indeed."

"Was the submarine ever under water before."

"Oh yes according to the prisoners we captured, it was under water in several seas.but Jennie Turner doesn't care just now to do that too often for it requires a lot of work to operate such machinery..I believe"she continued that Jennie Turner fears that even Glandelinian spies disguised as our own soldiers could surprise and assault the sum submarine and cause us a frightful disaster. If they did so,it all meat an awful death."

"Well if they're under water the Glandelinians cannot fight us, and we can't fight them either."sneered Catherine.

"They could throw depth bombs on us however"Penrod said gravely.

"We have goodenuye to fight also, even though our Submarine is under water."claimed Jane Melfort slicing a large piece of [illegible]..."I cannot have time totell you and your dear sisters all our secrets, but this submarine is full of surprises. Also Jennie Turners military knowledge is astonishing."

"Did she secure all those secrets from the commander who was captured with the [illegible] undersea underseaboat.."

"Yes, she captured the plans, of it, the way the machines are operated, but she has used them as the Glandelinians would never have done. but she put them away somewhere where nobody could find them."

By this time the submarine was entirely under water, and was moving around the lake.

"See,there's something wrong over there."cried Jane Melfort, pointing to the shore."I'm apprehensive as to the way those fellows are acting and there is no one else around.I'm afraid they're enemy [illegible] soldiers in disguise maybe spies."

On the shore which was now far above their heads, a crowd of dark figures could be seen."

"They may try to do us damage"said Penrod in alarm.

"Well if Jennie Turner is suspicious of them she'll outwit them."said Jane Melfort in a voice that betrayed her excitement..The strangers were pushing their way through the line of high pine trees but dancing carefully this way and that, and had reached the shore of the body of water just as the top of the conning tower of the submarine had disappeared beneath the surface..... The water now flowed from shore to shore but through the clear water the upper portion of the submarine was still visible and the craft could be dimly seen through through its motion.

The men on shore were enemies in disguise who had thought to come and recover the underseaboat.

"Good"exclaimed the leader of them, who had armed all his followers with secret weapons, and had brought with him two strange looking dark objects, which some of them carefullt set down upon the fr ground beside them.If those bastardly "If those na Beastly little child scouts wants to hide instead of fight us our job of causing the boat to stay under water will be easy, for I in our big objects here we have enough submarine depth bombs to destroy the biggest submarine in the world."

"Destory those littl Christian dog Princesses, while we have time, and then we we can make emperor vivian come to Terms."advised one of the chief advisers.

"We can do it in time by causing the Submarine to fail to rise to the surface."declared their chief officer in charge."Those little brats have defied our highest generals too often, and general Manley and his followers will give anything to us if we can get them into destruction and we can easily do so if we if we cause the submarine to fail to rise and see to it the air supply is exhausted.BGeneral Manley must have revenge for what they do to our cause whatever whatever else we do."

"Lookout"suddenly exclaimed one of the highest officers, pointing into the lake"Something is going to happen."

From the submerged underseaboat a door suddenly appeared to open and shut and something brown in color shot swiftly.out into the water.The door had instantly closed behind it, and the brown object cleaved its way through the the wanter without rising to the surface, directly toard the place where the the untrustworthy men were standing.

"What is that Hettie asked of Jane Melfort..."

"That is one of the smaller submarines."was the reply."It is a small boat however and it is all enclosed, and can move under water very swiftly. Jennie Turner discovered several of these boats which are retained in little rooms at the under end of the submarine and it can be returnedthe same way.When the big submarine is submerged no doubt the Glandelinians uses or used these little boats to reach the shore without going too near with the big boat, and I believe now she is suspicious and intends to fight those strangers with them."

The disguised enemies who were Glandelinian detective agents understood something of these boats however, and they were nothsurprised as the under water boat approached them... . When it was quite near the shore it rose to the surface and the top part d and fell back disclosed a boat full of armed boy and girlscouts. At the head(dead,) was Jennie Turner standing up in the bow and holding in one hand a coil of big rope that gleamed like gold..The boat halted and Jennie Turner drew back her arm to throw the rope toard the Glandelinians who were not but a few feet from her, while the child scouts opened fire on them also. some were shot down, and her rope caught the leader, and she dragged dragged him plunging into the water, but the others of the ally rascals suddenly realized their danger, and before the others could open fire again to shoot some more down one of them caught up one of the big bombs and pulling out the lead release pin threw it toard their boat.The explosion demolished the boat, and injured some of the scouts, and also threw a big shower of water into the craft and all over the children..Sand weeds and mud and sand was washed in full in her face.

Jennie Turner dropped the rope, tottered and fell headlong into the water going down beneath the surface, but before the leader at the other end of the rope could swim ashore two scouts grasped the part in the water and held fast, for though demolished the boat was not injured enough to sink. The rest of the child scouts for a moment were too bewildered to assist Jennie Turner and only stared at the ripples in the water where she had disappeared. A moment later she arose, and she was pulled into the boat. Another explosion occured near the submarine but did no harm.

"Horray"- cried one of the Glandelinians retreating out of range of the fire of the child scouts, while the rest danced up and down with sacred glee.

"Poor general Manley and his officers are avenged at last."You little Vivian Girl devil Princess,made lots of trouble for them, and now I have made your escape from the submarine impossible.Stay under water forever if you like you little brats for when you have perished your father can do no more ,and he will be as powerless as if he never was an officer."

"Villians scoundrels dirty cowardly snakes"Screamed Jennie Turner."I have three of your comrades prisoners and your head officer too and they will burn at the stake for this. Treachery within our own christian lines. On what a fool I was to come out of the submarine and let you demolish the boat.Now I can't return and they,ll perish in the submarine.You are the worst villains there was."

"A fool, you were and a fool you are."laughed one of the Glandelinians dancing dancing madly in his deligat."but she aimed with her rifle and he dropped head first into the spring near by and was swallowed up by quicksands..

The child scouts lying low in the boat but being out of range of the explosive poured a withering fire toard the retreating rascals.

"That's too bad that's too bad."exclaimed the captured officer sorrowfully. "I've lost all my explosives I had to demolish the submarine with for the christian dog soldiers coming now have captured the rest of my men and the bombs."

"Very well"said Jennie Turner scornfully."I'm glad to see you are foiled. Your punishment is just beginning, for I'm going to have every one of you tied to trees, and lots of enflamable run rubbish placed at your feet and believe me I'm telling the truth before Heaven and earth, that if this underseaboat ain't above the water by this afternoon"----- she paused and glanced at her wrist watch, and continued--At least by two oclock I,ll order the men to apply the torch."

"you could not do that."

"I can't eh.You'll find out.Tie them to the trees you men and hurry about it."

Her orders were obeyed, but one of them managed to hurl his two captors from him by sheer strength in and run for dear life.Jennie stared at the man a half minute then she yelled to her scouts;

"Shoot the scoundrel.shoot the dirty snake."

The thirty rifle shots sounded as one, and he dropped dead in his tracks.

Jennie Turner urged the half demolished boat by means of oars to the shore and all leaped to good dry ground as the men were tied to the trees.Jennie was so excited she didn't know what to do next..Ny be by floated another of her submarine boats but it was busted also and those who were in it were puzzled what to do with themselves and oneof them was injured.They were heartily sorry and angry that their mistress had been outwitted so cruelly by the Glandelinians, but the condition of their boats prevented them from returning to the big underseaboat and therefore they were plete helplessness. The undersea boat was operated by machinery, and Jennie only understood how to operate it. They couldn't now submerged their little boats either for they were injured, and even the water tight shields would not cover them again. As a matter of fact they were now but a shut out of their big under water boat and could not get back again. It was safe for them but for those left in the big submarine spelled horror and a frightful death if they couldn't be rescued. As one of the boys called to the christian leader saying;

"Please notify Angelinia Aronburg what happened."

"He saluted jumped onto his horse and rode off swiftly.

The Glandelinian leader tiees tied to a tree forgot himself in his exultation and laughingly said in defiance,

"Ha-ha-h-a-ha that won't do any good. They'll stay where they are and perish cruelly. You may have us prisoners but we have conquered those little Vivian Gutterspipes at last and they are helpless prisoners in the submarine. It is under under water and may stay there. So having won this time we can----"

"Jennie Turner and tore off a branch from a tree, a small one as if it was a switch and slashed it fiercely across his face so that it drew blood.

"I'll teach you something new" she screamed. "You'd better wish that they are rescued by two o'clock or you'll be burning right here."

"I'm sorry we couldn't missionize them for roasto pig. Would one of the christian officers" at us only Glandelinians are made of reviled meat we can't eat them for fear of becoming Glandelinian ourselves. Also these Glandelinians happen to desire a nice warm fire under their feet, and I'm sure they'll burn nicely. Let's set them afire now."

When the Glandelinians and been thus captured and tied to the trees the leader of one of bthe boyscouts said to Jennie Turner eagerly;

"How we can we get back to the big submarine your Excellency."?

"I don't know since our boats are injured" replied the girl an in a tone of apprehension." And the poor Princesses and Penrod and all we left there will die an awful death."

"Oh God it can't be possible" said one of the girls. "It can't be possible, not those beautiful little girls. I can still imagine of seeing their reflection in the water, and I'm sure there is no beast, nor bird, nor human as magnificent as they are."

"But how shall we get the boats back to the submarine." Ipleased Jennie Turner. "They are demolished."

"Something must be done to save them" said a boy with a look of horror in his face "Their fame recently had spread throughout the world, and people despite the dangers of the war were beginning to travel from all parts of the world to see them and so we cannot let this happen to them. Oh how I hate those Glandelinians."

"But suggest some way to get to the submarine and we'll do it" insisted Jennie Turner desperately. "Tell me how we can repair our boats--how to get back to the big undersea boat and we'll save them"

"Maybe they can save themselves somehow for they are said to be possessed by angels."

"Sometimes that won't help either" said one of the girlscouts trying to catch a sight of the submarine under water. We got to find a way to save them for Heavens save."

Jennie Turner and her followers were in despair. They saw plainly that there was no way to help those in the submarine.

"Truly" said Jennie, in a gloomy tone, and she glared savagely at the Glandelinian prisoners "The Glandelinians have done it this time."

Some of the strange events had been witnessed by Penrod and the Vivian Girls and even the others too. Many of the child scouts had also crowded to the heavy glass window in order to see what was going on and wondered what would have happened next. Their vision however was to some extent blurred by the by the water and the necessity of glancing upward at an angle but nevertheless they observed the main points of the drama enacted above. They saw the two small undersea craft come to the surface and open, they saw the girlscout leader Jennie Turner capture some of the strangers, and they saw the sudden demolition of the two boats and her capture of the enemy too and of the tying of them to the trees, and a cry of amazement amazement went up from the child scouts inside inside the doo boat.

"Good, that she captured the glandelinians" exclaimed Daisy "I am beginning to hate every one of the Glandelinians I really see, and I'm glad they'll be punished for what they tried to do to her."

"But this to us is a dreadful misfortune." cried Jane Melfort, pressing her hands upon her heart.

"Yes" agreed Penrod, nodding his head thoughtfully "The destruction to those boats will prove a terrible blow to every one of us here in this submarine. and I don't mean maybe."

"What do you mean by that!" asked Catherine in surprise. "Seems to me those Glandelinians who tried that stunt on her are captured and fastened to trees."

"If that were all we would be all right. "responded Penrod" but there is some thing wrong somewhere."

"What could be wrong.?"

"Terrible things" said Jane. "If our undersea boat would be above water it would not be serious. But here we are, at the bottom of a body of water in a submarine and fast prisoners in it, and only God alone knows how long the air supply would last."

"Can't you raise the submarine?" Inquired Violet nervously.

"No, only Jennie Turner understood how to do that." was the answer.

"We can try." insisted Angeline. "If it can be made to go down it can be made to come up. The machinery is in the machine room, I suppose."

"Yes but the machinery works by eletric, and because she could never tell who may be secret enemies amongst her followings, and those she would bring here into the submarine she would never share her secret with any one of us which untill now was very very wise indeed. But now it may be disasterous for all of us."

The faces of violet, and her sisters now grave, but nevertheless each was thinking and praying hard.

"Penrod understands a lot of things." said Catherine.

"But not to operate Submarine machinery." Penrod replied desperately.

"Can't you learn how, by examining the machinery."

"I'm afraid not my dearest sisters." Besides they are strange mechenery and if I tampered with something and put it out of business it may be awfully bad for us pretty soon."

"Well" said Angeline turning to Jane "You say there are other, sub-sub sinking boats." We all can get into one of these, and shoot out to the top of the water as Jennie Turner did and escape. And then we won't need to be down in here."

"No one understands how to use those under water boats but Jennie Turner" declared Jane melfort regretfully.

"Isn't there any door or window in this boat that we could open."?

"Yes indeed, but if we did the water would rush in to flood the interior then we couldn't get out, and would drown as if we were rats in a trap."

"We surely couldn't afford to drown that way." said Penrod.

"I'd rather drown than die because we couldn't breathe" said violet dismally.

"Maybe because of the angels possessing you you couldn't drown." suggested Penrod hopefully.

"But that does not seem possible without a miracle." declared Joice. "We are not spirits ourselves we are little mortal girls, and even if the angels protected us from death we would have to be in here forever without air or food, and that would be the worst suffering a person could undergo, and I'll not stand that for those dirty Glandelinian fiends..I'd rather die by drowning."

"I too. Asserted her sisters.

"Couldn't we escape through the torpedo tube." asked Violet.

"Not every one of us" said Penrod. "And that would exhaust more of the air supply and make the danger for the rest of us more sure."

"But surely there are doors that should open underneath the submarine" said Daisy--or whatever that was to let out the bridges, and the boats--and that would not flood the done."

"Those doors open by a certain valve and only Jennie Turner understood how to operate that valve" said Jane. "If any one of us tampered with that valve we'd drown ourselves in here also for we would not be able to close the doors."

"Dear me" exclaimed Daisy fretfully and with a stamp of her foot "Those dreadful Glandelinians upset all our plans for escape. They did it on purpose to cause us to perish by smothering without air. We don't want to die that way. Oh God please help us."

"Penrod you must try and do something please." begged Jennie. "Won't you. Or we'll all smother to dy death, or starve even. And that air gage says we have only eight hours to live."

"Penrod smiled, but his smile was not a cheerful one. Penrod himself found that he was confronted with a most serious problem, and although at first he had no thought of despairing he realized for truth with chilling horror that the princesses and the children and himself were in grave trouble of very bad circumstances, and that unless he or somebody outside could find means to save them they would be lost to Abbiennia for all future time.

"In such a dreadful dilemma" said he musingly "Nothing is gained by haste, excitement and fright. Careful thought may aid us, and so many the course of events. The Submarine is not in bad condition and the unexpected is always sure to happen, and cheerful patience is better than reckless action.."

"All right right" returned Joice nervously "But we cannot take our time in this. We must hurry. I can't eat any breakfast any more now. I'm too upset."

Penrod led them to the machine room. All the child scouts were frightened and very anxious and also marvelously nervious over the situation they were now in..Of course Jennie Turner was hated and feared by all Glandelinians, but nevertheless she had been outwitted nevertheless, and those on board the sub boat had depended on her knowledge knowledge of the machinery to be able to raise the sub to the surface again. At this moment several of the leading child scouts came to Jane Melfort to request her advice, and to question Penrod, of whom they under understood a good deal.

"If you are a good sport boy."they said to him"We hope to depend on you to get your dear sisters, and us out of our difficulties.If even you do not succeed in saving us save them and yourself."

"I will try to save every one of us."Penrod graciously assured them"but you must remember that the powers of this michenery is not understood by me. However it is necessary to consider some motive in order to accomplish good, and perhaps by studying the machinery and some of the tools I may be able to save us all.But every one of you should say our Rosaries continually.I will with my sisters go to the machine room and put myself in possession of it.Perhaps that I or they find there will be of use to me and I,m hoping as my sisters are angel possessed, that the angels will cause them to be shrewd enough to discover something that will save us from a dreadful death. In the meantime tell all your comrades to pray continually on the rosary.This incident may not after all prove a misfortune, but rather a blessing."

This speech cheered the boy and girl scouts somewhat.Really they had no one to depend on but Penrod now, and in spite of their most dangerous position their hearts were lightened with the hope that the "possession"angels will come to their aid, for possessed by angels violet and her sisters really were..Penrod invited Jane melfort to stay with him also, for she understood something more about the Submarine than the rest and had also been a favorite favorite of Jennie Turner, so her advice and information were sure to prove valuable.

Violet and her sisters were dreadfully disappointed, in what Penrod found found about the machinery.The machinery was absolutely queer to him, there was no means for directions how to do anything, indeed they were strange machine that Penrod, nor violet and her sisters could not guess the use of.

"I do not see"said Penrod to Jane tho accompanied him in his examination "hos Jennie turner knew the use of the machinery herself.Moreover these machine things are an absolute no puzzle."

"Perhaps turning one of these valves would help us"suggested Violet.

"No it wouldn't"said Penrod."I turned it both ways and nothing happened."These glandelinians must have invented many evil things also absolutely un nown to any of us, and we cannot get help from above.We can only depend on Jennie Turner to get us help from the christian lines.It is sure now unfortunate for us and her too that she kept her secrets so closely warded, for no one but herself could use any of these strange machines in this room.Unless we get help from above, God Help us."

"couldn't one of us escape through the torpedo tubs and get help from the Christian generals or from Father?"asked Angelines.

"One could yes, and that would exhaust the air supply so too soon for out our safty.The rest of us would perish before any help could come. nd where we to escape ourselves we would have no chance to save the rest we leave here."

Isn't there a way to cause wireless flashes to go forth from the sub ever. under here and have a message for help reach some of the christian general officers or Angelinia Arabb Aronburg.If we could do that, then couldn't the christian generals summon military engineers, and even Military fire departments who could find means to pump the water of the lake low enough for for Jennie Turner to get into the coning tower.I understand how to open that for her, and also she could even open it from the outside."

"You You are not very practical Penrod dear."said violet."There is no wirele wireless on the sub, and it would be as hard for us to get aid that way as for us as for us to capture the Three Hanleys while we're imprisoned in the sub, from all the other glandelinians in the army--as to signal from or with wireless when there is no wireless station on this crazy submarine."

"but if we could it would surely would be of some help to us"pattatatted persisted Penrod.

"It would not be of no help to us"said violet."The water would probably short signal the wireless and cause us disaster."

"That is true"answered Jane having been hopeful at Penrods suggestion at first."but I believe if we could have had one on board we could have found a way to summon help.You find a way Penrod to place up one in this room and I'll promise when it is ready we'll try to flash a warning.You ought to be able to form one."

"I suppose you think I can't do it."replied Patted Penrod"but I,m going to try."

He left the engine room and first went to a place where he could see through a clear pane of glass into the surrounding water.Immediately he became interested interested in a plan.The queer sights that met his view gave him the plan.The lake was inhabitated by fishes of many varieties, and many sizes. nd too the water was so clear and transeparent that Penrod could see for a long distance, and the fishes came so close to the glass of the submarine window that sometimes they would actually touch it.On the white sands on the bottom of the small inland sea were strange other sort of fishes and many shell fish of strange shapes and with shells of many gorgeous hues.The water foliage too was of the most brilliant colores, and to Penrod it resembled a splendid garden.For a time the fishes were so much more interesting that Penrod almost for a moment forgot his good intention.Many were big and lazy, floating slowly along or lying at rest with just their fins waving.Many with strange big round eyes looked full at the boy as he watched them and Penrod wondered if they could hear her through the glass if he made any sound.The fishes of smaller size were more active than the bigger ones and darted suddenly in and out among the stationary or swaying weeds, as if they had important business and were in a hurry.It was among the smaller variety that Penrod saw the more beautiful color and yet such immense schools, multitudes and swarms of fishes so constantly passed that the scene shifted every moment, so that the very scene was exciting and confusing confusing.his eyes could not follow them in all directions at once.

But then he had by means of small sticks and wires contrived up a sort of wireless signal station which he had learned in merica, and he brought it into the engine room, and seeing some connections in brass he finished it there..

As he was finishing the connections he asked;

"Anything new Jane?"

"No dear.Did you discover how to form a wireless."

"I have already made it.I'm going to use a common old typewriter I see here to use as a ticker.You may believe it won't work but I'll guarentee it will. I learned this trick also in merica."(violet and her sisters looked at him in surprise and then Joice said;

"Of all the wonders Penrod dear you're the biggest.Next I hope you'll turn us in spirits and save us out of this danger."

"If I could do that"said Penrod almost grimly"incertainly would make ourselves chan es places with those Glandelinians on shore, and we wouldn't be tied to trees either. Then see how they would like to be trapped in a submarine and really suffocate.It would serve them right Now quiet everybody. Here goes the message to Angelinia Aronburg.she'll know what to do best."

Angelinia Aronburg herself in her own headquarters indeed, within the main christian lines had just now many unusual things to occupy her mind, for not only was she looking after the welfare of many thee ones child scouts coming in but she had to look after the weaving and embroidering of their uniforms and the uniforms of all that needed mending and assist all those who came to her and her following to implore help, child scouts and refugees as well as those who may need aid in many other ways---but she was a close student student of the arts of military work for all child scouts in general and spent much time in her own military headquarters tent with her officers, where she strove to find a remedy for the aid of violet and her sisters so they could do most of their spying dutie without so much danger to it, and to perfect their skill in it. Nevertheless she did not forget to glance in her big Record volumes each hour or so to see that her secretary had written in it and to see if any mention was made of whether violet and her sisters with Penrod had gone to the glandelinian armies to recover the parents of the four children. The Records were all writen writen in it and told that so far Violet and her sisters had not as yet left the christian lines, and were with Jennie turner in some captured glandelinian submarine who had for experimen t submerged the under seaboat and that it was under water.Then came the statement that something had started to go wrong there butthat Jennie turner had captured all the enemy spy agents who had tried to do some damage to the submarine.no other detail was given about the situation, and so Angelinia Aronburg did not know as yet that Jennie turners two smaller submarine boats had been disabled and that by them only could she returned, the submarine and that violet and her sisters and Penrod who were trapped within I did not understand how to work the machinery so to raise it above the surface again. But nevertheless she could not help worrying about violet and her sisters for she felt sure that danger could threaten them even within their own headquarters very often. As she was sending for Angeline Richee to go and see if violet and her sisters were all right, a soldier came galloping wildly down the company street. This scene was so unusual That every girl and boyscout who came out of their tents because of the noise gave a start, and even Angelinia Aronburg for a moment could not imagine that had brought him so suddenly.but he soon enlightened her and she knew that danger threatened Violet and her sisters.Before they had started Violet and her sisters had been warned by Angelinia Aronburg to send for help in any way possible if she and her sisters and others with her were in real danger. she hurried to her telegraph room to give information as to what sort of danger it was for she understand.Then came a telegraphic call from Penrod to her and it said;

"My sisters and I and everybody in the Submarine are prisoners inside a sunken submarine for it is under the water and from this time on we have only seven hours in which to live."

"Have you not the knowledge or power to raise the submarine above the surfaces?" "Inquired Gertrude by meansof her telegraph. "Don't you know how to operate the machinery."?"

"No "was the reply"We could learn but it would take longer than that few hours.Jennie turner alone could operate the machinery but she herself by the Glandelinians she had captured has been marooned from the undersea boat because the smaller submarines she used to go back and forth have been demolished."

Angelinia Aronburg consulted the past records of the submarine in her great book for jennie turner had given her details of it at the time of its capture. After After dilligent search she discovered that Jennie Turner alone could operate the ~~tetthetjt mav machinery~~ machines of the submarine and that she and her following had captured it during the time she joined with Penrod in that recent great raid.Now she learned the operating of machinery in submarines was through Gingigore who was one of her best friends. Angelinia Aronburg reflected earnestly on this infor information and decided that someone more than herself alone must go to their assistance.There was a great need of immediate haste too because Penrod notified that those within the undersea boat had only seven hours in which to breathe, and it was evident that they could not get out untill someone was able to raise the submarine. Angelinia Aronburg desperately wasted twenty ~~practicesubmitted by glanctignshoughulio kaisaca sabbpsin~~ minutes by glancing through all her reap recipes of how to raise a submarine and books on submarines but could find no directions of how it could be done.Such a thing had never been been done except by divers, and there were no such men in the army and if there were it would take weeks to raise one that way..Then Angelinia Aronburg used a little toy submarine she had and ~~sunk it in a pond~~ sunk it in a pond near her tent and experimented in ways to bring it to the surface without using her hands to pick it up. But all were failures.It seemed a simple thing to do yet she could not do it.She was desperate, and a surging hatered of the Glandelinians welled up in her breast as tears of grief wor worry and fury came to her eyes.He-e Nevertheless the wise girlscout chieftian and cousin of Violet, and her sisters and penrod did not despair of finding a way to liberate her beautiful friends.Finally she concluded that the best thing to do was to go to that locality and examine the lake and see if it couldn't be pumped low enough by fire departments to enable Jennie turner to get on it and raise the coning tower lid. And too while there she was sure to discover a solution to the problem that bothered her and to fix out a plan for the rescue of the Vivian girls and others within the submarine.If she was not successful, and they died, well ---no Glandelinian army hereafter would recieve quarter.

So Angelinia Aronburg summoned her horse, and telling her boy and girlscouts that she was going to the recent headquarters of the Princesses and might not return soon, she mounted her horse, and rode swiftly tward the Vivian girls headquarters.

In the headquarters of violet, and her sisters Angeline Richee was now acting in their pace place .There was not much at the time for her to do because outside of what had occured to violet and her sisters all the affairs of military state moved so smoothly and the enemy apparently was behaving himself, but she was there in case anything unforeseen should happen. Angelinia Aronburg found Angeline Richee playing croquet with Angeline Jennings and her sister Dolores, two little girlscout officers who were chief sidecamps of the Princesses now, and were great friends of Violet and her sisters and Penrod and much much loved by everyone in the christian" camps.

"Something has happened"cried Dolores as Angelinia Aronburg drew up her horse at the gate."Angelinia Aronburg never comes here except something has gone wrong."

"Imhope no harm has come to the good Princesses, nor Penrod "said Angeline Richee anxiously as the lovely girlscout chieftian dismounted from her horse. Angelinia approached her second in command and told Angeline of the dreadful dilemma of violet and her sisters and the others in the submarine, and as Angeline Angeline Richees face took on a look of unspeakable horror she added"We must save them somwhow Angeline dear."

"Of course and quickly replied Angeline stub stumbling over a stick in her excitement and fear.one of the boyscouts ran and helped her to her feet, and thanking him lovingly for his assistance she continued as if nothing had occured"But Angelinia dear you'll have to tell me what to do for nobody has ever yet raised a sunken submarine from the sea yet in time to save anybody."

Angelinia Aronburg went white at hearing this and gasped;

"Is that so?"

"Yes.If they're are in the river or the sea we cannot save them."and Angeline began to weep bitterly.

"But they're not in a river or a sea"hastily put in Gertrude."The submarine is in a small lake. We must have a state of or a Council of State Immediately -please wire messeages to summon all of violets counsellors to this palace.Then we can decide what is best to be done.But the council remember must last only a minute even less if possible.We have no time to wait.I decide if it is possible to pup pump the water from the lake if it is possible."

Angeline richee lost no time in doing this.Fortunately most of the Royal counsellors were in this sector of the camp at the time, so only ten minutes had passed and the council was already half way in progress..No ruler in the world ever had such a great and clever and shrewd assortment of advisers as violet and her sisters had to do them these favors.Indeed in no other country in reality in the world could such amazing people exist. violet and her sisters also loved them for their generous help and advise and could trust every one of them to put schemes through almost miraculously.First there was general Jack Evans himself. Every bit of him was a giant in strength.He carried a beautiful uniform sc sabre holder presented to him by his darling loving friends the Vivinh girls.He was really the highest generals of all though he went under the title of captian.He had a very good mind, and clever shrewdness, his heart was given only to god and them more than to anybody else, and he had won them so as if he also was one of their best and loving brothers. Another Counc counc counsellor was his brother john, who once made for violet and her sisters a number of beautiful and be gaudy patchwork quilts cut into beautiful shapes and stuffed with cotton..He too was very intelligent, but so full of fun, and made such mad pranks on the enemy that a lot of more enemy generals thought he was possessed by devils or was crazy.John Evans within the christian lines was jolly under all conditions however grave they might be to him, and his laughter and good spirits were of value in cheering others and in his seemingly careless remarks much wisdom often could be found. But to the enemy his fury was the same as his brother.Then he was a roaring roaring Dragon.

Then there was the man who because of his desperate blows to the enemy recieved the nickname of Count De giff, but his right name was Blain Wright Linger .He had been out scouting and had just returned when he was summoned and therefore he was shaggy from head to foot having had no time to remove his peculiar disguise.He was one of the royal supporters of violet and her sisters and just as valuable as the two Evans.

General James Turner elder brother of little Jennie turner was also very reliable because he always did exactly was he set out to do. another man of young officer was Ned Perkins one of the oldest friends of the Princesses and their companion on many adventures of the far past..One other was a girl and boy scout Professor a man of about forty years of age.He was throughoutly educated in every military art, and was the head of all the boy and girlscout Educational Military Schools, and he surely learned the child scouts so much that it was a wonder they could do all to the enemy they choose and get away with it without hardly a loss to their own numbers.Therefore this made the child scout regiments very popular.He however was good but somewhat conceited about the Vivian Girls and admired them so much, and brought them through dangerous adventures unscathed so often by displaying his cleverness and learning so constantly that not only was he found of great value to them in their councils but was called "their guardian angel in disguise" Hewtoo was the most splendidly uniformed.His long tailed uniform coat was of velvet in high purple color, his red vest of satin, and his yellow trousers of the same.There were diamond buckles in his shoes, and he carried a gold headed cane and a high purple velvet hat with three plumes on top of red yellow and lavender. All of the bright cene colors were represented in his rich attire so it tired ones eyes to look at him for long untill one became used to his splendor.That suit was presented to him by violet and her sisters..He was one of the most important men of the counsellors .He wasn't a big man in size but he was a big man in power and intelligence and second only to Evans in all the mystic art of military actions.Professor Vivian had taught him, and therefore him and the Emperor were the only ones in Abbiennia so closely associated as associated with each other in friendship and through him Jack Evans had been appointed the guardian of the Vivian girls. The Professor was not exactly handsome, but he nevertheless was pleasant to see.His bald head was as shiny as if it had been varnished there was always a merry twinkle in his eyes, and he was as spry as a schoolboy. schoolboy. Angelinia Aronburg once said the reason why the Professor was not as powerful as jack Evans against the enemy is because he hasn't the physical strength but nevertheless what the Professor knows he knows very well and no perform more very unusual schemes against the enemy.

there were twenty others and allbthere were assembled with Angeline Pickens, and many girl and boyscout officers in the reception room of violet and her sisters right immediately after they all arrived, and during the progress the girlscout xhiefitian told them all she learned of the dreadful plight of the Princesses, their brother, and the others left in the submarine.

"Of course we must rescue them before these seven hours are up."she continued, "and as we cannot waste no time the sooner we can rescue them the safer they'll be but what we must do is to determined how they can be saved.That is why I have called you together in council."

"The easiest way"declared Jack Evans soberly"is to raise the submerged Submarine to the top of the water again."

"Tell me how?"said Angelinia Aronburg.

"Yes tell you how"said Evans scornfully and bitterly."No body yet has ever been able to raise a submerged submarine from the water yet in time to save anybodys life.Nobody has ever done it yet."

"We might all get a number of divers to raise it"suggested the child child scout Professor."but they too couldn't raise it on time.There's no other solution except to get the proper number of fire departments to come and pump enough water out of the lake to be able to get to the top of the undersea boat."

"How can fire departments do it in time when the body of water is so broad and deep."plead Angelinia Aronburg."Do be sensible.This is a serious matter and we must give it serious taught."

"I'm being sensible"said the Professor decidedly."Unless the water is lowered in that body of water there is no saving them.It is impossible under any conditions to raise that submarine in time to save their lives.How big is the lake and whow big is the submarine?"

"None of us can tell, for yet we have not been there."

"In that case"said General Evans"it appears to me we ought to go to the lake and examine it carefully.If it is not a large one I'll summon every fire department in the army to pump that water out.It can be done and I know it know it.The Professor is right.Unless the water is pumped out there is no saving them.he's the best brains of the whole lot of us."

"Quite right"agreed "Count De Biff.

"We will have to go there anyhow."said one of the girlscout officers.

"The question is which of us shall go, and how many of us?"said Evans.

"We all must all go."said the Professor.Indeed they all decided to go to the lake with Angelinia Aronburg and Evans to lead them.They decided the only hope was to draw enough water out for Jennie Turner to get into the submarine.They were all ready to start at a moments notice for they must save the Prin cesses.

"Fortunately for u and the poor Princesses it is a very short journey,"said Angelinia Aronburg."We must all remain together, ad we'll leave right away.2 Angeline Jennings and her sister Dolores when they heard of the rescue expedition exped ition begged Angelinia Aronburg to let them join it and she consented. Mildred Maxwell overhearing the conversation wanted to go also and to this M Angelinia Aronburg made no objection.This little girlscout captian was one of the real little angels of the christian child ac out camp, and despite her name really was the little sister of Mary Glorinia called "Bright eyed Mary." She had often been told of in the story and she was very beautiful for a child of her s ort and if it was not for the color of her hair she might have been thought to be a relative of the Vivian Girl Princess.Her eyes were very dark brown and her little heart went out to everybody and her disposition was pleasant at all times and she never was seen hardly without a smile.However when it was absolutely necessary she was a little severe, yet ou otherwise she was extremely loving.If you would compliment the remarkable little girlscout girlscout on her frail beauty she would tell you not to say so but compliment violet and her sisters instead for she loved the vivian Girls above everything else under god whom she loved more yet. he indeed was one of the most intelligent intelligent of all girlscouts.Three other additions to the rescue party were made in less than a minute just as they were already setting out on their journey on their fastest horses.The first was Jack Saunders. As the reader may under stand and also remember he was a fine manly little fellow well mannered and Goodhumored, who recently had only one fault but which he cured himself of.He used to be a little careless in how he did things and caused funny accidents. But he was daring beyond comprehension and he strange to say had once been injured during some battle and was rescued by his little girl companion and friend Jean Sanders.

"Some day"predicted Jennie Turner on one occasion to the boy"you'll be taking that little girl for your sister as she is one already to my way of thinking."

But the boy had answered that he would not mind that a bit and named all the girlscouts in the world save his little sisters. The second addition to the party was Angelinia Aronburgs favorite boyscout side-de-camp George Zimmerman Zimmermon.He was of ten called "George the Calamity"because bad fortune followed the enemy wherever he went or met the glandeliniens.He and Jack were the closest friends, although of such different Nationalities, for George was German and Jack was a born Abyssinkillian / and polores and Angeline Jennings and count ess girlscouts and boys too were fond of both.The third and last to join the x expedition was Jean Saunders herself who loved little Jack, and also great Jack Evans who was as we all understand one of the regular guardians of the Vivian Girls and the most important and intelligent man in the christian column of generals. He the same as Penrod or Radcliffe was called the "Viper" or Rattlesnake by the glandeliniens and he had met every danger as if there was no danger at all and every time he saved violet and her sisters, and many others of his friends, and even himself and once Emperor vivian in times of peril and was very dangerous to the enemy because of his ability at the weapon.He and Penrod could do more with weapons them anybody in the enemy or christian army.

"If poor violet and her sisters needs help I,m also going to help her." said little Jean Sanders."

"The rest of you may surely need me on the journey more than anything else"declared Evans "for you may pass through a dangerous pas part of the country heard that sector.The enemy is in possess ion of a wide and extensive territory and some of the small forests of this country harbors many reb el ambuscades."

Everybody was glad that general Evans was to not only join them but lead them and in good spirit the entire party formed a procession on horse and rode out of the company street amid the shouts of every one in the company streets who wished them success and safe return with the beloved Princesses..The disaster what of what had happened however had been withheld from Emperor Vivian as they hoped to rescue the little girls for sure, expected to do so without the slightest doubts and did not went to worry him un ecessarily.They followed a different route from that used by Violet and her sisters, and the five others, for they went through the territory in possession of the christian scouting patrols and up north toard Ogaboo River.But before they got there they swerved to the right and entered a small forest, the nearest thing to a beautiful wildn wilderness in that sector.The forest was reached after a short time trip.when they entered the woods Evans sent a little more ahead.There was no path here for horses, and Evans f whose eyes were practiced in wood craft could discern a path way neverth-less and so he dismounted and advising the others to do the same and leave the horses behind sent on ahead and wound his way in and out, the others following in single file, Angelinia Aronburg being next to Evans.However there may have been dangers of the enemy snipers in this woods, but nevertheless as Evans headed the party he was on the watch as if he were a cat and they had no adventure at all with any glandeliniens for none appeared..

However as they went on George Zimmermann tripped on a tree root and fell headlong.

"Are you hurt?"Jean anxiously inquired of the boy.

"How silly"exclaimed the boy laughing"Nothing can hurt a person in a little tumble that way.But I,m annoyed at the treachery of those glandeliniens who caused violet and her sisters such a misfortune.They have no respect or pity enemy person no matter how pretty they are."

"Never mind"said jean consolingly"Hem sure they won't do it again."

They were in the center of the woods when George Zimmermon suddenly said; "Why what in the world so suddenly carried away my hat!There's not even a breeze."

They all halted and gazed around them.There was nobody in sight.

"Dear me"declared Mildred Maxwell"I believe somebody was shooting at you."

George had gone and recovered his hat.

"I just now saw somebody moving over behind that tree"said one of the officers.

"Where did you see him ?"inquired Angelinia Aronburg.

"He was behind that big pine tree over overthere."replied Jack..I thought I saw somebody trailing along at the end of that high brush over there just now.Then I noticed he was gone."

"This is too bad if we have to tryand stop that fellow."declared Evans"For it is sure to delay our journey and make us lose time to save the little angels.We must not halt whatever comes for we must save them before anything else happens but on this forest may be full of ferocious Glandeliniens we must remain to cover for these rascals could not hesitate to ambush us."

"but what shall we do if they start firing at us?"demanded Jean Saunders."The trees too are far apart and if we go to find shelter behind them we would probably be assaulted from behind and fall victims to the Glandelinians, and if Evans Evans leaves us to scout we will have no protector."

"Nobody is to seperate"warned Evans."We won't be in so much danger for they may be afraid of us as we have discovered and won't come out into the open."

"Cannot you Angelinia discover some shorter route out of these woods."

"I can as I now a lot of this country"said Angeline Richee.

"Then you act as guide"said Evans.The rest of you men here with me cover the children.If there is any more shooting watch where it comes from and be sure to aim good."

Angelinia Aronburg called to Dolores and then to Angeline Jennings who had been carrying her special weapons and then they went on again.

"Goodness me"cried Jean Saunders ,lancing to the right. "Somebody shot at me.I heard the report and a part of my hair ribbon was clipped away."

Angelinia Aronburg however had seen the puff of smoke at the sound of the rifle shot and she had pulled out of her [redacted] hanging on her shoulder a hand grenade.She released the pin and hurled the object straight for the tree. The tree was uprooted by the explosion and came crashing down tward them carrying two other trees with it. But there at the foot of the place the tree had stood lay a gray coated soldier badly mangled.

"Pretty bad, pretty bad"said Mildred Maxwell"but he deserved it."

"I'll do the same to other snipers"said Angelinia Aronburg decidedly.

"Comes of trying to snip us little girls."said Jean sighing,

"Guess we'll do the same to others."said Mildred Maxwell.

"But there are no one now I believe.But let's be hurrying or we'll be too late to save violet and her sisters and their brother."

"If we understood a better route we probably could have avoid these woods" said Evans."Those glandelinians may suspect our intention and are trying to hinder us.It's hard to tell who might be hiding behind trees and each tree appears the same in form and size so we can't tell whether any more shots would come from far away or near by. They"

They soon came upon the spot where the man lay.Evans examined him curiously with a mischievious smile upon his face.Then he deliberately kicked the dead mans head with his foot, and sent him flying out of the way.The procession continued on.

"I don't believe there are many in this neighborhood of the woods to cause as much anxiety and annoyance"said Angelinia Aronburg.

"Of course Evans answered."But we have to act just the same./

I must now go back and relate that happened to Jennie Turner and the child scouts who had stranded their disabled boats to the shore and had made prisoners of the treacherous glandelinians..The soldiers who had seized the men were all young men and their leader's name also was Ervic.Jennie Turner had captured captured the glandelinian chief leader by means of her lasso.But the boats were ruined and therefore they could not return to the submarine.One of the scouts within near the machinery that opened the doors letting in the boats without letting in water but it was of no use to open them now when the boats could not return .Jennie Turner was at a loss what to do and was desperate.For the time being she had no further thought of thevGlandelinian prisoners and tried to imagine something in order to save those on the submarine.The soldiers could have seen it all to help her but could do nothing.All the rest of of the child scouts were imprisoned in the great underwaterboat with Penrod and violet, and her sisters, about thirty of them not counting Jane Melfort, Never before in her life did Jennie Turner pray as she prayed now even asking the angels who possessed violet and her sisters to do something.

When Angelinia Aronburg and her followers of the rescue expedition came in sight of the mountain on which the Gemini members were on, it was away to the left of them for the route they had taken through the forest was not far from that but yet some distance from the same route taken by violet and her sisters and penrod. while they continued on a little they wondered whether they should call upon the Supreme Person Rodney Graves first or go on to the body of water! "If we go to the mountain"said Evans we would delay precious minutes in rescuing the Princesses and Penrod. We can best plan is to go on, reduce the water of the lake and save our best friends and the imprisoned child scouts with them. Afterwards we can punish the glandelinians whom Jennie Turner made prisoners for they for they were responsible for the disaster/"

"That is a sensible" approved General Brown."I quite agree with you."

The others too believed firmly Evans plan was the best, and others too commend of water from view.Evans glanced at his watched and gasped.Half an hour had passed.But they were now by the pines.These were grown closely together, the branches which come quite to the ground being so tightly interlaced that even a cat could scarcely find a place to squeeze through.The path which violet and her sisters and Penrod and the others had used was some distance away so far off that it would cost another precious half hour to get there.

"Here's a job for you Evans."said Angelinia Aronburg."You're strong enough to uproot trees by pulling them by the roots."

That boast of Evans once to Walter Starring was never a false one.So the strong guardian of the vivian Girls who was always glad to be of some use placed his arms around one of the trees that stood furthest apart after pulling away enough branches to permit his arms to encircle encircle it.He gradually but surely drew the tree upward, and allowed it to fall into the water with a big splash that raised a terrific cloud of spray.Now there was a path for them all the end every one marveled at this herculean feat of strength. Now the clear waters of the beautiful lake were before them and by examining it closely they could see the outlines of the great submarine far from shore and directly in the center of the lake. glancing at his watch Evans saw there was plenty of time yet, of course every eye was at first fixed upon the submarine, where poor violet and her sisters and the child scouts and Penrod were still fast prisoners.

Evans said;

"It would take four hours I am afraid to lower the lake by means of the fire departments. George you can do it.Send in the alarm and summon the fire departments.We can easily save them after all Thanks be to God.They have six and a half hours time to be saved."

As the boy went off to obey their attention was called by a more brilliant yet startling sight, for here were seventeen Glandelinians and an officer tied by wires to trees, with soldiers on guard, and with all sorts of rubbish at the feet of the prisoners.The soldiers appeared menancing and would have set the fire anyway they hated these glandelinians so for what they had done to violet and her sisters. Then here was Jennie Turner coming tward them.

"She appears wonderfully beautiful now"d clared Evans."She I supposed had those glandelinians tied to the trees.I wonder how she captured them."

"That doesn't seem much as if it is a punishment though."said Dolores."The soldiers ought to burn those treacherous devils anyhow."

"I am sure she intends to make an awful suspense for them which is worst than the death by fire."said Angelinia Aronburg"for I know her well, and she's terrible to the glandelinians when she is angry."

"Let us call to her, and hear what she has to say."proposed Evans.

So Angelinia Aronburg beckoned to Jennie Turner who when she saw them she came over to them as fast as she could run. Just as she did so the various fire departments came upon the scene but were surprised to see no fire and wondered exceedingly why they should be called to the edge of the water. Evans explained to them the cause of the call, and believe me they got ready to work as quick as firemen can and soon the engines were pumping like mad and it could bee seen that the waters of the lake were spraying into the river some distance away. Then as she reached them and before any one could say a word Jennie Turner said to them pointing to the prisoners;;;

"Admire my prize prisoners friends. Admire the brave glandelinian soldiers the most brave men in all the world. Admire them.They treacherously destroyed my boats so I cannot get to the submarine and the vivian girls are trapped in it and are in danger of a frightful death. Admirethem Admire them Evans/ They're brave glandelinian soldiers"and she picked up a stone from the shore and flinging it hit one of the glandelinians in the face,

"Handsome is as hands one does."replied Evans his bull dog face now really resembling one as he glanced in that direction."Are their deeds lovely Jennie?"

"Deeds!what deeds can those glandelinians do but treacherously trap seven of the most beautiful little girls in a submarine so they can die of an airless atmosphere.To my way of believing as I saw the gauge they can only have eight o hours time to live since I left the submarine.I am going to burn these Glandelinians at those trees if their lives ain't saved by three oclock."

"Why that'll be sooner than the time the water can be lowered in the lake"said Jack Saunders.

"What do I care"said Jennie snippo snippishly with her nose in the air. "They ought to burn anyway whether the poor little dears are saved or not. I hate them glandelinians! HATE THEM."

"Have you forgotten how to return to your submarine?Have you forgotten how to operate your small submarine boat?????"inquired General Charles Brown..... "Have you forgotten it?Not at all.But my boats are demolished and nothing can be done to repair the machinery.As for this scene it seems as if it is a horrible dream.I wouldn't have this happen again under any conditions if I could p ower it.It is [illegible] fault anyhow.I should not have left the submarine to capture those wretched [illegible] they come to do the most harm and then we all would have been trapped."

"Tell us though my dear girl"said Dolores McMollester earnestly"If you can recall enough knowledge to be able to enable us to raise the submarine to the surface of this big body of water.Tell us that and I,ll give you a string of pearls around your beautiful little neck ab and add to your beauty,"

"My beauty"said she scon scornfully."Better give the pearls to poor Violet and her sisters.Nothing can add to their beauty on this earth for their they are the most beautiful and holy little creatures anywhere in the whole world."

"But how can we raise the submarine."?

"I don't know unlessone can get in it. I understand the machinery though"she added hopefully."It's to get into it.My small sub boats are ruined and therefore we cannot get in.Though they can be rescued I hope by the Mercy of god before four hours are up from now on if they were not rescued at three oclock I'd be glad of it"she added as she glanced tward the Glendelinian prisoners with a fearful scowl."just watch me order the torches applied to that pile of rubbish around them then. I like to burn glandelinian rascals who do harm to the poor little girls."

"It's no use to burn them before the time unless violet and her sisters cannot be saved."said George Zimmermon."It seems as if it would be sort of cruel."

"Cruel."laughed Jennie Turner."you don't know the meaning of that word.You have not been with us long to have heard or seen what the beautiful Princesses have suffered since the beginning of this war. And if we punish the glandelinians for it you may call it cruel.It's no sin or cruelty to burn them now if I so wish for they deserve it for their treachery.These glandelinians are anyway too much in love with themselves and the old devil to love anybody else of our side no matter how pretty and lovely he be."

"That's a fact inde d"agreed Angeline Richoe with a sad sigh"but we've got to get poor violet and her sisters, and the rest out of that underseaboat some how or other."

"Show how it's done and I'll glad to do the rest gladly"admitted Jennie Turner."I'd rather be the one trapped than them any time."

"But we'll have to do it in our own way."added Evans"It takes a long time to lower the level of the lake and I hate to wait that long.Suppose the air supply gives out sooner than we expect."

"But how can it be done?" demanded Jack Evans himself in a very grave voice for he could not bear to imagine or realize that his dear little friends were out there in the submarine under water and facing a terrible death probably at any minute. "How shall we do it."

"Leave that to the girl and boyscout military professor."advised Angelinia Aronburg, realized that she too was helpless to do it herself...

"If it were just an ordinary common submarine that is used for just purposes to see the sights under water"said the professor"There would be several ways by which I could bring it to the surface again.Thank God and His Blessed Mother that this didn't happen either in the Ocean or in a deep river o for then we might as well have said good bye forever to them for there would have been no hope unless the angels preserved them miraculously. But this is a sub boat of 'i Glendelinian form and construction and by some curious art of machinery unknown to any one but our friend Jennie Turner here it obeys certain workes of machinery and will not respond to any other but which she works. That I did hope of course was that in case of a dreadful emergency the angels that possessed or possesses them would cause either one of them or Penrod to accidentally t o touch the right valve that would suddenly raise the boat. But unless that happens we will have to wait untill the fire department's lower the water and so far it doesn't seem to lower at all.The lake is very large and awfully deep as I can see.I've measured the water line and it has only receded one third of an inch. To get at the submarine properly would take ten hours or more after all to lower the water enough. The only hope is to get the water lowered enough so we can get to the coning tower and raise it and go down.The water is deep over that too.but I do not despair in the least for I do not believe the angels will let them perish.I almost feel they won't but if we are to rescue them ourselves it will require some deep study to solve this difficult problem.If Jennie could only get to her submarine by means of her boats she could easily get inside for she said there are three within who know how to operate the machinery that opens to let the boat into the room filled with water.Then the water is pumped out and she gets out of the boat and enters the proper apartments of the submarine.But her two boats is injured and won won't respond to the machinery."

"It seems to me"said General Jack Evans after a few seconds silence following the Professors speech"That are are three persons in our army that are pretty good at finding out how to raise sunken submarines even from the outside.If we could only find those three men they could doubtless tell us what to do to raise the submarine, or to raise it themselves.They done it once before when Jane Lease and her girlscouts were trapped the same way in a submarine, and in the very sea too.but they were saved by those three men."

"I have thought of those three men"replied the Professor"but among so many men in our vast christian armies how are we to single them out, when none of us remember their names."

"You will understand of course dear reader, that those three men were more than then four hundred miles away in Angelinia Agathia at this time.so it would have done no good even had this been found out as it would take a train quite a time to bring them from Angelinia Agathia so far away.

"I believe I see one of the smaller boats yonder on the shore"said George Zimmermon, pointing to a place around the edge of the lake. "If we could find find means to repair that boat we might be able to get it to bring you down to the submarine."

"Let us go and see the boat."said general Evans.the guardian of violet and her sisters...

They went swiftly around th is vast body of water to where the boat was standded upon the beach, but found it appeared as if it was a sort of gasoline launch..it also was a powerful shell of gray steel ,with a sort of collapsible roof, that when in proper position and in good order made the small boat water tight, but at present the roof was partly damaged and rested in slots on either side of the strange craft.There was also within a pair of strong oars, and also a pole and sail lying on the lower bottom, and machinery to drive the boat, and although the professor promptly realized it was meant to be operated by machinery, he was not acquainted with that sort of machinery. The machinery as in good order but the collasapable roof was damaged.

"However"said he"The boat is now merely a boat, and if the collasipble roof could be repaired I could believe Jennie could operate it again.After I have therefore given a little thought of the matter, if the machinery will work, and the roof can be repaired Jennie can run it and itill go wherever we desire."

"Could it hold all of us"demanded Mildred Maxwell.

"Not all of us"returned the Professor."But if I could force the boat to go of what use would it be to us at that."?

"Can't we use it to attract those within the submarine and let them see we're trying to save them." ?

"It will not be nexessary to use the boat for that purpose" replied the Professor."If the water is as clear as it appears to be they can see us from that little glass window down there easily enough I'm sure if they are glancing out of it.What I am trying to discover is how the Glandelinians man managed to damage so strong a boat, when Jennie came up here to meet the Glandelinians and yet capture them before the submarine was sunk or afterwards.?"22

No one could however answer, answer, that question, of course, but while they pondered the matter over, the whole small gang of them went over to where the prisoners were.

"Who are you glandelinians and from whose command did you come from?"inquired general Blain Wight Linger who was the first to reach them.

"I will give no information whatever."declared the leader.

The general turned with a black look on his face."

"Miss Turner h"he called angrily."Order the torches to be applied right now."

"No, no, for Goodness sake d on't don't screamed several of the glandelinian soldiers in a jubject terror.Please don't burn us please."

"Will you tell me what I want to learn?"demanded the general with a fierce scowl.

"Yes,yes yes but please don't burn us."

"You are the biggest pack of cowards I ever met in my life time."said the general with a sneer. "that's the difference anyhow whether you burn now or burn if the Princesses can't be saved for then you'll surely burn. You are brave enough to put them in that awful situation but you're too scared to meet your own punishment for it.Tell me what I demanded of your leader or the torches will be applied. and believe me by HEAVEN I MEAN IT."

"We are soldiers were General John Manleys army"answered one of them"And our camp is near Jennie Tory."We were sent to get those little brats---"

"Leave the "Brats out of your conversation"said the general flashing him across the face with a branch of a tree"No such epithes or brats allowed in your conversation .Now go ahead."

"Well our general wanted them put out of the way, and as we saw them go into the submarines from our hiding place behind the trees we decided to injure the submarine so it couldn't come up."

"Did you succeed"cried the general fiercely.

"No but we damaged the boat that came up to meet us."

"If you belong to general Manley's army what were you doing within our own camps dressed in christian uniforms?"Demanded general Jacob Evans himself.

"We would not desire to tell."

"You'll have them right away."

So they told him and the rest of the story- How general Manley had learned of what happened to Fred Lynden through his blunder with Princess Jennie and how they had come or been sent to try and destroy the little girls some way.They told how they entered the christian lines in disguise, and how they came to the body of water, saw the Princesses enter the boat by means of a bridge, and then how they planned to disable it so it could go down and never come up.How they had seen two boats come out from the lower portion of the submarine and rise to the surface where they opened and floated upon the water. Water.Then followed the account how they were attacked themselves, and captured before they could injure the submarine.They told how they were tied to the trees at the girlscout chieftians order and preparations for the fires to be started if the Princesses were not saved by three oclock. It was now One. That was all they had to tell.They had now hoped for their own safety that though the sub was now underwater, there would be means for the rescuers to raise it again for they feared the awful penalty of being burned by fire. and they could tell by Jennie Turners savage face in her anger that she really would do it on the appointed time if they were not saved by then.

Being questioned by Evans and some of the others,, they told all they knew about how they trailed and shadowed Violet, and her sisters and Penrod and declared the seven little girls and their brother with others were still in the submerged submarine and really not counting hours it was really merely a question only how long they could endure without suffering. They were in grave danger alright, and if they perished then Manley would be satisfied whether they were burned at the stake for their deed or no not. When they had secured all the information they could from these Glandelinians, they went away from them silently and then general Evans the Vivian Girls Guardian said to the Professor;

"If you can find that the machinery of this boat really is in good order, and the roof of the boat can be repaired, you could have it returned to the bigger Submarine, submerge itself, and enter the door in the submarine from whence it came. It just the same I cannot see that our going to the submerged underseaboat would enable the poor little girls and their friends to escape.We would only join them as prisoners and finally perish with them....."

"Not so friend Evans"replied the Professor."If I could compell the boat to enter the lower door of the underseaboat I could also manage to operate it in a way so we would come out again, and we could bring everybody out again in a number of speedy trips.But you must understand how these little Princesses are despite the peril. I believe they would refuse to escape with Penrod untill the others were rescued first.I believe the best plan would be for Jennie and me to try to operate the boat and get in below.someone amongst us ought to be an engineer or a boat contructor and be able to mend the injured section of the roof."

Jennie Turner herself feel, feeling more desperate than ever as time was being lost seemed to believe that this was a rather forlorn hope.

"How will the boat operate then"she demanded."The machinery that operates the roof is injured beyond repair.s how can you do it."

"That is something we must consider carefully"responded the professor with a sad serene smile."I believe I can find a way."

"All the rest of the counsellors of Violet and her sisters applauded this statement or sentiment, for they understood well the power and learning of this great professor.

"Very well"agreed Jennie Turner."See if you can mend the machinery then.""

Jennie Turner herself [illegible] put her best upon the little abandoned abandoned submarine boat, decided to examine for sure whether the machinery was injured or not, and therefore she asked of those who were really engineers to come and inspect the machinery while she asked of her child scouts who had accompanied her in the two boats to stand strict guard over the disconfited glandelinian prisoners. She retained with her only a boyscout(boat) who was her pupil and understood how to assist her when she was readingn boat.When to begin on new [illegible] the machinery, and when the two were alone beside the attended boat Jennie said to her friendly-like;

"They said the machinery is in good order, and that a strong sheet of tarpaulin tarpaulin over the injured section of the roof will help wonderfully.They have already put it on.I shall first try to see what can be done.I first [illegible] with you."

[illegible] "You [illegible] my small wrench,"replied the boy [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] on the [illegible] tools, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] violet, and [illegible] and Penrod, and the others. The [illegible] all them of the obstacle they met but I [illegible] by of the door saying those within ill not [illegible] understand Jennie's signal, and now Jennie must now find [illegible] way to get those in the submarin to understand what she wanted. Realizing that it would require requires fifteen or twenty minutes to succeed in reaching the submarine again, and realizing that all the pumping of the fire department was not lowering the water any further, and that there must be some means of raising the submarin and liberating their friends, Jennie Garner decided to write directions to Penrod how to operate the machinery allowing him to copy it and then probably by following it he could raise the boat to the surface. All around the body of water a great number of tents had appeared all complete with beds, chairs, tables and huge lamps and even books with which to pass needed minutes for many soldiers had arrived to the lake to offer what help could be done. All the tents had the Royal banner of Abbiemania flying from the center poles, and one big tent not now occupied had the Banner of Violet and her sisters waving in the Breeze. There also was two priests there, one Bishop and others who were on their knees praying continually for the safty of the vivian girls and everybody was joining in.

Back: During all this while in the meantime Angelinia Aronburg sat and sat in the most magnificent tent of all studying several books in search of some directions in which to be able to raise a submerged submarine from the outside but to no purpose. She also with her toy submarine made many strange experiments at the wedge of the lake just as if she was only playing with it to waste time, hoping to discover something that would aid her. Yet it was soon one thirty then two in the afternoon and still she was unsuccessful. Those inside the submarine two of them at least could have opened the door, but you must realize that when Jennie Garner was down there at the big glass door those two were not standing at the glass gazing out, and therefore as one could not get the others to understand her signals nothing could be accomplished. Jennie Tanner however had as much as possible written down the directions as how the machinery could be operated. Therefore as soon as she had written it she again by herself entered the boat and made it submerge and go to the big glass window but nobody was there now, and there was no way to attract any attention at all. Nobody had expected it to come down again, and therefore had not seen it come. They made the circle of the submarine however once again and coming around again in once more saw violet and her sisters through their windows, but could not exchange signals with them as they had their backs turned to them. It appeared they were weeping and praying at the same time. Penrod was not with them this time. In fact he was still experimenting with the machinery.

"I shall have to abandon this attempt I believe" said jennie to herself tough she too was about to cry. "The only way to raise the submarine would be for me to gain admittance to the coning tower and make it raise myself and that is impossible as the water of the lake don't decrease. It naturally occures to me that they're either really going to perish miserably, this time, or may be miraculously rescued rescued by their angels. But surely there must be other ways to get inside the boat and for me to join them and then I could raise the submarine. It won't be easy though for I must not forget that Violet and her sisters does understand considerable mechanery and has doubtless tried to raise the submarine or to find other means to escape from it and have failed. But then the machinery is strange to them and Penrod, while I only understand how to operate it. Oh god if I had not foolishly submerged it and then left it. It is partly my fault too. I must do something. Main thing is to pray and pray, and pray. They have a great variety of do n doing things because they're supposed to be possessed of angels but it is said the powers of angels too are limited unless they can perform miracles and if they should all fail it is because the crazy old undersea boat is raised and lowered by a peculiar machinery nobody else became acquainted with but myself. I should have trained some of the others to operate it but I was afraid his fiendish enemy child scouts could be sly, with me. Oh what a fool I was.
All those dirty glandelinians. What murderers they'll be, murderers of little girls greatly favored by God and also possessed by Angels. Well never mind.
Then if it can't be helped let the poor things die. It's quarter of three. Only fifteen minutes in which the glandelinians may live. Well I'll see." And she giggled to herself. Quarter "Quarter of three. Well I'll see." She held the boat by the submarine window for some time hoping to attract the attention of the Vivian Girls so she could show the note but to no avail. She tried to make the boat grate gently against the glass but the sound was inudible. To do it violently might break the glass and then the water would pour in and drown those within the submarine. However as fearful of their fate as they might be, and as grief stricken as they were, violet and her sisters realized that Penrod and their friends were desperately doing all in their power to rescue them and prayed to God requesting aid in some way. Penrod however for their cause and spoke was much anxious and afraid than they but was trying to be as brave as they were, at the same fueling a dreadful fate, for there is no greater horror than facing an violent attempt and such dreaded affection which is worse than five death. They would rather have changed places with the glandeliniane than face this terrible peril. It has been really a fact in many instances where persons had been imprisoned in air tight vaults and though their lives were saved on time were having escapes when they were brought out from their suffer ing for air, and their fright. After the boat had returned to the shore Jennie Garner went to see where Angelinia Aronburg was and learned that she had been scheming various ways by which violet and her sisters could be res cued and therefore did not wish to bother her. Three or four times more in quick succession she went down in the boat by the submarine window but there was nobody there and she was frenzied.. It was now about five minutes to three. Jennie stood on the shore eying the outelines of the submarine of the great submarine which showed beneath the clear water, and with tearful eyes and breaking heart, when she suddenly heard voices and raising her eyes saw a group of strange officers approaching from around the body of water. They were four men men of stately presence, very beautifully uniformed and now moved with remarkable military precision. They were followed at a little distance by a good looking young boyscout..

Jennie saw at a glance that these people may be very important, so she advanced to advanced to meet them. Then the four men recieved her graciously and the one who wore the most magnificent hat said;

"I believe indeed you are one of the beautiful girlscout leaders of whom I have heard. We are wishing to see Angelinia Aronburg, and perhaps you can lead us to her."

"I can and will right gladly." answered the little girl hoping there could be help from them. "Follow me please".

The little girlscout general was puzzled as to the identy of the four good men but she gave no sign that she might embrass them."

She understood too that they did not wish to be questioned, and so she made no remarks as she led the way to Angelinia Aronburgs tent. With a courtly bow, the little girl ushered the three four visitors into the gracious presence of Angelinia Aronburg. Angelinia Aronburg glanced up from a piece of paper she was studying as the four men entered, and because of her worry and grief over the predicament of violet and her sisters and Penrod, she at first was inclined to be surely and order them out. but something in their appearance and manner led her to rise and bow to them in her most dignified manner. Then the four formed an instant knelt before the great girlscout leader and then stood up and waited for her to speak.

"Who ever you may be" said Angelinia Aronburg "I bid you welcome."

"We are the Three Chief supreme Persons of the Gemini." said the man with the tall set hat.

Angelinia Aronburg had always known the three Supreme Persons, even longer than violet and her sisters or any one, but this was the first time in her career she had ever saw them in uniform, glancing closely at the three she asked;

"Were you within the enemys lines, and are your members still at the effort of rescuing those four little childrens parents."

"Mainly before we should state the fact" said Rodney Graves smiling we would wish to be presented before the dearest little girls on earth."

Rodney Graves was then surprised for he saw there were tears in her eyes.

"What is the matter?" he demanded turning white. "Did they go into the enemy lines to try it themselves after all.?"

"No" she answered sadly shaking her head. But it is worse than that. Do any of you fellows understand how to raise a sunken submarine.?"

"Some of the secrets of raising a submarine we have gleaned from some studying." replied the head of the Gemini modestly "But we do not place our skill beside that of any one who should know how to operate one."

"Well then the case is hopeless" said Angelinia Aronburg very sadly. "I suppose you are not aware that the Princesses are in a submerged submarine fast prisoners is this very lake, and that it is a matter of a few hours whether they are rescued or perish miserably."

"No we were not aware of that." was the reply though by the sound of his voice she could see he was horrified and taken aback by the news. "But is the submarine disabled.?"

"No it is not but that does n doesn't seem any better for us.."

"It ought to" said Ginger Gingerlive decidedly. "Somebody inside ought to discover how to operate a submarine even if they have never learned it. We have heard of submarines going down in the ocean but then if a sub is disabled there is no hope whatever. But even then that could don't be so bad in this small lake. I see now the fire departments are trying to pump the water from it. That is ridiculous for I now this lake. It is fed by a great number of underground springs and streams and it could never be pumped low in a million years. And that would not help matters either for then how could they raise the boat. But there is a way to have it done if you can secure for me one of the diving suit. Write on a sheet of paper the directions how to work the machinery and it can be done. There ain't not one of us who does not know how to operate a submarine. I could go to that submarines window and tap on the glass. The written directions could be placed in a glass frame water tight and I could show the directions and have one of those within write it down. You may say it is a different submarine. That doesn't matter. All operate the same."

Angelinia Aronburg studied the three Supreme Persons thoughtfully for she remembered that never had they failed. But the she said to them;

"Jennie Turner has already written that and tried to attract them to see it by means of going down in her undersea boat. These are the directions for she gave me a duplicate copy in case I found a way to attract them."

She handed the slip to them and they read;

"My dear friends take down these directions and you'll raise the submarine, Go to Drawer Thirtt Thirteen in the Machine room. Push a button and it'll fly open. The directions are in a slip of paper written there. If it is not there then take down these directions:

To raise the submarine turn the biggest valve to the right that you see in the lower middle. Continue turning it untill the submarine reaches the surface. That is all. Jennie Turner."

"Violet and her sisters are even now imprisoned in that submarine for she herself submerged the whole submarine just to show them the sights under water, and now she cannot return to the submarine after she left it by the small underwater boat. She cannot attract any one to warn those who understand how to operate the machinery that lets the out the water room. We both are trying to find some way to overcome the obstacle and raise the submarine to the surface again. It is now fifteen minutes after three and it ain't done so yet. Can you help us do that if a diving suit can be found?"

The Three Supreme Persons exchanged ~~dittttions~~ glances and the head one replied;

"We do not know, but we will try to assist you. The problem is if a diving suit can be brought. There is no such thing in the army. But how come Jennie Turner made that blunder. Why did she leave the submarine before raising it. She never did such a thing in her life before knowing how crazily fond of Violet and her sisters as she is."

"That is not the cause" said Angelinia Aronburg very spitefully "There's your answer she said rising suddenly, and pushing the curtain of the tent entrance violently aside. T"there's your answer." And she pointed to the twenty Glandelinians who were tied to trees with brush and inflamable material at their feet. "Jennie Turner couldvtell you plenty. It seems" continued Gertrude musingly "That Jennie Turner must have forgot her threat for she is no where around. She threatened to have that rubbish fired if the Vivian Girls are not rescued by three and its now twenty minutes after, and she's no where around. But I have heard that there are three persons somewhere within the christian lines who could really raise that submarine. If I could find those three great men they might be able to tell how to raise the submarine. I was about to summon one of my fast couriers and have them find these men when you arrived. So if you can help me out you could find them."

The Three men despite the awful situation of the Vivian girls could not help exchanging smile now, and Rodney Graves said to Angelinia Aronburg "It will not be necessary to do so. We are the three men."

CHAPTER NINETEEN.

THE [redacted]. FAIL THREE O'CLOCK.

THE SUBMARINE.

"Indeed" cried Angelinia Aronburg. "Then you are the three men who could do it..?"

"We are the three men." admitted Gingigore himself. "But without a ditting diving suit we cannot do anything. We cannot live in water you understand."

"Then" said Angelinia Aronburg "My effort if half accomplished." She showed them three chairs very graciously, and a few minutes conversation followed in which Jennie Angeloni followed/

"We are quite certain" said Rodney Graves "after he had summoned a soldier and told him to see as 2 quickly as possible if a diving suit can be found anywhere in the christian army. "That if we could get down to that window with His Turners directions on that slip of paper any one within the boat could discover a way to operate the machinery. Penrod is their cleverest head and if we could attract him for he has even used the military formulas and countless other things he has stolen from the glandelinians to good purposes when he disguised as Fred parker, Alele Aleleofob and others. He may have added to these things, but they were the foundations of all his own work."

"What means do you suggest for our getting to the coning tower." Inquired Angelinia Aronburg.

The Three Supreme Persons hesitated to reply, for they had not yet considered what could be done to reach the inside of the submarine. While they were in deep thought, and Angelinia Aronburg was quietly quietly assisting their suggestion into the tent rushed Mildred Maxwell followed by Jean sanders.

"Oh Angelinia dear" cried Mildred "Jean has thought of a way to rescue Violet and her sisters and the rest from the submarine."

The Three supreme Persons could not believe that she could solve the problem for if no one else were able as yet to solve the important problem of the submerged underwater boat, there surely was little chance for a little girl to succeed. But Angelinia Aronburg said;

"Jean sanders is very clever. Tell us what you have thought of my dear!"

"Well" said Mildred Maxwell "Jean says that if you could dry up all the water in the lake the submarine would be free of water, and we could raise the coning tower and save everybody within."

Angelinia Aronburg didn't appear hopeful but Dangar said to the little Girls "That is a good plan if it could be possible children. The fire departments have been pumping and pumping and the water doesn't lower. I'll tell you why. It is fed by underground stream. That suggestion is impossible unless a miracle is accomplished. But we can do something if a diving suit we sent for comes."

"Dear me then it seems in vain." admitted Mildred crestfallen and tears coming to her beautiful eyes. "We never thought of that did we Jean? But we see it now."

"Couldn't we stop those underground streams by finiding their sources" asked Jean.

"No indeed" replied Dangar. "It is impossible to stop them also."

"All right if they perish." said Jean making a face at the imprisoned Glandelinians "Then they'll burn."

"It's too bad sighed Mildred "For I hoped we had a splendid idea."

"So you had" declared Angelinia Aronburg her face grave and thoughtful. "There is something in Jeans iden that should have been of real good idea to us if it was not for the underground streams. But they interfere and continually fill the body of water as fast as the fire departments try to pump it out."

"I believe so too" said Schloeder. "The top of the submarine however is only four feet below the surface of the water. If the fire departments could only reduce the level of the water untill the coning tower shows a little above the water we could remove the cover and then Jennie or any of us could go down and operate the machinery. If the machinery was out of order then that wouodn't matter anyhow for we could bring them up and they could escape easily enough. And there are two good boats to use too."

"The best plan though" said Angelinia Aronburg anxiously is "is if the diving suit arives. Then one of you could go down from the boat and attract their attention by the glass. And something must be done soon. They have only thirty five minutes more. Other wise it'll become air tight and they'll perish. The air machinism Jennie said, was injured by an explosion in the water that those rascals made the other."

"...t much could be done until it could be seen that a diving suit was forth coming, but Je Angelinia Avonburg formed in the directions into a water tight room and prepared for that night come next.The more longer it was that they were imprisoned the more anxious everybody was for they were yet confined in the submerged submarine and it sure seemed as if they were really goners this time. In the meantime the fire departments had been pumping away for all they were worth.Many soldiers had come to watch them most anxiously but stood at a respectful distance in the rear as though they were very willing to do whatever they could to help there was notyl nothing that could be done.Never Never for all this time had the water ever receded even the least bit from the shore.It had been hoped that the water would gradually fall with the hope to be able to get to the conning tower but to no avail.Even now Angelinia Avonburg and the others stood by watching the vain effort with frightened tearful eyes. It must be stated in the most shortest narrative that at ten minutes after three, the Glandelinian prisoners had died by fire for they were charged with foul murder or attempt at foul murder of the Vivian Girl Princesses, and in her temporary absence that is Jennie Turners absence, remembering her threat, that if the Vivian Girls were not rescued at three in the afternoon the Glandelinians should burn for it, General Evans ordered the torch to be applied and amid dreadful howling yelling and screaming the Glandelinians mercilessly met the frightful fiery deaths that they richly and justly deserved.

"It shall be an example to other Glandelinians fools to not meddle with the Princesses or any of the child scouts"said Evans."Everyone doing them harm shall share a similiar fate."

It was soon discovered to their horror and to the sinking of all hearts that no diving suits could be found. Everybody were praying desperately that God in His love and mercy would cause something good to happen, when some soldier cried;

"Hurray and glory to God forever.It's rising.Hurrah and a million of them" and he danced like a crazy man in the greatest glee. Everybody suddenly turned their faces in the direction of the submarine.The watchers had observed not anything of the submarine now rising for it wasn't.In fact it was more than that when they looked. It submarine was absolutely afloat the conning tower open and moving toward the center of the lake.

Everybody screamed their prayer of Thanksgiving to God.

"How did they do it?"gasped Jennie Turner in glee."somebody must have discovered the directions."

"Something must have happened"Observed Mildred Maxwell her face now appearing more happier than ever in her life.Then she took Jeans ear close to her and with a happy half mischievious smile whispered;

"I'll bed Penrod did it.He always succeeds at something."

Indeed it was true. Penrod had continually examined all the machinet machinery machinery. Violet and her sisters though they felt dreadfully upset, and fearful of what may happen if he didn't succeed had hopes nevertheless that he could find some way..For a long time Penrod had been totally discouraged.

"I have tried every way in my power"said Penrod"but this mischevy machinery machinery is a puzzle which only Jennie Turner understood. he seems to have place the directions how to operate it in some secret drawer or place for fear of it being stole stolen.These directions are only understood by herself. It must be somewhere in this submarine for she surely didn't take it away with her.Every one of you go and look it up somewhere.You too sisters. You too Ervic and your sisters.It's our only salvation.I cannot operate this machine without it.If I tamper with the wrong thing we're surely done for and in no time. We have only half an hour to save ourselves.It's three thirty and the atmosphere in here is none too comfortable either.It's hard now to breathe as it is."

"But can't some one dare try one of the valves"asked Jennie desperately.

"I can do no more unless the directions is found"continued Penrod."So we must find that direction.It's our only hope. And pray hard for success."

"First then"said Violetvlet us visit the basement which I as told have all sorts of things down there and mysterious secret drawers in the wall."

A short of small steps led from the engine room down to the basement but when the party arived all were puzzled by what they saw.In the center of a broad low room stood a mass of great cog wheels, chains and pulleys all interlocked and forming a huge but beautiful machine and there were engines and other elet ic eletric motive power which should make the wheels turn. Near the bottom center was a huge valve.But nobody understood what the valve was for.Had some one just took the chance and turned it they would have raised the submarine right then and there for this was the valve. and these were the machines.

"This machinery I suppose is the means by which the submarine is low lowered or raised ."Said Angeline despairingly"but the directions which is need to move the machinery is unknown to us.Only Jennie Turner could operate it.I'm afraid we're done efor." And she started to cry a little.

Penrod was carefully examing the mass of wheels and he said;

"I do not believe these wheels control the submarine at all.On the contrary one of them is used to open the doors of the little submarine rooms where those two submarine boats were confined as may be seen from the chains and pulleys used.Each boat was confined in a little room with two doors one to the basement room where we are now and the other letting into the lake itself..When Jennie Turner used the two boats in which she assaulted and captured the Glandelinians who succeeded in imprisoning us here, one of her aids first succeeded in operating the machinery that opened the door and with her followers she got into the boat first in that room and operated the machinery in the boat that madethe top close over them.Then the basement door being closed the the outer door was slowly opened letting the water fill the room to float the boat which then left the submarine, but remaining under water."

"But how could she expect to return here again?"demanded Violet.

"Why theboat would enter the room filled with water and after an outer door was closed some one who understand how to operate that machine stat started a pump which pumped all the water from the room.Then Jennie Turner would open the boat and she and her followers could enter the basement."

"I see"said Jennie"It is a clever contrivance, but won't operate unless some one understands how to operate the machinery."

"Another part of this machinery"Explained Penrod"is used to extend th bridge from the submarine to the lanf land.The steel bridge is in a room much the same in which the boats are confined, and when some one probably Jennie operated another machine it would reach out, joint by joint untill it's far end touched the shores of the lake..The same machine therefore would cause the bridge to reutnr return to its former position. Of course the bridge could not be used unless this submarine was on the surface of the water."

"Author In the world do you suppose Jennie managed to submarine a submerge the submarine, and cause it to rise again."Inquired Police.

"This Penrod could not explain.As nothing more could be learned about I it they decided to examine the main machine that had the big valve in th the center. Many interesting things were to be seen by the others in this room who were searching for the directions if it could be found including much that had been captured from the Glandelinians but they had to admit that these Glandelinians who had constructed the submarine had a rage genuine gen ius for mechanics and had used their brains in inventint a lot inventing a lot of mechanical apparatusthat ordinary engineers could not understand.

While While Violet and her sisters and Penrod were examining the main machinery, the others carefully inspected this room, being most careful careful to examine every article that they came across. Penrod also examined the machinery more carefully..The submarine he understood rested on the boo bottom of the lake..what puzzled him was how he could not dec detect how to operate the proper machinery.There were surely machinery that raised and lowered the submarine.

This "Sub marine"said penrod as he glanced at his watch and sawcit was twenty five minutes to four"here on the bottom of the lake.."When it was submerged as it is now it ought to rise by this big machine here with the center valve.I've turned the iron valve but it won't budge.budge to the left, and it seemed I can't turn it the other way for it seems to stick. What puzzles me is how this thing can be jerked and suspended in the water even by machinery.But I believe this machine operates it all right.I noticed in the basement a big steel wheel to the left on the center of the whole machine.I wonder if it is a mere wheel or valve.Perhaps it isn't and perhaps it is but the machinery it seems to be connected to passes also through the floor and extends upward to this ceiling.Perhaps the rest of the machinery is concealed against the wall opposite.If the lower end of the machinery is fixed embedded in the wall, then some big valve would cause the machinery to operate and so lift the submarine to the lef level of the water."

"I've found plenty of the machinery.It's just here"announced Jane Melfort point ing to one side of the room where there were a chimney almost myriad of valves.

They all gathered around, and Jennie said;

"Yes I...I'll bet some that is the machinery that operates the submarine.I noticed it when we first came here but it seems as if it is the machinery that operates it forward or other directions but not to raise or lower it. I wondered that operated the machinery too and got several of the levers from the valves on, hoping it would raise the boat.They turned the valves and it only made the boat move forward but could not raise it at all."

"[illegible]e's got mettle"[illegible] Penrod. Discovered the manner in which the machinery here operates the submarine.But this does not lower the engine it. We had better find some means soon or we'll get it.It seems as if it is getting harder and harder to breathe."

As she said this she held her head in the air as if to try and breathe harder and as she did so the second drawer beyond against the smaller drawer and thing in the wall and instantly a small drawer popped out from the wall rapping her so very hard on the nose as to instantly draw blood.

"What's this"she jumped up and held her handkerchief to her bleeding nose. Penrod and [illegible] and his sisters sprang forward and peered into the drawer.There was an envelope in it.

"That may be the directions."said Penrod removing it from the drawer."It's sealed.Has any one a [illegible] knife.?"

"No"replied Jennie trying to stop her bleeding."Tear it open that is just as good.Oh I hope it is the directions how to raise the boat.It's getting awful bad in here.I can hardly breathe.Her sisters noticed the change too and were getting desperate.

"It's wonderful if it is the paper I wonder how Jennie Turner discovered it and where she obtained it."

"There is no doubt"said Catherine desperately"That this is the directions alright.But it's written in a foriegn language and I'm quite sure we'll never save ourselves now."

"Can you understand these words?"demanded Violet turning to Penrod as she handed him the envelope again.

"I. That we must seriously consider."answered the boy."We have fifteen minutes in which to save ourselves yet.So all they could do was to sit down while Penrod tore the envelope open.He glanced it over and it was now so still and the time was passing so fast and the air was getting so much less less and it was getting so much harder to breathe that Violet and her sisters grew nervious and frightened.Penrod suddenly stood up in front of the machine.

"Well"he said"Jennie Turner used three valves on this machine, one to sent out the bridge, one to cause the boats to go out of their holes, and one to raise and lower the submarine.submarine.There's three directions here, and three valves but I cannot understand the words.I'm going to take one or two desperate chances on these three valves before me. If neither one helps we'll have to perish that's all."

"Oh Penrod don't say that"begged Jennie so pleadingly that he was touched more than ever.

"Pray harder than ever that I succeed this time"he said in return."While there's life there's hope.Of course we must be careful not to turn the wrong valve.It must be worth a trial for our experience and these valves designed here seems to show something.This paper may have solved our problem.The main thing is to hit upon the valve that sents the boat up.So I'm going to experiment."

He glanced at the paper and then searched for the Valve that appeared as the one he instantly stutided. In the wall of the machinery was one exactly that way.Penrod grasped it and turned desperately to the right as solved by a direction on the paper as indicatied by an arrow.They waited not ionless to see what would happen.There was a grating noise, and a whirl of machinery but the submarine did not move upward an inch..J Jennie rushed to the big glass winuow.

"The boats she"she said as much as her hard breathing and gasping would allow."The---the--boats---are---all---loose and---and--sailing under water--"

"We made a mistake."said Violet gloomily trying hard to breathe easier.

"We are on the right course."declared Penrod."We see now that Jennie Turner used that valve to oust the boats.So this last valve down here a big one ought to raise the submarine.so I'll try it."

He searched for that valve and after a few minutes found the bigger one which he had been studying before.He couldn't however turn it to the left as directed and found it must be tight or something.He tried to use a piece of hard and powerful wood but it would not budge.He glanced at the paper and saw it indicated also he should turn to the right.He therefore He therefore grasped it and turned with all his might.At first it did not turn and he called to Jennie and Violet to help him turn.The three of them finally succeeded.Instantly the submarine to their almost shock and surprise had popped to the surface of the water while all the company stood in silence and awe.It was a wonderful thing, even to those skilled in the arts of machinery to realize that three children should save themselves and the rest by getting the right valve to raise that great heavy submarine

They then went to their own upper chambers of the submarine.

"Why we're above the surface of the water"exclaimed Violet from the window. Penrod went up the ladder to raise the conning tower and after a minutes effort did so.

"Oh how lovely that air feels"cried Jennie drawing in deep breaths while her sisters did the same."Our good loving Penrod has saved us."

To their surprise they could hear the soldiers and others cheering lustily in the streets of the camps some distance off from and along the shore of the lake as they had seen the raising of the submarine.

"Come"said Violet eagerly and almost crying through sheer happiness at their release from a terrible death"let us go up and see what it is on top."

"Not just yet"returned Penrod coming down the conning tower ladder a happy smile upon his face for he was overjoyed at his success at saving his sisters and the rest from a frightful death."First I must go down again to the machinery room and extend the bridge to the mainland where our friends are cheering and awaiting us."

"It didn't take long for them to get down to that room again..Penrod then turned the valve that was to the left.The result was that a door in the side of the nose coat opened and the steel bridge moved out, extended itself joint by joint and finally rested its far end on the shore of the lake(bake) just in front of the nearest of the encampments.

"Now"said Penrod with an arm around Jennie and Joice who were giggling happily"we can go up and recieve the congratulations of the soldiers and others on shore of the rescue expedition who couldn't get to us."

"Across the water on the shore of the lake, everybody was waving them a welcome and then all fell on their knees to ov offer a prayer of thanksgiving thanksgiving to God for helping in the rescue.

The sudden rising of the submarine had caused the two other boats to be washed loose by a tremendous wave but they were recovered by some of the men swimming out to them.Then Jennie Turner and others got in just before the bridge came out to the shore and a number of people were now on the flat top of the submarine.Jennie Turner stood at the edge of the opened conning tower.

"I'll go down first said"she to Angelinia Aronburg"for now since I'll be down there nothing can cause such a disaster again.Are you sure you can manage to move the boat elsewhere in case the Submarine moves across the water."?

"Quite sure"replied the girlscout in a leader with a happy smile of her own since Violet and her sisters were saved.

"So"Jennie Turner started down the ladder hand over hand clinging to the rung rungs with hands and feet.Below in the lower chamber of the submarine were gathered all the boy and girlscouts around Penrod and the Vivian girls for every one were filled with joy that Penrod himself had brought the boat to the surface, and could even now if he chose lower it and raise it again at will as he knew the valves now without even looking again at the paper. Jennie Turner was soon down in the chamber.She hugged the vivian girls in her delight at their safety and then Penrod too to his embrassment while all the liberated child scouts cheered as loud as they could. Everybody was happier than can be explained but Penrod was the happiest for he had again saved them in an emergency.Penrod now to their surprise called to Angelinia Aronburg to come down into the submarine and she did.

The boy and girlscouts were glad that Angelinia Aronburg came among them and welcome her graciously.he too hugged Violet and her sisters jovially and lovingly and even shed tears of happiness that they had last been saved from an awful death ftom by Penrod, and to his surprise and further embrassement embraced him too and kissed Kissed him on the cheek. All the children in the submarine had been greatly frightened by their imprisonment in a boat under water, and were were glad indeed that Penrod saved them. Angelinia Aronburg and Violet and her sisters followed Jennie Turner into the machine room. After Jennie had told of her adventure and the capture of the submarine submarine, and also of the rescue expedition and why on theirvside it had failed. a serious consultation was held on the matter and then Angelinia Aronburg told Violet and her sisters that the three Gemini leaders had returned and wished badly to see them..he said she believed some mission they had made was a successful one.Of course all those who had joined. Angelinia Aronburgs expedition at once crossed the bridge to the big submarine where they were warmly welcomed by all thosecwithin.before all the concourse of boy and girlscouts Penrod himself made a speech, and demanded that hereafter when ever any Blandelinians are captured who do any acts of treachery to his sisters as on this and other occasions they should be burned to death for the penalty as these twenty air ady had been at the command of evans as horrible as the punishmen t was it was just and well fitted to the offense. In return too he agreed to protect them from all future harm as far as it was in his power, and declared that if he could help it they would not any longer be subjected to cruelty and abuse by the Glandelinians. This pleased all the boy and girlscouts greatly, and when Penrod told them they might elect some one to be in Angelinia Aronburg's place as he was going to give her a commission much higher as his sisters wished it and would not take no for an answer for trying trying so desperately to save them they voted for Jennie Turner and that same hour the ceremony of making Jennie Turner into Angelinia Aronburg's place was held, and Angelinia Aronburg got a commission nearly equal as to that of Violet, and her sisters and was to be as constant a companion to them as if she as their own loving sister. Mother step up and she might be adopted by Emperor Vivian himself. For her aide-decamp even though he was not yet a boyscout Jennie Turner selected Arvie for Violet and her sisters had told of his good judgement, faithfulness and cleverness and all of the boy and girlscouts approved of the appointment. Another good thing also was this.

By their own shrewdness and by putting something over on the enemy the three Spreme Persons of the Gemini themselves had easily brought back the parents p arents of Arvie and his his sisters and their former captors captors as prisoners a besides. Then before all decided to return to camp everyone first knelt and then stood on the bridge and recited a good prayer of Thanks giving to God for the good and sudden rescue of Violet, and her sisters and the others by Penrods discovering how to operate the machinery just in time and then everybody went to the camp Jennie Turner leaving a number of men to guard the submarine itself. Nobody within the submarine had eaten a single bite since morning, not because of the scare they had because of the danger of getting meeting so frightful a death but that there had been no rations on board as Jennie Turner had no intentions to use upy it and had only gone to operate it just for curiousity. Therefore as soon as evening came and they were returned to Emperor Vivians Headquarters Emperor Vivian himself ordered a great supper prepared for those who had not eaten since morning, and to which their rescuers also were invited for now Emperor Vivian had heard of what had occured. He however though he was calm within was really angry over the situation and thought within his heart that if anything wicked ever happened again to his little daughters he would condem condemn to death every Glandelinian prisoner within the gray army and give no quarter hereafter. The encampment that evening was beautifully decorated, and brilliantly lighted by numberless big camp fires and within his head quarters there was music from bands and even dancing until a late hour to celebrate the liberation of Penrod and his sisters and the child scouts from the submerged submarine. For Violet, and her sisters had been freed and by Penrod himself. However he blushed when Violet and her sisters told all about him and suddenly thought he saw a way out of it.

"I don't deserve all the credit" he said "It was you Jennie who did most of it. If you had not found the direction in that drawer I would not have succeeded in raising the submarine."

"And if I had not found the drawer accidentally I would not have got the slam into my nose" said Jennie with a laugh. "It was the biggest wallop I ever got."

"wallop in the nose" said Penrod startled. "I didn't see any sign of it. Who hit you?"

"That drawer did. I was leaning against the wall because it was getting so hard to breathe, and I must have touched something I didn't see for the drawer came out in a flash and banged me and I had on the nose. It almost knocked me off my feet. I had a hard time to stop the bleeding."

"Well" Jennie dear" said her father "I don't understand the reason why but you seem to that to get the worse of everything that happens."

"Yes but that's the first time I ever got a punch in the nose" she laughed, and then everybody laughed with her.

"There is now one thing I still fear for my darling daughters, and that is the enmity of the Terrible Manley and all his followers. Of course you may say that it would be safer for them if they didn't do any more spying but remained safely within the christian lines. That may be so but if it was true but sometimes none of us are safe within our own armies. Manley always does succeed in sending secret spies here who annoys us and threatens them with destruction and so forth. Langar here and so does Rodney Graves and Gingivere Glandelinians believe that Violet and her sisters should have remained home but in that they're also mistaken. Though partly unsafe in the army even they're safer than if they remained home. Sometimes when my daughters could become spirits during this war, because for anything I wouldn't want anything to happen to them. I don't believe they'll really ever be destroyed or permanently injured, my instinct tells me so they'll have fun out of the enemy galore in the far future if the war continues long enough, but God Knows they've suffered enough already and that sorries me."

"Do not worry dear Father" returned Penrod kissing gingerly glancing at his sisters lovingly. "Between me and General Jack Evans and Walter Starring and others we'll just let the enemy try it. I'm getting temptations to burn every Glandelinian soldier I see at the stake, and if they want me to give in to that temptation just let them start something with my sisters. For what happened to me in the submarine the enemy will recieve a visit from me to night. Not me alone but Angelinia Aronburg told me so she did see in the enemys lines to day some thing she wanted very bad which she needed very bad. Since this experience happened to I and my sisters so "pleasantly" I cannot refuse my friends a request. I never refuse favors. I love the enemy" so well" that I intend to pay them a visit, especially Manley as he's my pa "particular" friend."

"You don't mean your going to start another raid" Gasped Jennie Turner.

"I certainly am" he said decidedly.

"But the enemy is on his guard and---"

"So am I. I will show my quaillities since I am called a rattlesnake. Radcliffe is coming here to see me to night and we'll both go to it. He knows the sector and my friend Angelinia Aronburg will recieve more than she wanted."

"But remember" said Jennie Turner "since the last raid some of our armies recieved more than they needed. If you bring in any more---"

"I'm I'm not going to bring in any more than what she wanted" said Penrod Penrod this time angrily. "Every time anything happens to my sisters which is not to my liking or if it happens to any of you even I'm going to strike back and I don't mean maybe. I'll teach the enemy to leave children alone".

Violet and her sisters feeling full of spirits thought this time they would life to join the raid. At first Penrod was about to decline for fear of their safty but Emperor Vivian laughed as the prince glanced at him.

"Take them along" he said reassuringly "When my little angels have the fighting spirit in them all hell can't capture them. Don't worry. Let them have the fun. They'll be safe. I can feel it."

Penrod never made an idle boat in his life. Therefore he decided to move a whole column of child scouts and a strong body of christian cavarly army engineers, and incendary engineers. When the two columns went for ard for forward with Penrod and Violet and her sisters at their head and Angelinia Aronburg too all the infantry soldiers cheered them and waved their hats and rifles and even flags and the band played and the departure for the raid was indeed a ceremony long to be remembered. One of the soldiers shouted at Penrod;

"Don't make a mistake Prince and bring back the whole Glandelinian army. We have no room for so many prisoners."

"Don't worry I won't laughed Penrod. "I don't take prisoners."

The three chief girlscout leaders Jennie Turner Angeline Richet, and Angelinia Aronburg who always led their troops wisely and considerately, went with Violet, and her sisters themselves for they had promised them to act as girl guardians and see that no Glandelinians would try anything. Angelinia Aronburg told Penrod in particularly what she wanted. Then she added---I really don't want it for myself though. It is for you and your sisters. It don't belong to the enemy anyhow though I can't realize where it was captured from. It's a very beautifully decorated tent. I can show it to you when we reached within sight of the enemys lines."

When the whole party in advance of the columns reached within sight of the Glandelinian encampments Angelinia Aronburg pointed to the tent for it was in plain sight showing plainly in the gloom of evening. It wasn't striped as Glandelinian tents, but more to the form and beauty and color of an Angelinia State tent, it appeared also as if it was a royal one. It was not too big but big enough to maintain about twenty persons. It had been to gloom, for the sentries of the enemy to be able to see the approach of the party or the columns of boy and girlscouts and soldiers. Therefore as quartered as the camps were in this locality it was an easy prey at that. All those on horse had placed cotton filled cloths over the hoofs of the horses so that they would not make any sound, and therefore the surprise was complete. The sentries and pickets fought desperately to stop the chart. A charging column but to no avail. A number of christian cavarly soldiers were shot down but it did not stop the remainder. That particular tent was captured and captured and did not stop the remainder. That particular tent was captured and everything else began to go up in flames or were blown up. However in this regard in some measure Penrod and his followers did not accomplish as much as they had intended because they met considerable resistance at first from a wave of Glandelinian infantry which was finally repulsed, and then a big body of Glandelinian cavarly attacked them and the fighting was fiercest yet. At this stage through some mishap the child scout column bore the brunt of the Glandelinian cavarly, charge and as fiercely as they resisted the yelling Glandelinian horses they nevertheless were being borne backwards by the pressure of the assault...however fortunately they were not suffering any lo- es losses for the child scouts are so d-s perately well trained in th t e the use of -abre g m -r lance that the fiercest -landelinian soldiery could n ot do anything to them while for their victory they suffered dreadful loss themselves.However Angelinia Aronburg managed to get the child scout troopers by a dexterious movement out of the way of the Glandelinian assailants and then made a safe retreat, while the rest of the assailing force fell upon th e christian soldiery cavarly also driving that back. Ext exultant over their victory the glandelinians pressed on, enthusiastic because for the first time in the war they had ever defeated a child scout column and therefore pressed on to carry the advantage and save the rest of their encampment from destruction, and to prevent the raiders from rescuing child slaves, for the fight ranged ranged close to one of these sort of encampments.

Some one shouted some report that Penrod was wounded badly, and the Vivian Girl Princesses captured, and this shocked the christian fighters so that they rallied and fought savagely giving no quarter. The report however was a blunder but it served to cause such a rall, amongst the troopers that they finally were able to make an attac themselves and drove the glandelinians back before them with frighful loss. Every attempt was made by the soldiers to locate where Violet and her sisters were made prisoners, and this caused the christian counter assault to be continued with such driving energy, that the glandelinians became panic stricken and fled from the fight in unspeakable horror.

In the meantime with the help of Angelinia Aronburg, and Penrod the child scout troop had been rallied, and went again into the fight themselves, cutting off a portion of the Glandelinian cavarly squadron and almost massacring the whole lot.Ten glandelinians fiercely attacked Penrod and Violet and her sisters but got the worse of it in no time. However so fierce had been the conflict and so great the loss of life amongst the glandelinians, and also the christian cavarly squadrons that as it was feared the enemy would come on again in bigger numbers to overwhelm them, the raid had to be an abandoned here, but not untill they got away with all the child slaves near whose encampment and within full sight of which the fierce cavarly squabble had raged.

For some great distance the raiders were persued by a glandelinian cavarly of a far greater number but not for a very great distance however as to follow too far might mean an ambush..Manley himself sighed over his own narrow escape.He had watched the approach of the raiding columns from the top floor of his headquarters, and was frightened when he saw them them burst into the camp and start fires and explosions, and a party coming dashing dashing -ard ward his own secto section.He realized that he had been in grave danger and yet in case of being hemmed in he was determined to fight to the last before allowing himself to be captured.He called all his own cavarly in this sector to the scene and moved up a strong body of infantry, and gave orders orders to give quarter to no one boy scout or soldier. However the raid did not come his way though there was considerable firing in that locality for several minutes and some big fires. The child slaves who many were of the ages of between nine and ten had never expected to see themselves ever rescued, and had not known what to make of it when the fierce fight raged so close to their slave encampments, and see the christian side become victorious.The elder ones had watched the scene with excitement and elation but the smaller ones had been terrie terrified and begged the elder ones to protect them.The elder children however had managed to assue assure the small children that they had nothing to fear if the "good"soldiers won. and they did.

Seeing the christians victorious the child slave masters and overseers, and other so called em l employees ran away, and hide themselves in the woods abandoning everything to the raiders.On the return to the christian lines beside the magnificent tent and some handsome wagons, Penrod wondered exceedingly besides the wounded soldiers being brought back now many child slaves had been rescued...Several of the child slave masters had been also captured but as they were not soldiers, they were not therefore refused quarter. But they were to be prisoners just the same. As soon as the whole column returned to the christian lines, and the number of wounded sent to the hospitals hospitals to be cared for the child slaves were lined up in rows to be checked up by the proper authorities and see how many were brought in.

Penrod had not said anything to any one about intending to rescue child slaves but that had been his plan nevertheless, and when he had come out some considerable distance he had told Violet and her sisters about it, and they had heartily approved of it. and joyfully agreed to help him in his efforts..now it had been accomplished and that late evening the whole number of child slaves had been lined up in two immense rows.The boys were on one side of child slaves on the other.In the mid ll that camp had been set afire.

In the meantime while the child slaves were being rescued the whole christian squadron repaired to their own places, and Penrod and Angelinia Aronburg went together to report before Emperor Vivian, while Violet, and her sisters went with Angeline Aronburg to her own private rooms. In the meantime the Angeline Aronburg and the others help put up again in their own camp the beautiful and big catta tent.It however was a hard and difficult task to put up but finally it was erected properly and stood in the manner the others did.Then they went to themselves to see the child slaves who had been liberated and saw they were as intelligent and fine looking children as any other inhabitants of the unusually holy country of Abbleminia.Indeed, so fine looking were the children that the number of the child slaves could be but one good result of the tremendous raid was that now these children could never age in be deprived of the freedom and happiness that rightly belonged to them and which they were entitled to.

The child slave masters who had been captured were to be deprived of all the power to be cruel. slave owners or masters hereafter.As it was rather too tiresome to remain out long, as they were tired from the excitement and exertions of the raid, and things having been accomplished in a most satisfactory manner, Violet and her sisters age in invited Angeline Aronburg to accompany them and Angelinia Aronburg in their headquarters, and departed for the place well pleased with their thrilling yet interesting adventures.

"I'm very glad we not only succeeded in getting poor parents released from those -landelinians but we rescued so many child slaves to night also" said Juice himself "For we not only prevented any harm coming to them but they too have been freed from their cruel slave masters for good and all and if they have no parents we will soon be sent under powerful protection northward where they will be adopted by many people as their own and become happy and loyal subjects of the Kingdom of Abbleminia.which proves that it is always wise to do ones duty however unpleasant and full of danger that duty may be."

"Say my dear boy Penrod"said Emperor Vivian when he and his daughters and Penrod were sitting together that evening "Are you too possessed by angels.?"

"Penrod glanced at his father in blank astonishment at the question and then looked inquiringly at his sisters, and then at Angelinia Aronburg, Violet and her sisters were smiling as if they were suspicious of something too.

"Why!"gasped Penrod,"what made made you say that Pa!"

"Why every time you raid the enemys lines you come back with so many rescued child slaves.."

"Why I only had a fight with the enemy near the encampments of the child slaves and carried the place during the desperate fray.There was nothing to it I'm sure"he smiled though he could not understand what was wrong.

"You ought to have counted the child slaves yourself and let the poor checker have some rest for to night."Giggled Jennie."They are not going to finish the check up untill to morrow.There are only too many."

"But--but" nobody told me n anything about the number"said Penrod some what confused"I--I--- th ought there were several thousand and-----"

"Well my boy"said Emperor Vivian "there's nothing to be embarrassed about. The men counted the girls first, and then only a small portion of the line. They cannot tell the number yet, but there were counted sixteen thousand, so far and that was only a small fraction of the number of girls you brought in not counting the boys.Those who were counted were sent off to another spot by themselves so they would not need to be counted again.you surely made a raid this time.They say the Glandelinian fire departments cannot battle the conglagrations your raiders started and the fires are worse than in the first raid you made.There has not been any big explosion though.Look over there.I never seen the sky so glareful."

"Well let the enemy leave my sisters alone then."said Penrod."They ought to understand that I would do it again. and I will"

Just at this moment a soldier was ushered into the Emperors presence.

"Sire"said the soldier"We did not after all give up the counting, but got many more to help us. The child slave camp that was raided to night but must have been an awful big one for we have checked up on them all by now. This is the list of the child slaves rescued. "And then he turned and looked gratefully on Penrod and violet and her sisters while tears stood in his eyes. "Three of those children were my own stolen from me two years ago"he almost blubbered. "You are surely a good reliable boy my f i dear : Prince"he added. "Six hundred of us soldiers have recieved our own children back thanks be to God and to you and your sisters."

"Penrod was flabbergasted at this report.

"What the"he began "I--- if--- didn't under---"

"You save d them just the same"said the soldier gratefully."General Clive [illegible] would ll t[illegible] ive you the thanks. You have rescued the two little darling girls and boy who were also slaves. And amongst those was little Jennie's brother and elder sister.In one recognized them alright.If she could only see you,she'd [illegible] from happiness and don't leave them she'd be happy to recover them again."

Penrod looked in bewil erment at his father and at Violet and her sisters who also were astonished. Emperor Vivian glanced over the numbered list and then without saying anything handed it over to Penrod to see what he would have to say for himself when he saw it himself.This was the list as follows.

CHILD SLAVES RESCUED IN TO NIGHTS RAID.

Boys [illegible]'79968.

"But Sarel, "said Penrod "These figures must be wrong.The enemy enemy child slave camp couldn't have been that big and----

"It sure was"said Angelinia Arenburg"I was helping in the raid and when our Followers come forth we spread all over it setting fire to everything. We secured every child there was under your direction and captured some of the masters too.The mas master we captured declared that yesterday there were two hundred and fifty of them there but sarel, this morning some had been sent away to where no one can tell.So those numbers are correct. The enemy will remember you to,night."

"They surely will."Giggled Violet as she glanced at the figures. "I suppose Penrod dear,you'll say I did it now in order to get out of it because we were in the raid too."

"I----I--I--have nothing to say"moaned Penrod."I'll admit it, I'm whipped. Whipped by you all.The enemy can't whip me but you can.I give up.I surrender."

CHAPTER [illegible]

THE BATTLE OF JENNIE POR[illegible] AND ALONG THE CALVERNIAN BOUNDARY LINES WITH THE STATE OF CALVERNIA (CALVERNIA)

For an hour the struggle continued the Glandelinia ns ke eping up a heavy lwibering fire al all along the line. General Vendell soon come up withseveral parks of artillery and these were soon tra ined upon the attacking christians, the gunners hammering away as fast as they could , load and fire. The din of the battle became horrible and the slaughter heartre nding. General Hindernine who had wnt into his headquarters to study on some picture f of a child which he suspected was Aronburg herself(Having found it) heard the most heaviest firingof his life time and realizing what was going on sent strick orders to general Aronburg to demonstrate upon federals center, and then he himself sent heavy forces to do lans aid.

By this time the battle along Doolans lines was in full sway . Being reinforced steadily the marians had finally pressed forward and was assault ng Doolans lines with all the fury they could exort in themselves.

The whole of Do lans lines was al ablaze and in a continuous uproar. General Durandoes columns which stretched pa partly across the Moonlights Run was assaulting Doolans right with all their force made making mad demonstrat ions to turn this wing and rool it up. These Glandelinians s had seemed to forget that they were fighting in a battle. They seemed to think that his was only once one of their mad wargames h which they played before th this great and long stuggle had ever begun and each man in his frenzy was striving madly and fury stricken to se e who could be he first to get at the christians. The universal devil vell of the Glandelinians was completely drowned out by the maddened roar of artillery and musketry which brought down the men in gray in nearttending numbers. General Doolan realizing the fury of the nemy's attack and fearing serious consequ nces wrote to Hindernine;

"Your excellency Rivhard Hindernine;

" The Glandelinians are at acking in a manner as if they had gone in insane. Just now they cannot be checked at any quarter and the main danger is threatening along my right. Can you doe someti something to relieve the terrible pressure. Situation is very critical. Your assistant general in comman d;

Ieneral Abnerdoolan."

However Hindernine did not need this remot report. He with his very ou eyes saw the des desperate situationand really did not know what to do as heavy forces of the enemy was massing on his center..... All that he could see to do was to make a bloody demonstration upon the massive Masonic lines under generals Groverner, Grovet on, and Mc- Ellen which he did as soon as possible .

Now it really did become a battle. Three times Hindernine saw his divisions of three million men in each, reduced to five hundred thousand amid a sea of flame and din and sem semi volcano volcanic eruption of exploading shells and flashes and darts of fire, and to meet attacks which in their fury resembled the approach ing end of mankind along his center, and the whole scene became like a great con flargration in Hells forests fires. Over five thousand cannons were thundering in incessant spasmodic sav salvoes and in heaven defying throes and thousands of the frenzy stricken Glandelinians were blown or hewn to pieces, stretches of forests wereleveled and the debris was in furnaces of flames.

The scene had indeed turned like an inferon of the lower r regions and the explosions was as constant as the rattleing of drums.....

Twice Hindernine, from desperation launched the entire left of his center upon Groverners lines and after a fr fight that seemed like a wholesale slaughter the torn and mangled christian columns were compelled to give it up and retreat under heavy fire of shells and high explosives. The battle was now a maddened shrieking fury. For every repusle that the christian sufferedthey in turn had to inaddition sustain headlong driving onlaughts made by the Glandelinians who stormed their way up to the very christian trenches only to be mowed down like grain as fast as they came.

General Cammillia, Zoe Rae Demonstrationand Headlong on the side of the enemy were killed, and general Cimmillia, Hutchingt on, James Angelo were killed also in leading a roaring demonstration on Groverners right and his whole command was crushed to fragments amid the frightful storm of carnage and devastation and now Mc-Hollestes Mc-Hollestinians made a driving demoniacal counter charge but his lines were torn and blown to fragments by a hellstorm of h of high explosives and the general killed.

Never before in all the war was there even such a battlefought at Jennie Cory and ti make it worse Hindernine was exerting all his strength in the indominable determination to win. He had crushed Mc-Hollesters whole army to fragments fragments in the opposition he gave to his headlong attack and Allen Mc-Hollester his brother a Seing something strange going on at other points of the battle field Pindarnine kept all the boyscouts he could spare in motion with flag signal flags and telegraph works, and telegraphed to general the n to go and ask the station chief to go to Aronburg with an order to start all his powertrops down federals concentration. The battle had soon spread along Pindarnin on entire front. Along his left the enemy's forces were receding somewhat the enemy having failed to force Goodone lines, with a loss of more than three million in killed and wounded and prisoners. In the meantime Violet and her sisters having recieved the report from general Thanl, rode across a sm smoking meadow pursued by a score of Glandelinians. Shells were bursting in the air like salvos thunder and the distant roaring flames seemed to scorch the heavens.....

Twice Violet and her sisters narrowly escaped death from bursting shells and rode at breakneck speed to get away from the wo wildly persuing Glandelinians who were bent on preventing them from doing th their mission. Just as they were about to be overtaken a squad of Angelinians came to their rescue, and Violet and her sisters went straight to general Aronburgs head uquarte head quarters and reported to him of the order.

In thee meantime along his enter Pindernine saw one of his main divisions shattered and broken into many groups and knots giving way in a sea of smoke and flame before the attack of general Ledger's Kurds and was frenzied.

"Good God." He shouted; "Look that that foul column allowing themselves to be w wiped out by that mere hord of Kurds. It's s shocking."

Immediately he dispatched a number of officers to the eastern li lines and dashed down tward the retreating columns where a pandemonium of confusion was ensuing.

"Go v back, go back." He shouted as he bore down upon them; "Show Ledger that it takes more than him to cleanou you up. Forward face the other way."

At his appearance the Angelinians began to take heart n and started to rally the foremost columns pouring a withering fire upon the Glandelinians Kurds checking their advance gradually.

In the meantime Federal who was directing these attacks ordered to ignore Aron burgs demonstrations but the latter knowing that a serious battle was on and deeming to save his superior Pindernine from being worsted withdrew general Ugnies and Eugnies armies from the west of Jendie wory and sent these to the aid of Pindernine. While he was o doing this Aronburg extended Hellbuschs main line across Federals front in batt le array and during the furious onslaughts which were being made threatened Adolo-De-garde armies with annihilation.

Seeing himself in this tight fix general Adolo-de-garde withdrew southward for nearly a mile leaving a sea of dead and wounded behind him, while Smash-in-the head, and Break-in-the-neck as these two generals were called who led long after the bat le of Pedernine ben sent into Calverinia to help establish the Julo allio fot fortifications had ha advanced with their own forces from the north and opened a heavy artillery fire upon Hellbuschs lines, and then launch launched a tremendous onslaught in seemingly overwhelming nubers.

Violet and her sisters who were now with Arob Aronburg at the front saw the adva nce of this immense column of mighty wave of men and wondered what the result would be, in a few minutes.

On and on they came yelling with derision and rage. The first line withered before the deadly fire along Hellbocks and Hellbuschs lines combined but the rest came on with reckless bravery and struck the christian lines like the sledge hammer would a horseh horseshoe. By the impact Hollbuschs lines were bent backwards in the shape of an angle tut nevertheless it held for firm and along the christian line there came a most murderous roar that shook the heavens and whole platoons or brigades of the Glandelinians wi withered away. The survivors continued the onslaught with maddened hellish fury and at last Hellbucks lines gave way he himself being mortally wounded.

At this moment general Mc-Whirther arived with a battery of artillery and as he rode up to general Aronburg said;

"See how those glandelinians are pressing on Hellbock. Do you think your guns could stop them!"

"I don't think so but I'll try." Said general Mc-Whirther; "I'll have to be qui ck t oo because those Kurds are coming fast."

At once he ordered the artillery to be unlimbered and in a few minutes they were placed in a position to fire upon the Glandelinians who were still doing their ut most to out their way through Hellbocks lines. As quickly as possible the guns were loaded and then the Angelinians waited until the recolinins christians were out of the way and then at the signal given the wholeline of guns let loose in a simul taneous roar and every shell hit its mark for mowing the gray columns and mowelin g a thousand men there being five hundred guns altogether. Despite their discriminating havoc, the Glandelinians must have gone insane insane or either death was as easy as eating mince pie for the survivors, even scores of thousan ds who had even been cut on the hands and faces sparely, came on recklessly. Hellbocks lik lines had been crushed to fragment gradually by the Glandelinians and were n ot swept aside.

Again and again the five hundred guns blazed forth with a roar that shook the earth but the other survivors came on giving forth their fearful "Hurrah!" with all their might..... General Mc-Whirther indeed realized that there was no chance chance to check the wildly advancing Glandelinians for if his heavy guns could not hold them off nothing on earl could else could.

Aronburg saw the situation, and did not know how to make of it. General Callenbar, Hallunginger and Von Patrick were rallying with their infantry columns and now these came to the support of the artillery and gave the enemy a better fire with all the energy they could muster. Again and again the Glandelinians lunged forward with deafening Blodgurdl blooddurldingyollo against the line of artillery and the carnage was horrific men on both sides falling in thousands many mangled and blind bleeding, the Glandelinians striving with all their energy to keep u off the frenzied Glandelinians from swarming among the gunners.

Bayonets were plied in deafening tumults like daggers, and the Glandelinians fell in flillies destroyed by the wind before this wedge of cold steel. Nevertheless they fought with the fury of desperation. They used their own bayonets effectually as the Angelinians pressing the infantry back slowly. Aronburg was bound under any condition s to hold onto these guns if he could or destroy them with the enemy. He saw the vigorious drive th of the enemy, and of the awful slaughts committed by the gray cats demons. Leaving word to the Abbissanians to hold the position to the very last Aronburg sent a dispatcher to bring more infantry and more artillery. Violet and her sisters watched the drive of the enemy with great dread and fa fear. If the Glandelinians would carry these guns there would probably be a dangerous gap and they knew it, and when the gaps would be made the batt e would be lost and then also there would be probably a serious and horrible disaster.

They almost cried over the sit uation and begged the menthemselves not to give way! They even kept among them at times with banners trying to hold them by intr intreaties and pleads. Many of the soldiers saw the little girls almost crying and ok knowing what it was about felt that their wielding of ground was saddening ans and ter ifying them.

Filled with greater desperation the soldiers struck the Glandelinians with the butts of their muskets, displayed tremendous wal s of bristling bayonets and pikes and stuck to their positions, the Glandelinians going down in scores of thousands before that bristling hedge of bayonets..... The cannons were still thunder ing with fury and with all their might, but the Glandelinians were in possession of a good number of them and were using them on the Angelinians.

Violet and her sisters saw one of the captured guns aimed accurately at them and dodged the discharge just in time by throwing themselves flat on the ground.

Jendie who still limped from the wound in her leg was slower but the storm of canister whistled harm harmlessly about her picking out victims by the score of hundreds at least. He Lying still prone on the ground the hair terrified little girls saw that the Glandelinians were desperately pressing the christians more fiercely and felt more afraid that all was lost. A ss shell exploded a few yards in front of them showering them with clouds of dirt twigs and grass and stifling them with smoke.

"Oh God." Cried Jendie as she staggered to her feet; "I wish those fresh forces with the artillery would arive. Soon it will be too late for them to check the enemy."

Her sisters had already got en to their feet and in a few minute the first columns of the reinforcements to their joy were seen coming, on the double quick.....

The little girls urged their horses which they quickly mounted and the soldiers flourishing their arms wildly, and soon knowing what was up the soldiers hastened their pace. Soon the christian came rushing up tward the Abbissanians who were stu bbornly resisting their desperate assailants and mingling with them plied their tumult of bayonets upon the Glandelinians while others coming up opened a withering fire. These however were not enough to repell the dare-devil assailants successfully but however other columns were coming and even more artillery was arriving and Violet and her sisters seeing the coming wave of their signal flags making a sign to them that the enemy were about to carry the guns..... The officer of these forces saw these signals and hurried their troops on at a swift run the art illery coming on ahead in a confused gallop and clattering oar. In a moment more they arived the guns being quickly unlimbered and trained upon the Glandelinians. This battalion had about the same ruber of guns that the other had and in a very few minutes they were literally leaping hell into the oncoming lines on to one. Storm of grape and canister swept the gray hordes down like a blizzard of snow the ofGlorn and men rode i going down in numbes that was appalling. Broadside after broadside was hammered away at the enemy their lines line literally went to pieces amid the bloodcurdling carnage men laying three deep among the captured guns. At this critical moment the other columns of infantry arrived and buried themselves against thelines in gray who were already staffin flagging....?

The carnage was now more fearful tha before..... The Mandelinians really did not want to gleinudon thewarm almost successful and now fought with the fury of demons. The clash of the ops opposing lines was something fearful, bayonets sabres, pistols daggers clubs pikes and musket butts being used with the utmost fury. Wave after wave of the christians pushed against the solid wage wedge of Mandelinins only to be crushed and mangled before the clanging walls of bayonets and pikes.

The counter attacks on the massive gray column seemed in vain.Aronburg saw thatthe enemy wer was reinforced t themselves by n ew divisions and that theonly thing to do was to kep them from taking theothe five hundred and fifty on cannon. The enemy was replying with tenfold vehemence with the captured cannon against the five hun dred new ones and t e thunder of more than five hundred guns at close range at t that se med to shake the heavens e. Aronburg placed heavy infantry lines to support the new line of artillerygand cover the other christian forces who were attacking the e emy with all their vigor.....

For an hou Aronburg wat ched the attacks made by the christians with intense apprehension and with a strange feling of sorrow. Was he really going to lose the batt le?He wondered;"Won't the headlong onslaught of the enemy never be checked. Mandelinin forces under Rabbis and Prestis Johnston had already come to the aid of the Kurdsman and the battle increased in its murderous fury. General Jansin who recently took com and was kil ed while leading a desperate charge upon the second line of guns with five thousand of his gravoc graveoss all around him simultaneously, Gag-gag, who with Boonia and Ahia led the second tremen dous assault met a fire that literally mowed down his columns and cut their main line to pieces and they were all killed. Cadlin ..omar with ninehundred thousand men simultaneously swept upon the Abbinan-las cannon under Protestis but he himself and one of his generals Nalidon by name suffered the annihilation of their whole division and the assault had to be l withdrawn at this point the two Mandelinian generals being severely wounded while Protestis had atthe sametime ben severely wounded in the arm but retained his command. General Je rus cicia and Scandin went to the same task that Cadlin Homer had failed to do the assault being resumed with murderous fury. The brave Homer who helped in this second assault despite his wounds was killed during the frightful storm of carnage and Scandia n and Jerusicia were wounded but at this moment the arrive on dae general Josis Cannon had captured the trenches formerly held by MorbinsAbbinan lans and now the situation was critical though Josis Can on had also fallen.

General Camdon on the side of the christians had been killed, Anaris was wounded three times and general Gandon Minia who had stuck to his post to the last was taken prisoner. Smash-in-the-Head, Break-in-the-neck , Ade-la-de-garde, were wounded Tamerlinicia was killed, and general Chainlinger himself was shot through the ear by a ram rod in his tussle with a frenzied half batt le inflamed Africanian soldier who had attempted to wrest his sabre from him. The infantry under Puttes held sternly against series of frightful onslaughts made by The Mandelinians under Poglonia who also fell.

The Mandelinian leading general Cole was killed in front of a christian cannon and Smilesmouth who took his placeand continued the assault with an insane fury had his belly torn open by a shell and he dropped dead after sabring several christian soldiers. Malscow at the same time led a fierce charge like a roaring tor /nados of hell but he was killed along with one hundred thousand men. General Mouthlingburgs Mandelinians and Malsbury came to the support of Poglonimia and Marcocelilos and these three made desperate attempts to form a hornets nest but the christian cannoes cannoneers pouring in a hot fire checked them with a torrent of lead and canister as from five hundred fir fire hose streams, these t Mandelinian generals were killed simultaneously and those of their commands who survivors survived this terrible massacre were compelled to raise their hands in token of surrender and accepted merey at the hands of their enemies.

T e chay had literally formed a hornets hornets nests for themselves.RitchertonsAngelinians made a fierce demonstration upon other Mandelinian columns causing an increase in the fearful carnage.

At this time great forces under A' Hickudas-Powad, Owinis Womis , woonswad, Ali annis Wudand and Hickencillian arrived to the support of the Kurds ii possession of theother fivehundred guns a nd Aronburg saw the critical danger now. Clinklin on the christian side had been killed and Powadins and Wellhills on the side of theenemy were wounded. General Movishad also arrived withn force of cavarly and these made a fierce charge upon Aronburgs lines followed by the divisions under Walkin and , garden and Bodlin who reinted the swarming christian infantr infantry were killed, A'hicfudas Powad,, Owinis Womis and Woondwad were captured and Hoik an and Loughlin who reformed the flagging Mandelinian columns when a volcano of flame and din flashed along the christian line were also wounded and in the fight at close quarters Nolan was killed and his division of one hundred and fourty five thousand hor horsemen annihilated. The attack of the Mandelinian forces continued however, and the Angelinian gunners having used canse out the Mandelinians down in frightful numbers and there was now a terrible mixup of horses men bayonets pike lances and every othe weapon of every discription. Johnson made attacks at other points of theline with Wellington and Moldonia with general Chillis Censoni, Darger West Ihorg and Doo-goo stormed the Abbinanian line on the right with all the v available force on the right only to be withered to fragments by a most galling fire and all these generals were wounded four of them severely. However despite al this rag reckless bravely the second line of guns could not be taken and the Mandelinians being reduced 4 by twenty hours of fierce and sanguinary fighting in the midst of a series of terrific thunderstrons or artillery retreated to the second line of guns which were retaken the whole Mandelinian front being cut up and thrown into confusion and driven back for miles. Theretreat of the enemy turned into a panic attended with wild disorder disorder and demoralisation all the way to their main line hey fle confusion the whole of Federals army. The Abbinandian army then followed like a tremendous n'w avalanch of men and crashed upon the remaining Mandelinian columns like a furiously advancing tornado clearing the whole feild and the region of theenemy for nearly thirty miles in extent smashing Federals army to pieces once more but this did not end Federals career though he got a second s mashing blow.

Along Mandinarines front and also along Hindarnines the enemy had also kept up the assau/t for twenty hours and had a most relent up Hindernines whole army when Aronburg became successful. In killed Aronburg had lost 481,999 and in wounded 6,000,000 195,888 missing, and 345,195 in mortally wounded and 195,949 in prisoners besides 200 cannon and large quantities of firearms whichhowever had been retaken during the rout of the Mandelinians. He had managed to march five HUndred thousand men around the flank of Hindernines againinats which he attacked with soldge hammer force. Despite al this he would have been worsted had not Hindarnines right wing rallied and wedgedthemselve so tightly against the enemy that a frightful panic ensued. Hard pressed from three sides hundreds of thousands of Mandelinians under generals Hindernine, Hindernins, Candrinicia Co/ Calhornia, Jack Ornert on, and Ballinia surrendered, while generals Whilk Whillian Scholedeine James Caper Casper Henrysonia, Bleedinglinger Mishinger and Flo Felis were forced to surrender th their division s. The rest fled precipitately toard the main line at this point followed closely by Hindernines whole command about over eighty million men having fought on each side. The remaining squares of the Mandelinians at this section recalled the advancing christian line with a fin fire that seemed to set the whole batle field on fire but the christians poured down upon them in huge avalanches of me n out them into fragme nts taking hundreds of thousands of more prisoners and routing them like sheep carrying al all before them like a typohhn does a forest of trees.

The Mandelinian loss was 973,578 killed, 4,441,489 wounded, 1,299,000 prisoners and 700,000 missing. Indeed it was the fi-st christine victory that had occured at a place called Jennie Mory and one of the ablest Mandelinian generals next to King Manley was totally annihilated, ~~the killed, wounded missing and prisoners to 7,235~~ and had recieved a smashing defeat and twice at that.

The total Mandelinians losses is 4,838 7,235, 167inkilled wounded and missing in cluding the prisoners. Thetotal christian losses were as total 8,278,948.

Chapter Two.

THE WAR ALONG THE BOUNDARY LINE OF CAL VRGINIA.....

In the meantime for several months before this fresh and new christian armies had been concentrating along the entire boundary line of calvirinia with the porpuse of preventing the Juan Manley of or theother Mandelini n generals from crossing over over and to prepare the Way for general Hansonins great campaign. Manley was angered at the slownessof the Mandelinian armies in fort fortifying the boundary line and so spore every day of the months passing. Under instruction from general vivian in Angelinia general Caswell Anderson advanced upon the Mandelinians who held fort twigs, a a string of fortifications a mile long. A fierce engagemen t lasting two days began at Robert's de creek but the Mandelinian army there under general Indianiaolo was crushed to pieces by their excruciating losses and Indianola surrendered the very next day day giving up besides on a thousand cannon and nine million men, ninta n Mandelinian vessels and two fortresses at Dunn Creek.

Then Anderson demanded the surrender of fort Twigs but recieved a flat refusal so he decided to force its surrender. Every gun thatwas available was brought t o bear upon the fort and soon the most tremendous cannonading ever heard in this region was on. The Mandelinians replied with seven hundred guns and by bursting shells and high explosives fairly thinddered continu ously against the fortifications and batteries.

Being fiercely pounded by shell and shrapnell for two days the outer walls of the fortifications were reduced into an miserable ruin and fifty of the enemys guns were silenced, while many were killed or wounded, but nevertheless despite the terrible havoc wrought by the guns of the fortifications the fortifications still held replying broadside for broadside and shaking the air with the din of the guns. All this time fearful volleys were forced poured upon the christian lines and at times a the ranks broke out like an inferno.

Seeing that his artillery was not accomplishing anything Anderson decided to take the fortifications by storm under cover of his guns.

A division of men under Oliver Johnson were sent to storm the redoubts. These columns advanced in grand array and stormed the fortifications for hours but nevertheless were repulsed with the loss of eighty thousand in two hours. General Impernoli led another assault during the night. In the fury of the attack the Angelinians managed to capture one of the redoubts but such heavy forces were gradually massed upon them that they had to abandon the assault and retreat, being pursued and shot down by thousands by the wily foe. A third assault was led by Anderson himself. Gradually but surely Anderson got his whole force upon the fort and the battle became terrific. Twice his left wing was worsted with the loss of 30,000 per hour and the third time rallied up. Despite all this his energy Anderson saw that it was impossible to take the fort on y yet. It was defended by steel nerved artillerists and only that but the Clandelinians had the advantage of position. Nevertheless Anderson did not abandon the seige.

At the same time while the battle of Carthigan had been going on several little children two girls were wandering along the banks of the Angeline river near its mouth when they saw an occurance that caused wide their eyes. Five forces of Angelinian troops about one hundred and thirty thousand in number were marching up and down the banks. Not knowing what was going on the children continued on their way until they reached which was known as Harpers Navy Yard.

Angelinian soldiers were over ma n in the b battle ships and numerous Clandelinian'ar ican were living the Angelinian flag.

Even at nine o'clock the A children saw Angelinians outreach racing off with heavy cannons, while who wagon loads of small arms, munitions and stores of immense value were being carted off by the thousand of soldiers many of w whom were laughing and talking.

Of course these innocent children did not know what was going on, though they knew these men were christian soldiers/ b t to tell the truth the Angelinians under Prendine had many captured the Clandelinian navy yard at the mouth of the Angeline river with four hundred national battle ships twenty cruisers fourty m Emarines, 22,000 cannon, besides small arms munition a storage of immense values and many merchantmen of which had been given up without a shot in defence. Also an arsenal with millions of doll ars worth of arms and ammunition were in their possession while fourty five hun dred thousand Angelinians long before now had been advancing rapidly to seize Davis Run.

As it was the first time in their lives that they had ever seen soldiers and so many and even if they were the christians they were very much afraid and went off at a quicker pace toward their home and reached it only to find the yards swarming with m more soldiers with different uniforms and different color. Before they could say a word they were seized by the nearest soldiers ons and dragged forcibly into the house where they found their mother lying in a pool of blood.

"You little snips were spying on us and caused the death of your mother." Said one of the officers gruffly; "What were you at the n n navy yards for eh!"

The children were too frightened to answer and the officer continued;

"You will not get away from us. We will hold you untill you grow older then shoot you as spies. Through your traiterious ded the enemy has been here and shot your mother. Great loving children for a mother you are indeed."

Recognising their uniforms the little girls rea r realised that they were in the grasp of the fierce and re pulsive Abyssinkilians as they had seen such soldiers before. However broken hearted over the death of their mother and from the fierce looks of the soldiers they could not summon the courage to say anything though they wept bit erly a nd forcibly pulled themselves from their capto captors and three threw themselves with a piteous cry at the side of their slain mother.

"I believ they are innocent." Said one of the officers sadly; "And besides they are too young to be responsible for spying anyway. Let's let's take them before our superior and see what he will do with them anyway."

This was agreed to the children being led out of the house by a few soldiers who marched them straight toward the river. When they reached the River the children believed that the red coated soldiers would make an attack on those in purple uniform but to their supprise they were literal y marched up to an officer in a deep purple uniform who appeared to be some great general.

The general was equally surprised to see them and listened with consternation to the speaker as he started to tell him why they were held as prisoners. The general looked into their innocent faces and was touched.

"There must be some mistake he "He said; "The children were not with the enemy a t hill. This a s happened while they were nothing us. We will hold them though not as prisoners but fro for protection."

While the battle of Temple Tory had been going on, in the town of Oliva along the Calverinian boundary line the sixth regiment of Clandelinian militia were savagely mobbed in the streets by the Calverinian inhabitants and even snipers picked them off by scores the enraged inhabitants in the streets clubbing the Clandelinians with sticks jabbed at them with knives, struck them with corn iron pokers, flat irons and other sort of weapons. Scores of the Clandelinians were killed by snippers, hundred were injured by the mob and score fatally. Their uniforms were even r ripped to shreds by the knives of the assailants and when they retreated the Clandelinians were pursued for miles the inhabitants hurling showers of missles at the fugitives and pursuing them.

It was believed that the Clandelinians had entered this town with the purpose of seizing the c i children and murdering t em. If this was their purpose it was stopped by the frenzyed men and women who had attacked them furiously despite the danger of being impaled on the bayonets lances and pikes of the gravecoated savages.

This occurance brought on great excitement and strong Clandelinian troops were sent to put down the anger mob but at this moment the Angelinians forces advancing to seize narvas Run encountered these Clandelinians and fierce fighting broke out in which ten thousand Angelinians were killed and three hundred thousand wounded with two officers mortally wounded, while seventy thousand Clandelinians were killed and seven hundred thousand wounded besides one thousand prison ers which were taken by the Angelinians.

Again despite t their losses the Clandelinians made a second at ack to force the christians away and put down the angry people but the Angelinia s a opposed them at every step an and repulsed them bloody reaping onslaughts in which Ange Angelinian regiments were almost entirely destroyed. The Clandelinian however were successful an and burned the beautiful town of Oliver and massacred two thousand three hundred and fifty women and children. More would have certainly been killed but while the Clandelinians were destroying the small villages about them other forces of christians massed themselves upon the murderers and fearful bloodshed followed. Twice amid dreadful carnage the Clandelinians were driven a across boundary line the christians capturing one fort after another and attacking still another at Straka creek but this was so bravely defended by the Clandelinians that the Angelinians were compelled to ma s another force under general Caner who was sent to at ack the Clandelinians toward night all but was driven back with the loss of 10,000 in killed and 100,000 in wounded this being called the boundary line massacre of the battle of Big Bedda.

The entire Clandelinian loss in killed wounded and pris ners was 1,775,822. The christian losses was 999,999 in killed and wounded but they lost heavily in prisoners being 10,995men and officers. The total loss was 919,994. In the meantime fresh troops had been sent out from northern Calverinia to help the Clandelinian general Caner by name. Thus strengthened he determined to fortify Turners hill but before he could do so a large force of Angelinians took possession of it and fortified it.

Enraged over this Cans er sent a large body of Clandelinians to drive the Angelinians from the hill the hill and capture the position. A long and bloody fight followed the Angelinians fight ing so gallantly and bravely that the Clandelinians were obliged to retire at last before overwhelming numbers their losses in this one attack on TURNERS HILL being fifteen thousand in killed and one two hundred thousand in wounded while one thousand five hundred were prisoners.

As this was going on the Angelinians had under heavy fire, and after three bloody onslaughts captured the port of Hurricanes blow and Nainbury the Clandelinian fortress and also a chain of fortifications which they captured after fierce fighting in which one thousand guns were taken into their possession. The cape of Davila now holson Protestia island was seized at the same time but Caner advanced furiously with a large army and gunboats to retake it. Gamble who was second in command to took the advance moving upon the christian line stretched in front of a town called Happendon. He suddenly attacked these Angelinians and after a fierce fight drove their line back on toward Turner hill. The success was short lived however for general Vendon moved with a large force against Gamble who was obliged to surre surrender after a furious conflict. At the same time Gamble surrendered general Procle had concentrated upon Protestias lines and made efforts to break it at all hazardous but for hours the assailants were exposed to a deadly fire and suffering the loss of nearly half their number were compelled to retire. General Procile was badly wounded and his division was only saved from annihilation annihilation by the coolness and cu courage of general Caner who had five horses s shot under him and many bullets passed through his coat.

BATTLE OF [illegible] HILL, FORCES ENGAGED AND OTHER MATTERS.

General Canser was a brave Glandelinian leader and was bound to win. He made a desperate onslaught on the christian lines under [illegible] who repelled the Glandelinians with all his might. In the death struggle which followed the Glandelinians were victorious cutting [illegible] massive lines all to pie ieces but general Canser was mortally wounded and died a few minutes later. Another Glandelinian force under Gandine, Gadlin [illegible], and Melidon stormed a part of [illegible] hill but the result was a sad and crushing repulse for the Glandelinians who were driven back with the loss of fifteen thousand slain and three hundred thousand wounded. The brave [illegible] was killed and Melidon was badly wounded.

General Ignoran had in the mantime can come up from Boonia his army having been strengthened by fresh divisions mostly Omarians sent from nr northern Calverinia. General Amerionnos immediately opposed himwith a large force of Abyssinkilians at Glandon [illegible] near Turmer hill. The slaughter now was terrific. Though they fought brave,y against the Glandelinians hene a Abbiannians and Abyssinkilians were also almost surrounded and hurled back across the Glandon run their losses being fifteen thousand also in slain and two thousand five hundred were made prisoners. While this action was going on Gannon crossed over from Norbin but was unable to save Amerconnos army from dew defeat as he himself could not check the enemy's advance. The Glandelinians in heavy force crossed the [illegible] creek in in a blinding storm of fire and though the creek was chocked with dead and wounded the surviro survivors pressed on surprising an overwhelming force of Tripoligonlians under Marco. So sudden was the attackthat nearly thirty five thousand [illegible] Tripoligonlians were killed or taken pri o prisoners and all the guns and ammunition fell into the hands of the enemy enemy.

Though it had ben a auspcious b[illegible] a terrific fight ensued the christians only fleeing when [illegible] had fallen back in greav great confusion while at the same time general John [illegible] with about eighteen hundred thousand men were pressing on tward General Chelans lines and Nelsons lines which were also worsed and [illegible] compelled to fall back after sanguinary fighting. Tward night fall the Angelinian forces were compelled to abandon Turmers hill being a unable to hold it any longer. The rage of the fury of the fighting al ng the whole boundary line spread throughout the country and thousands of Calverinians who were forced to serve in the Glandelinian armies by conscription finally deserted while millions of Calverinians who had long before threatened a general revolt against Glandelinia inlisted into the christian armies to repell their wicked kidnaen. Men dropped their work and inlisted, boys asked to serve at the drun drums or as boy scouts nd the christian armies began to grow a larger.

In his victory Hindernine had driven Federal clean to the boundary line while Hansonia trying to make a junction with Vivianis who was recovering now from his wounds had Ambrose Fuller shut up at Bonsin.

As general Vivianins armies were arriving at the boundary line general Himilla with two million Glandelinians attacked fort Nalto and capture! it after a desperate battle taking about fifty thousand prisoners. Tomerline was threatening Philson while Gannon and Gannons forces crossing a part of the Angeline river retreated northward closely followed by the enemy under Johnston Gaten. He tried to hole his ground at Bernards Junfor a few hours the fighting being onstinate but failed but in his retreat Gannon took care to destroy all the bonts and bridges for miles up n and down the river and set fire to the tall grass in the plains thus checking Gatens advance for a few days. The hope of the Angelinians was now completely revived but as general Vivianias great hosts were concentrating along the great boundary line general Gaten had managed to cross the Angelin e river by means that could be a easily seen in the line concerning poonto n bridges and al advanced on his way to capture Philson.

Gannon hurried to head thim off off and the two forces met on the banks of the Angeline river. A desperate sanguinary conflict lasting for hours took place but the christians were defeated with the loss of eighteen thousand killed and two hundred and tweny twenty five hundred wounded. At the same time a christian forces were defeated at Monson with frightful slaughter, while at the same time that Hansonia was closing in on Ambrose Fuller general Noglonia with an armyof one hundred housand men struck Abbiannwhere his march was bravely resisted by a m small force of Angelinians under gn general Getter but they had to retreat.

In this advance there followed a bloody action at Gandon where a force of the enemy were badly defeated. General Carlo made a stand at Sebre and in the bloody action that took place drove Noglonia b back and captured two thousand prisoners. It was the turn for Noglonons Glandelinians to retreatand Noglonia made al haste to get into Calverinia but findinghis impo ible on account of the large ca Calverinian forces moving in from the northeast fell back on Snyders mouth. Here he was hemmed in on all sides, e he had very little food and there was no way of getting more. Galscow who was expected with fresh troops had not ni arived while the christian forces were being constantly increased by the steady arival of rein forcements. Nevertheless Noglonia attempted to break through the strong Abbiean Abbiannian line but after a series of bloody battles lasting four days there was nothing for the Glandelinians to do but surrender and this Noglonia did,and his army of one hundred housand men with cannon and arms fell into the possession of the christians. We can imagine the effect of this victory won by the Abbiannians.

All fears of the war being lost were put to rest the thinned our ranks of the christians were filled with new volunteers from reinforcing Calverinians and there was general rejoicing throughout the nation of even Angelinia beside Calverinia over this third splindid victory. During the surrender of Noglonia Glascow was overtaken at Southlingburg by a part of Gannons forces but in the severe action the Glandelinians did wi not win a good victory the unfortunatel Glande linians losing more than four hundred thousand in killed and three million in wounded and eighty thousand by desertion, those deserting being mostly Calverinians who were forced into the sevice and who now turned upon their enemy in treacherous manners and the Glandelinians se med beaten badly again and again.

At the same time this happened general Hammerhead a brutal Glandelinian officer with a band of Kutd [illegible]urd attacked Nellburg a beaut iful villiage of northern Angelinia close to the bou dary linenand in theabsence of the able d todied men wo who were away fighting the battles of this country killed the old men women and children, burned the houses and crops and left the once beautiful place a scene of ruin and desolation. Similar barbarious acts occured elsewhere and to put a stop to such outrages Gandon sent a force which defeated them burned their tents captured their artillery and killed their leader.

Unable to over come the christians at these p u points the Glandelinians finally gave in and the next day a part of southern Calverinia was in possession of the christians. Manley now became alarmed as soche saw that the Abbiannian armies were too str ong and were overrunning this whole section. During the second day of the series of sharp engagements general Marco cellion at tempted to capture the boundary line river port or Nightereon wit with infantry and ships but after a whole day of stubborn fighting was repulsed with heave loss and driven to Powad where he was hex besieged by Johnston Gaten withan army and a fleetand after more desperate fighting was killed and his army of christians captured.

At the same time anot er Glandelinian general by the name of Onwin Wo nie and still another by the name of Abdickades Pownd with a strong force of Glandelinians consisting mostly of Omarians attacked Hickadoes amy army of Abbiannians but were badly smitten their loss in killed and wounded being nearly two million five hundred thousand and the bag gage and artillery were captured.

At t the same time this happened another general called Woonownd was sent with general Clockiln with three million three hundred thousand Glandelinians but were twice e defeated with crushing loss but in a third at ck was successful at Nebies Ranch capturing fifteen thousand prisoners.

General Mroei at the same time who held the town of Poly surrendered to the christian wnen his army of one hundred thousand was reduced to one thousand or less and he himself mortally wounded. The loss of the christians at this point was only twenty nine thousand four hundred and twenty two.

At the same time atempts were made by the Glandelinians to capture two forts but though they showed great bravery they were not successful while atthe same time a a large division of general Nolkins [illegible] order general Gandon was sent against Holie but they were attacked without warning by a large force of Abbiannians and Angel Angelinians and complan compelled to surrender.

A few hours after theoverwhelming force of Glande inians advanced for Holie but were also attacked and defeated after a terrible action on the banks of the great Angelinin river. J Hoik and Fort Laugh Hoi k and Fort Laugh werealso taken after desperate fighting but the vid victorian were of no benefit [illegible] and when general Nolan tried to advance across the boun day boundary line into Ga Angelinia he was defeated with frightful loss and his army of Glandelinians routed for several miles. The Glandelinians were more successful more to the north however. They captured fort Bonsin and f defeated the Abbiannians in fighting of the most severe cgaroter at Ninia... ..

These conflicts had ben mercilless and exceedingly bloody and both sides were cri ppled up by the collisio n in the stubburn fighting at Beauties lane in which both sides lost he heavily and neither side could claim t he victory. In the meantime an Abbiannian army onemillion five hundred strong advanced to retake fort Bonsin but were stopped by Mahoon with three million four hundred thousand men but in the bloody action that followed the Glandelinians were defeated with the loss of one quarter of their number. While this was occuring a large of force of Abbiannininns with a fleet of heavint guns ad advanced for Andens Run northeast of Holie and which their army prepared for a general attack the batteries bombarded the fortifications which commanded the intrancefor the city..... For twenty four hours shot shell and high explosives by hundreds of thousands were rained upon the fortifinations but while well ertonia kept the Abbiannian army fiercely engaged engaged Mahumkhe saw how with his Glandelinian batteries shelled the Abbiannians on all sides and with such success that tward morning all the Abbiannian cannon had been either silenced or desty destroyed..... In this engagement Saton ,ohnston stuck a blow against Ghillie Run and ca captured Holie, but at a / loss of three hundred and [illegible] men in slain and over one thousand mwn.

Atthis crit critical function general ,anconia arived ,ith nearly a superior force of ,bbieannians and so fierce was the attack that the ,landelinians wasted a lot cd powder in their frantic effort tostop him but a fire of q equal deadliness was maintained upon them by the Abbiean ians who were not the ones to retreat a without a desperate fight. On both sides hundreds of officersand thousands f of men were shot s down in a very few minutes and during headlong counter charges the ,landelinians tried again and again to sweep the Abbieannian line, but again and again they were driven back in confusion.....

These abbieannians lost two hundred and twenty thousand in slain in that action at this point awhile the ,landelinians lost over five hundred thousand....

At the same time this was goinf going on two other bloody charges were made , one at ,lansue, the other at Gandenlinia in both of which d general ,arges ,landelinians were unsuccessful. This resulted in heavy reaction which extended to Mouthlinburg and at Gotcadie where Darge finally won the victiry but at terrible cost. In the meantime general rj Lulie who had been appointed commandr in chief of the ,landelinian army operating against Holie advanced a division of three million two hundred and twenty thousand men against the p position at Vara Krocthellecheheheho hohohawhaw and captured it after a heavy bombardment a part of the victorious columns pri pres ing forward three divisions surrendering to general Dixion and ,irlin at Evangeline Scollio also but at Evangeline Richeeine theywere met by the Abbieannians unde general Anna mergo but that Abbieannian genera general was soon put t o rout with a loss of about ten thousand men in captured and all his artillery..... A Scollodefeated another division of Abbieannianat catens lanes and beelzebubs creeks and then pushing forward attacked Chapoultepec the strongest f defence of Holie and carried it by a fierce assault. While this B.was goingon Lullie pushed the main ,landelinian army under his command tward Li ttle Creek but lost seventy thousand in killed and nine hundred thousand in wounded during an engagement with the Abbieann ians under gen eral Bernard Cannon Procile..... At first during the terrific fight the ,landelinian army was success ful but just when it seemed that it must be victorious a fresh body of Abbieannians arived and the ,landelinians were defeated with the whole of Lullies assaulting line being ro lled up and crushed to fragments. Lullie was not discouraged by this terrifi terrific repuls . He understood that Holie mu st be held at all costs and decided to win the bat le or die....E The attacking force of ,landelinians were replused at Fingercreek and general Bernard Vivian with tw twenty thousand of the ,landelinian brigade wascompelled to surre nder after a gallent fight while general Calsce was attacked and b beaten at Meadon. Attanding Gun to the last of the action at Holie raged.

During the or e cruel strugrle the Glandelinians were at first driven back and it seemed for a while as if the Abbieannian army must finally be successful. But t their leading general Graninine was killed and Nelson i ariveing with fresh troops of ,landelinians worsted the Abbieannians capturing Snowline an Abbie annian stonghold retaking fort Ignorancend retaking the town of Ghillie.

The Abbieannins wre also driven from Ghillie The Abbieannians were alsodriv from Collon but one of their generals Albre by name with an army of seventy five thousand men seized Hennieson and the Glandelinians exhausted their strength in a vain ef fort to retake it he he.

A few days later Gallion's Glandelinians started a desperate battle at Bon sulia which was guarded by many forts and below the city several heavychains of cannon wr were stretched in front of fort to fort and there mu numerous clad battle cars many fire rafts and other things so that it seemed impossible for any enemy of ,landelinia to go even near the city. CIT Y.

But general Hennie determined to capture the place at all s costs and so he sallied forth with a stong army..... General Cannon ia acting under his command. For a whi whole day he hammered away what the forts with thousands of the heaviest guns and nothwithsantind that the forts were doing their best to hamme hammer back and amid the discharge of artillery hat produced a shock so severe that windows were broken in the city , Hennie boldly let swe-ping onslaughts and in spite their heavy firingcut through the chians of blazing cannons cut fought the ,landelinian forces in a furnace of fire destroyed or disabled the fllest of batt le cars and took the forts despite the opposition which the ,landelinia Glande inians made at every step. Simultaneoualt a line of fortifications at Procile plains were forcedand at palm fwoods severer fighting occured bu for a while with no deided av advantage for either side.

Tward the later part of the afternoon eaten attacked Mc-Glu Gullic with the most frightful ferocity and deterin determination annihilating one of his main winge trat atr stretched across the grounds of Angeline mills and being successful how ever Mc-Gullic moved forward ward a branch of the Angeline ,iver giving the ,landelin ians more hellish action at Meldon munand forcing them to withdraw tward Calverine landing..... On the Angeline iver banks he was finally held at bay untill ri reinforcements came and then he again began to move forward rolling up one of the foes wings. As they pressed on the Abbieannians met fresh forces of the foe at ,uspane nun w which he d randly united withhe main army army nd the whole swept down upon the Abbieannians under Quieni nocrushing the army to pieces taking twelve thousand prisoners and capturing a large qu quantitity of arms. This had been a terrible onslaught made by the enemy and nearly 90C,999had been slain on the side of the a Abbieannians during t that charge. Mc-Gullich however held his ground extending his lines tward Cathling burg burg in a sea of fire and smoke of musketry and giving fierce resit resistance recieving the loss of one mio million four hundred s seventy thousand two hundred and twenty two in killed and wou ded. At Hansel burg about a mile from cathlingburg during the terrific battle one of Mc-Gullicks wings was rolled up with a loss of about seventeen thousand killedand one hundred eighty thousand wounded but new forces holding firm at Glamdonburg fiercely resisted general Handli ns clandelinians who strolve with might and main to hold them back. This was one of thefirst bloodiest actions of ume Turner's hill or Run there being hours of the most davage fighting.

About three hundred thousand ,landelinians thepick of the clandelinian army made a desperate assaul tion the Abbieannian line. Though it was like a charge against a mountian Handlin did not give way and the Abbieannians at this point were forced to ye'ld and abandon Glamdonburg. The Abbieannians at this point lost about fifty eightthousand in killed and nearly two million in wounded and prisoners while seventy two thousand clandelinians were slain and four million were wounded wh while the three hundred thousand ,landelinians who had forced the line at this point lost three quarters of their numbr. Glamburg was still held by the Abbieannians and Violet Dane on the Angeline River.

General Darge however succeeded in corssing the Angeline ,iver be n by means of pontoons bridges and a seige then began. The shelling of the city was ke kpt up without intermission for a day and night and then the Abbieannian commander clansce surrendered with one hundred thousand men. At other points general Mc-Gullich had succeeded in driving the clandelinians out of Bennis but at the eastern point with the help of fresh troops the Glandelinians the a attacked the christians at Aurandce and drove them back with heavy loss to Callmocca .

General Darence who commanded hi the right wing bravely held his ground, and saved the army just as a severe repusle was threatening. Hour after hour during the terrific fighting the clandelinians kept Mc-Gullich shi shut up in Callmocca while Darge going to Callmocca with Nobes, made severe attacks, while Hennie also arieved there with some troops from Clamdon , Glamburg, and Hendlin from f brought over one million two hundred and twenty five men and during a severe and bloody action Pears mountian and Apple ridge were attacked and taken. In these actions there was terrible slaughter on both sides. The clandelinians lost in killed li killedover sixty five thousand and the Abbieannians lost about thirty five thousand in slain. Hennie however would not turn back. He felt sure of success and declared that i he would fight it out along that i line if it took over a year.!!!"

In the meantime general nowerinela an Abbieannian officer of great expeience and dar ing advanced to crush the Massric armies but was repelled with e terrific firy fury by Darges forces.

Most of Darge's army however was overwhelmed and driven back in terrific confusion after a most terrific fighting. When Hennie heard the terrific looming of thousands of cannon he quickly spring into his saddle and spurring on his fast horse reached the scene of the terrible fight just i in time. Though driven into confusionthe ,landelinians had made a stand but now Darges men were fleeing before a fearful charge of the enemy.....

"Turn boys and fight the blasted christian fo fo ols." He cried; "We z are going back the other way."

AND BACK THEY WENT.

Encouraged by his words and presence the clandelinians made a gallent counter charge crushed the Abbieannian line to fragsents driving the survivors from the field capturing six hundred guns of heavy make and sixty hundred filed pieces, and took many hundreds of thousands of prisoners. This long battle with its s series of actens had ben fought at the same points where the bat les raged a during the great GLANDCO- ANGELINIAN WAR; OF I8I I84I. EIGHTEEN FOURTY ONE

Victorious as far as they were now it was not to be all over yet and the problem was wither could the clandelinians hold the great strongholds of VIVIANIA AMNIA.

.....THE FRIGHTFUL BATTLE OF VIVIANIA.....

After concentrating for a weel week on the boundary line after his progress north ward caused by Hindernines success on vederal Vivianias advanced Worths divisions of four hundred thousand men tward Vivianis as a start. Entire divisions formed with wonderful alacrity swept over the i first ridge of sand hills and within an hour over eight hou hundred thousand men had gained a foot hold upon the enemys soil in front of Viviania without a single soldier even getting a scratch.

By ten oclock that night one quarterof general vivianias entire army with the heavy guns and ammunition and provisions had concentrated before ,ivianis witoit hostilities except occasional sharp musketry fire upon Angelinian pickets. Viviv Viviania was a walled city with strong castles whic to the east was fort Santia and Fort Conception while between these were the bastion works all of which held heavy batteries of artillery so disposed as to rake every approach. The total amounted to over four hundred guns of small size and four thousand four hundred guns of bigger size. The garrison consisted of five million regular troops under command of general Garr anzantia an officer of unquestioned obstinan cy and bravery. To reduce the formidable castles general Vivianis could spare litt le more than one million men divided into three divisions under worth Uluani a and Barbari a thelast named assisting entirely a s volunteers.

Entrenching the line and placi placing the batteries owing to a succession of heavy hurricanes had not been completed until the return of Calmer weather. A week after general Vivianis reached the boundary like. Meanwhile there were numerous skirmishes with bodies of Glandelinians who were invariably forced back i under the walls of the city. Throughout the seige there was no sorties o in force from the ga rrison Carranzantia appearing to rely almost soley upon his strong forts and heavy guns. Ample precautions were taken by the Angelinians to prevent atack upon their rear.

Only one severe engagement of this character marked the progress of the seige in which the attac ing party one million strong were so severely punished that similr similar efforts evidently in preparation were abandoned. Having completely invested thecity with a line extending from the hills grounds on its north a nd so uth and his battleshaing in readiness to open fire general vivianis sent a summons to general Carranzantia to surrender. His anxiety to spare the beautiful hestoric city from theimminent hazard of demolition and its defenders and peaceful inhibatants including o women a and children from the inevitable horrors of a triumphanthal assault caused him to adress the intelligence gallentry and Patriotism no less than the himanity of the governer and commander in the cheif of Vivianis.

Iz Carranzantia replied that the both the city and the castles were under his authority that he should defend both at all costs and that his adversary might commence his operations of war whenever it suited him to do so.

The bombardment began immediately. The furiouspla y upon the city was incessant including that fof bernards batteries their fire being mainly concentratedon the nearest forts. The play of the Glandelinian forts upon all of Vivianias batteries was also incessant doing considerable damage to the works and resulting in severe casualties. Mormonian, Mickencilian concentinian and Protestiantian consuls acquainted general Vivianis with the frightful results of the bombardments and prayed that a truce might be granted to enable their counr country men as well as the Calverinian women and children to escape from the city. As they had already b een warned in ample time the Angelinian commander replied that no truce could not now be granted under any conditions, exc except by the Glandelinian commander distinct proposition to surrender. The bombardment continued with increasing energy and as the bateries were being strengthened the christians seemed to cause the enemy to stammer more and s more in their answering fire.It was general Vivianias deter mination to continue the bombardment and cannonade with increased vehemen ce for twelve hours longer when if no proposals of surrender were recieved a fierce assault was to beorganized.

During the bombardment the houses of the city showed sad evidences on every side of the devastation caused by the Angelinian batteries. The streets were blocked withthe ruins of fallen walls. Every building containing combustible materials had been consumed while the churches and palaces the dwellings of the foreign counsles as well as the differnet public buildings had al alike shared in the horror of the bombardment. The loss of the Glandelinians could never fully be estimated but unfortunately it fell heaviest upon the non-combatants for thousands of oth women and children were slain. No estimate could be made of the number and weight of theround shot shells ans and high explosives sent into the christian works and entrenchments by the enemy but its aggregate was immese th immen se the loss of the Angelinians from the bombardment being one hundred and sixty five thousand in killed and wounded.

The entire weight of the missles expended by the Angelinians during the twenty fours bom hours bombardment was upward of fifteen hundred pounds. From the nearest batteries were thrown into the city thirty thousand fourteen inch shells which made terrific thunderheaded shaped clouds in their earthsplitt ing explosions five hundred thousand fifty nine r pound ro round shot and two hundred thousand twenty inch howitzer shells while bernards bateries threw atotal of twelve hundred thousand round shot and shell while the newly arived batteries contirbuted one hundred thousand twenty inch shells and eight hundred thousand thirty two pou pound round shot almost as great a quantiy as during the bombardmdnet of the fortif ications at Mc-Whirther by the christian fleets.

Despite despite the fury of the twenty fours hours bombardment no pro proposals of surrender were recieved though the bombardment ahd had increased with such fury that the heaves heanev g heavens seemed to defy God with the din of hundreds of thousands od of earth esplitting explosions and loud booming of almost four hundred thousand heavy cannon w wi which could be heard for one thousand miles and which vibrated the ground for three times that distance breaking windows inscores of cities and towns and causing some to be wrecked like the fight in fighting at Mc-Whirther with the forts and fleets did.

General vivianis indeed made the assault and many who witnessed this blood drenched battle field saw with horror theterrific assaults of the great christian offien en offensive that raged hour after hour and who could picture the scene as many correspondents found them and piece them together into one ghastly moraic, the fragments of batlements held by Mc-Hollestinians that held back the christian deluge with a torrent of destruction to very nature itself. The battle ground extending over a front of almost fifty miles was northwest of Mc-Hollester Run where dead bodies in wondrows were literally as high as breastworks.

One of the worst points of the bloody fiery battle field with its flaming fields torn torn and cratered by storms storms of shells consisted of open glades running almost due east and wes west and southwest and varied in width from four miles to six miles and ten miles long. The Tripoligans were intrenched along the eastrn edge of this opening while the forests behind offered splindid opportun it ies for concealing movements of troops and emplacement of artillery.

The Abbieanndian and Angelinian fronts skirted the westrn and southwestern edge of the glace glade but the forest here was thinner and in places there was no forests at all, but only huge gaps connectingwith the devas tated farm lands to the west.In Vivianis the christian shells did fearful damage while in the fields between the op posing armies the shells made an indescribable mass of soil, barier wreckage and bodies. For those twenty o four hours before the assault had been made and even while it was in progress the battey firing had been a regular drum drum-drum fire, that is a cannonading so he heavy that it sounded like treratling of hundreds of drums. Every square inch of the bombarded batlements was shattered by a withering hail of shells and shrapnell. Nothing, exposed to such a fire could live.

Even all the castles were torn asunder by the heavier shells, every trees in back of the Glandelinian pis position were torn and scarred by the christians fire scores of thousands were torn up by the roots and others by more than three scores of thousands were blastedinto thousands of spp splinters. Not a tree escaped unscathed. On the afternoon of the day of the great assault the christian drum drum fire had been suddenly lifted and converted into a horrible curtain of fire which stormed the city with d destruction while of of the forest came the storming christian columns many millions strong straight for the enemys lines, stra straight into the terible curtian of Glandelinian artillery fire that tore scores of great gaps in the attacking christian columns though these quickly a co closed up.

In the meantime the Glande linian troops rushed out of the fortification s into the body filled and shell torn trenches hastily mounting their machine guns which soon sputtered their fearful greeting to the Tripoligonlian s. Betwen the machine guns rattled a fearful blasitng storm of infantry fire from many millions of muskets and pistols and the sheet of fire extended for fourty miles in a horrible roar like a million cannon going off in one prolonged crah crash.

There was no time for giving commands and there was no need of any. There were no vol eys as each Glandelinian soldier fired as fast as he could and the gaps in the Tripoligonlian lines widened fearfully but still the million s of survivors came on. Now and then several masses of tripoligonlians would halt and answer a storm of fire twqrd the Glandelinian trenches but it was hard to aim and the bullets scarcely a checked the withering crash of the thousands of machine guns a nd rifle fire while thousalds of Glandelinian shrapnell war was also doing its wokr work fearfully.

The Tripoloigonlian wave reached a line of barbed wire area fences or in entangel intangelments before the Glandelinian breastworks but no fur ther. Torn beaten and shattered into a thou thousan d fragments the remnants of these Angelinian hoste beat a hasty retreat. How many reached the protection of their trenches under the unceasing Glandelinian fire no one can tell but the ground betwen the Masonic and christian lines was covered with z u d sea of dead and dying.

Perhaps half of the brave Tripoligonlians who fe ll in the blast of bullets in that mad onslaught died instantly but for the woun ded there was no mortal help t Throughout the battle their cries made hedious i nterludes to the booming og the cannon and crash of musketry still active on both sides.

No doubt Tripoligonlian patrols skipped out and brought back to sa' safty such wounded men as they could reach fro for the dead and wounded were piled high onthe christian side. Theterrific drun drun drum fire had now increased and again the christian wave broke from the forest but it had hardly got out of the woods before the Glandelinian art illery opened a redoubled action. Again shells and canister tore open the columns while the machins guns piled up the dead. The task was more terrible than before as the Abbieannians had to storm overthe bodies of tni their dead comrades. The hours of battle were literally hedious with the cries of the wounded an men the blue gre nish glare of bursting shells adding to the ghastliess to the field of death. As the attack grew in fury the drum drum fire h became more terrible.

Despite the artillery, despite the machine guns and despite the twenty or fourty mile stream of withering infantry musketry fire the apparently inexhuastible divis divisions of Abbieannians swept on over the dead, and the barbed wired barriers before the Masonic lines, over the first trenches and routed the Glando linian soldiers who were half covered with mud and gore. A terrific hand to hand fight followed. Hand grenades torn tore down hundreds of defenses and assailantsm the men fighting like maniacs with spades, fists bayonets knives and clubbed guns. The Abbieannians won at a fearful proce for their gi gain. It might have been worth more had the Abbieannian deluge swept further at this point but it didnot. The Abbieannians stopped within eight hundred feet of victory seming to be helpless in the Glandelinian trench for instead of sweeping on into the second linesthey tried to intrench themselves in the wrecked redoubts. Immediately the Glandelinian artillery hurld hurled shells of the heaviest caliber into these lines and tore them into fragments.

Then came Glandelinian reserves who drove the Abbieannians out taking 80,000 prosins prisoners, while at the same time te the Glandelinian artillery shelled the woods at a terrific rate. But the christian assault was repeated with redoubled fury the mud colored waves pouring fortyh from the forest being three immense waves one wave behind the other. The Glandelinian artillery tore holes in the column s which merely closed up again the survivors coming on as though on parade.

"It was magnificient but Criminal." Said a Glandelinian officer who witnessed it.

Then came a fourth wave like the other three then a fifth, and sixth and seventh. The first wave was less than five thousand yardsfrom the Glandelinian trenches but it cm came so so slowly that it was possible for the Glandelinians to make plans with cruel pres precision to meet it.

CHAPTER. THE TWO WALLS OF GLANDELINIAN FIRE AND THE ANNIHILATION OF THE ABBIEANNIAN WAVES.....

When the last waves ermergedfrom the woods the Glandelinian artillery dropped a roaring curtian of fire fourty miles long behind it and then a similuar wall of shells shrapnell and high explosives ahead and upon those in frot t... Then they moved these two walls closer together with a hail of shrapnell and canister between them while at the same time they cut loose with the machine guns. The splindid formations of the christians trapped between the walls of fire scattered heedlessly in every direction but in vain. Shells gouged hu hundreds of deep gaps in the disolving columns. The air was filled with a deafening clamor, and frantic shrieks were heard above the incessant roar and earsplitting crashes of exploding projectiles and other explosives.

Deafened men sought to dig themselves into the ground in the foolish belief that they could find safty there from the hellish deluge of shells.

Others raced madly for the rearand some escaped this was as if by a miriacle.

Still others ran twr toward the Masonic lines only to be cut down by the Glandelinian machine guns fire. In less than twenty minutes this attack had ero cost the christians 400,000 lives it being a terrible harvest of dead. The Angelinians who were caught in this wave of destruction fold from the field with heavy losses the machine guns mowing down the men as the tornado does the corn. But the othe immense waves had managed to pour through this terrible curtian of hell despite the loss of millions in mangled and deadl the whole loss being over 5,000,000 in only four hours but it did not stop the onslaught.

This battle along the Kandall woods was a placeof one of the most bloody and thrilling every ever in southern Galverinia. The importance of the main Glande linian posit ionslay that in t their possession would permit the Ange linians to drive a weidge int o the line t o the right of Mc-Hollester Run and if they could hold it th and thrust a little farther southeastward they could force the Glandelinians t o abandon the whole of the works which would bring down the downwall fall of Carrasantia

General Updike during the day while this great massacre like charge was in progress and where four waves had ben mowed downkept up a horrible bombardment his Glandelinian curtian of fire having failed to check the christian onslaught and it only gained for the defenders a corspe strewn welter of hundreds of thousands of splintered trees and shell shatt ered ground that had been the northern corner of the hell alfmae woods. While the big ass assaulting christian columns in the van fought the Glandelinians hand to hand, picked corps of gunners behind them ,manned n an amazing chain of cannon the whole infantry line in gray undulating a roaring stream of bullets, sandbags were hurled by score scora scores of thousands at the desperate battle crazed Abbieannians hundreds of mitrailleuses every defenseive fortification passing from hand t hand like buckets at a country fire. The assaulting columns despite the terrific hurricane of artill ery fire swept over the shell torn ground in a sea of flame and din, covered wi with dr debris over which horse or cart could not go.

Again and again greqter gaps were torn in the line of Abbieannian s by the bursting shells, canister and melin ite but as coolly as if nothing haoened the iron desciplined Abbieannians closed the gaps and swept on. Gradually another line of art illery doubled the hoav havoc of the first onain of guns. As h the upheaved cpr corpses formed a continuus embarkment each a ditional dead man giving greater protection to his comrades and along the whulelengh length of the two lines of guns burst a storming havoc of guns of flames upon the adf advancing christians. Vainly the later latter dashed forwar d on, onlyt o be mowed down like grass...!!!

But the attack did not slacken up one bit. Men fought with grenades like boys with snowballsin the hand to hand contest. Finally the Glandelinians began to give way but nevertheless though the christians won a great battle they could not force the Glandelinians to surrender the city of Vivianis being abandoned the Glandelinians retreating northward the following christians smashing the Glandelinian army to pieces to avange the slaughter of their own comrages.

The Glandelinians losses were about 4,677000 4,677,000 in killed and wounded while on the christian side the loss in killed and wounded was over I0,888,789....Indicted and Missing.

The battle of Vivianis was one of the most sanguinary battles up to this time in the Julo Gallio campaign and again terminated in aghristian victory and now the whole of the boundary line was abandoned by the Glandelinians and the advance for the north was begun.

VIOLET AND HER SISTERS MAKE A DARING RESCUE, AND THE BLOODY BATTLE FOR THE POSSESSION OF OTHER CHILDREN ABOUT TO BE SLAUGHTERED.HE) E HAW HAW WOW .

While While the battle of Vivianis was going on genera' Vivianis sent Violet and her sisters to general Hanosins with a message of great importance. The litle girls had traveled for about a mile when they fancied they ha heard the screaming of child ren.

"Listen." Said Violet with a strage creepy feeling; "Are those children screaming"

"It sounds very much like it whout without any doubts."

Said Jennie her heart beating very fast at the sound.

Desiring to se what was occuring Violet and her sisters went further on and approaching a large clearing which the lit lgirls knes was only ten miles from Hansoniaslines saw a sight that made their hearts leap with horror. Hun dreds od of dead children lay strewn in frightfully mangled corpses all over, while twenty others were fastened to the trunks of trees awaiting their turn of death in its most horrifying aspects. This scene was just like the others Violet and her sisters had experienced though there were not so many victims.

Their bodies had ben literally hacked like calves in a butcher shop, their intestines cleaned out of them and lay strewn on the grou d ground. There were twenty more children to be butchered the number of Glandelinians appearing to be about fifty and all appeared to have had a glass too much.

Three of them were doing the bloody work under orders from drink crazed officers while the rest were standing on guard.

"Oh Dear God would it be a sin to destroy such men" "Moaned Violet inwardly; "Oh the horrors of it."

The Glandelinians fierce looking men were literally crazed by drink and fli flourished their knives at the children in a frenzy. Their officers were standing at their sides armed with knives of such frightful hediousness that Violet and her sisters were horrified.

Despite the screams and pleads of the children the Glandelinins probably in ther frenzy of drink wre more furious, and looking on Violet and he her sisters saw that the rascals were trying to make their helpless victims slay each other.

One of the Glandelinianshad grabbed one of the little girls by the neck and flourishing a knife was striving wa to cut out her heart dea ito her vehem vehement struggles. Jennie was overwhelmed with horror and sorrow and fall ing on her knees aimed her pistols at the murderers but to her terror it was not loaded and she had forgot her cartid cartridge belt..... Jennie was utterly helpless and so wa were her sisters.

How were they to recu rescue the poor victims..... without running ino the same danger themselves..... The poor little girl in the grasp of the drunken fool was struggling as best as she could and screaming piteously. Who could have seen the wistful sad lookin the faces of the litle girls without trying to help them. The struggling victim kickedand beat at the rascal with her feet and fists but the Glandelinian trying to gain a chocking grasp on her throat broke a string of Rosaries and Scaplurs that hung about her shoulders. She struggled and tir tried to bit him bite him the Glandeliniane in his despierate efforts eyelling for one of the men to come to his help.

One of the privates came grabbing her cruelly by the arm and holding them tight w while the other Glandelinian without n any signs of pity managed to get a good grip on her throat and squeezed as hard as he could and the look in the childs face was awful the child's suffering being plainly seen in her face. She feebly tried to pull away his hands but in vain.

Another Glandelinian po put the point of his a knife to the middle of the child's abdomen and cut it open the child quickly dying. A shrill scream went up from the other children at this sight while the Glandelinians roared with laughter. At this moment Violet's eyes flashed viciously. Already another child was pla pleading for her life in such a piteous way as to melt a heart of stone.

"Those Glandelinians are crazed from drink." Said violet bitterly; "Those cha o children did those Hi lutchersno harm and yet they z seize them to murder in this horrible way. If they would ki ll children why do they kill them in such a way!''

''I m going to try andkill those brutes who chocked and murdered that child by cutting her body open.''Said Joice;''It is a desperate attempt , but I will try it a t any risk.''

Violet ,Jennie, Joice ,Angeline and her other sisters trued to restrain her but in vain. Joice was off and in a very few minutesshe was along side to one of the victims and suddenly plunged a dagger into an officers abdomen and before two others could make a dash at her she managed to get the dagger out of the mortally wounded mans body and stab another. She also stabbed the third man and then quickly stole away though she was conscious of a score of bullets flying about her.

However the rascals were too eager for the bloody workin store for them and Joice got away and started off to get ammunition for herself and her sisters. Violet and her sisters were sorry for the poor children and decided tohin der the progress of the massacre as long as possible and annihilate these drunker drunken murderers if they could..... even at the risk of their lives. Over the x deaths of their comrades the landelinians were now furo sticken the poor victims trembling with fear crying out for mercy thou h the landelinians laughed harshely.

Violet and her sisters were so bold that they would risk their lives for any helpless victims and decided to hinder the maxssacre at any cost. They crouched tward the unsus pecting landelinians as cautiously as savages would a well armed fort, but quickly deciding to atack them before they killed another child. The landelinians were now in an uproar for one of the a ndelinians were dragging an a ittle girl to an officer and chocking her when violet suddenly sprang at him and ran him through the body withher dagger. A howl of rage went up from the other landelinia ns while one thrust at her chest with a bayonet while another picked up the already half chocked child pressed her cheat close to his and gazed h into her terrified face. Then h placing his hands around her tender throat he squeezed as hard as his strength would permit tut Jennie had went to the aid of violet by killing the man with the bayonet and thus fre from tthe danger violet stabbed the other man in the heart.

Z As he sank to the ground Violet tried to wrench the child from hi him but as now a tumult of bayonets was threatening them violet and her sisters fled.

A resounding volley was fired but in their drunkeness the ai od aim of the landelinians was poor and nota bullet touched thelittle girls though they were well within even pistol shot range..... though they were indeed throughoutly frightened over the sense of danger in the desperate task they att empted, and how they succeeded was because t e landelinians were too full of drink to do any thing right in repelling them.

These sr sorties made by Violet and her sisters enraged the drunken landelinians so far that they started horrible s tortures on their victims. Near the slaughter ground piles of wasted coal had been burning for days being a literal slow burning inferno. Onto this two of the children were to be thorwn..

''Oh God God.''Gasped Violet;''They are going to throw one of those poor little girls onto that awful coal fire and kill her with that awful torture.''

''Let's go and rescue her.''Begged Jennie.

''We can't, we can't.''Gasped Violet;''We could notget there quick enouh. If we only had a supply of ammunition. If Joice would only hurry up. What keeps her so long like this anyway. Is she goingto sleep on the way?''

''But we musn't, we musn't let them throw her on that awful fire. Please rescue her somehow.''Said Catherine, horrified at the sight.

'' But already she saw that it was to late. The landelinians had mercilessly lifted the struggling child by the throat and carried her tward tha t horrible mountin of coal fire chocking her as hard as she could. The helpless child tried to beat at him with her hands but the chocking rendered her helpless and he immed iately threw her on.

Jennie was appalling beyond describing at the deafening screams the poor child made which sounded almost unearthly in their piercing c cadience.T o violet and he sisters the sight of the child's horrible suffering was indeed appal lking and they placed their hands tightly on their ears to keep out the sound of the childs scream . Violet and her sisters knew t thatGlandelinian s of such nature had no mercy and at the childs screams of death agony they only laughed. Soon the childs screams died out and the roasting corpse lay still on the bu burning coal where she had struggled writhed bound hand and foot in indescribable agony.

Jennie almost felt like fainting at his horible deed but when the second child was being drag ed tward the heap of burning coal she felt an indescribable terror seize he her..... First the rascal who took great pleasure in witnessing children suffering from strangulation gra grabbed the helpless child by the neck and though she kicked and slapped at him bu bit and scratched him he succedied he succeeded in placing a firm grip on it and oh how cruelly he did chock the poor child.....

She literally hung limp and as she gasped for air her tongue stuck out. The landelinian l glared into her bulging eyes and chocked her wth all his might .... The forcing grip on her throat forced her tongue all the way out while her face became of purple hue. And then he threw her on the furnace.At this moment Joice Appeared with five cartidge belts beisdes one for hesself which wee pas ed among each.

As the /llittle girls proceeded to a rocky eminince Violet and her sisters saw one of t e the landelinians drag a little girl from a t tree and carying her under their very h hiding plca place chocked her brutally. With her eyes bulging and h her t ongue sticking out she indeed was a spectacle of suffering. She struggled fiercely to free herself from her powerful assailant but the more she suffered the harder he chocked her. Viole at this moment was leal leaning over kind of far and the choc chocking child with her head thrown back seemed to see her and made a move as if to point to her enemy and then to her throat.

Violet realized the eve evidnt suf ring of the child and the pleasue the brutal landelinian took in it. She remembered when she was inthe same conditionat Andrean and ly what means th they had to save themselves. As he is kaking in the new that the rascal was chocking her with all he his might with the other landelinians were roaring in la laughter.

Violet knew by the look in her fce th that there was no hope of saving her. Blood was already running from her noe nose are and mouthand her tongue was sticking out like that of a hirt thirsty dog. The little girls struggle had now ceased and violet knew t that she was dead.Despite the danger that they would probably bring on themselves Violet and her sisters decided to save the other children at all hazardous. Each little girl took positions at different portion s f of the rocky eminince and testing to see that t their pistols were loded got ready for action.

Violet picked the man who had chocked the little girl to death and shot him dead., just as another landelinian was about to gash her body open.

In his death grip he still l grasped the child's throat and she lay on top of him with her tongue protruding into his face.

The report of the sudden shot and the death of the fourth murderer caused con sternation among the landelinians and hope amin among t e other remaining children but yet to the surprise of the Vivian girls the others did not start a search but each about seventeen men grasped the remaining children by the throats and chocked them like th the first remaining rascl did to the other child, while the remainder of the graycoats opened a severe clattering fire tward the rocky leg ledge.

''Don't reture their fire.''Said violet as she and her sisters lay prone on their bellies to escape the wit hering bullets ;''Get hose who are chocking the children if first.''

Every one of the little girls took slow but careful aim and their shot rung out as one making a thunderous crash more louder than the clattering of the scores of muskets from the landelinians. With a yell that washeard plainly where violet and her sisters were hiding six landelinians let go of the throats of the chocking children and dropped to the ground each with a bullet in his brain . Quickly as possibe possile violet and her sisters aimed again and once more six landelinians let go of their chocking victims and staggering for a moment dropped to the ground.

The ninth landelinian realizing his peril had untied the ropes around his victim and carriedher to cover while the four others ran for safty.

The landelinian who carried the child off chocked her aguá and tore her body open while she was yet alive. The rest of the landelinians still fired at the ambush seventeen landelinians ha h ving been shot now every shot of the vivian girls having told.

''I bet we are in for it now:.''Said Joice;''It is lucky we have a good supply of bullets. I believe those landelinians will sent three more to proceed with the murder while the rest will try to hinder our further rescueing them by making an at ack.''

Joices prediction was correct excepting that six men were sent to do the bloody work at murdering the children while the rest came on at a fearful charge yelling like demons, intending to frightfen their enemies by their terrible devil he yell. Jen ie Joice an d Angeline and the others agreed to pick off the assailants while Violet worked herself to within easy range of the murderers and as w he got within easy range she saw to her horror that one of the landelinians had stuck a red hot file down a little girls throat and then an slashed the inside of her throat with a large knife and finishe t the torture by a terrible chocking.

The look in the childs face told plainly how she suffered and h her protruding ton gue was literally pouing blood. The rascally landelinian did not chock her long however for Violet with a scream blazed away the shot first passing through the rascals body and then lodging in the childs heart, the death of both being instan taneous though the childs was more like falling into a sudden der sleep.

''I shot her accidentally but it is best for her.''Said Violet to herself;''It ended her misery.''

As she was reloading her pistol Violé saw one of themen fras one of the children from a tree the child being dead of a more horrible fate than chocking and that was suffocation. He lim immediately drew a sharp knife and tore her body open rite and all when a random shot from Jennies gun tore hrough his head and he went sprawling the mangled gory body falling on top of him covering him with blood and some of the intestines. Violet sickened at the sight but shot the other landelinians before their victims died of strangulation .

In the meantime the attack on he sistershad been made with desperation but the Glandelinians saw that their new child enemies were missing them inde d being as to say ''Bum shooters''. Two or thre of the Glandelinians had succeeded in climb ing up to their position and one of them had managed to seize Jennie but these thre three were immediately lying on top of one another dead beside her, when Violet returned to the scene of action.

Twelve of the assaulting Glandelinians had already ben killed a nd five werewounded but the survivors were still keeping up the attack. One of these Glandelinians had sped back to the helpless children an d quickly freeing one grabbed her by the throat and chok chocking he dragged her behinda clump of bushes a hundred yards behind Violet a nd her sisters as it se med but in reality directly in front of Violet but at th this moment unseen . Then squeezing her throat with all hismight he glared into her agonized face and said Gla gloatingly;

''Now those desperateAngelinian sharpshooters cannot save ye. I I'll give you an idea what it is to get a good chocking. You stuck your tongue out at me in defiancetwo hours ago now you can show me how far you can protrude it. With'I''

With this he faced about and fa cing her tward where the firing was going on contin ued furicusly;

''See there they are. Show those Angelinians how nicely you are being saved. Let's see if you are sticking your tongue at me now.''

So hard was he chocking her that she was too weak or helpless to struggle. Wheeling her face to face to him he drew her closer to him andhit her protruding tongue untill it bled to increase her misery. How it ever happened the poor suffering child at that moment could nottell. I It was when he was chocking he with all his might and while she h hung limp with her head hanging far back and her tongue sticking out its full length when there came a sharp resounding report.' Then she felt his grasp on her throat increase a little more and then he sunk to the ground with her on top of him her tongue protruding into hi his open mountmouth.

Even in death hi he still had his grasps chockingly around her throat but violet for it was she who fired the shot immediately drew the dead mand mans sabre and severed his arms from his body. The hands then fell away and the child r rolled helpless to his side and lay in agonized confusions.

By giving her stinging b o blows with the pam of her hands on the childs bare back and chaffing her throat vigoriously violet succeeded in making the child recover. In tnethe mantime Violets sisters havong annihilated their assailants came with leaps and bounds to violet's help.

''Free the remaining children while I stend to this poor child.''Said violet ;

''Hurry because more Glandelinians may come and starttrouble.''

Jennie Joice and Angeline and the others put quickly undid the ropes around the other children slashing and mangling them so they would be useless for other Glandelinians. Then as Joice Angeline Catherine Daisy and Hettie started of with the other children Jennie want to help violet with her charge.

Violet gently asked the child how she felt but the poor little girl pitifully shook her head and pointing to her mouth , looked at Violet ith wistful eyes overflowing with tears. The childs voice was paralized from the strang ulation for she could not talk or even move her tongue while was still protruding a little. Even as she was too week to rise Jennie and violet lifted her between them and with he her arms across the shoulder of each and their arms arohiaround her they managed to help her along slowly. Soon as they caught up with their other sisters t they heard the sound of o hoofbeats and angry voices and then a few shots rang out and o one of Angelines rescued children dropped with a liullet in her heart.

''Glandelinian cavarly.''Gasped Joice;''We are in for it now.''

Angeline returned two shots and two men keeled from their horses to the rage and surprise of the survivors. Then a shout as of one vouce went up;

''Get those Vivian Girls. Get them bea utiful little devils at all costs. Chegre Charge like deo deamns. Go in at them. They must not escape.''

In this threatening danger the dumb child was terrified she nce knowing the desperate character of her abductors.

The This little girlwas the prettiest of the childen rescued having graceful arms angelic form and a very wistful angelic face.Her neck was all black and blue from the pressure of the rascals hands, she and the four others being staryk naked having nothing on but thick white clothes around their loins, the Glandelinians having burned their clothes. As they reached the dead and mangled bodies of theother children they saw that every one had been strangled to death for their tongues were still protruding. There wasn't a one who did not have its body open. Boys and girls alike had their bodies ripped and all literally cut away in front with everything exposed. The sight was too horrible for the rescued children to bear to look upon though from their many other experiences Violet and her sisters though horrified couldbear to look upon it. As fast as they could they hurried away from the spot the enemy following slowly not being able to ride fast on ac count of the heaps of corpses that barred their way. There were many things of horrir horror that Violet and her sisters did not see. The first child who was mr murdered had been tortured the worst because she was the prettiest. The Glandelinians had first gnaped he feet open, then the palms of her hands and slowly cut of her ears fingers and toes and then not satisfied her had broken her arms suffocated her untill nearly unsciousness and then pouring something had hedious in smell and taste which he mixed with water the Glandelinian forced her to drink it and when she was about to vi vomit gagged her with fiercely smouldering rag burning her mouth and throat horribly. Then with a hook he pulled the rag rag out and let haher vomit to her hearts content. She indeed did vomit like a hose. The rascal then cut the inside of her throat open pulled out all her teetg and hair and chocked her untill she finally died gashing her already co blood covered body untill he had torn every vissage out of the corpse. The horrifying mangled body of this child was still fastened to a tree and her bulging eyes seemed to be gazing pitingly and pleadingly at Violet and her sisters who at hearing from the lips of one of their charges of the cruel torturesf the child went over to her.

Her protruding tongue was clotted with blood while the inside of her throat was al chocked with blood and mangled flesh.

''The rascals are paying bitterly for this now.''Said Violet sadly;''Our Lord Jesus Christ places a terrible secidition on all who l murders poor helpless children especially in his fashion.''

Joice untied the dead child from the tree sai saying at the same time

''Your horrible sufferings are now over and you with the others are now in heaven but just the same I'd dare to embrace your mangled body and kiss your mangled throat to show my pity for you. Then she set it down along side the or other corpses pinned a note to it and then they all proceeded on their way just as the hard working horses of the Glandelinians came up yelling and cursing and swearing like demons incarnate.

The dumb child was troublesome to Violet and Jennie on account of of her weakness but now they had reached her horsess and hand made ready for a dual q quick start . Violet and her sisters hastly covered the naked bodies of the children then helpled them onto their ponies. Thedumb child was placed on violet's horse and as they started off Violet said pityingly;

''Now you poor little girl place my your arms tightly around my waist so you won't fall off.''

The child obeyed looking so wistful in her white woeful eyes that she was greatly effected.

''You poor sweet things if you was not on the poney now I'd huge you.''She said lovelingly pressing a key on kiss on her keek. '''Anyway you will learn to know us.''Shecontinued;'' We will take good care of you now and no Glandelinians will even lay hands on you now. You will be one of us and-''

''HALT YOU GOOD FOR NOTHING LITTLE SHE DEVILS OF HELL OR I'LL FIRE.''Shoutd an angry angry voice behind them.

''NEVER YOU BLA BLOATING CHILD BUTCHERS' NOT ON YOUR LIFE.''Shouted Violet brandishing her little fist ;''And we dare you Glandelinians to fire again.''

The Glandelinians did not fire as they wished to capture thechildren alic alive t hough as they fould out soon enougnh enough that such a thing was really out of the question.

'Get that nervy little devils horse.''Shouted the offi officer;''I'll show you if we dare to fire.''

Two or three of the men fired but Violet fired three times as thehorse staggered and these three Glandelinians fell reeled from their saddle shot through the head.

''Thunder of thunder.''Shouted the office in a rage as the horse fell throwing the dumb child and violet to the ground.:''Get the little fools now.''

' T The Glandelinians started to advance but the other little girls fired rapidly and coons continously untill their pistols were half emptied and for every shot a Glandelinian fell six Glandelinians being killed and thirty wounded theofficers horse bri being brought down th that man falling t o the ground his wo wig flying off his head.

' Get those darn fools before they are rescued by the other children.''He shouted in entrel extreme fury;''They must not get away I tell you, what in the vevil are to standing there and gaping for ye fools.''

As many of the Glandelinians ascould formed into the road leveled their guns and fired a volley but the bullets only hit Jennies horse inflicting only sli ht wounds. Violet and the dumb child was helpled onto Jpices horse and of they went again after exchanging a severe fussilade with the Glandelinians and shooting fifteen Glandelinians and nineteen of their horses down.

The officer was helpled onto another horse but nefore he could go a step Vil Violet brought him down with a well aimed shot in the shoulder.

The Glandelinian officer felt like chocking the air in his blo boiling rage and he abused the unfortunate men and gave them hellish pain because the little girls were getting the best of them.

''You are fine soldiers indeed.''He hissed shaking his fist at them and swearing his head off;' 'If you fail to get them little girls I'll kill every one of you you.''

The Glandelinians started off again swiftly but cautiously several parties seperating and going two ways so as to head them off. Violet and her sisters saw this maneuvaur made by the Glandelinians and keping up their speed started a good watch on the lurking savages who kept up a continous clattering fire.

/ Bullets whistled about the ears of the little girls but they were safe neves nevertheless as the Glandelinians could not shoot straight or either God was preventing their aim from being good in order to help Violet and her sisters. But Violet and her sisters were not to be stopped and what is more they rapidly out distanced their pursuers who fearing a further losses if they persisted in the pursuit gave it up threatening to revolt against their officer for his rashness.

As they progressed on Violet and her sisters heard a child on down the road crying out for pity.

"Oh please don't do it those horrible worms will eat us and you know it."

Violet heard and her sisters heard the child scream;

"I would only rather die any death than this."

As they slowly turned a corner they saw a Glandelinians holding down twow children two children on some dead bodies where worms were swarming the rascal scooping them up with bare hands and crushing them putting the handful of hir horrible worms into their mouths. The children vomited and the Glandelinians in a rage knelt on one of them and grabbing the other by the throat hissed;

"You good for nothing little rat in human form. I'll kill you to day."

THE The child pleaded that one did not want to die begging him not to kill her but to let her live... But the rascal drew a knife and answerring that he would kill her just the same jabbed the knife through her heart and leaving her dead body lie there attacked the other child giving her a horrible shocking.

The child tried to struggle but the rascal seemed to have the strength of a demon his finger nails cutting into her neck while the worms began to wriggle in and into her open open mouthand on her protruding tongue. Violet and her sisters were horrified and did not know what to do as a whole regiment of laughing Glandelinians more than five thousand in number were watching the performance all on horseback.

The dead bodies were indeed full of magets millions of them swarming over the bodies of the dead and dying child who were stark naked with their bodies full of large sabre wounds. The shocking child did her best to beat off those flesh eating worms smashing many and bruised and scratched the Glandelinians face to make him let go of her throat but it only increased her suffering and he increased the pressure. At last with her head thrown back and with the magets swarming over her body and on her protuding tongue the childs struggles quickly ceceased, this scene being a horrible sight.

In another minute a Glandelinian officer appeared with his hands rudely grasping a poor childs bare arms.

"I don't see how those Glandelinians can be so cre cruel."Said Violet an indescribable sorrow seizing her.""They are also going to shock that poor little girl."

"Well he will do it anyway while we sand here watching the perm performance." Said Joice impatiently;"I would give anything to have a troop of men at my back now."

The Glandelinian grasped the child by the throat and prev ssed with all his might until he not only shocked the child but crushed her frian throat as well. Viola and her sisters felt like going to her rescue but they did not know hat to do on account of hose they had with them. The look in the childs face was awful and filled Violet and her sisters with an awful fear. To them the sight of the childs face ga face was awful horrifying,knowing how sh she suffered and yet the poor child could not ar struggle and the Glandelinian chocked her so hard that she died with her eyes still bulging and her tongue sticking out.

Q At the same th time this officer had been chocking this poor child, another Glandelinian had tied tied a child to a tree and had ben scouraging her with all his strength the suffering of the child being so terrible that she could not even breathe the Glandelinians laughing in an uproar. The rascal struck the child with superhuman strength tearing her flesh to shreds.

Driven to horror by t the sight of this and almost losing control of themselves Violet and her sisters made a sudden dash straight tward the Glandelinians ye lling;

"Come boys give the murderers the punishment they deserve."

The cha rge made by the little girls was a daring one but did not end the way they expected for in a very short time Violet and her sisters found themselves fastened to th trees with the five children they had rescued.

"We don't intendto kill you brats just now but you are made to stand the rest of these scenes without hope of rescueing the children."Said the officer.

Then he gave orders for the butcheries to continue and the scouraging of the children progressed, the Glandelinians thrashing the children untill they sakn senseless. The Glandelinians only laughed at the plight of these poor childre n, and continued to thrash them without mercy striking them so hard that the iron piked lashes mangled their flesh their bodies being covsed with frightful bruises deep large scratches and cuts, and in their terrible sufferingthe children moaned piteously. The children tossing about in mortal agony were retied to trees. The litt le girl suffered t worse than the other two as she had gotten the most blows and her wounds bled continously. The sight of the childrens indw indr indescribable suffering and misery only made the brutal Glandelinians laugh.They only beat them again with the whip as hard as they could and decided to torture them as far as possible before killing them. Unfastening the child who had gotten the severest flogging the officer lifted her by the thra throat and chocked her so hard that she hung limp. Violet and her sisters could not stand the sight of a child suffering from such a awful chocking that this G Glandelinian gave her and with all their strength they tried to free themselves biting fiercely at the knots around them with their teeth but in vain. In the meantime the Glandelinian chocked the child with all his might. The childs eyes seemed about to bulge out of their sockets while her tongue stuck out its fuell length.

An ubb unbearable desire to save the child seized Violet and her sisters but as they were bound to the tree they could do nothing. The cruel Glandelinian was taking delight in the childs awful suffering while her desire for air and for him to let go of her throat made her struggle feebly trying her best to tear away those cruel hands which seemed to be crushing her tender throat. She even tried feebly to beat at his face with her fit fists, kicking him and scratching him furiously in the face but in vain, for he did not let golut continued to strange her with all his might her head being thrown back and the child soon hanging limp and helpless.

It was easy for this cruel Glandelinian to chock the poor child for her neck was so delicate, the rascal squeezing so hard that her eyes bulged more badly and her tongue stuch stuck so far out that it looked funny to the cu cruel Glandelinian.

"Those Glandelinians have no mercy at all."Gasped Angeline in dismay;"If we were free we would show them and not only that but make them pay dearly for daring to tie us up like this."

While the Glandelinian was chocking the poor child the other two ch children were recieving another horrible cruel encouraging that the wicked Glandelinians gave them. In vain they screamed piteously the Glandelinians only struck them the harder. Their bodies already torn and bleeding from the first scouraging was made worse and their suffering was too terrible to imagine. The children screamed louder and lounder and enraged by their piteous screams the Glandelinians next tortured them with flaming brands. Oh how the poor vid victims did scream. Their suffering was indescribable. Their screams were def deafening their pain and suffering being so awful that to Violet and her sisters it was like the agony of a damned soul and they made vehement struggles to free themselves but again failed.The faces of the poor children they suffered and in their intolerable desire to stop the scene Violet and her sisters begged God piteously to cause the loosening of their bonds but he did not seem seem to hear them.

Again and again they struggled frantically but it was useless and they realized that the Glandelinians knew how to tie knots. After torturing them with flaming brands the Glandelinians scused their wounded bodies in saul salt and pepper throwing pepper also into their eyes and made larger cuts on their tender bodies.

Suddenly after these children were dead the Glandelinians found their prison ers Violet and her sisters with the five new captives missing, and two Glandelinians standing there in Violets and Jennies place bound hand and h foot and even gagged and blindfolded.

Over this strange miricalious a escape of the Vivian girls the Glandelinians were driven to a fury which caused them i to increase the tortures of the children. three men holding down three children in a stream of scalding hot ptich. The children h suffered horribly from the ptich and died in a few minutes. Three other children were at the same time seized a thick flannel rag was tied around their mouth and then into a barrel of water they were tossed the rags being l placed around their mouths so that in their struggles and gasps for air they would not swallow any water. The poor children in their intolerable desire for air made vehement efforts to kick thebarrel over but the Glandelinians crue l l cruelly laughing at their struggles for air made it worx worse by holding their feet.

The children not being able to stand it without air any longer tried furiously to breathe in the water the water goinf going up into ther their nose and making their nostrils smartas ammonia was strongly mixed. The hearts of the children were now beating fast and loud and it seemed as if some one was trying to draw their lungs and heart through thér nose so intolerable was their suffering, while their heads seemed to swim like a top and the more stronger come their yearining for air. Soon their stur struggles became weaker and weaker and finally ceased altogether. Other children for crueller tortore were being hung up by the thumbs the children piteously begging the Glandelinians to let them down but the rascals only answered that they were sure it felt nice to han g there by the thumbs. The poor children begged and pleaded with tears streaming down their cheeks but in vain as the Glandelinins only answered with a burst of laughter and a jerk on the ropes to increase their suffering. Violet and her sisters saw this piteous sight but they knew that to do anything would be like suicide this time.

"Oh I wish we could do sme something to make them let them down."Said Jennie piteously;"The ropes will break their thumbs If we could only do sonehing to make them let the children down as they'll die that way."

The poor children legged pitcously and screamed but the louder and the louder the rascals / laughed.

"Oh please can't we do something,to force them to desist!"begged Jennie impatiently;"I would rather see them chocked than sotttortured like this.O. P.

[illegible] not show them any mercy."Said Angeline;"The Glandelinians at Andrean did not have any mercy on us when they did this very same thing to su us."

This was indeed an intolerable tor- torture meted out for the children by the Glandelinians and the children cried as if they wanted to get rid of all their tears. While these children were left hanging there the Glandelinians smothered other children by tying thick rags around their nose and mouth. In their agonisery the children struggled and tried to tear away the cloths but the Glandelinians had tied it securely and they failed. They furiously tried to breathe through the rag but could not and gradually but quickly their struggles ceased. The Glandelinians indeed were interested in the torture of children it being amuz amusing to see how a child suffered from suffocation. The Glandelinians were laughing atthe plight of the children and ran others out of breath untill they were breathing like a dying child then suffu suffocated them also. The other children dreaded suffocation and filled with horror fainted. They were not to escape howeverthe Glandelinians bringing them to their senses.

"Good Godtut we are powerless to to help them."Cried Violet;"Something ought to be done to prevent them from smothering the chil'r children as being winded already they cannot stand the torture. There is no mercy in the hearts of the rascals anyhow."

The children as the little girls saw were strug ling vehemently to tear the rags off the pleading looks in their faces being unbearable to witness. The sights of the childrens misery did not in the least touch the cruel hearts of the Glandelinians for the more they tried to tear away the rag from their faces the more the rascals laughed untill the tears tears ran down their cheeks.

The poor suffering children raised their hands in token of prayer making signs for the rascals to take the rag off but in vain and now the rascalsonly held them so they could not struggle. To violet and her sisters it was indeed horrible to see so much suffering and they would have rushed to their assistance had it been of any use. And in fact it served them right for not bringing a troops of men along with them when they did leave the christian lines for it was their own fau fault and they know it. For a little while longer the children struggled frantically to unfasten the rag or tear it off gazing with a pleading look tward Heaven. The Glandelinians only laughed and sho- shocked and slapped the childre n roughly declaring to them that it feels nice to go without air. All the others roared out with laughter at this while others prepared gallows to hand a few others on. The suffocating children were now strug ling feebly to unfasten the rags though they might as well have tried to take plaster outof a stone wall. Their lungs burned with intolerable indescribable, pain while their faces turned back black and blue and death soon came to these to relieve them of their suffering.

At this moment the mouse was placed around the head of a b neck of a beutiful childand drawn tight. The child hammered away at the ground with her heels and tried to stike her assailants but they quickly pulled her up and strug le as she would she was left hanging there and the higher she went the more her tongue protrudedand the more her eyes bulged. This horrible chocking before it killed her caused her throat to pain made her head ache and produced an unbearable feeling of coughing. She soon died however and when they let her down her pure tongue was still protruding. Driven to desper ation to th at this sight violet and her sisters again lost control of themselves. The manner in which they had gotten away from the Glandelinians after they had been teied to trees in the fau failure of their first charge is di simple. Two Glandelinians had come up to them one of them bringing a child with the intention of forcing Jennie to murder her. Jennie pretending to be afraid of the Glandelinian had seemed to yeild and was about to place her hands around the childs throat when suddenly while the rascal was not looking she drew his two revolvers and ordered the two men to untie her and her sisters.

Seing the wicked glare in Jennies eyes the Glandelinians hastily obeyed being forced also to free the other five taken with the Vivian girls. None of the other Glandelinians had seen the performance which gave the Vivian girls a fair chance. They tied the two men to the trees and gaging them stole to where their horses had ben hid or tied and with the extra child had gotten away before their escape was discovered. By the continous torture and slaughter of the other children violet and her sisters were driven to desperation. They knew that it would be fatal if they were caught a a again, for they may be smothered to death, hung to death, by the thumbs and strangeled and then cut to pieces. But they decided to risk it and resigning themselves to the will of God and drew their guns, and yelling ;

"Come on boys, there they are."

Charged at breakneck speed tward the unsuspeting enemy.Such a dashing charge scared a score of the Glandelinians who dashed for safty but one of them managed to give Jennie a slight jab in the back with the point of a bayonet. Unexpectedly however to both,the Vivian girls and the enemy, a large force of Angelinian troopers came dashing into view and charged the enemy with my might and main."Go into them hard."Shouted a fimilar voice;"We will teach the Glandelinians a thing or two how children are to be trat treated."

A score of the Angelinians quickly dismounted seized the remaining children remounted and dashed away, while the rest nearly ten thousand in number attacked the Glandelinians who had taken defense behind huge ledges of rocks on each side of the slaughter pen. The Glandelinins poured a deadly fire upon the Angelinians mowing down hundreds there being besides the five thousand Glandelinians three thousand more and for a time the Angelinns were seriously han handecapped as the Glandelinians remounting their horses countercharged the christians like an avalanche and for a few minutes there was a terrible mixup of men on both side in fierce sabre or lance duels but however numbers told and the survivors after mowing down a thou- and Angelinians and capturing a hundred retreated leaving their five hundred dead and two thousand wounded behind them in their precipitate flight.

"After them s."Shouted the christian general;" They must noe not escape.Annihila te them for t this butchery of children. Give them no quarter and take no prisoners. Kill even the wounded damn them dogs."

The Angelinians pressed on with a deafening yell charging upon the fugitives on three sides. Seing their sutiation the Glandelinians suddenly reinforced by other parties he which had been left further on behind to guard the pass in that direct ion against a advancing christians, fought like den demons using bayonets , sabres, pistols lances cu cl clubbed muskets stones and even spades pick axes and shovels and even pieces of old iron pipes as weapons.

Time and again the christian cavarly forces were cut up and driven back but at it they would go again. They were victorious however despite the persistence of the Angelinians but the Glandelinians did not fo'low being too scared from the suddeness of the bloody encout nter and of the unexpected approach of the Angelinian cavarly.

Over 345 Glandelinians had been killed in the seci second encounter making a total of 845 in slain while three thousand were wounded these having been saved from the furious cc christians by the desperate fury of their comrades.

General John Evans lost in killed 9,876, while ove 4,677 were wounded and only heavy reinforcements coming from the main body of christians had saved Evans from capture as his division who first attacked the enemy had been annihilated instead of the enemy which Evans a had wished for revenge over the slaughter of the children. Wicked as they are it could be seen that it would take more than human power to revnge anything on this style and Evans soon realized it.

"Well I'll be flabbergated."Ejaculated the familiar voice after the fighting was over and John Evans with a party of soldiers rode up to the little girls; "We passed the first scene of massacre and saw the dead Glandelinianshut did not know what or who had done it. Then we came in time for his engagement. How in the world did you come to anih annihilate the fifty Glandelinians, save those childre n , escape the persuers, and get all that di dried blood on your clothes, whose men were these Glandelinians, and when did they start the mass acre, and who helpled you save the children, and wh who?"--------

"If you would stop storming us with questions general probably we could give a few details."Answered Violet kind of seriously."We were gi going on a message sent by his excellency general vivianis to general mansonia and came upon the scene of slaughter unexpectedly. Theonly reason how we saved these poor children is because as you well know we never or seldom miss our aim. We got the blood on our clothes in passing through the gory field. Whose men they were I do not know, nor nethr nether neitherdo we know wn when they started the massacre. There was only one who helpled us to save the children and that was God."

"Oh Isee, I understand."Said Evans riding along side of violet;"I see this pretty little girl must have been chocked prety hard as her neck is black and blue with dep finger marks. And where are her clothes and the o clothes of the four others."

"She cannot talk as her voci voice is paralized by the strangulation, and her clothes and the clothes of the others have been burned by the enemy."Said Violet.

"Let's see the inside of your mouth."Advised Evans leaning over.

The child opened her mouth and Evans procuring a flashlight looked in. F Violet at this moment saw something peculiar on the childs tongue , at first thinking it was a bullet wound, but she asked her to prodr protrude her tongue which she did. The child tried to tell him by signs that the rascal bit her tong tongue but there was no need as h immen im- ediately suspected this indeed.

"The murderer bit her tongue."He said;"Did the murderer escape!"

"Yes he indeed did ."Said Violet;"He escaped the time he wanted to see her die for I gave him a bullet wound in the head. He had started away from the others attacking me and my sisters seized her and dragged her behind a clump of bushes believing that he was unseen,unseen.

Why the fool dragged her right across my path and choked her within a few yards of my hiding place a yard to the left of my sister Angeline. Indeed even then I would not have known where to find him if I did not hear the rascal talk as he chocked her. I crawled within good range of him and plugged him in the head just before he chocked her to death.''

''We had better be going on now.''Said Joice;;''An army of landelinians may be coming along and our saving these poor children will be in vain.''

'''Is that so?''''P Le laughed Evans;''Why I want them to come. If you knew I had a whole army behind my back beside the ten thousand you would not be in a hurry. I was reconstruct ing one of Hansonias wings and making a series of raids. I have in advance or as an advance guard over twenty five thousand cavarly men laden with provisions I secured in the raids on the enemy but I can say that if any landelinian general is anxious to began a battle let him come.''

Evans then whell wheeled his horse and drawing his dabre ordered the troopers on and riding with Violet he said;

''I believe the child will recover her speech in a few days.You little girls can take care of her c if you like and I'll relieve you of the others. That will be all right won't it?''

Violet and her sisters agreed giving up the other five to the sturdy Angelinian general.

''If you don'tmind I,ll take the message.''Said Evans;''As you may be in a hurry to return to general Vivianias army.''

''Thank you very much .''Answered Violet;''But we would sooner take the message our selves as we want to show this little girl to the great gen general and tell him of her plight. I'm sure he will be interested.''

''I was going there with the children you surrendered to me myself.''Said Evans somewhat surprised;'' We are both on the same errand and indeed he will be interested.''

As they continued on they soon came to a point where thescenery was remarkably beautiful more beautiful than a picture could make it. Thick green shur shrubbery grew in thick straight rows along the pathway which was lined with all the flowers known to grow in the tropics. And the main beautifying scene was from the velvet green lawns and prairies boarded by beautiful trees and distant mountians in purple red hue and fringed with flow flowers of all description. Violet and her sisters had never seen a more beautiful sight and longed to have their home on this spot. They had been traveling sinceearly morning and had reached this spot about three thirty in the afternoon and Evans told them that they were already near the frinze of general Hansonias army, and that all along his lines the scenery was more bautiful beautiful than this like a regular paridize. After riding on for several hours more there came a rustling sound in the bushes tward their right and suddenly there came a challange not in cwrswords of or questions but by a strange signal like the chirping of a bird and a soldier suddenly appeared with levle leveled musket and in gray uniform.

At first they were all startled and violet and her sisters were about to draw their pic pistols when the sently said;

''Don't be alarmed by my uniform. Its the orders of Hansonia that us sentries wear gray to decieve the enemy and lure all prowlers into a trap. You are within his lines now. So pass my fair friends and good luck to ye.''

After saluting the sentinel they continued on and the more further they went the more beautiful the scenery became. Soon the tents of the christian armies appeared in the distance and the poor dumb child and the other rescued childrengazed at all the cities of tents on one side and the beautiful scenery on the othe with awe having never saw such beauty before. At last they arived before a very tall and fantastic tabour and Evans saluting the guard said;''

''I would like to see his excellency general Hansonia please.''

''Heis not here just now .''Said the guard;''He has gone don down the line where some of your Angelinians have brought in twenty children all girls at that who have been saved from the enemy. What children are those with you?''

''Children who just escaped the butcher shop with their lives lives.''Said Evans indignantly;''If it had not been for the darlings of the Nation they would hv have been butchered with the five hundred others. These six little girls who are the vivian girls slew fifty clandelinians alone.''

''It is amazing.''Said the guard saluting;''But you can find his excellency easily: He is down the line about a quarter of a mile.''

''Thank you sa.''Said Evans;''We got a message we would like to give him.''And saluting Evans rode on followed bythe rest who went pretty fast now and soon came upon a scene.

HANSONIAS THREAT. THE BATTLE OF WAILING WILLOW RUN
ALL PARTY AGREED AT HANSONIAS SUCCESS.

IN FRONT of general James Bengimann Marshall guarded by five Angelinin generals were twenty little girls while near the sentry block two other children were guarded by generals Tenchon,Parmelee,Green and Carnival. On child was held by the hands by an Abyssinikilian who could not resist the temptation and suddenly grasping her in his arms hugged her tightly and held her fast and would not let go.

Vil Violet and her sisters rode up to general marshall and asked for the wheat whereabouts of general Hansonia.''

''He is residing in that tent with the two generals over younder.''

Said general Marshall;''Say take these other children with you. Hansonia will want to see them also.''

Evns gathered the others together and then all went before the great general, marshallitilling

Marshall telling all he heard from one of the twenty five childrenin very long indignant details. Then saluting Violet and Evans told their story a hedious black look overspreading Hansonias villianous looking face.

The great general drew the dumb child to him and examinedthe black andblue marks on her throat. Then opening her mouth he examined the wound on her tongue while other soldiers told him of the frightfulness of the massacre. Then Hansonia gave a haughty laugh throwing them aside as he said

''You have not seen as bad a massacre of children as I have.'' He then faced the child to the hundreds of spectaters and continued;

''Well here is a mere baby with a bite on her tongue of the type the severest character and blue marks on herneck and her voice paralized by the strangulation she recieved and not only that boys I would like you all to know no whether you believe me or not, this is my own little girl Annie Hansonia.''

A murmur of fury went up at this some shouting;''Down with the murdering devils;''Others shouting/ '''To hell with the Clandelinians and so on.

''If we ever succeed in crossing the boundary line which I'm bound to do God can strike me dead for a liar if I don't revenge this by laying wasteto all the country in their path. These innocent children especially my daughter who were torn out of their homes with their mothers probably slain and also maybe my wife did these landelinians no harm and yet they massacred and tortured them them probably in the same way or worse than this child who is my daughter here. These marks on her throat showed how she was chocked. It is my purpose toavenge the brutal inhumanma massacres of innocent children and to avenge the every moment shehad to suffer for from the chocking. If ever Angelinia succeeds in invading landelinia I will lay waste to her fairest citie as they did us and I will say to them to look for the call of all their own substanance an the care of their own children for from on I will sparenothing in my paths of devastation of ruin. Angelinia and Abbiennin will even have their ren revenge for the sorrows caused among all the children of the world over the continual blockade of Vivian Wickey. And my friends;''Continued Hansonia;

'' General R Aronburg Raymond Richardson Federal is the main cause of of all the inhuman slaughters of children that has occured. From the very beginging of his commanding in the clandelinian armies he has been as a mighty scourage to the children and a human Tornado to the whole Angelinian country, being a wicked boistercus unruly man. There has never ben any manners about that man and he has has ben moredestructive in his rude rad d raids than the worst typohh typhoon I have ever witnessed. And I have always noticed an alam alarming frown frown frown on that rascals face when ever I have met him at close quarters in a tattle, that is getting near enough to see him plail plianly for I brave as I am could never cope successfully with a man of his kind. He is indeed a worse scourage than the war itself and no city, mulitudeof non-combatants dare stay to meet him. For a minute. We all ought to lay plans to crush these murc murderers of help less chilx children and put an end of their forages upon the helpless. All who agrees answer.''

There was not a single soldier who remained quiet or protested. Indeed Hansonia was almost deafened by the cher cheering and yell of fury that the christians set up.

''Hurrah, hurrah.''Shouted the soldiers wildly brandis brandishing their weapons;

'''On to Calverine once more and on to Julo Gallio. Wipe them out, wipe them out. Down with Manley and Federal. The hell with Clandelinian and to the dogs with her own chilx children.''

''You little girls did greater wonders than any man ever did in the face of such peril. I presume you six knew what would happen if you had been caught after mal making that second charge!''

''Yes.''Assured Violet;''We would have added to the dead children out there and failed to save these as well. It is our own accuracy of aim that gave us the advantage. We were six against fifty it nevertheless as they were mostly all drunk they had no show against us at all. We plugged them as fast as they came on' they had no sense enough to to start from tree to tree or from rock to rock as they came but in their drunken frenzy exposed themselves and made it easy for us to pick them by sixes every time.''

Hansonia gave orc orders for all the children to be placed in the redcross tents and procurring a tongue depresser general Hansonia took his daughter that is the dumb child and told her to open her motmouth which she did. Placing this in he pla pressed on her tongue pressing it down enough to see far into her throat and saw that swellings were the cause of her failing to talk. He immediately got an army sergeon who examined her careful,y.

''A counter pre pressure is he only means to make it all right for her .''He said; 'A hot compressure I mean for twelve hours. The wound on her tongue isserious too and had has to be looked at carefully.

In a few minutes Hansonia brought his dau ghter out to the Violet and he sisters and told them what the doctor had said.

''It must be done as quickly as possible.''He said;''For thr s the swelling may increase from inflamanation and strangle her to deathfor sure.''

Violet took her in charge and as soon as they were in a tnt tent she suddenly drew the dumb child to her and hugged and m kissed her as if she was a lost sister just returned.

''I got the chance now.''She said pressing t he child closely to her heart ; '' And I mean to kep it.''

Violet still held her tightly as a steaming rag was applied and soon the poor child made happy by the friendship of the vivian girls fell asleep in Violets arms.

''Ain't she pretty, t e poor little thing!''Said Violet still hugging her tightly;''She's mine now for ke-ps. I mean to keep her never to let go.''

John Evans came in this minute and was soon embracing Violet and the child too.

''You know violet.''Said Evans as her sisters joined him;''That though he did not show it Ha rmonias anger now is something terrible. He is in a terible rage over the massacre and the condition of his poor little girl his only child as he told me and he has even wired to general vivian about it and said that you litt le girls can have her for to prote ct all you like and for your own sister o if you like.''

''It is enough to anger any christian.''Said violet;''Even if the Glandelilians had to slay children I don't see why they do it in such a way and torture them so. It is only the act of dedemons.''

''I know but those Glandelinians don't care .''Said Evans;''No doubt they are fury stricken by the threatening invasion of Calverinia and lost their heads. The only way Hansonia sees is to set an example and that is to put the children of the Glandelinians to death though yet I hate to see it done as they are innocent and never did no harm to us.''

''It is terrible to think.''Said Violet Sa;''But I'm afraid Hansonia won't change his mind now. I gave him the note but I don't believe he saw it yet in his excite ment,said it was an advise from general vivania , directed by general ivian himself to try and make a desperate drive across the boundary line by striking the enemy lines under Ambrose Fuller at a region called Weping Willow Run.''

''He did see it and is preparing to start the drive which he desires to make.'' Said Evans;''And just on a: count of this massacre he is bound to win win.''

Evans took the child from violet and fondly hugging her himself held her in his arms in a gentle embrace while he said;

''I guess It would be a good advise if you take this little girl girl for your stepsister. I think she is fair enough and she looks sweep enough in that happy smile.''

''I intend to.''Said violet.

''That is fine .''Said Evans stroking the childs forhead;''But by the way how did you get her free. Even in death you know a Glandelinian would retain his grasp on his victims.''

''I seized his sabre and cut his hnds off.''Said violet;''The lit le tlittle girl then rolled from him and lay in death like convulsions.I had sume time in m kin in making her recover. However it would have ben better for her if she had went to heaven thepoor little girl.''

''And her sweet soul clamor for justice against her murder like the others are probably doing.''Said Evans;''What an account those Glandelinians had to give when they died. They are paying their dept now in ''Everlasting fire''

no hard to save those poor children from the Glandelinians and where with the help of general Evans they had succeeded in getting away from many of them Penrod not realizing that they had been out of the camp at all had remained in his own headquarters studying acertain map he had secured in one of his raids from the enemy tent he dont know. Sometime passed, and he was beginning to wonder where his darling sisters were, and worrying, when general Ja ed Evans came into his tent after an outing and said;

"My dear prince do you realize that you have some very wonderful littl e sisters!"

"Do I realize it"exclaimed Penrod in amazement."Why shouldn't I.They have since the war began gone through many unusual experiences and often saved themselves or were saved.That is because they're angel possessed.It was because of them that Jennie Mory was recaptured from the enemy."

"You don't understand my meaning"said the general with a strange look in his eyes."They were out of camp to day and I have just rescued them and brought them in.They were fighting desperately against an overwhelming number of Glandelinian soldiers in an effort to save many children from a massacre and only five hundred children were slain.They saved many hundreds, those seven little girls themselves. Isn't that wonderful."

Penrod glanced at Evans wondering if the man was really sane.

"I'm telling you the truth my dear Prince"said Evans."you need not look at me that way.I'm in my right mind. They sent me for you as they want you to do them a favor as they're so hurt and angry over the massacre of the children they didn't succeed in saving."

Penrod somewhat aghast followed Evans to the headquarters of the Vivian Girls. As he came in he saw them grouped about a table, with a big map on it.On a small bed against the wall ley a little child but she was not sleep ing but appeared still frightened and somewhat ill.It was the child who had been in such a petious condition after being rescued, and a cloth was wrapped around the childs neck. Violet and her sisters were not this time their customary smiling selves as they greeted him.They were all shaky shaky, their faces were white and Jennie appeared the whitest.

"Penrod dear"began Joice"There was beginning an awful massacre and----"

"And you and your sisters saved most of them!"

"Yes we did"Put in violet angrily, "But not all of them.It was awful. We came near being a part of it once or twice in our efforts to rescue them. "We----"

"I heard it all from Evans"said Penrod decidedly."I can't help saying that you surely are wonderful, good little girls and God surely will bless you for it.But why did you go off without me.You know it is dangerous.But of course you do trust in the angels that possess you and I therefore rest easy. I do not fear as so much now as up to this time you can hold your own pretty good in your knife drill with me and am a hundred per cent better in your pistol shooting too.That accounts for it."He went over to the bed and looked at the poor child lying there with tears in her eyes. The very looks of Penrod was a great consolation to the child.He had the little girl in his embrace in a minue minute and knowing how he can make a child sleep by hugging her, he retained her while he smiled at his pleased but surprised sisters;

"We wish that you would replay the enemy for this massacre. And for our sad trouble in rescueing them."

Penrod laughed as he said-

"What is there I would not do for you.I'll raid as I never raided before. I'll make everybody in the world jump out of their seats when they see the papers and I'll do it to night." And remember I'll give no quarter."

violet beconed him to the table and he moved over still holding the child to his breast. She was a very little girl and she appeared so piteous to him, and also the faces of violet and her sisters impressed him so, and also the way they were shaky that he was determined to strike a blow that any Glandelinian general won't forget.

"If you study this map which I have handy"said Joice pointing to it on the table you will find that a great portion of the Glandelinian army that was not active in the battle at Jennie Tory extends across the Yellow Stone road tward Weeping Willow Run, between which all the land south of here lies a strip of country of General Nomoning and Sandy Desert, which is coming up also to monace Big Girl pool..If you could raid to night and do it good you could tear off a good deal of that mon monace and prevent the enemy from ever securing a foothold on Weeping Willow Run."

"I see"said Penrod as he glanced over the map"The hill a here are not very big and the stream by that name is very narrow and lies close to Pingree Fingares Town, and all the Glandelinian tents of the army at that locality lies close to the shore of the river. If I could also get a column of troops to raid also from the water we could cut off that portion of the enemy from escape entirely and destroy everything we desire."

"It's a two hours journey by boat"declared Jennie and the enemy encamp ment is north of Pingaree town. Let me tell you Penrod dear something about this section an we discovered that in our spying work this morning before we came upon the massacre.At the north end of Pingaree town, where the stream of Weeping Willow is widest and where the weeping willows grow the heaviest, the land is devoid of anything else on the growth of trees from shore to shore, but at the south the river is scarcely half a mile broad, but easily to be forded.There is no dangerous bogs anywhere, except at this spot(she pointed) where we could trap the glandelinians and destroy them.The scene, too bad too to mare it is exceedingly pretty however, and the many birds who approach it from the forests sing there night and day.There's also a hill over there that resembles a huge green wedge extending beyond the woods and its grass and trees gives it the color of an emerald.The enemy had most of his provision provision encampments there, and scores of thousands of child slaves.As we saw when we scouted there this morning the grass came to the edge of the sloping shore to the very edge of the growth of weeping willows, the beautiful trees forimg forming a continuous grove all along the edge of the stream for miles.The encampments of the enemy however is very dense and a novel capture if you can raid it right there."

"but our armies are so well supplied what should we do with the spoils"said Penrod."We can't ruin food always."

"We can send the spoils to other armies badly in need of it"said JHettie.
"A good idea.But about this big end of the camp.what's here"Demanded Penrod pointing to the map."

"At thatend, at the north, is the headquarters of that dreadful butcher of children general Aronburg Federal, called the Lord and ruler of all the army under his command.We observed it is a beautiful place built entirely of han dsomely decorated woodwork and capped by domes of burnished gold for who ever once owned that house out there in the country had been exceedingly exceedingly wealthy before he was driven away.We have found out how this general managed to start up this massacre of children which we interfered with.These Children are the more delicate child slaves who cannot do the toil of others and the soldiers refused to retain them in the army therefore and wanted them to be sold.The general had sent them away down the river on sic six big river boats with sixty towers, and many of these slaves in other but covered boats to general Gilgad. but that general refused to buy them claiming that the children were not even fit to live, and therefore they were sent back and Federal in order to prevent them from freedom because of our menacing armies being so close ordered them to be murdered.It was for tunate from the list made out we saved at least fifteen hundred..We however did not visit any other sector but that which we are telling you of so there may be a few other sections of the Glandelinian army that we may under stand a little of. ut that sector we should raid.We ourselves intend to help you direct and"join join the raid. But see here"and Jennie again pointed" to the southwest is an glandelinian encampment called the "Camp of Phrexe" where the glandelinians have three cheins of deadly batteries and an immense immense cavarly squadrom.We must for our safty avoid that sector. These Glandelinians are very fierce and warlike and as watchful as owls."

"But that is nothing unusual to me"said Penrod."some time before probably it was last year a fierce squadron of glandelinian cavarly under Bogoon made a raid upon the rear of general Greathearts right wing, coming suddenly upon that section of the christian lines.There they drove the christian sentries and others into confusion and began to plunder as is their custom, but the bands bands of child scouts then led by me although neither so big nor so strong as any soldiers are, were able to defeat them with great loss and drive them all back to the crossroads across from which they had issued, where a great column of Dombobian light horse cavarly overtook the raiders and destroyed destroyed them and captured their general Coregoon and slew Bogoon, capturing a number of others and carrying them off as prisoners."

"That defeat of the enemy by child scouts at such a time shows even then your leadership even though so many thought it was so wonderful because because the children in uniform did not seem as strong as soldiers.Y t T Yet they were able to handle the same sort of weapons and therefore they drove the fierce glandelinian enemies from the camp and recovered all their plunder for I heard of that"said joice.

"but there is one thing about our plan for this raid"declared Penrod mus ingly."We will have to plan it wisely and carefully for both general Manley and Black Brook remember the raids I made upon them within the past five days and from what you yourself told me Jennie early this morning general Aronburg Federal has one constant fear of another raid that will be made uponany sector of his own army.He fears too that I or you little girls might bring forth a more numerous army of raiders against his army both for conquest and for revenge for what his men did to the children to day many of whom you and your sisters ran and in which case if we made it suddenly there could be little hope of successfully opposing us."

"Yes"that' s true in a way"said Jennie regretfully"This anxiety on the part of general Aronburg Federal had led his scouts to maintain a very sharp watch for strange moving columns of christian cavarly or for any number of strange boats upon the Weeping Willow run, many of his patrol columns of cavarly patrolling all the territory between the christian lines and his own and elsewhere all around it constantly, but we should be too wise to allow ourselves in any fear of failure on that account for we could bring enough troopers to even suddenly overwhelm and capture these patrols, and then rush to the assault."

"There's one move that we could start upon which would be a bold one indeed" declared Penrod hugging the little child tight as he saw she was falling asleep now."General Aronburg Federal is a great leader of the enemy, but he also is the guardian of the son of the glandelinian ruler who has come here to see some of the battles, believing he is safe within the glandelinian army.He is in his headquarters now, and as no often you and I are the children of emperor vivian always called General Vivian because of the uniform he wears, and the enemy couldn't leave you alone whether you bothered them or not we are justified in trying to capture that Prince.I do not or have not learned the boys name but I have recognized him on sight.If we could do something to strike a good blow in our behalf to avenge your own troubles and the Abbieann horror just past we could probably decrease the dangers of the Glandelinian armies in Calverinia and therefore increase the happiness of the people of Calverinia.for perhaps there is no land outside of our State of Abbieannia where contentment and peace could be more manifest than in our fair State of Calverinia if we could only oust the rascally murdering and destructive glandelinian armies.Had these conditions continit conditions not come about we ourselves would never have been seper ated as we were, I so long before my real itdity was discovered or that you and your sisters would have suffered so.You Jennie, your sisters, tell me, so does Evana, and even your Father, and from the testumony of countless others and from the news I often read even at Delight's Junction so long ago are the main tormented one because of the enemy, and they seem to do it because you are the prettiest and therefore the most hated..Therefore I and your sisters have planned for your benefit to strike by capturing this prince only yesterday. If he is not a bad boy well and good, we'll treat him only as a prisoner of war, but if he's as rascally as the glandelinians we,ll surprise the world what we will do..or what you and your sisters have suffered it is therefore just to do it to him if he is a bad boy. This Prince whom we do not find the name of is the heir to all the riches and Mooc Monarchy of glandelinia if glandelinia wins this war, he has grown up surrounded by all the luxury of the Richest but I have heard that something is wrong about him at that.They say that he is not a manly little fellow by no means he is too grave and thought ful, and yet what else he is we do not yet care to find out.If we wish to attempt anything we cannot be too idle a single minute after we start the raid.I am afraid if he wanted to be a spy, as you are sisters he could equal you in being dangerous, and therefore our plan to capture him is wise.Did you recognize any of his doings when you spied this morning Jennie?"

"Plenty indeed.He understands where the heart of our christian batteries lay hidden along this Weeping Willow Stream, and was successful in scouting in finding what our various christian patrols were doing better than any lone scout of the glandelinians, although he is so slight and small.He had a little boat of his own and he was very proud indeed when general Aron burg gave him some child slaves to boss around as he saw fit.There is no Glandelinian military school for boy scouts in general Aronburgs army as we and our scouts too have caused it to be that the Glandelinian generals cannot get the means to give glandelinian child scouts such advantages as military child scout schooling, but general Aronburg owned several strang ,manuscripts which I captured and which to my surprise were made of sheepskin..Being a man of intellegence he was able to teach that boy something of military scout duties.I saw and so did my sisters that when studying his lessons that boy goes into a grove near the generals headquarters and climbs into the branches of a tall tree, where either he or his soldiers had built a platform platform with a comfortable seat to rest upon all hidden by the canopy of leaves.There with no one to disturb him I climbing half way up the tree saw him pore over the sheepskin on which when I captured it discovered were written the most queer language I ever saw in my life time.I left the manuscript manuscript with Hans Hansonia and will send for it so so you can see it."

Jennie sent an aidecamp for the manuscript. It was brought and everybody gave it the once over. Penrod indeed was very proud of his brave little sisters as well as he might be, and had since he first became acquainted with them had a high respect for their ways and judgement, and thought and even realized they were more worthy to be taken into his confidence in all matters of state than anybody else he ever knew. Therefore for many days he had either together by themselves, or openinly in the company Streets had taught them many arts of tricks they never understood before with sharpe blades, guns rifles and pistols and even with boy and arrows. and also how to fling lances and darts and use knives. He did so for some day he understood they would be able to defend themselves as well as he could and he would truthfully never need to worry where they were no matter how long they were gone for then if learned as himself they could be equally as dangerous to the enemy, and a firm safty for themselves.

"The Glandelinian army is getting already afraid of us enough Penrod dear" excla imed Hettie "and our times seem to be getting more happy, and our adventures less dangerous and more successful, but I nor my sisters cannot forget those terrible massacres we have so often witnessed and nearly been a victim of ourselves in months go by. My My constant fear is that they will commit many more massacres and will even send a big army of spies to search even within our own lines for the children whom we have rescued from those we defeated, and whom Evans ran a rescueing squadrons almost destroyed afterwards when the glandelinians pursued us. If the glandelinian spies comes in great numbers and are disguised as christian soldiers and so on we may be unable unable to detect them, for we have not enough people who are trained enough to detect enemies through disguise and therefore we have gave orders that these children must be uniformed and made to join our child scout troop and learn to fight so they can save themselves from much injury and suffering."

"Are we less powerful in fighting off these spies than I thought?" asked Penrod.

"It is not that" said little Daisy.

"Then what is the trouble?"

"Just what Hettie said. "We have not enough of persons to detect the spies if they do come within our army."

"There is a way to prevent that" declared Penrod. "That you and your dear sisters may fully understand the marvelous situation, I must confide to you little girls a secret which no one but your father and Evans told me. You little girls could detect any one in disguise for I saw that myself. So could I and a good number of scouts. I have in my army three girlscouts who are called "Three Magic Talismans" because they are such clever disguise readers and these have always been guarded with utmost care because they are far too young to fight or ride horses as our others are, and there fore I have always retained the whereabouts of their existance from any one else so far. But last something would come up in necessity I have decided to tell you what those little girls are, and where they are always at. I will have them sent for. I will send an aide decamp to Jennie Richee, Angeline richees sister and with their description she, ll understand who they are and sent them here."

He wrote something on a slip of papa paper sealed it in an envelope and signing Jennie Rich Richees name down on it, sent it off with Jane Hettie Melford. while he was waiting for their coming he noticed that the little girl he was holding was fast asleep, and therefore he arose and gently put her in the bed.

"She'll be all right after to day" said Penrod reassuringly. "But it ought to have been one of you my sisters who should have been in my arms that way and with that happy smile she now has on her face. Don't she look good though."

"It sure makes us feel good to see that" said Violet. "but sure we don't want to be selfish and be so happy all the time. Surely that poor little dear, and the others are just as good----"

"Stop" said Penrod with his hand upriased. "I don't want to hear that any more. You really understand what you really are, and yet you love everybody especially little children more than yourselves. That's well and good, and that is why I could not bear to part company with any of my dear sisters. But it sure is not right to count or any about yourselves that you are not worthy of anything. There is nobody been really worthy of you or your sisters outside of Abbieconnie. Nobody has been able to even spoil you in tythe slighest degree no matter how good they were to you and nobody has ever been refused anything from you no matter what they wanted or needed. Of course that little child didn't deserve what she recieved either, and to be sure she'll be safe, she'll remain with us for good. But how in the world did you rescue her and the rest, only seven of you against so many Glandelin ian soldiers. It seems a miracle for what Evans told me!"

"It was difficult of course said Violet, "but we did it ambush like."

"Were you not captured by the Glandelinians?"

"Yes on several occasions, but we got away and soon renewed the fight."

As she said this Jennie's hair ribbon of a yellow color had become loose, and as Penrod recovered it from the floor and proceeded to replace it for her he said speaking in a solemn impressive voice;;

"Sister Often you and your sisters have filled me with awe. You little girls are the most wonderful thev the world has ever heard of. No matter what the enemy does the Glandelinians cannot daunt you, and what you set out to do you accomplish under the most greatest difficulties ever imagined. You and your sisters do things I nor even the Gemini wouldn't dare dream of. Pa said you and your sisters were sure some great gift to the nation from Heaven and sometimes he's half afraid you are not really little girls at all but little angels in disguise as children. We have found out that those who are so good to you and cause you unheard of joy and happiness are met with unusally good luck, and general Charles Brown told me yesterday that since he once rescued you and your sisters from your enemies his army has never met a defeat. Is it really possible you are little Magicians?" and he laughed as he made out this question.

"Well" said Violet nestling her head lovingly against his breast as he finished fixing Jennie's ribbon so this time it couldn't come of, "Everybody does say that through some reason we little girls do possess some sort of an astonishing charm or power, and that who ever accompanys us on missions or who are really our friends may count themselves very fortunate. But we believe they say that just to praise us to see us happy. They may believe we crave for praise. But that is what we run away from."

"But without intending to praise or flatter you or your sisters Violet dear" said Penrod something giv es to you little girls some sort of power so unusal and great that no foe can doo any harm to you no matter how hard they try even if they do capture you, and often they cannot capture you either. Something always protects you and your sisters from all dangers that threaten you, no matter from what source they come. I always hear that you and your sisters are "Angel Possessed" and have often seen evidences of that. One evidence of that was just now. "I never seen anybody so happy as you were and still are just because of that smile on that little childs faces. Others might have been jealous. and you are so unusally protected, so wise and even helpful. and often at nights, or any time you have spells of unusual happiness that I cannot account for. Hettie was so happy last night that no matter what I and you did you couldn't get her to sleep. I suppose you hardly can believe that you really are angel possessed possessed. But your father can tell the symptons for he often had been with children who were. You are not so much as some have been in that state but its progressing every day. I believe sometime you and your guardian angels are one for you even fight as angels do."

"I'll bet sometimes" laughed Jennie as he hugged her for an instant "they that you almost sometimes doubt that we are so fortunate as to be possessed by angels."

"What is this my dear sister," laughed Penrod in return though he was amazed "Do you tell me you believe that I doubt it when I see it with my very eyes. It seems impossible for some persons to believe it but during your happy spell some nights ago you radiated a strange light from you for some unknown cause which almost frightened me. I do not doubt the powers of of angels, for it is said thy can do wonders. Listen Jennie, how can you and your sisters accomplish everything you did if you were not in that condition. Pa Evans has told me so much that sometimes I have been slightly afraid of you. You and your sisters seem almost supernatural. From what I have seen therefore It is a fact that I do tell the truth."

He held Jennie close to him while he continued "Father is right. I would never question the truth of what even I or others fail to understand, for even you and your sisters have done things that fills the world with amazement. Many stories have been written of your exploits, and even exaggerated. Really in many cases instead of needing protection yourselves you have succeeded in protecting and saving others as on this occasion when you saved so many children from being massacred. The powers of other angels however are even greater. Here father poor in all else little gems as you are would and does make him richer than any other monarch the world holds."

"We surely believe that" said Violet, as Penrod looked at her and her sisters with awe."

"But tell me my dear sisters why do you often be captured by the enemy when these marvelous powers are yours through the angels.?"

"We never have really been captured by the enemy against our wills." said Joice. "There are proofs they never succeeded if we didn't will it. Often it was the only means to obtain information information. But even if we are angelic possessed.We dare not go to extremes for fear we might be rash.There we are really afraid to go we do not request any one to go nor allow them to go.On that last matter we do show our aurthority good and put our foot fo down.Often when hard pressed by our persuers we have to hide deeply in some recess.Our only real danger lies in being dreadfully rash or in the chance that many enemies could be softly hidden within our own lines in disguise and often seize us as has been the case and carry us off.But that some times turned out a blessing for either we were rescued by our friends who trailed us, or we escaped ourselves, and secured lots of information in the bargain.Therefore when ever the enemy soldiers steal us away from our lines they only blunder. Even then we are not quite powerless to resis, and resist and believing in securing information had let them carry us away but praying that through the angels no harm could come to us, and none did..My Fathers Mother had a little girl who also was angel possessed, and these angels protected her immensely from harm.She's still a little girl and living yet, but because of the nature of the war Father won't have her come here because he is afraid she'll become as one of us and scare the enemy to death.He really is afraid though of her safty.That's ridiculousbut we can't change his mind.That's the real mystery of the Annie Aronburg child. No one really by that name was slain.But because of her angel possession condition she can act almost like a spirit and has fooled fooled many and calls herself Annie Aronburg.She's very fiery though if she's angry and can do wonders.

Her right name is Mable Ce Cecilia Vivian and she's my most distant cousin.I remember one horrible incident that occured some day ago when some little girl suddenly popped into our view when we were spying on the enemy.She scared us I'll tell you that to come to us so suddenly yet she really was alive, and really flesh and blood as we are.She warned us not to go in that direction as the enemy were laying in ambush.Then she said her name is called "Annie Aronburg."After we followed her advice we raced away from the scene only to ride plump into a big body of Glandelinian cavarly.We were captured captured and brought to camp, but then later a storm came up. she appeared again and helped us to escape.As we got away we were persued by a big body of cavarly and we had a hide time riding through the storm as a blinding rain was falling lashed by a gale of terrific wind and the thunder and lightning was terrific.It was one of the worst thunderstorms we ever saw, and we were for the first time in our lives scared of it, for fear it would cause the enemy to overcome us and probably massac e massacre us out there.Just as they were close enough to capture us and some and some of the soldiers even rode past us to intercept us we were blinded by a dreadful flash right amongst us and overhead and the thunder was shocking. Nearly all of our enemies were instantly burned to a crisp by that lightning flash, without even us or their horses injured, and the remaining few were so frightened that they surrendered themselves to us as prisoners and we brought them to camp.We were I suppose on that occassion too merciful for surrendered.Men persuing children don't got no quarter you understand. but we were so horrified over the frightful deaths of the rest of our persuers that we couldn't bring ourselves to toll on the surrendered ones.Often I had suspected that the destroying flash of lightning was caused by the angels that possess us, but as that is a matter of which I or my sisters have no proof we never mentioned it for fear that people would believe we were out of our minds entirely.But if it had not been for that flash of lightning those Glandelinians would have seized us before we could have escaped.We should in that case have been quite poorless powerless to save ourselves unless some miracle occured."

"I have heard of that incident from some witness who saw that happen though you didn't know it"said Penrod."That party told me he was so rooted to his feet with horror he couldn't lift one or the other for several minutes. I believe therefore the angels would assist you again if your peril is too big.I believe the angels of that little cousin of yours did that for you.You understand dear sisters, angry angels cannot be trifled with. They're as powerful as powerful can be."

"I believe that"said Daisy."Really Penrod dear I or my sisters have little to fear from any foe or otherwise we wouldn't do the adventures we have have gone through. But we were not possessed by angels when that happened as it was long ago at the early part of the last war.But since that time of our meeting with her we have always felt this way, and so often been miraculously protected.They say children in our country angel possessed usually don't die but live for centuries and then go straight to heaven alive with their whole family and are not even bereaved.But as are not sure whether we could be spared the sorrow though of the loss of our own parents. Though we don't die we could be killed your now..but sometimes we are forced to be seperated from one another through some mishaps and be gone a long time Penrod dear.So I wish you to be wise and do as a good lover for our own safety if that does happen.There is something peculiar with this Miraculous Medal I have charge from and I will give it in to your safe keeping..Remember that God has blessed this Medal with some unusual miraculous something which I nor my sisters understand, and if at any time I or my sisters should be stolen from you Penrod dear take this medal out of your pocket go to a Church and kneel before the Statue of the Blessed Virgin and say" Oh Mary Concieved without sin pray for us who have recourse to Thee" six times and she'll cause you to find and rescue us easily in case we find no means to escape..guard this treasure well and do not forget to wear it on your person always.It'll still be our protector even though I give it to you."And Jennie placed it around his neck. As they heard some one coming Penrod placed the medal beneath his shirt and awaited the coming of the three children who could detect any one in disguise.However they had not yet appeared, and as they sat waiting in silence for a few minutes longer one of the sentries whose duty it was to patrol the river shore sent a messenger to Emperor Vivians son with the news that a railroad train was approaching the camp. At first Penrod and Violet and her sisters were sore afraid, and made a step to secure their handiest weapons but the next moment they reflected that one train load of enemies if one did run into this out of the way section of the christian camp would be powerless to injure them, so they curbed their fear, and went down to the small railroad station to discover who the strangers might be. Many of the christian soldiers from various parts of the christian camps assembled there also, and Penrod followed Violet, and her sisters... Arriving at the railroad station they all stoood stood gazing at the swiftly oncoming train.It was quite a long train with light red coaches.It was pulled by a monsterous locomotive of very high power.As it came nearer, now at a slow down however Penrod could see that in the windows of one of the nearest coaches was seated upon a high cheulened chair of state a large man.He was dressed in a loose velvet uniform coat of purple that fell in sort of folds toward his tighs while upon his head was a cap of velvet curiously fixed with golden threads and having a circle of diamonds sewn around the band.At the opposite seat stood an odly shaped boxand several smaller boxes of sanr sandalwood.As the train stopped the man had come to the exit of the conch and bowed several times in the direction of those who had assembled to greet him and as he bowed he flourished his purple cap in an energeticmanner.His face was as round as an apple, and somewhat unusally angelic for that of a man and nearly as rosy. And when he stopped bowing he smiled in such a sweet and happy way that Penrod thought he must be a very jolly fellow.He appeared be be a sort of Prince of some very high monarchy..As he waved on waved his jeweled camp around his head he cried in a merry voice

"Well here I am at last."

"So I percieve"responded Penrod bowing with much dignity, and then to his surprise and embrassment violet and her sisters left his side, and one after another was hold long and tightly in the embrace of the stranger while they cried happily, and kissed him again and again. After this greeting they came and pushed Penrod tward him crying"Meet our brother Penrod dear, our brother who is a terror to the enemy."This is our beloved Jimmie come to us once more."

As Penrod recieved him as a little brother should and the man also held him in an embrance he glanced at all the strange and sober faces of so many soldiers before him and burst into a rollicking laugh.. It was however a half laughter and a half giggle of merriment for the sounds he admitted were quaint and droll and tempted every hearer to laugh with him.

"Heh,heh---ho-ho-ho-."he roared."didn't expect to ever see me again I see. Glory be.This is funny and surpriding---it's really funny, even my dear little sister and my lost brother Penrod is laughing with me.didn't believe I could come did you. Hoo-hoo-hoo-hoo-hoo.This is certainly amazing.But glory be to God I,m here just the same and at last.I had to go through an inferno to get here but did just the same."

"Every one of you here should hush up as you're all dirty Christian dogs" said a deep growling voice."you and your dirty gutter snipes of a bunch of vanity sisters make yourselves ridiculous trying to beat us Glandelinians."

Everyone looked in bewilderment and in anger to see where this insulting voice came from, but nevertheless none could guess who had uttered the insulting words.All on the coaches were too much closed in to be able to say anything loud enough to be heard within the inside, and certainly no one on the shore of the river had said a single word... But James Vivian did not seem the least bit astonished in the least, though he was somewhat white with anger for the moment. Then one of the christian generals now addressed the Prince saying courteously and with a profound bow,,,,

"You are certainly welcome to our grand army Prince and your Father is ex pecting you though just now he is at Jennie ory and will not be here very soon. Perhaps you will deign to come within our gracious command and at your convenience lead us to victory yourself as we understand you are one of the b best fighters we ever hav e."

"Than o I certainly will be glad to" returned the unusually handsome man as he crossed the railroad track s followed by violet, andher sisters and Penrod. "I am indeed James vivian and I have left my own command in the charge of one of my best generals and c ome to this sector to see for myself the brave boyscout general who saved my sister violet at little G irl hool. Too bad Germania couldn't come but he couldn't leave his command and will be here when I return as I promished to hav e him released from his duties as soon as poss ible so he could join us here. I have long ished to come as I was getting too lonesom e for father and my dear little sisters. But I understood as soon as I saw his picture that Penrod was my long lost little brother. I have hunted for him for months and months after he was gone and Heaven be praised he is with us again."

"We are all pleased to we lcome you and your return has brought joy to your dear little sisters" said the general. "But why has your Majesty so few attendants attendants? Is it not dangerous with such a dread ful war raging for our Beloved Emperorg son to go on such distant j ourneys in one f rail train and with but twenty men. "!

"Oh I suppose so" answered James vivian with a laugh as he still hugged Jennie and violet "But how do you say I come with twenty men . I brought my whole army to rec reingo reinforce my f athers as I hear Big Girl hool is in danger. So what else could I do! And my dear little sisters never wants me to go away at all and w ouldn't let me go if they knew it. My army will be here to night."

"Yo ur good fighting army arriving here to reinforce us?" exclaimed the general in surprise.

"It's a surprise to us sir isn't it" laughed the Prince. Fancy a Prince coming to you this way. But I had to don't you see. I wouldn't let the enemy even remain within sight of Weeping Willow long either if I can help it."

"Why" demanded the general respectfully.

"The Glandelinian armies are mona cing a whole territory around here. Father begged me to come to his assistance. go when I'm here to help father no harm can come to my dear little sisters. And whenever it pleases them to have a lot of fun at the expense of the enemy and they wish to go spying I will send with them a fitting escort of my best cavarly. The enemy are well acquainted with my Concentinian cavarly and dread to meet it. In the mean time dear sisters and little brother show me the way to yours or f athers headquarters where everything shall be done to make you comfortable and happy."

"I sure will and gladly" said Penrod pleased beyond measure at seeing the excited and happily smiling fac es of his sisters. "I'm surevyou can see to it that they are comfortable."

"As for being happy" said violet "why that's our trouble I believe. We are too happy and---;;"

"Stop" said James vivian. I've brought you some presents in those boxes they removed from the train , the train will remain in camp as it is a troop train. "He turned to some of those who were standing by and said to a captian;

"please please order your men to carry these boxes up to the palace."

"Certainly" answered the captian well pleased,,, and at once his men obeyed the orders.

"And by the way "continued James vivian "Let them also remove the big G landelinian flag from my cloth box."

"A Glandelinian flag. "! Exclaimed Penrod while her sisters were surprised.

""Exclatly exactly "It' a very valuable flag and I captured it myself. And here comes my horse. The people were removing the flag from the round paper box but just then the same gruff voice cried;

"Be careful of that flag you villains you crazy christian dogs." ans as the words seemed to come from no where the men were so astonished that they dropped the box upon the ground with a sudden j ay jar and the flag almost fell out and into the dusty road.

"There I told you so you christian dogs." cried the voice angrily. "You've dropped the flag into the dust. Why on earth didn't you handle the box gently..."

James vivian turned and scanned the faces of everyone almost suspiciously. Violet and her sisters also crossed questioned every man with their own voices, and Penrod had his hand on his pistol holster. Then Penrod said;

"Which of you men was saying those words.!"

"none of us here said a single word" replied the captian "it seems strange though."

"I'd be glad to find out who's saying that" said the elder Prince sternly, I'll show them who is "Christian dogs". There's something suspicious here though and I'll going to have every stranger here under investigation. There is no body here is going to insulge in such disrespectful language. I thought at first somebody was only playing a joke. There's something wrong sisters and my little brother, and so keep your eyes open. This may mean a meanace to you."

"Why do you believe it may be some of my men?" asked the general in charge.

"I can't understand it, but it seemed to come from amongst them, that's why. What in the world do I care for their old flag. They don't respect us or our banner in the least. Their flag is a emblem of bloody child murder and nothing else."

Penrod indeed was suspicious and nervous too and looked about him in a sul y manner. Jimmie's horse was brought up and several others also and the horse had on a velvet saddle and which was beautifully embroidered with different colored decorations.

"This horse belongs to you my boy" said James to Penrod. "Lead the horse to the stable, and we will go into the headquarters building. "

"What that crazy brown horse you're giving to the guttersnipe Penrod. "He can't ride a horse no more then a rabbit can climbs tree. Get that horse out of my s ight at once Mr Prince Darling or I'll go crazo."

"Who is that!" shouted the [illegible] Prince. "Why don't you show yourself when you speak that way.!"

"Why don't you go on your feet instead of riding a horse." growled the voice. "It's a wonder you and your smaller brother and your crazy sisters and your absentminded Father don't ride an ass for a horse. You have come all this distance so you may my see something of your nutty sisters and their still nuttier little brother. nd now you act as if they were little Golden calves. arn about is fair play Crazy Prince. The train carried you to this camp and it carry me here also. you'll soon hear me in their head quarters and you won't be able to find me. won't that be reasonable?"

"Well, well, well" said James vivian surily. "I believe some one is possessed."

Violet, and her sisters is tens and Penrod and every one were much aghast and astonished to overhear these strange words coming from seemingly nowhere. The horse was led tward the barn, and orders were given to guard the barn heavily and then they started tward the headquarters, the men coming last with the boxes of sendalwood. When they neared the headquarters building, a great number of generals and the child scout officers too came out to meet them and the royal guest was escorted in state to the splendid room og the of the building. Here the boxes were opened and Prince vivian displayed some beautiful new silken uniforms for his dear little sisters and laces and other beautiful things with which they were filled, and seven beautiful dolls for each of the little girls. every one of the courtiers and child scout leaders recieved a handsome new uniform and other presents and Penrod not a few. Thus the late morning passed pleasantly untill the orderly announced that dinner was served. During the dinner Penrod divided his attention admiring the excited happy faces of his little sisters and listening to the jolly sayings of the Prince.

"For four days my army was on the advance" said he "with no other amuz amusement than to have frequent brushes with the enemy so I am very glad to be h here again which such friendly and agreeable people, far different from the fierce Glandelinians I have encountered....."

"You sure do look good. "said Penrod.

"Not at all, not at all my dear little brother. You sure must be a wonderful little boy, and for what you and your little sisters have so frequently accomplished you sure are the wonder and admiration of all the world nor will I deny the fact that our armies would be ina poor condition without the riches and the glory glory it they derive from the great good you so often accomplish. So I have wished for many days to come here to see you again but for a good while there was no possibility of me ever getting on the move as I was opposed by the enemy here and there every day for months. You see one of my clever cavarly officers secured a parchment from one of the enemy generals, and I have never been able to make it out head or tails to save my life. I had believed it would benefit me to study it as I consider the accomplishment of doing it one of the fine arts. But so we can be here softly without being disturbed I have issued a degree or decree that no one not known by us personally should enter our headquarters under pain of punishment untill we were ready to come out. I'm awfully afraid there is some thing strange about that sunseen voice. I have put the parchment in my suitcase till we have had dinner. Imagin Imagine the fuss there would be if that Glandelinian general found I have duplicated his parchment."

"I would wish to examine that parchment" said Penrod "for if indeed it is a code I might be able to summon one of the girl scouts who could tell it."

"Oh it's a fine essay"if they could guess it out."said the Prince"and beaut ifully written with a quo qoosequil.Here it is.See if you can understand it."

Hevremoved from a small satchel a scroll of parchment tied with a black ribbon, glandelinians always seem to use black for everything,, and having carefully unrolled it he handed it to Penrod.

"O How is that my boy! Fine eh!Can you understand it.!"

"No I don't believe I can"said Penrod."Oh hoo-hoo-hoo- who is the man in this picture?"

"That said Pettittaten the prince sarcastivally"is a picture of general Arub Aronburg Federal, the man who made this parchment, for beyond question he seems to be the ttaat ttaaat wisest man in the Glandelinian army. At least his face shows it."

"Well it certainly does"said Penrod with a return of sarcasim."That fellow may be all the world to His armies and the Glandelinian government but with at that beard, and long hair he appeares to be a hedgehog with a face that resembles a hot water bottle with warts on it."

Violet and her sisters fairled shrieked. and violet had to get up from the chair and go to lean her head out of the window to get air she was choking. James Vivian himself lay back in his chair and laughed so loud that he should have aroused the dead from their graves, but the poor little dear who still lay asleep with that smile on her face in the bed never even swo ea awoke.. Angelinia Aronburg who was in charge of the little child was forced to titter behind a book she had been reading. When everybody had recovered from their fit of laughter, and it is the easiest thing to start violet and her sisters to laughing, they were all wiping their eyes upon their handkerchiefs, and Penrod finally saidg

"The parchment tells something unusual but only Angelina Richee can discover what the code says. and she's some distance away."

"Yes it is true beyond doubt"and if youcould get her to discover its meaning it would do us a lot of good.But let's stop laughing everybody and settle down to eat our dinner.I understand the report of the raid you are going to start on to night and I'm going to have my cavarly to aid in it, and go with you myself and have a lots of fun.Let's drin this toast to Our good luck in the raid, and here's hoping we save a lot of child slaves and capture---

"We child scouts who may go in this raid don't give quarter"said Penrod rather hotly."We do this because of the children who are massacred."

"Well and good.That sluts me all right."

Then Violet and her sisters finally ceased their gigling over Penrods funny remark wiped their eyes and began their dinner.

CHAPTER SIX.

THE PROGRESS OF AN IMMENSE RAID, AND THE ADVENTURES OF VIOLET AND HER SISTERS IN THE RAID. AND WHAT THEY AND PENROD ACCOMPLISHED.

General Aronburg Federal was so immense pleased with the massacre of children which we supposed was progressing outside of his camps that he decided to continue it day after day and week after week, untill all the "no account" child slaves were done away with.He let hishorse wander over the grassy slopes near the limits of his immense camps or among the trees, and decided to pass off to destruction as many child slaves who were too decliate to toil as he pleased.The two boyscouts of the enemy Gerald Starring and Fred Danger had fled to this glandelinian army after Fred Lowdens adventure with Jennie in which he had got his face torn by her finger nails and was still in the hospital to be disfigured for life, and now believing that they were safe from the dangerous little christian prince the two boys not being on any duty here yet had been left often to amuse themselves, for even a landelinian boyscout could not be allowed to take part in any conversation of any number og of great Glandelinian generals unless it was for hitheir own benefit..They usually devoted themselves to their military stuti studies, therefore, and day after day since that time they had climbed i to into the branches of a favorite tree and sat for hours in their tree top rest studying their military lessons, and thinking upon what they read..You must not believe however that as bad as these two boys were they were any moll ycoddle or prige because just now they were so solemn solemn and studious.They having to learn so much could not always play with other boy and girlscouts of his own army and they lived so much in the wicked society of the glandelinian generals and their officers and were so surrounded by the pomp and dignity of these army masters, that they did miss all the jolly times that boys usually have.But they could have easily lived as other boys do, and could be as other boys, if they would have given up their sinful career and go home to their parents and not persecute violet and her sisters every time they have a chance.They claimed often they did not in their heart hate the vivian Girls, but in reality their enmity was as bitter as venom and would give anything to see the beautiful little girls die the most frightful death on record record.On this particular evening of which I write of both of these boys were in their tree when without warning a great fog of smoke from some un known source enveloped the encampment in their sector.

The two boys could scarcely scarcely see the tree next to the t in which they sat, but the smoke nevertheless was not so thick as to cause any amount of difficulty in breathing and yet it smelled as if it was from burning canvass. All that evening the fog continued..General Aronburg Federal who sat in his headquarters conversing with his generals ordered the candles lighted as night was coming on, that they might be able to pore over a map in the light.But soon everything had changed.There was a glare in the distance ever increasing as bright as if the evening sun shot his bright sunset rays high into the heavens in a reddish golden glow.Then the general stood motionless as if turned to stone, for a terrible cry, mingled with the so reaming yell as of children in a rage, and of many shots being fired from without the headquarters reached his ears--a cry andclamor so full of din and horror that the cruel generals heart almost stopped beating.He ordered his generals to flee out a rear door and followed. ne of his officers remained to try and roll up and hide the map.Immediately there was a scurrying of feet as if every one in the headquarters rushed out the rear doors, while in several directions came the sound of countless horses hoofs, and a terrific yell of confusion from many routed glandelinians who strove in vain to stop the dashing troopers. After a good number of days the worst fears of general Aronburg were realized. coming tward his headquarters on a fast gallop were hundreds of girl and boyscouts on horse with the lance driving all before them, them while to the north came an enormous body of soldiers fierce cavarly men led by a Princely dressed man and by seven little girls and a boy on horse also.They continued forward slashing to the right and left with wild shouts of defiance and carrying all before them.The foremost of the child scouts themselves rushed tward the headquarters building many waving aloft their dreadful flaming torches.The soldiers of the enemy had not been able to even injure one of them, though they did shoot down a number of cavarly soldiers.Far and near every tent was going up in flames and about half a mile distant a terrific explosion rent the heavens.

General Aronburg so completely surprised that he was bewildered, from a hiding place gas gazed at the approaching hosts with terror rage and grief.

"They are those dirty christian log raiders under that little Gutteranipe of a Vivian -Prince and his bratty sisters."he groaned. We "A We are indeed lost if something is not done to stop them.Curses on the bloomyl ng luck."

In the meantime his aidecamp who had not yet left the building in the face of all peril bethought himself for the first time of a wonderful plan which if the raiders secured it would mean disaster to the army at weeping willow Run.

With a curse he turned suddenly, and ran on the return into the room and has tented into the hall where that valuable treasure is retained in hiding..But Angelinia Aronburg who burst into the place followed by three score of her boy and girlscouts and a goodly number of fierce warriors had seen the man enter that hall and she and her followers bounded after him as if they were fierce wild cats suspecting something by his hurry to get into the hall. just as the man had stooped to press the secret spring in the tiles Angelinia Aronburg and two boyscouts seized him from the rear and threw him down face downward upon the floor at the same time shouting to the men outside to fetch ropes and bind the prisoner.This they did soon enough and the Glandelinian officer soon found himself helplessly bound and in the power of his enemies. Angelinia Aronburg had seen what he was about before he did it, and suspecting something made him at the point of their rifles and her own pistol press that secret spring and with evident satisfaction she secured the parchment and glanced it over.Too

"Too late my man to prevent us from getting this"she said scornfully. "I'll attend to you later. Away with him men"

In this deserved condition he was lifted by the warriors and carried outside, when the glandelinian officer observed a sorry plight. violet and her sisters, Prince James and Penrod the boy and gilscouts and all the others were grouped about the building while a great number of the soldiers of Glandelinia had been seized by the christian cavarly soldiers and bound with ropes. so many tents were burning that they could not be counted, and the Glandelinian prisoners were carrying their victims to their cages tossing them on the saddles as unceremoniously as if they had been bales of cotton. General Federal himself who had escaped searched around for the two glandelinian boy scouts Fred and Gerald but failed to see the two boys amongst the prisoners.

The raiders were everywhere in the glow of the fires driving off an immense herd of cavarly horses, and in the distance a big child slave plantation was being raided, and five thousand glandelinian child scouts had been made prisoners, and it was fortunate they alone recieved quarter by the fierce christian child scouts.

Now it could be seen the christian warriors and a great number of child scouts were swarming over the generals headquarters as if they were bees in a hive searching for anyone who might be in hiding, and after the search had been prolonged for five minutes and child slaves had been found and tooted or routed out of their beds and carried away to freedom to their joy and happiness, Angelinia Aronburg who had conducted the search demanded impatiently!!!!!?!?!?

"Did you find any one else. here's that devil of a general!!!!!!!"""""""

"Nothe women that told her"We have rescued the child slaves to the last in here. The Glandelinian general has made his get away."

"Then"Commanded Angelinia Aronburg"Remove everything of value from this confounded building, and tear down it to ashes and towers so that not one stone remains upon another.We'll show them how we strike when they massacre children."

While the warriors were busy with obeying this command, Angelina Aronburg went to report to Penrod where another child slave camp was so he could raid that also and rescue many more children. he herself decided to capture the general if she could and a rapid search was being made for him.

While this is going on we will return to the two boys, who when they were startled by the smoke fog had begun to climb down from their perch in the trees.. But the sound of so much shooting, the yelling of the child scouts and christian soldiers, the dreadful glare of fire, the terrific explosions, the terrifying cries of the frightened and panic stricken glandelinian soldiers, mingled with the shouts of the Concentinian and other christian cavarly soldiers, the sound of fighting, and the groans of the wounded caused them to pause and listen eagerly.Then murmuring something to each other they climbed rapidly up the tree,,, far above their platform to the topmost swaying branches to see what in the world was going going on.This tree was one of the tallest in the glandelinian camps of this sector, and when they reached the top, Starring pressed aside the leaves which were golden and brown now it being early November or some month and saw a great forest of christian cavarly soldiers and a forest also of strangely uniformed boy and girlscouts with banners he recognised as that of Penrods dreadful purrough girl and boyscout columns. The camp fire scouts, the Vivianites, and the Lagorian and standard scouts were also with them. Turning to glance upon general Aronburg Federals headquarters,,,, headquarters he soon found it surrounded by a horde of christianemies surrounded by a horde of christian enemies both soldiers and child scouts, and the child scouts seemed to be in the lead.Then Gerald Starring and Re Fred Dargar realised the truth, that the Glandelinian camp here also had been invaded by the fierce child scouts and christian cavarly led by Prince Penrod, and they realised too that Penrod struck for every thing that went against his sisters. He himself grew so faint from the horror of it and from fright and terrorthat Gerald might have fallen had he not wound his arms around a limb and clung fast untill he recovered from his dizziness and illness.Then both boys bound themselves themselves to the limb with their belts and both again ventured to see what they could observe through the rapidly falling leaves.

The warriors were now engaged in carrying glandelinian officers, child slaves and captives down to where the horses were held in waiting, where they were thrown on saddles and placed under guard.it was a dreadful but deserving a light for these two bad boys to witness, but as bad and as naughty as they were there were no boys the bolder and braver, and they sat very still concealed from the sight of any one below by the boser of leafy branches around them.

The two boys understood very well that they were not able to do anything to help any of their superiors, and that if they came down they would share a very bad fate if they got into the possession of either Penrod, or Violet, and her sisters who would punish them severely for Fred Wisdoms cruelty to Jennie that fateful day.

Now a big procession of the soldiers and boy and girlscouts passed between many of the captured cavarly horses, and the headquarters bearing the rich furniture, splendid draperies, and rare ornaments of which the building had been stripped together with such food and other war plunder as they could lay their hands upon. even General Federals most costly Phonograph and an enormous gigantic Mikis Manic box with all the famous tune sheets and Records were carried off,and also bedding. After this the building was dynimited and the domes and towers toppled and fell in ruins upon the ground.Then the walls themselves were blown down till remained of the big building but a vast heap of stone and mortar tumbled and scattered upon the ground.

From distant points great conflagrations raged, the flames sometimes leaping a hundred feet high and lighting the country for miles.. The two bad boys wept bitter tears of rage and grief as he watched the ruin of the generals headquarters, yet how they were powerless to avert the destruction.

When the building had been demolished, some of the squadrons of troopers mounted their horses and rode toward the north with flaming torches, while the others rode in another direction in a great body.They were so numberous that they formed a column stretching for as far as eye could see t in the nightly gloom and strange shadowy forms in the fire glare, and it was evident they were destroying every tent and building they came to and captured many more prisoners.

The child scouts themselves made no prisoners amongst glandelinian soldiers but did capture and retain Glandelinian child scouts. Everything was done and being done in this raid which was the same that Penrod did in his raid he made when he went after the horse and rig, but on a far greater and more extensive scale. A hundred provision wagons were captured, and even Glandelinian best hospitals were raided, and the wounded who could be on their feet made prisoners despite their protestations and even those who were bed ridden beds and all being carted away on those wagons and the hospitals set on fire.It seemed a ruthless thing to do, but the soldiers were so enraged at the massacre of the five hundred children, and the sad conditions of the children saved by Violet and her sisters that they were almost berserk of reason and didn't care what they did. All hospital medical supplies were captured and surgeons and doctors also made prisoners and orderlies and Nurses also.

No one was exempt. The glandelinian infantry at the lower end of north camp no One made a fierce and desperate assault in the vinicity of these hospitals but were repulsed, as is usually the case at times infantry is no match for a column of fierce and ruthless horsemen.Most of the routed infantry then being slaughtered by hundreds retreated in a panic, and tried their best to escape but they were easily overtaken and made prisoners too.At other sectors there were made the fiercest attempts to resist the raiding foe but the terrible lances and the slashing sabres of both the cavarly and mounted child scouts terrified the hearts of the glandelinian soldiers,whose sole weapons were only bayonetted rifles and pistols and many who couldn't escape were either cut or shot down by hundreds or captured by the cavarly.At the time the raid was in full progress, a good size cavarly troop of glandelinians had hurriedly gathered about twenty thousand child slaves in a long line of large wagons with four team of horses a piece, and started off with them, but from two sides there dashed Penrod, Violet and her sisters and a horde of child scouts, and as resistance was in vain again t against these screeching little child soldiers the glandelinian cavarly fled as if a horde of demons were after them abandoning all to the little raiders.

At first by the fury of the assault and the excitement of the momentary conflict that ensued and the screaming of the child scouts, the child slaves were so terrified they couldn't move at first believing a horde of Glandelinians were going to massacre them, but seeing who the assaulting parties were by the glare of fires, they lost their fear, and screamed for pure joy at their deliverance. In an hours time the whole of this sector of the Glandelinian camps had been overthrown and was all afire, and many child slaves were in the hands of the christians, and a great number of soldiers prisoners in possession of the christian men soldiers who so far alone gave quarter.

Now being capable of no further destruction along this sector they departed from their scene of triumph to carry on the raid with their comrades elsewhere, a great number going off carrying their prisoners with them and taking also every sort of animal and fowl and baggage mat munition and other wagon train they had captured. Many of the captured empty wagons they filled with rich plunder with pearls, and uniforms and silks, and velvets with silver and gold ornaments and all the treasure that had made this Glandelinian army famed as one of the richest Glandelinian armies in the world. And the thousands of soldiers they had captured would be set to toil amid the ruin of towns still left in devastation by the recent Abbiesan horro . horror.

So complete was the victorious raid of the columns that its no wonder the warroirs warroirs sang songs of triumph as they hastened to join their comrades who were conducting the raid on a most extensive scale.

Indeed t rewards were awaiting them in the other sector of the encampments where the "Terrible Angeline Riches, Jennie Turner, Penrod and the Vivian Girl Princesses were fighting through the camps.

Jennie Vivian was dismounted from her horse by a shot from a Glandelinian officer who strove to kill her, but as her horse fell shot through the head she jumped from the horse with a little snarl and turning into a little vicious lady and almost showing all the savagery of the trench vein leopards she made plenty of trouble for him before by dint of good courage and scheming he finally got away from her. The maid must have al had all the angels ferocity in her against such a man for she recognized him as one of the officers of the gang of Glandelinians who that early part of the day although tered to those five hundred children and who had in person tied her to a tree with her sisters and made to observe the scene before she and they could liberate themselves again. As she leaped straight at the Glandelinian officer with a drawn knife he side stepped and fired his pistol point blank, but she swerved to one side miraculously twisting her little body serpent fashion and just managed to trip him and cause him to fall. To protect his face from her long dagger he threw up his right arm, as he had done before in similar situations when cornered child slaves had made for him. Before two Glandelinians coming to his assistance could drive her off she got the man by the coat collar with her other hand with dagger upraised in her right hand demanding "Do you surrender or will you choose to die you murderer of children. Th" The two soldiers managed to reach her with a long whip and slashed her across the body two twice when she screaming made a lunge at them stabbing one, and the other getting away she changed him in her frenzied desire to get him but in the confusion he escaped.

This gave the Glandelinian officer a chance to rise and grabbing a big wooden chair which some raider had thrown down as no good he stood at bay. Seeing the futility of trying to capture the other Glandelinians the sable little Princess again turned to the officer.

"Do you surrender!" she demanded.

"No" he answered. As she prepared to charge, he held the chair out to ward off the assault. This time the little "brat" would not fool him with any of her schemes, he vowed. But she did. he was the same as if she was a phantom. She giggled as she brought into play all the cunning cunning of her species and made a sudden shift in her plan of assault. Instead of leaping in front of the chair she suddenly lowered herself and dashed under it, getting him around the legs with her arms, and threw him down again, and her sisters coming to her help had him a prisoner at once. The rascal could see now he could not outsmart Jennie and she was laughing at him full in his face too/.

"Next time you want to escape me in case you are free" she retorted. "Learn how to fight. 2" You will be charged with murder when you're in our camp".

All through that terrible hours while the fierce soldiers and scouts were raiding everywhere Fred Dargar, and Gerald Starring remained hidden in the trees really terribly afraid to come down. He watched the great forest of troopers finally depart from here to go and join the great raid elsewhere carrying general Aronburgs officers away as well as everything of value this section of the Glandelinian encampment had contained. Sad indeed, and also cruel and wicked. were the thoughts of these two boyscouts of the enemy when through the glare of the conflagration the last of the raiders had become mere fading shadows in the distance, but even then the two boyscouts did not dare leave their perch of safty untill all of the raiders had disappeared out out of sight Then Gerald Starring was the first to come down, very slowly and carefully followed by Fred, for they were still a trembling from the excitement they had undergone and from the long and weary watch, as they had been in the three for nearly half a day and had even eaten no supper. The The Glare of the conflagrations shone upon the dreadful scene as brilliantly as a sunset. No birds could be heard chirping among the trees. The two boys feared that only they were left to all that had occupied this part of the Glandelinian encampment. Perhaps for their personal safty they might be obliged to flee to general Manleys army so far away for if Penrod or the Vivian Girl Princesses should come again they would be in for it. Their first act however was to strode over to where the generals headquarters had stood and search the ruins untill they found some scraps of food that had not been captured by the raiders. They sat upon a portion of a shattered wall and ate of this, but tears of rage and fury filled their eyes as they gazed upon the desolation around them, and the raging fires, and then a shiver ran through them as they imagined even now Violet and her sisters might be searching among the ruins with Penrod amongst them, and therefore they hastily left as if they were afraid the ruins were haunted. Then Gerald seeing everything was as bright as day by the light of the fires decided to go to an old well to draw a pail of water to clean themselves with. Fortunately this well had not been crossed by the raiders and the pail was still fastened to the chain that wound around a stout wooden windlass. Gerald being the stronger grabbed hold of the turning handle and began letting the big pail down into the well, when suddenly both boys were startled by a muffled voice crying out;

"Say be careful up there please."

Indeed the sound and the words seemed sure to tell that the voice came from the lower part of the deep well, so Gerald and Fred looked down. Nothing could be seen because of the deep gloom.

"Hey down in the well" shouted Gerald. "If you're a christian dog I'll--"

"It is not a Christian dog." shouted the voice in answer.

"Who are you then." Shouted Fred with his pistol in his hand.

"It is I general Aronburg Federal" came the answer, and the depths of the well echoed the name in a ghostly manner indeed.

"Did you jump down in the well to escape the Christian hellhounds" demanded Gerald Starring, greatly surprised and somewhat amused.

"No, and I'm nearly drowned confound it. I fell in while running away from those terrible christian dogs of a child scout troopers, and I've been standing in this water ever since, with my head just above the surface and this darn water is cold I'll tell you. It's fortunate me me the well is no deeper for had my head been under water instead of above it, why I would not be saying anything to you now." And the well dumbly dismally echoed every word he said.

"I'm awfully sorry the Christian dogs did that to you" cried the boys in answer. "but how are we to get you out."?

"I've been considering that ever since I fell in." said the general "and I believe the best plan will be for you to let down the pail to me, and I'll I'll hold fast to it while you wind up the chain, and so draw me to the top."

"I will try to do that sir." replied Gerald, and he let the wooden pail down very carefully untill the general was heard to call out;

"I've got the pail now me lads. Now pull me up--slowly my boys,---slowly so I won't rub against the rough sides of the well."

Both of the boys began winding up the rich chain, but the general was such a big man and so stout that the two very heavy and by the time the two boys had managed to pull him one quarter of the way up they lost much of their strength and were gasping for breath from the exertion. They clung to the turn lever as long as possible, but suddenly it slipped from their grasp and the next minute he heard general Federal fall "plump" into the cold water again.

"That's too bad sir." Called Gerald in real distress "but you were so heavy we couldn't help it."

"Well by Neptune and Goldarnet" gasped the general, from the deep gloom below as he spluttered and coughed to get the water out of his mouth. "Why didn't you tell me you were going to let go!"

"I did not have time" said Gerald Starring sorrowfully.

"Well by boy in this situation I'm sure not suffering from this" declared the general almost angrily "for there must be enough water swallowed by me already to float a number of islands---or at least it feels that way. But never mind I'll get even for this and fix those christian dogs, and their leaders plenty so as long as I'm not drowned it does not matter."

"What in the world shall we do next." demanded Fred Dargar anxiously.

"There no one I on this territory but myself and Fred" said the boy---except ing you sir" he added as an after thought."

"I'm not on this darn territory I am in it--more's the pity, but in it" responded the general regretfully. "Are all the Christian dogs gone, and especially those little phantoms the Vivian Girls and their devil of a little brother" end!"

"Yes"said Fred himself"did they have destroyed all the encampments in this territory, and carried away everyone who had not fallen in the fights, and have gone away with lots of child slaves too."he added trying in vain to repress a sob.This is"This is the third time that Fenrod has hit our armies such a blow. The raid is raging elsewhere and everything is on fire."

"So,so "said the general soberly and then he paused a moment, as if in thought. Finally he said"There were worst things to fear then the liberation of so many of our dirty brats of child slaves, but I never imagined falling into a well being one of them.Tell me boys, could you let down down some food for me.I am nearly starved having had no dinner nor supper, and if you could manage to send me down some grub I'll eate down here untill some body comes to my rescue. Then when I'm free I'll do what I can to ease your minds and try to cause the destruction of your little girl Prince enemies.Do you see the joke of it boys.?"

"Do not demand of us to enjoy such a thing now your excellency"begged Gerald Starring in a sad voice"but if you will be patient I and my friend will try hard to find something for you to eat."

While Fred stayed by the well Gerald retraced his steps to the ruins of the generals headquarters and began searching for bits of food with which to satisfy the hunger of the glandelinian general, when to his surprise he observed the aide-de-camp aidedecamp of the general, wondering among the wreckage.

"What."cried gerald"did not the christian dogs get you either?"

"If they had "calmly replied the man"Do you expect you would see me here."?

"But how inthe world did you escape the christian dogs so easily.?""Demanded the boy of the soldier.

"Easily enough.I did not open my mouth and hid in a good recess.I stayed away from the christian dogs and they couldn't find me."said the man."I felt sure that those christian dog soldiers and the bratty christian girl and boyscout curs would not care for a broom legged man as I am for to the eye of so many brats I may seem good for nothing. Had they realized I was here though and a dangerous dangerous spy against them, and that my head contained more wisdom than a hundred of their own noodles, I might not have escaped them so easily."

"Perhaps you are right."said the boy.

"I suppose they got the general?"said the aidecamp with regret.

"that general?"

"General Aronburg himself."

"Oh no.His Excellency is safe indeed but is nevertheless at the bottom of a well, and I cannot find means to pull him out again.There's Fred with me but the both of us are not strong enough to pull him up. heistee i he is too heavy for us."

"Well why in the world didn't you summon help instead of letting him stay there and get drowned." said the man.

"There was nobody around.They all got scare of the christian raiders.Together let us find a way to save the general before he catches cold standing in that cold water..He surely doesn't deserve this from the christian dogs even if even if he does murder a thousand children or more.That is his own business not theirs.That is why the raid was made I suppose for revenge over that little little execution of a child slave children this morning."

"Oh well the general needs saving so he can get revenge in return"admitted the aidedecamp."Those christian dogs and their ways tire me dreadfully at times."

Gerald ran to the well again where he had left Fred, the man followed as fast.

"Here is your aidedecamp"shouted the boy to the general."The christian dogs did not capture him it seems."

"That may be lucfy for the enemy""said the general."But it is the same for me too for perhaps he can assist me out of this watery hole . If you can let a rope down the well I am sure that the three of you pulling together can draw me outof the well and to the earths surface."

"Be patient and we will try it as best as we could and if we don't succeed we will go and find some more soldiers."replied the boy encouragingly, and he ran to the ruins to search for the rope/Presently he found one that had been used by the raiders in toppling over one of the towers that did not fall before the explosives, and which in their haste they had neglected to remove, and with some difficulty he untied the rope where it was in the form of a a lasso and carried the rope to the mouth of the well.

"I've found a good long rope"Gerald Starring called down to him, and then the boy proceeded to form a loop at one end of the rope for the general to put his arms through, and the other end he managed to put over the main drum of the wid windlass.He then went to the aidede camp and that man firmly fastened around his shoulders.

"Are you ready?"demanded the boy leaning over the well.

"I am"replied the general almost impatiently.Hurry up.I'mgetting chilled down here."

The boy realized there was need of hurry for the general may catch a bad cold or there rheumatism and then would not be fit for the army for a long long time/.

"Let's get the general out as soon as we can"said the man earnestly.

"Hold as fast as it is in your strength to do so"cried the two boys to the general.Then they both seized the rope and helped the soldier to pull but never theless it was more difficult than they had supposed for three or four times the very weight of the general himself himself threatened to drag the three of them down into the well, so that they would be company for the general. but they pulled sturdily being awayre of this danger indeed, and at last they drew the general out of the deep hole and he fell sprawled at full length upon the ground.For a time he lay panting and breathing hard to get or recover his breath, while the three others were also worn out and out of breath from their long pull and strain at the rope, so the four rested quietly upon the grass, and glanced at one another in utter silence, and watched the remainder of the conflagration flare here and there.Finally the aidedecamp said th to the general;

"I'm surprised at you your excellency.Why were you so foolish as to fall down that deep well in the gloom of night?Did you not understand it is a dangerous thing to do.You might have recieved mortal injuries in the fall or if the water had been deeper you might have been drowned."

"James Henry"replied the general solemnly"you are a mere man.Do you imagine that I really wanted to fall down that confounded well to pleased those dirty christian dogs and their dreadful children soldiers."?

"I imagine nothing at all"apoliged the aidecamp."I only saw you were down there when we pulled you up."

"Down there.I should say I was down there.There is a gloomy hole where there was no light at all, there in a confounded watery well, where I got wet through and through and cold too just because of those dirty christian dogs.I'llget even with those Vivian Girl brats and their two brothers."

"How did it happen?"demanded Gerald Starring.

"I was trying to escape from the raiders"explained the glandelinian general angrily"and I was carelessly glancing over my shoulder to see if they were chasing me or not. So of course I did not see the well in time but stepped into it and found myself tumbling down before I could realize what had happened to me.The depth of the water saved me from injury for the well is many feet down perhaps perhaps fifty feet or more and I managed to save myself from drowning, and then I found that my height saved me for when I stood on my feet on the bottom of the well my chin was just above the water.So I stood still and yelled for help,but nobody heard me.It was a good thing the bottom of the well didn't have no quagmire in it as some do."

"If the christian dogs had heard you"said Fred Dangar"They would have pulled you out and carried you away a prisoner and if they found out you directed this massacre of children whom the Vivian Girl brats interfered with you would have met an awful fate by burning at the base of a tree"

"Burn at the base of a tree"exclaimed the general in a horror."He burn at the base of a tree.How absurd.They surely are not so fierce as to do that to us "landelinians I'm sure.It would only be the firing squad for me and that is nothing."

"Oh yes they would"declared Gerald Starring.Some of "some of my agents caused those Vivian Girl Brats to be marooned in a submerged submarine and because the boat could not be raised by three oclock they burned those th thirty men or more while they were tied to trees.."

"Well I'll burn children at the base of trees after this for revenge"said the general"and the vivian girls too if I ever capture them.I'll return fire for fire.So I'm glad then that the christian dogs didn't find me. How many others escaped from them."

"That is impossible to say"declared Fred Dangar regretefully"For we have not yet had time to visit the other sectors of this territory.From new fires coming into glare way over there the raid is still On.When we have rested and satisfied our hunger it might be well for us to investigate around and see what the raiding christian dogs have left us if they left us anything.?"

"An excellent idea."declared the general."I amsomewhat feeble from my long confinement in the well, but if there is a horse near by I can ride upon it and we may as well start at once."

They first searched the ruins of his headquarters, and where the main dining room had on once been they found a small quainty of food that was in a good sized pantry.This they carefully placed in a bag to preserve it for future use, the general and the three others having first eaten as much as they cared for.This consumed some time however for the four were exceedingly hungry and they all always ate their food very slowly..When they had finished the meal a horse was found that had been n been stolen by the raiders and this the general mounted and they set out to explore the camps, the two boys also being mounted on the horse and the aidedecamp leading the horse by the bridle. They found on every hand ruin desolation and dead soldiers and also conflagration and weapons of all sorts scattered everywhere, demolished wagons, upset canteens and dead horses..The houses of the encampment not ruined by fire had been pilfered of all their valuables and still left standing but most of these were in the path of the conflagration.The fire department buildings had been blown up and all the fire engines and hook and ladder trucks demolished and the fire men dead or maimed..Not a tent had been left standing all being burned not was there a single person soldier or child slave remaining in this territory, child slave sheds were still smouldering and everything was indescription. Thousands of dead soldiers of the Glendelinians lay here and there and their bodies stripped of their cartridge belts and partly of clothing. The only ones in this territory consisted of the general and his three companions and they didn't dare go near the raid. somehow or other the general was really a coward at heart. and he found it impossible to laugh in the face of this mighty disaster, the most terrific disaster ever come upon the Glendelinian armies in the form of a raid. As for the two boys the tears came often to their eyes, as they reviewed the ruin of the camps and the scenery itself and all the dead bodies.

When half an hour after they reached the upper end of the encampment and found it swept as bare as the rest the grief of the two bad boys a deserving grief too was almost more than they could bear and their hatred of Violet and her sisters was worse than their hatred of God. everything had been swept from the encampment, all the cavalry horses had been carried off, all buildings for the soldiers shaping as if they had been long cowboy ranches were still burning all having been swept away in so brief a time that their bewilderment was equal to their sorrow and misery. Since no house or barracks were left standing, and those that were were burning and as there was no shelter for anybody as and as the general desired to try and have the raid stopped if possible. so tired and exhausted were they by the days anxieties and grief that they would fain have desired for rest, but the generals duty was to stem the tide of disaster if possible and therefore the general sent the aidedecamp to some of the other generals further off with an order to send up the main body of cavalry and drive the raiders out, while as soon as possible he would come to the other section of the camp and train a battery of artillery upon them.

The general went off therefore leaving the two boys to themselves to do the duty of trying to crush the raid and revenge it, and the two boys wondered themselves wthat they could do to improve their own cadet condition.They had wished wished to sleep but were sore afraid to do so for fear of being captured.

"The poor Glendelinian soldiers of our army"said Gerald Standing Starring regretfully and bitterly"Are little likely again to behold many of their comrades and londons, for in this section a good number of generals and other officers were captured and other property is gone with everything else..Let us face the fact that if we are ever captured by these christian dogs we will despite our age be imprisoned for life for our persecuting those little vivian Girl Guttersnipes and also that our lives will be short too if we would be captured by Penrod himself as he would blame us for what that blunderer Fred Bowden did to that little Nut Jennie.We told him to do it is it is true but he went too far and had his face torn by the little phanter.He was too rash and should have understood that's she is dangerous if she is taunted."

"I'll not be captured, for I can weild a blade as good an as any of the little brats"declared Fred Dangar in a determined tone--or a tone as determined as he could assume.

"True quite true"said Gerald.Then he seemed thoughtful for a moment and turning to Fred he demanded;

"Do you believe the both of us could weild a blade as good as that Penrod Prince.There's nobody in the christian army is as good with one as him, even his seven sisters together cannot disarm him.Therefore do you believe if the worse should come we could fight him even with four blades against his one."

Fred gave a groan and cast a reproachful look at Gerald as he said;

"Do you wish to commit suicide by fighting that boy with blades.I'd prefer surprising him and using a pistol."

"Not if I can help it but he is too sudden with a pistol and can shoot cannot before you can draw.

While the conversation was in progress Gerald suddenly remembered the important plans which general Avonburg had hidden under the tiled floor in his room and believed that without doubt the general had been so suddenly surprised by the raiders that he had found no opportunity to get the papers out, for otherwise the christians would have probably captured him and the plans and then the Glendelinian army would be defeated in the next battle to follow.So the plans must be still there in the hiding place place and therefore the boy believes he could be of great assistance to the Glendelinian army in this hour of need if they could be recovered quickly and sent hastily to Manley But the generals headquarters was a mass of bad ruins, and also there was a possibl possibility of not being able to find the place where the map was hidden.He at first said nothing of this to Fred Dangar remembering that the general had charged him to preserve the secret of the plans and of its hiding place.Nevertheless the thought of securing the wonderful plans and of sending it on to Manley gave the boy new hopes that he could yet bring ruin and devastation upon Violet,and her sisters and all their boy and girl scout followers. He stood up and said to Fred;

"Let us return to the generals headquarters.It is more pleasant than here and there are not so many hot fires. and therefore maybe there too I may be able to discover a way out of our difficulties before morning."

This suggestion met with Freds approval, and the two boys at once started upon the return journey, and too as there was no occasion to delay on the way they reached the vinicity of the generals headquarters in about ten minutes, and at once began searching the ruins of the building itself. They found to their satisfaction that one room at the bottom of a still remaining tower was still intact, although the roof was in ruin and the place was somewhat littered with stones.Fred was as he said too tired to do anything now so he sat down on a stone and watched Gerald clear the room of the rubbish. This done the boys hunted through the ruins of the building untill he discovered a stool and a good big chair that had not been carried away. some bedding and a matress were also found and soon the room had been made quite comfortable

The following hour while Fred was still looking at the effects of the raid Gerald starting began to search the tumbling of the ruins of wreckage for the place where the plans had been hidden by the general After climbing over the ruins for several minutes he reached a flat place which he recognized by means of the tiled flooring and the broken furniture scattered about to be the room which he was seeking but in the center of the floor directly over the spot where the plans were hidden lay several several several large and heavy blocks of tower stones which had been blown from the dismantled walls. his unfortunate discovery for a few minutes discouraged the boy who realized how helpless he was to remove such vast obstacles but it was so important to secure the plans that he dared not give way to despair untill every human effort had been made so he sat down to think it over with great care then thinking it must best to confide the secret to Fred and get his help

"Where are the raiders by now?"He requested of Fred.

"Don't try and find that out from me."said the boy chewing with much satisfaction a piece of bread and butter with sugar on which he had found.

"Fred"said Gerald squatting down beside the boyscout and resting his chin upon his hands for he was too excited to even imagine sleeping and resting his elbows upon his thigh"Allow me to confide to you that I am bored over this raid disaster, and need help in some intreprise I need to accomplish.My good friend general Avonburg Federal has gone off to try and stop the raid so there is no one to converse with me intelligently,He is a general but to me he is is the goat to those Vivian Girl Brats.Suppose you tell me what you may about your acquaintance of them."

"Suppose I don't"said Fred with a scowl and his bad face was very expressive.

"I am surprised to hear you mention them when you understand how we hate to hear their names."

"If you refuse we cannot then defeat their purpose, and out cause shall be more unhappy than ever, and I understand your disposition is too sweet to permit that. Tell me what you have learned about them."

Fred glanced at Starring with an expression of scorn.Said he;

"One would believe that you are but four years old Gerald.But there I will do as you bommand me to as you have the say.Listen carefully--and my description of them may do you some good--although I'll doubt if you understand the moral."

"I am sure your description of them will do our countrys cause a good deal of good."said Gerald whose eyes were glancing sharply in the direction of the still raging fires.

"Those Vivian Girl Princesses."began Fred.

"Do n't interrupt l t it is not polite. Once upon a time I heard that these little dirty brats and gutternipes had a father or has a father with a hollow inside his head, where most people have their brains, and---"

"Is this a true story Fred"

"And That Christian dog of an Emperor with a hollow head could chatter words which had no sense and laugh in a brainless manner at senseless things. That part of the story is true enough Gerald."

"Then proceed with the tale, sweet Dargar. Yet it is hard to believe that any Christian dog of an Emperor could be brainless---unless he proved it by owning seven little devils called the Vivian Brats."

Gerald smiled mischieviously. Then he Fred resumed his story. "This empty headed Emperor was a Emperor by accident har I having been born to that high station by the fact that he was an ancestero to other Christian Dog rulers far and far to many centuries back behind who all try their best to be goody goody which is contrary to our natures for we love to be sinful. Also the Emperor was empty headed by chance, by the very same chance being born without b brains."

"Poor fellow "Quouted Gerald Starring. "Did he own little girls seven in number who were just as empty headed?"

"He did and still does."

"Then he was wrong to have been born at all. Laughed Gerald Starring his body convulsed with merriment. "But it is impossible to prevent yourself from being born there is no chance for protest, oh Fred!"

"Who you who do you believe the Vivian Girls are I would care to demand!" demanded Fred with a show of amusement.

"Request of some who brains Fred for I'm sure Emperor Vivian can't tell." Replied Gerald Starring bursting into one of his merry fits of laughter. "Oh Fred you'll be the death of m some day---I'm sure you will" Gasped the boy wiping his eyes, as he often did when he laughed till the tears came. Then recovering himself he said "I want to consult you upon an important matter. If you will do me a favor I am sure your good judgement will be of great assistance "

The angry boy who hated Violet, and her sisters most immensely was quite mollified by the respectful tone in which he was addressed, but he immediately demanded;

"Are you planning to capture those empty headed little she devils."!

"It seemed dreadful that these two boys would say such apparently funny and yet dreadful words about Emperor Vivian and his little daughters that way." All Abbiannians were more than any others deserving of respect being in this story the holiest of living creatures, and their Emperors deserved more respect than Emperors and monarchs of other nations because they are too so unusually holy and get their nation holier every time they reign and as they are set to rule over the Abbiannian people they do it wisely and well. Emperor Vivian was not at fault that such a war came on, but Landolinia herself, and she was terribly guilty before the whole world for the reasons that brought it on. For everybody in general Emperor Vivians heart was unusually kind and gentle and he also was very wise. He was merry despite the worst misfortunes brought on by the war and misfortunes too that would cause others to weep and he never said harsh words that wound the tee feelings of his friends. He and his little girls had a very good nature, and the only time they could be angry when it was a sinful reason not to be for they could not tolerate sinful actions on any one.

"Come with me please" said Reacally Gerald Gerald Starring "For the matter of which I give announcement is very important."

32 Fred Followed heen, although Gerald Starring still heard him mutter ing to himself that Emperor Vivian and Violet, and her sisters had no brains,.....

"If I could find a way to remove some of those huge slabs of stone which have fallen in the generals room I believe I could find find means to cause those christian dogs armies the worst defeat they ever had ever since the war began."

"Then mumbled Fred Dargar, with his mouth full for he was still eating "Let us remove the slabs of stone."

"But how"! inquired Gerald Starring. "They are very big and heavy.."

"Ah how indeed" returned Fred. That is a serious serious question. Do you suppose us two boys should carry them when twenty men couldn't even lift them. But here I have it. Why not use a rope."

"The same same rope that we drew the general up from the well!"

"Yes indeed. But why do you want to do all the toiling of moving such big slabs of stone at this hour of night when we could get a lot of men to help us to morrow morning."

"There is a famous parchment under that tiled floor which general Aronburg wished Manley to recisve. If Manley recieved it he could prevent our armies being stormed near Weeping Willow Stream."

Fred lowden gave a short of contempt as Gerald glanced at his companion inquiringly.

"But that's the idea" said Gerald Gerald.

"To be sure" said Fred scornfully "I suppose the plans tells general Manley also how to to capture those little Vivian brats."

"Oh loose it!" responded Gerald starring, and th then for a moment he rubbed the top of his head (if it is not empty itself) in a per perplexed manner. "But he continued nevertheless" this stronge scroll plan is indeed a master piece and should have reached general Manley to night as it was. It's advice is of tremendous value. We should never let an opportunity slip from our grasp.. Let us think this over. The inference is that Manley should concentrate his main army on the territory of Weeping Willow Run so that Federals army can be reinforced against the christian dogs.. Therefore if we could both get to Manleys lines to night with th at scrool in our possession and give it ti to him in Fers on we could gain all the credit."

"Well we can fasten a rope to them and pull." said Fred. "We boys are pretty strong and ought to manage it after some hard work. Just get the rope and wel we will fasten one end to a tree for a weight, and we both can pull."

"Much obliged for it" replied Gerald. "I'll get the rope at once but if we both can pull pull we are good."

"You ought to be strong for you got away from both that Princess Violet and Penrod and they were two to your one." said Fred.

"Yes but if it had not been for the lurch of the car they would have had me" said Gerald bitterly. He went and secured the rope from the well, and fastened one end around a big slab of stone and then tied the other end around a tree, and then when all was ready both boys seized the rope and pulled, and pulled, and yet strain as they might, the huge stone would not stir from its place.

Seeing this they rested for a moment and then renewed with more energy and finally forced the heavy stone to slide several feet from where it had lain. But it was the hardest toil they had ever a complished and all were obliged to rest a long time before undertaking the removal of the next stone.

"Admit Gerald" said Fred "That I am of some use in the world."

"The weight of the resisting tree was of considerable help but we,ll succeed yet" said Gerald Starring.

When Fred went to fasten the rope a second time he was rejoined to discover that by moving six more her heavy slabs of stone he could under uncover the tile with the secret spring. So for hours the two pulled and pulled, and pulled resting between times and then toilingwith renewed energy until by midnight they had the last stone moved. Leaving the two boys to remo remove the treasure when they pleased. It cannot hardly be described how badly they felt on being disappointed. Gerald starring felt down and touched the secret spring as the general had often instructed him to do and at first to his joy the tile disappeared downward and disclosed the opening. you may imagine how the wicked boys heart throbbed with excitement as he slowly thrust his hand into the cavity and felt around to see if the precious document were was still there. He gave a cry of dismay as he could not find a thing and Freds face turned white. just as he rose to his feet with a curse and told Fred that they had all their toil for nothing they thought they saw a moving object the size and form of a girl child, and not knowing whether it was an escaped child slave of a christian girlscout and trembling with the fear of discovery should she be the latter they as fast as possible ran to another place and hid behind a stone. But now the object seemed to follow, and was joined by another. The two boys had no intention of allowing themselves to be captured by Penrod or the Vivian Girls, and so although the two persuers demanded in surl surly girlish tones who they were they would not answer but tried to hide. They could have drawn guns of course but if they were the Vivian Girls or even girlscouts, those latter are more sudden in their gunplay and would have them first. Then another fear assailed them.

"If I should shoot at them or draw their fire the sound would attract other raiders to their rescue." Gerald said to Hedda Dargar "and then we would be captured. We must find some safer place."

Here and there they wandered and finally went to the grove and climbed into the tall tree where they had made their platform and seat. But here it was pitch dark and therefore they hoped the gloom should save them from being seen until though they must wait patiently untill morning morning before they dared to be sure whether they were safe from persuers or not.

Indeed the persuers had happened to have been two of the Vivian girls, but the others were with them but a little behind. They had returned because they had seen the two boys in the glare of the fires and after studying them at a distance concluded that they may have been Gerald Starring and Fred Dargar and therefore had decided to try and capture them. As most of the raiders were still in the vinicity and the flames lit up the scene the Princesses could see plainly. There was no possibility of their being observed or assaulted by Glan delliniana here so they had timed their minutes to examine the two boys very closely, violet having said to Joice;

"If we could capture them we could rid the world of two of our most crafty and dangerous enemies."

"They had decided to creep upon the two boys as two of them had removed their their shoes, and handed them to Jennie. But the two boys had seen them coming up as declared before and therefore by stealth had eluded them but nevertheless Starring nevertheless Starring had lost something valuable to his own cause and Hettie had recovered it from the ruins and removing her right shoe she had placed it within it for up the pointed toe. Then she had torn a piece from her handkerchief and stuffed it into the shoe to hold the trophy in place. The shoes of military stile worn by the Princesses are long and pointed as were all the shoes worn by the christian military, and the points curled upward so that there were quite a vacant space beyond the place where the little girls toes reached when the shoe was upon her dainty foot. After she had put on the shoe and laced it up she removed her other shoe and carefully placed the other trophy in the hollow toe. This also she secured in place by means of a strip strip torn from some other piece of clothe. Having put on the other shoe and laced it up(or down) she said to Jennie who was standing close by watching her with a smile;

"What shall we do since those two escaped. go back and rejoin the rangers. in the raid;;; or remain here and rest..."?

"Let's go and rejoin the raiders for we desire to liberate some more slaves if possible."

Jennie was startled by hearing a small voice suddenly say in her right ear-

"I advise you to go to the north camp, where you may liberate many thousands thousands of slaves who are to be massacred to morrow."

She glanced around believing one of her sisters had said this but no one was around. Believing it was one of the angels who possessed her she exclaimed;

"How in the world could I do that with my sisters" for she was amazed at recieving such an advise.

"To night" spoke the strange voice" Fenrod and his cavarly of raiders will be heading that way. Get back to them and lead on the raid."

Jennie did not doubt the possibility, but it seemed a dangerous move, and she said "How can we, only little girls accomplish such a feat?"

"Us Angels will be with you as always and give you the means to accomplish it." was the startling reply. "And it will be your happiest night for the deed. We will protect you from harm and your sisters too" added the voice soft and low but very distinct.

"Then I and my sisters shall act as you advise me" declared Jennie firmly because this promise gave her courage and the voice finished "The good, wise and fearless are sure to win success."

She returned to where her sisters were sitting or reclining. she said;

"Sisters we are going to the north camp to rescue thousands of child slaves this very night. Never minds those bad boys. come on."

Violet and her sisters seemed puzzled by this statement but as Jennie was always counted as their head or young as she was they never dispute her statement.

"I'm not much on letting them poor children remain if we can help it" said Joice "and though we are brave enough to chance anything yet it seems you suggested an impossibility" said Violet laughingly.

"We shall not try anything impossible" r said Jennie smiling sweetly in return "for we are not rash. Weill rejoin Fenrod over there and suggest the plan to him."

"There doesn't seem to be a chance to raid that section of the camp this early hour of night" declared Joice looking upon Jennie with wonder.

"True" said Jennie and she giggled. "But we will succeed." She said this in such a positive manner for she had perfect faith in the promise of the possession angel, that ther sisters were suspicious.

"Did you hear those mysterious voices again?" demanded Hettie.

"I did."

"Then come" said Violet. "Ah Angels don't tell stories. To their rescues rescue sisters." They soon rejoined Fenrod who was going to conduct his portion of the raid another quarter and as Jennie told him of her plan he did not question her but decided to accomplish it. As they went on he desired to cause his sisters to laugh for he loved to see them happy and he told witty stories. They sure did laugh freely because their hearts had been lightened by the success of the raid so far and now were lightened still more by the prospects of rescuing all these dearest children up north.

With the sight of them on their swift horses, and now with their columns of child scouts with them the Vivian girls made a tour of a portion of the ruined camps to see which route was easiest tward the north.

As they were thus doing sea great storm of attacks raged upon the other christian raiders. Some of the christian officers who led the raid and even Jimmie Vivian were somewhat disturbed by the violence of the "Storm" but Violet and her sisters came up with their own followers, and gleefully joined in the fray and drove the assailants a great distance off with some heavy loss... A few minutes after this fray had passed Prince Vivian accompanied by Violet, and her sisters began scouting along the exterior of the burning encampments in search of the northern territory of which the strange voice had told of to Jennie herself. Never for an instant dh did she doubt that they would sooner or later find it, and yet before they had rode a short distance along the weeping willow run a dark object of some considerable length at the waters edge caught their eye.

"It's a big boat of some sort" Cried violet excitedly and riding down to it they indeed found it was and a very large and roomy boat at that. Although stranded upon the shore shore of the river it was in very good and perfect order, and had suffered in no way from anything it might have undergone. It was a very big gasoline launch, and having dismount the eight bravest children in the world (bravest of all people too) stood for some moments gazing upon the handsome handsome craft wondering where it could have come from. They had never in their lives ever observed a boat of that sort before and violet and her sisters had rode in many. On the outside it was painted a lustrous purple without any other color to relieve it but all the inside of the boat was lined with pure silver, polished so highly that the surface resembled a mirrow or mirror and glinted weirdly in the rays of the flaming tents and enemy camp buildings. The seats had white velvet cushions upon them and the cushions were splendidly embroidered with threads of gold. At one end beneath the broad seat was a large barrel with silver hoops which Fenrod himself found was filled with fresh wine. A great chest of cendalwood bound and ornamented with both silver and gold stood alongside of it. Fenrod raised the lid and discovered the chest filled with food enough and good enough for any person of his standing enough good and wholesome food to last a party traveling up the river a long long time. At the forward portion of the boat were two powerful gasoline engines, and overhead by the seat but rolled up now was a colliery of purple cloth to ward off the heat of a summer sun or rain and so forth.. Fenrod and violet, and her sisters were indeed delighted with the appearance of this one unusual and beautiful boat; but on reflection he feared it would be too large for him to try and operate alone. While he was considering this matter he said;

"Very well my dear sisters, in one way Jennie dear your words have come true. Here is at least a boat for a certainity---yet how it came here---and how you knew it would come to usare puzzles that are mystifying to me. I do not question our good fortune however, and my heart is bubbling with joy for in this boat we will ride tward the north camp where we can return at once to our scout troop we left in that vinicity, and proceed with the raid."

"I do not wish to go there in a boat" said Hettie.

"That is too bad dear sister for you would be very welcome. But surely you cannot remain in this territory even if you wished, alone for it would be too dangerous" continued Fenrod. "I don't want any danger to come to any of my sisters."

"It is our boat Fenrod" said Jennie quietly.

"Mayby, maybe" was the careless answer "But I am an Abbiomnian Prince, you are my sisters, younger than me, and therefore for your safty I have some little say. Therefore your safty being of greater importance than anything to me whatever else it may be it is just and right that I alone understanding the machinery secure the boat and run tward the north with it."

"I am sorry to differ from my dear brothers views" said Jennie smiling "But instead of going north with it I consider it of greater importance that we go to the north section of the enemys camps and storm it to liberate those the voice told me of!"

"Hey what" cried the astonished boy. "You and your sisters yourselves go to that sector. To become slaves yourse yourselves of the rascally Glandelinians like the child slaves are and probably share in the massacre that is threatening them. No, no, dear sisters. I am too wise to let you and your sisters put your heads in the lions mouth. It's no fun to be a slave."

"The Glandelinians will not succeed in enslaving us" declared Jennie. "They will not even capture us against our will. On the contrary it is my intention to set free all those poor dear little children, as well as a lot of christian soldiers who also may be prisoners, and to bring them all to the christian lines. This will be a raid that will cause the world to gasp in surprise."

"How strange" said Fenrod. "Your audacity takes my breath away Jennie, but the adventure has its charm, I must confess.. but I believe I will have to agree with your plan for probably we could conquer that horde of fierce glandelinians without any assistance at all---at all---eh Hettie! but I grieve to say that you and o your sisters are planning something that seems impossible and yet if you can accomplish it, even with my help and direction I'll admit that you are better than I am. As for your determination to do what I admit I can't do Jennie dear, I fear you forget that you and your sisters are only little girls, and that with our child scout troop I'm afraid it could not be accomplished. Don't impose on your guardian angels too much sisters."

"No I do not forget that" said Jennie.

"Then please consider that you and I and your sisters and the child scout troop are not strong enough as an army to conquer such a powerful and well atched watched encampment at the north camp of the enemy with out an cavarly escort, when that camp is guarded with well experienced warriors. We could attempt it of course, but you are too good and too loving and also too beautiful to come to harm to satisfy those bloody glandelinian butchers, while I couldn't bear to let it happen. Come gather all our men cavarly and then we'll attempt the raid. Eh! what do you say."!

Jennie, and her sisters were a little embrassed how to reply to these gentle loving arguments, which she understood Fenrod considered were wise, so after a period of thought she said;;

"Fenrod dear I will make a bargian with you for I do not wish to fail in respect to so worthy a good boy dad and such a great boy spy and leader as my good loving brother. This boat is ours though I do not understand how it got here, and in my fathers absence you have become my guardian, therefore we claim that we surely are entitled to some consideration as well as you."

"Would I deny it to you!" Said Fenrod placing an arm lovingly around her.

"What is the bargian you propose Jennie dearest.!"

"Let the eight of us get into the boat, and you shall first try to sent the boat tward the destination you desire to go. If you succeed in operating that engine, I and my sisters will accompany you right willingly and admit we are defeated, but h should you fail, I or my sisters any one of them will then operate the boat to where we desired to go, and you must come with me without further protest.."

"A fair and just bargain." cried Fenrod highly pleased and giving her a good hug. "Yet although they say I'm a boy of mighty deeds, I do not relish the prospects of operating a big gasoline launch all the way to the north. But I will do my best and abide by the result."

The matter being thus peacefully settled, they prepared to embark.

A further supply of fruits was placed in the boat which had been removed from a dumped over provision wagon in the raided camp. They also found a good supply of sealted bloater fishes. Finally everybody were in the boat and Fenrod now was seated in the silver lined craft, and Jolie came last pushed pushing off the boat, so that it floated freely upon the water. Fenrod wanted to be the last to enter the boat but Jolie would not have no on the matter.

"Well here we go for our destination." exclaimed Fenrod trying to start the engines. Then as he toiled at the engines singing at the same time a song that ran this way;

"The way to the child slave camp isn't bad,
For a boy prince, and seven brave little Princesses,
To torture the cross old devil with a fire dripping coat,
And a long long silver boat in which to float.
So our hearts are merry light and glad to have seven little sisters who are Princesses,
As we speed away to fair Billbad."

Fenrod stopped trying to start the engines for by this time he saw they wouldn't so much as pop a sound. And too when he glanced over his shoulder he found to his dismay that the boat had scarcely moved a foot from its former position. Violet and her sisters said nothing, and though they appeared not to noi notice they held their dress over their faces to hide their giggles for the least thing can make them laugh they're so light hearted and jolly. So Fenrod with a serious appearance on his face removed his purple coat and rolled up the sleeves of his tunic and tried again to operate the engines. However he succeeded no m better, and when he heard violets giggles behind her dress, and saw her sisters fighting hard to prevent themselves fromlaughing out loud, he suddenly dropped the tool he was using and began shouting with laughter at his own defeat. As he wiped his bro brow with a cloth he sang in a merry voice;

"A boyscout bold am I I dare to hold.
But boldness and bravery will not operate a boat.
So I must confess I'm the boy in dire distress
And also I'm just as useless as a nanny goat..."22"

"I would give anything" smiled Violet "If you would leave the word "Goat" out of your verses."

"When I try to make a fool out of myself before my dearest sisters, I am a goat." replied Fenrod.

"Not so." insisted Violet. "You are of too suer superiory a race to be as a goat. A goat is only a dump beast, while you are a prince and my dear brother. And superior lies in intelligence, and you have more intelligence than we have even if you do not understand how to operate those engines. You alone saved us from an awful death in that submarine."

Fenrod paid t no attention to this praise but turning to Jennie he said;

"We may as well return to the shore for even if we did have oars the boat is too heavy to row to the north, and would take too long also. Indeed it will be very hard for us to reach land again. We have drifted some distance down stream and may have to get out and swim for it."

"Let me try to operate the engine." suggested Jennie laughing sweetly. "You must not forget our bargain. Gosh how he was tempted to hug her and never let go when he saw how sweet and happy she appeared to be. He just loved that immensely.

"No indeed I won't forget that." he answered leading her to the engines. "If you can operate the boat and get it going to the north enemy camps or to any other place, I will let you go forth then without protest.."

So Fenrod took Jennie's seat in the T Stern and then holding violet and Catherine close to him as they cried happily in his arms he watched Jennie work at the engines, and they commenced to run to the great wonder of Fenrod. In an instant the boat began to glide rapidly through the water and seeing this the little girl asked her sister Daisy to steer which she did turning the boats prow tward the north. However Jennie had no idea exactly where that sector of the Glandelinian camps were located but she did understand that they lay north of Weeping Willow Run so she decided to trust in God guiding her craft to the spot. They had gone for a good long distance and along shore in the distance the ruined section of the enemys camps became smaller and more obscured in the gloom as the boat sped on ward untill at the end of half an hour they had lost sight of it altogether and only could tell its location by the red glare from the fire in the lower heavens.

"This is sure a glorious ride" said Fenrod as he lay a little back with his two arms still holding Violet and Catherine who was nearly dosing off to sleep. "I find it a decided relief to be away from that dismal ruined camp of the enemy."

"It will be a relief for the child slaves when we assault the camp and rescue them." said Jolie "For they are in the hands of vile murderers who will probably destroy the poor little dears to morrow."

"Oh I hope we won't be too late." exclaimed Jennie distressed at the thought.

"Never mind" said Fenrod calmly "Little children can die only once you understand, and when when the enemy does deal you then they slay only the body and not the soul. But we'll save them all don't worry. But cheer up sisters, we will be there on time even before midnight, and the enemy may not even have a chance to defend himself or prevent the rescue of the children, so let us not feel bad on that matter now. But gee violet and Catherine you sure appear happy to night. I ought to sing to amuse you."

"Your funny songs would cause us to die laughing and we would still be happier." said violet.

"I'm afraid it would be quite impossible" dear Violet. "You couldn't be more happier if you tried. But here is a famous song for you."

While Jennie was operating the two engines, and the boat rushed fast northward through the river water, Fenrod who never could see sad or serious for many minutes at a time and was happier because his sisters were happy sang a number of really good songs one after the other. Then he said;

"Once when you were prisoners sisters, of general Federal he was singing some song while playing a harp. How did you like his singing.?"

"We didn't complained Jennie herself. "It reminded me of an alligator that tried to whistle.."

"Did he really succeed, Jennie dear!"

"He whistled as well as the general sang."

"Fenrod laughed. "He sure must have whistled then most exquisitively eh Jennie!"

"Exquisitie do you say. I considered I considered his whistling and his singing as sweet as candy made from mustard and castor oil."

"But not as sweet as your disposed disposition I admit. Why Jennie your nature would put honey to shame. I could crack the most smallest joi jole and you'd be convulsed with laughter, you and your sisters. Especially about the face of general federal that evening I----"

"Penrod dear please, that evening we had laughed enough"begged Joice beginning to feel it coming on her."Are we not happy enough already."?

"But this is a jolly good time we are having"said Penrod"and it is the way we should amuse ourselves while we have the time now.I fear the way you look now you couldn't stand another funny story.You all would be screaming in this boat."

"We have heard no funny story as yet Penrod dear"said Catherine.

"Well how about this one. Did you remember the story of the bear that was hired out for a nursemaid."?

"A nursemaid?"

"Yes."

"A bear as a nursemaid. My how ridiculous"laughed Jennie herself.

"I never can believe we ever heard the story"giggled Hettie. Hettie.

"Well the bear tried to sing a lullaby to put a baby to sleep."

"What then?"said the little girls together giggling.

"The bear was highly pleased with its own voice, but the baby was nearly frightened to death."

"You are a merry boy, indeed"laughed the little girls"Nobody could be gloomy with you around."

"No How about general Aronbuig Federale face"smiled Penrod.

"His sort of a hot water bottle would be a very uncomfortable one to lay on"screamed violet and her sisters followed suit for that was recently the best they had ever heard and had never yet got over it. Finally Jennie buried her thoughts with plans of what they should do when they reached the north camp and rejoined their troop and tried to capture the camp. When the others finally became silent and their laughter was spent, Penrod inquired;

"You little dears can weild a blade almost as good as I can now."

"We have tried our best was "was the answer."In time of danger we have found we could use one more easier to our advantage than when we are not in danger. But what you have learned us has done us a lot of good."

"But could you fight yet as good with the lance as I learned you."

"Yes we can for we several times tried it out with each other.Have you any new plan for us to learn."

"I have but I cannot have time to suggest it yet. When you have learned these things dear sisters I'll laugh at the enemy that tries to capture you."

Yet Penrod had expected little support from what he had learned them them for the enemy cavarly were always dangerous too at weapons but nevertheless he was not discouraged by this fact. After all he reflected a good blow given at the enemy would show the glendelinians to let his sisters alone. Jennie herself believed the voice she had heard in her right ear would not have advised her to go to raid the north camp camp so soon had the intention been a hopeless one and too dangerous.It seemed to her on further reflection that she and her sisters must rely upon circumstances to determine her actions when she reached the encampments. She and her sisters could get even for the massacre of children that sad morning.Violet and her sisters felt perfect confidence in God, and the angels that possessed them. It was the water tow that had sent their boat down to them, and there was no gasoline launch engine that she nor her sisters did not understand how to ~~to~~ operate. She and her sisters always believed that through the angels that possessed them that Our Blessed Lord would protect them from any danger that might arise so their anxiety were not for themselves, but for the child so scouts who may have to be in this desperate enterprize.None of these child scouts were angel possessed, so violet and her sisters resolved to do in part way what penrod said to also summon the christian cavarly to cover them in the assault on the camp and protect protect them from alll harm..... For two hours and a half the boat with the silver lining awed sped swiftly down the river.Then they soon came within sight of the main body of christian boy and girlscout raiders, and close by was a cavarly escort to their astonishment and still not far away was the encampments of their destination.The boat was halted by those on shore on guard duty, but seeing who occupied it, they were permitted to come into the cover without hinderance.

"The strange voice has has guided me right"Jennie said to herself."Now if I am wise and cautious, and as brave as I am said to be, and my sisters also, I believe we shall be able to rescue all those slaves in another hours time, time."

The north section of the Glandelinian encampments tward which violet and her sisters were heading for and which they had intended to raid to save these christian child slaves was an encampment ten miles long and two in width and it was under the command of general Osregos and it was occupied by a powerful glandelinian army.Near to the fringes of this Glandelinian camp were green and fertile fields, but far further in the interior or to the rear of the camp were fortified positions in which the child slaves were forced to toil there being a day and night shift of them so that the work went on continuously without any interm ission but there were many slaves too mostly little girls who were confined in dark underground passages under the positions for other purposes. In the course of time huge caverns had been hollowed out by these little slaves slaves in which they were forced to live and sleep, hardly ever seeing the light of day.Cruel glandelinian overseers with whips and lashes and even armed with pistols stood over these poor children who had been captured in many countries by glandelinian soldiery in times past. and the overseers were quite willing to lash the slaves with their whips as they faltered a moment in their toil no matter how hard it was.Between the Glandelinian positions and the encampments were forests of thick tongled trees between which narrow paths had been cut to lead up to the positions.It was on the level green meadows not far from the river that the child slave camps for those toiling in the positions had been constructed, and wherein also was located the headquarters of the general himself.This encampment was protected by scores of thousands of the fierce and dangerous but well known Omarian Cavr Cavarly, who frequently mounted their horses and spread over the land and other territories of galverinia within the vinicity of their position to pillage and force encounters with christian scouting patrols. When they were not absent on one of those expeditions the Glandelinian camps warmed swarmed with them and so became a dangerous place for any peaceful suspected christian to go spying into for the warriors were were as lawless as their general.

The encampment of the child slaves lay close beside the glandelinian encampment, so close indeed but across the river that one might have thrown a stone across the river.But the encampment was also strongly guarded by Glandelinian cavr cavarly.The Glandelinian child slave enterm et entemsent camps was ruled by general double day federal or somebody by that name, but not the famous christian general of that name, and this glendelinian overseer was so stern and cruel that the child slaves could not decide which of the enemy generals they dreaded most.General Federal lived on the ou surburbs of the camp which lay on the shore facing the main glandelinian positions, and his slaves who were most girls were made to - low plow the land and to form earth and other fortified positions for the glandelinian soldiery to form positions for batteries and so on.From these two sections stretched a bridge of boats set close together with boards laid across their edges for the soldiers to go across on.In this way it was easy to pass from one camp to the other and in times of danger from christian assailing forces the bridge could be suddenly and easily removed.These glandelinians had often did nothing but fight and ravage.The war itself seemed to have been raging with all the rest of the world.All nationas hated and feared glandelinia and all the child slaves were treated as badly as it was within human power to be cruel and absolutely no mercy was shown to those getting ill or unable to toil, and it was these who were always singled out for the massacre.

When the other sections of the raiding christian forces had returned tward the christian lines loaded with rich plunder and a host of captives and numberless child slaves, there was much rejoicing within the christian lines and in the morrow emperor Vivian promised that there would be a great feast to celebrate the occassion.This feast would be also set for all the child scouts and the christiansoldiery in the grounds of emperor Vivians head quarters, while with them and with violet and her sisters all the captians and leaders of the fighting and raiding men were to be assembled with with emperor Vivian.Then all the goods that had been captured from the enemy encampments were to be divided acr according to commission, violet and her sisters and their parents and two brothers recieving half, the generals a quarter and the rest being divided amongst the soldiers. But before the raid was to be accomplished in the full that night Viola violet and her sisters were decided to liberate all the child slaves of those two big camps for they heard that the child slaves were all chained together so that theycould not escape.

The raid however had been an awful blow to general federals army.Once when Violet and her sisters had never been in the vinicity of this army for ever so long the Glandelinian generals had thought they had done forever with them.But now what happened.The south encampment, despoiled of all its wealth in ammunition, its tents burned and houses also or torn down its wagons captured, and all enslaved child slaves liberated. But the encampment was so extensive and so wide too and news traveled so slow that the glandelinians in the north camps did not understand what the glow in the heavens meant south ward.Therefore their officers were surprised and puzzled when at about ten at night they recieved the news that their many sentries had observed approaching the encampments from the direction of now the west a strange long dark probably black col umn, and that one of the observers thoughtat first they were only a cavarly of their own side.But as they could not see well in the gloom and the detection positions did not want to disclose their searchlights to the Nationals so no one turned on a light.Not even a star shell was used.

The sentries had therefore demanded of each other who and what these could be and where they had come from and whether they were christians or of their own side. No one had ever approached their encampments from that direction and if they were an assailing force they were far, far too many for that small handful of sentries to fight and resist.

Penrod led his columns of boy and girlscouts to the southward forming a sort of angle of them, and when the christian soldiery saw this action, they deployed in another direction being led by a general named Henry Buzzub.

"Those encampments do not seem to mean us any good." said Violet uneasily to Jennie. "Without doubt if we do not succeed here in our assault we'll all be captured and destroyed."

"Do not fear Violet dear." answered Jennie in a commanding voice. "Stay quietly close by Penrod if you feel a little afraid sir, untill we have done the right thing. If the dash if made properly we'll have the laugh on them all powerful as their camps are. Penrod told me a moment ago they sure could be good for starting the biggest conflagration he ever made yet in a raid. And when its on the enemy side we love to see big fires.."

Penrod had stopped his own coo column of officers in the meantime and rode forward toward where general Buzzub was on his horse.

The general himself was somewhat nervous as to the situation he however and said;

"Well Prince the situation here appears grave. How dare we assault such a position to secure child slaves. It's madness. What does your sisters be thinking of. Have they gone mad."?

"They are not mad" returned the boy "I have come here with them at Jennie's suggestion to free the children whom the Glandelinians have wrongfully slaved. And if you are afraid sir, I'll let you have the permission to go back to camp and take charge of them all myself."

"You love to jest my baby prince and the jest is fairly good. But why did you and your sisters willingly trust thrust your heads into the lions mouth. When you were safe within the christian camps, why did you not stay there. We did not even believe you were out on a dangerous night as this. But since you are our superiors I suppose I'll have to obey and remain on, and though its really good and kind of you for our countrys cause to come here and lead this raid of your own free will I'd much prefer you had remained safely within the camps. We soldiers do not wish anything to happen to you anyhow."

"Everybody suggests that we remain in the camp safely while soldiers die in battle everywhere" said Violet herself sharply. "Just because we little girls go out on adventures against the enemy you men and officers are filled with horror and dread while in many cases, the enemy really wishes we had not come after we escaped. We are not to be frightened by any bluster from these cowardly murdering Glandelinian soldiers believe me nor are we little girls so weak or as hop helpless as you imagine. If we were we wouldn't go out on the chances. We have strange powers that the Glandelinians have often found are so great and terrible that no host of warriors can possibly withstand us at times, though we do not understand the reason why, unless it's because we're angel possessed, and therefore if you really love us as you say I therefore call upon you to lead on in this raid, so we can destroy those camps, and rescue all those children. Remember the reward our father and mother promished if you help us succeed so tremendously to night."

Violet spoke very gravely gravely and earnestly. So while the men were deploying into the lines that were to be formed, Penrod drove his child scout troopers well up toward the location of the pontoon bridge and prepared for the sudden action. He warned violet and her sisters pleadingly to stay close beside him, and to use any weapon that was handy in case they were assaulted by Glandelinians. Every boy and girlscout had their dangerous unbreakable lance, their reliable sabre, carbine, two bruce of pistols each and their fearful little hand grenades and also tear gas bombs. If they would dash upon the enemy before the Glandelinians were prepared the child scouts could not be harmed by anything the Glandelinians could do. The Glandelinians in both camps did not understand what was going to happen but were alarmed however and camp fires flared up everywhere and men rushed to destroy the bridge before the raiders could cross. The General Buzz Buzzub cried out;

"Across the bridge men. Drive all before you."

The Glandelinians opened fire and strove to stop the dashing horsemen from reaching and crossing the bridge but they might as well have stopped an invisible wall of iron. The christian cavarly soldiers were resisted most desperately by the Glandelinian infantry, but the assailing troopers were able to advance nevertheless but at first slowly, and elsewhere the child scout troopers continued forward with or at the same pace. And when violet and her sisters saw how their troopers were able to continue onward they gave one of their good long screaming laughs big defiant merry laughs, and it startled the Glandelinian soldiers and made them nervious for the laughing though so merry and childish sounded very uncanny to them. The Glandelinian officers were angry and scared too as the christian raiders steadily advanced, and forced their men on a continual slow retreat,, nor were they free from terror themselves at the strange power that these raiders seem to possess. As for the Glandelinian hordes of infantry they presently became terrified and full of panic and flew in the greatest confusion toward the sli ping portions of their encampments, and their officers were either slain wounded or captured their surviving officers being forced to chase after the retreating hordes and shout threats of punishment before they could halt them and form them into a line of battle. However the raiders with torches started conflagrations here and there, blew up munition wagons; and caused a confusion of horror and sound. Then up came the Omarian Cavarly who bore terrific lances of their own, and their officers told the infantry to stand their ground while they themselves would storm the raiders and drive them out of the territory at all costs. Their general ordered to that the men should strive their utmost to either capture or slay the Vivian Girls as they led the charge.

A terrific fire was opened upon the advancing raiders, and a number of them fell. Violet and her sisters were in front of their child scout columns, Penrod being in advance, and the infantry sent a flight of grenades straight at the child scouts, while one of the cavarly lances sent a lance at Penrods breast, while the others prepared to charge.

It seemed to most of the boy and girlscouts that violet and her sisters and Penrod must surely perish as their column recoiled to avoid the grenades and get under cover from the hail of other murderous missiles, but the range was too long for the Glandelinians and most of the grenades exploded harmlessly some distance in front of them. Some exploded close to violet and her sisters but they were not harmed in the least, though Penrods horse was disabled and he had to mount another and shoot the mortally wounded animal.

Then Buzzub ordered his men forward at the rush and the Concentinians swarmed forward as if they were a cloud and met the Glandelinian cavarly in a mighty shock. The fierce impetiousity of the christian cavarly bore the Glandelinian cavarly before it and so terrific was the conflict and so many weapons met that it seemed both sides would annihilate each other. Violet and her sisters and also Penrod had been growing very angry at the attempts of the enemy to stop their purpose to rescue the child slaves, and they said something strange to Penrod, he gave a sort of signal, and the whole column of child scouts with their unbreakable lances at the ready suddenly charged forward casting all precautions to the winds and screaming at the utmost of their lung power and tore into the wave of struggling Glandelinian cavarly, who were even amazed at their failure to even stop the christian cavarly. Taken by surprise at the wild attack of the children soldiers whom they could not even get at, and who were able to get at them, the Glandelinian cavarly became alarmed and not understanding what had happened and seeing the infantry cut to pieces and retreating in a panic the cavarly broke from both columns of attackers and retreated in greater panic soon being dispersed by the violence of the charge. Several Glandelinian soldiers had charged at violet with their lances at the ready, but violet was able to handle her own and dismounted these two men before they could so much as touch her. A big captian charged at Jennie but she drove her lance into the horses neck causing him to rear high up in pain, which enabled her almost instantly after wards to sabre the Glandelinian soldier before he could lance her. Penrod was astonished at her feat of sabering a lancer which seemed impossible when he had such a long weapon against her. This effort however was very hard upon Jennie, who in the collision of the two horses had nearly fall off the saddle before she sabred her enemy, but before any other Glandelinians rushed her she wound her right arm around the horses head top clinging with all her might ready to meet the meet the next man who assailed her. But nobody now opposed her or any of her brave sisters. Then she and her sisters saw the panic stricken Glandelinians rushing into their camps which were now in flame and she was relieved at the sight.

"Jennie and Violet have won the fight in the face of all odds" he heard Penrod say triumphantly.

"Against all odds." said Jennie excitedly. "That is not quite true Penrod dear. You did not have a chance to fight, I admit but those Glandelinians went against me and violet a couple of times to good purpose, and if we had not been quick enough and fought the way you learned us those few rascals would have conquered us two unaided. Therefore we should give you all the credid for our victory.."

"That may be so" said Penrod mildly. "But the next time to make a charge sisters please warn me in time so that I may fight alongside of you in your defense and get all the credid myself for the attack. Those Glandelinian devils nearly had you despite how good you did fight. They're Omarians and good at that and nearly got all the credid credit."

There being no one to oppose their advance now, the columns spread out throughout the camp for some distance burning and pilliaging and capturing prisoners. A warm of soldiers and child scouts came up toward the Glandelinian generals headquarters. The gates of the fence wall around this building had been suddenly closed against them. The gates were of iron and heavily barred, and upon the top of the high wall a host of the warriors now appeared armed with rifles and machine guns. For a reinforcing Glandelinian troops had arived. Their officers however trembled with fear, but their leaders did not believe Penrod and Violet and her sisters really directed the assault, and called their officers who had made the retreat cowards and craidy cats and Imbiciles and Weaklings. At once the general himself assumed command of his men in this territory personally, and he ordered the walls of his headquarters and the roofs of his buildings manned with soldiers and instructed them to shoot and resist the assault with all their might.

Of course Buzz ub did not understand how the victory had been so easy, and began to believe that violet and her sisters really were not natural children but angels in disguise leading them on, but when violet and her sisters tried to explain that they were not celestial beings in the form of little girls, the men wouldn't believe it, and decided that they would do anything for them so to offend angels would be disasterous. As the troopers came before the gates, they met a terrific random fire of bullets and grape and canister, but the troopers were spread out too much and small was their loss though the firing seemed annihilating. general Goestorm was in command of these Glandelinian s and he was upon the wall urging his men on through the terrific contest when a shot from Penrods pistol brought him headlong down to the ground outside, dead. The rest of the Glandelinian officers were terrified and now as their loss caused confusion amongst the Glandelinians the officers depended upon the strength of the gates and commanded the men to continue such a hot fire that no one would dare expose themselves to batter down the gates. Everyone now was under cover answering the fire as fiercely as they recieved it, while Penrod stood beside his horse behind a tall stone and examined the gates carefully.

"Perhaps a bunch of men with rifle butts can batter down the gates." suggested Joice.

"No "replied Penrod" not even a number of battering rams would either."

"Then "returned violet, "Let us blow the gates asunder with our battering grenade fire. The gates open inward, and as I saw three heavy bars are the only things that hold it in place by means of stout staples rivited to the sheets of steel. Yet they cannot resist grenade fire. Penrod understood thatthere was unusual power in hand grenades and that a few of them would enable him to accomplish anything he desired and therefore he believed what violet said was true. The Glandelinians on the wall under the direction of their remaining officers continued their terrific fire at the assailants but they were well protected by all sorts of obstructions in the ground and were able to answer the fire with destructive effect without suffering much loss themselves. The ground below on both sides of the wall was thickly covered with the Glandelinians who had been hit and fallen off the wall. While the firing was at its hottest some of the Glandelinians saw Penrod hurl an object twardthe gate, and the explosion burst asunder the the huge staples that held the bars in place. A score thousand of their men could not have accomplished this feat, yet the small hand grenade did it with seeming ease. The second explosion burst the gate open, and the christian cavarly charged through the opening despite the hot fire poured upon them, and catching the Glandelinians on the rear caused them to suddenly throw down their arms and either surrender or be annihilated. The highest of the glandelinian officers were now as badly frightened as were the warriors who retreated through the camps in panic. But Christian soldiers were now well accustomed to war and pillage against the very wicked, and they had often in raids carried terror into any and many a Glandelinian army and territory, but here were seven small girls and one small boy with a column of christian cavarly and child scouts, the latter who it seemed could not even suffer a single loss in any close quarter fight, and the Vivian Girls who could not often be injured by any Glandelinian skill in warfare, their numerous soldiers and millions of death dealing weapons. More over the raiders not only defied the entire Glandelinian army in this location but one of the children by small hand grenades had torn asunder the huge gates of the headquarters of their dead general--as easily as they had been made of paper--and such an exhibition of enormous success in the face of all oddsmade the Glandelinian officers fear for their very lives.

and now a panic seized them and everybody turned and fled before the fury of the raiders who were setting everything on fire, blowing up things that couldn't burn, capturing wagon trains, drove of horses and everything an army subsists on. The The retreating Glandelinians swarmed after their dispersed cavarly and frightened officers, who abandoned this vast encampment to the raiders and the flames and started to cross the bridge of boats to the encampment of child slaves and elsewhere. There soon was a most desperate struggle struggle on this bridge amongst the glandelinians and the christian christi 57and the christian cavalry who intercepted them and tried to prevent them from getting across the bridge, and many were pushed into the water and obliged to swim, but finally the christian cavarly had cut through them and had gained the shore of that encampment, and they tore up the bridge of boats and drew them up on that side hoping and believing the stretch of open water would prevent the Glandelinians in reinforced from reaching this camp and prevent prevent the pillage and rescue of this camp full of child slaves. The child slaves of this encampment who had been terrified and abused by the Glandelinians and who had lost many friends among them through the cruel massacres were not only greatly astonished at the conflagrations and fighting raging in the other camp far beyond and by the sudden conquest of their masters, and greatly delighted, but were fla bbergasted that the raid should extend tward their own camp too. As most of the Glandelinians had fled to this camp they were also driven to it, the raiders herding up the child slaves in droves and sending them forward under escorts while soon here also everything went up in flames or were blown up. Violet and her sisters rode their horses t h rough the company streets of the conquered and now raided camp, and Penrod rode proudly beside violet or between them rather, while before the raiders the glandelinians continued to flee. Not hardly a Glandelinian soldier remained in all the main camp to oppose the triumphant raiders, the bridges of boats had been destroyed and everybody who had not escaped were captured.

Violet and her sisters appreciated the fact that a good blow had been struc in behalf of the children so cruelly murdered early that morning and rejoiced that they had escaped the slightest injury during the battle. Now it all happened they slightly suspected all right and therefore they were content in being safe and free to retain possession of the enemys outer north camps and destroy everything. So as they passed through the rows of burning tents not minding the heat in the least in their way to the abandoned generals headquarters Penrod tipped his lauge cap sideways on his bobbed head and folded his arms and sang in his best voice the following lines;;

"Oh here comes the great army of Fair Abbieannia;
It isn't a big one perhaps but oh g ally Nanna
But it scattered the Glandelinian cats quicker than wink
And made the enemy believe he swallowed a bottle of ink
Our little Fair Princesses are heroines, and so is their Loving Father;
Our foemen have vanished as if they were birds on the wing,
I guess that as fighters my sisters are quit quite the real thing."

"Why don't you give a little cred it to yourself!" inquired Joice. "If I remember aright, you did much more than we did ourselves. Only two of us were caught in the scrap, while you were fighting as fierce as a tiger all the time, time, and yet it is to us you give all the credit."

"And so he did" responded Jennie. "But I understand the reason he only scolnds our praise. He cares not about himself but only for us, and its only always us, as if we were the only ones."

"Yes but those who do the least often shout the loudest and so get the most glory" declared Penrod in answer. "Since you began your adventures against these scardy Glandelinian puney cats you and your sisters have done so much that the newspapers of every city in every nation of the world is said to be full of it, and yet you want me to be praised and not yourselves. The same trouble is on both sides "and he laughed.

"When they reached the generals headquarters with oscome of their raiders and which was an immense building furnished throughout in regal splendor, Penrod at Violets wish took formal possession and ordered his raiders to conflstigate even the finest rooms the building contained. There were many pleasant apartments. While the raiders were removing everything that could be removedone of the officers said to Penrod who was standing against the wall;

"Why my dear boy Prince" You whipped those Glandelinians exactly as if they were schoolboys, even though you only lend us to the fray. Those Glandelinians are cowed as though you had magicial powers, and that reminds me to demand from you an explanation. How did you do it all Prince? And where did all your wonderful leadership come from!!!!::::!!!!::::"

"Be patient sir" said Penrod smiling as he pointed tward Violet and her sisters. "The secret is not my own so please do not demand of me to give it out. Is it not enough for the present that we have succeeded to d night."

"Do not believe me ungrateful." answered the officer earnestly. "But surely I couldn't understand it was them."

"He always gives us all the cred it" laughed Jennie "if a million shots would have hit me and I survived he would I suppose say I was an angel."

"You sure dod appear as if you were one"said Penrod with a smile. "You and your sisters indeed are angels if not in spirit then in human form."

"Arevyou quite sure about that!"said Joice.

"Quite sure my dear."

"Then we have the best of you"sighed Violet."We'll admit we're the little angels all right but you're St Michael the Archangel."

"Indeed"said Penrod laughing"Then where is my flaming sword and where is Lucifer so I can vanquish him and make him run for dear life.."

"He wouldn't show himself in your presence"laughed Violet in turn."He's too cowardly I'm sure."

They now inspected the place which was filled with valuable goods stolen by the glandelinians from christian cities and towns.

"If we want to finish our raid and rescue all the children we can"said Penrod"We better move forward at once."And when they are all found and rescued, we'll all go to the christian lines again, and be as happy as before."

The raiders had carefully searched every room, that no one in hiding might have a chance to escape.Resolving to press the raid into the child slave part of the camp without any unnecessary delay, Violet and her sisters started for the stairway they discovered one of the boyscouts searching for something he had lost.He had been filled with anxiety over the discovery of some heavy loss, and had searched through an entire room and hallway searching underneath the beds, and divans and chairs before they were carried out by raiders, and behind draperies the raiders were removing and in the corners and every other possible place a lost article might be.He arose with a throbbing heart as he saw the beautiful little Princesses standing there watching him.

"Princess S "said he respectfully"Do you know what has become of my inside vest."?

"Your inside vest."exclaimed violet."Have you lost the vest."?

"Yes "said the boy."I have searched everywhere in the place, and cannot find it."

"But why bother about such a small thing as a military vest!""Inquired Daisy."A vest is only a vest, and you can easily get another one.But stay perhaps it was your vest which I gave to one of the raiders to remove."

"To one of the raiders."cried the boy."What do you mean!"

"Why during our helping in the search we found an gray vest hanging by a hall tree.We did not know it was yours and we handed it to one of the soldiers."

"Then"said the boy, in a despairing tone of voice"Your accidentall giving away that vest has ruined me, as well as yourselves Princesses for in that vest was concealed the important plans which Angelinia Aronburg gave me to give to Prince Penrod."

Viole The faces of violet and her sister s became very grave and serious when they heard this, and joice uttered a low whistle of surprise, and regret.

"Why on earth did you not warn us of that!"Jennie demanded almost severely."It was you who was careless not us. And why did you so long retain such a precious envelope in that old vest without giving it at once to our brother or any one of us! And why did you not wear the vest instead of having it off!You very You were very wron my lad in not confiding in us your faithful friends, the plans Angelinia Aronburg captured, for in that case the plans and your vest would not now be lost."

To all this the boy did not answer.He sat on the top step, with hanging head utterly disconsolate and fearing Gertrudes anger, and seeing this violet, and her sisters had abject pity for his sorrow.

"X Come"cried Jennie"I remember the man we gave the vest to.Let us go at once and find him and see if he still has the vest.He must even be now in the yard of the headquarters."

This suggestion roused the boy to action.He sat at once went down the stairs and threw open the door, closely followed by Violet, and her sisters.

But although they searched on both sides of the headquarters wall and in every possible corner and space they might find the man they failed to discover him among so many. After a half hours careful search the boy said sorrowfully;

"He must have burned it up not understanding its value.To us Princesses this will be a dreadful misfortune, for we are surrounded by dangers from which we have no protection.If I had given the plan to you we would soon see no enemy in the vinicity of weeping Willow Run."

Then he told violet and her sisters in a fewewords where Angelinia Aronburg had secured the plans during the raid.Violet and her sisters was much astonished, and when the story was concluded joice said to him;

"Where is your coat.?"

"I left it on my horses saddle."replied the boy.

"Then I advise you to get it at once."continued violet"For you must report to her of your loss.But don't fear I don't believe the man destroyed the vest and if he does discover the plans in the vest he'll sure bring it to us."

The boy went to get the coat and as he came out Penrod from another room suddenly rejoined his sisters.They told him of the boys loss.

"Where did you leave the vest before the man secured it?"demande the Prince anxiously.The boy told, and Penrod called an officer to him.

"Did any man have a vest in his possession?"Penrod demanded.

The officer thought for an instant and then asked;

"Do you mean that strange odd gray vest that Princess Violet gave him when I came in?"he asked/

"Yes---yes--"answered violet herself."Where is he.Tell us where is he?"

"Why he has gone off to another part of the camp to join the raiders and has put the vest on or under his saddle."

"This is terrible"declared Penrod, as the boy was ready to weep at his loss."But never mind my boy cheer up it's not lost and violet my dear sister is very shrewd and will remember the man.We are not ruined by that or at the mercy of our enemies."

"Well nevertheless"said violet decidedly"the incident is certainly distressing any way we can fancy it. It will be some time before we can find yhe the man I gave the vest to, but I know he is honest and if he discovers what is in the vest pocket he'll bring it to us..I believe my lad you fear Angelinia Aronburg will be angry.Say nothing to her about it, and I and my sisters will try and discover a way to recover the plan."

With saddened hearts they returned to the building, and as they entered the hall the boy asked of Penrod;

"What shall I do now since I have lost it?"

"Tell no one of your loss."Answered the Prince."It will be recovered.Be patient and fear not.No one will say anything to general Angelinia Aronburg."

The boy heeded this advice.and went awau away feeling better.The Vivian Girls and the others having ransacked the building of everything that rightly belonged to the christian generals started to go forth through the still smouldering camps.One of the main glandelinian generals had sent spies into the camps that had been abandoned but these spies returned with the news that the terrible christian raiders were still occupying the encampments and that they were far too seperated to enable a big force of cavarly to descend upon it and drive the raiders out.The enemy leaders had before this sought to plot and plan ways how they might get a good army of cavarly and infantry with artillery to recapture the camp.The raiders yet had not been driven out not could thevenemy dare to fightbtheir way once more into the camps, and therefore everything was in the power of the raiders.

Now it so happened that that same eventful evening when the raid was being conducted at another location , and moving entirely around the whole main glandelinian army in as destructive a fury as the devastating tornado, for hundreds of thousands of christian cavarly were doing the raiding, there chanced to pass down the company street of one of the deserted Glandelinian camps one of the victorious regiments of child scouts, led by Jean Saunders herself.

Jean Saunders carried her terrifying machine gun rifle, and had the bag of hand grenades slung over her left shoulder, as she urged her horse on and glanced down teard the ground being deep in thought as to the strange manner in which such a powerful glandelinian army had been forced to suffer so disasterously from a terrific raid, one of the most terrific raids in the war.

Suddenly the little girlscout espied a strange formed shoe lying upon the ground, just in the middle of the company street and directly in her horses path.She picked it up by inserting her sabre point into the toe of the shoe, and seeing it was a pretty one and absolutely different from any shoe she had ever seen in her life time, and just the right size for her own foot she put it into her supply bag.Soon after turning a corner of the company street, she came upon another shoe of the same sort the mate to the one she had before found and lying on the side of the company street near a half burned tent.This she also placed into the supply bag saying to herself;

"I have now a fine pair of shoes for my little little girlscout friend Susan Farrol who will be much pleased to find I have brought her a present from this part of the glandelinian encampment.And while Jean and her regiment turned into another company street, and rode on tward where the main body of raiders were supposed to be, violet and her sisters were giving orders to the christian officers to spread the raid as much as possible but to be careful and watch out for a any general assault that may come by the enemy to try and stop the raid;;;.To reach her arm of raiders Jean had several miles to travel through the conflagration s swept camps and to meet with where her sister and other girlscout leaders awaited her return with her regiment, but she was used to long tours and rode along the path humming cheerfully to beguile the time. few people as should have been said before ever passed t through this part of the Glandelinian encampments or territory except to spy for the Gln many dangerous Glandelinian sc out patrols were everywhere, and Emperor Vivion had never hoped for when he sent a messenger through the enemys territory whether he would reach there safely or not, and so never sent one. Now such a dangerous territory was in possession of the raiders, and all aflame or devastated, and Joan saunders knew this sector well and especially this part of it lying between Camps No one and two. she understood that the worst to be feared was the Glandelinian Omarian cavarly under generals Braggard or Baldwin dreaded by every christian cavarly general in any army for they were ferocious fighters. Choggen mugger was their first general but some time early in the war, he had resigned his command because he could not have things his own way. This Glandelinian cavarly was such an old organization that every one thought that it must have been there within the Glandelinian armies since the fierce war began, and each month of its existance the huge columns had grown more numerous and more well trained, their weapons were more classy and dangerous and they carried fearful unbreakable lances, long sabres and double barreled rifles and pistols. The strange hair dressing of these Glandelinians were the same fashion as any diff erent different little girl would wear their hair, except there was no bobbed among them, but instead of causing them to appear girlish they were fierce, fierce in face and dreadful in nature.

They carried standards with pictures of dragons, great serpents and fierce oodiles designed on them, beside their State and National flags and so brilliantly brilliantly colored were these standards, and so fantastic their gray uniforms uniforms and square topped hates that they were a very magnificent sight and imposing wave of men. Many christian generals had felt sure there was no use in opposing these great bodies of glandelinian cavarly. All this Joan knew well, but fortune had always favored her and her troopers in her journeys even through the enemy territory and although at times they had met many savage glandelinian cavarly columns, and defeated them with their own sharp lances and sabres without even a single loss to themselves, they had never to this day yet encountered the cavarly under the terrible Braggard, one of the worst and most treacherous enemies of the Vivien Girls. Indeed Joan was not even thinking of that dangerous general at all as she led her column of fifteen hundred boys, and eighteen hundred girls through the deserted company streets, but suddenly she heard the noise of many horses beating a tatoo on the ground in the distance. and felt a slight tremb i trembling of the earth, and saw an immense column of glandelinian cavarly coming down the company street. By the standards they were a part of Braggards army of cava l v cavarly. A great section of of it was thundering through other portions of the camps too with the purpose of stopping the raid and driving the raiders out.

Jean at first gave herself up for lost and her heart almost ceased to beat for the column was 10,000 strong and well equipped. she believed there was no way of escape. no christian general had yet ever dared to oppose the cavarly under general Braggard. But joan hated to retreat or even perish without showing the glandelinians of any sort that they she would allowe herself to be captured or slain without prot est. she signalled her column to form in battle array which they suddenly did, and then gave the order to throw a barrage of hand grenades. The explosions tore the first line of the enemy horse and horsemen down into mangled heaps of dead and wounded, and caused the horsemen of the second and third lines to be upset and tumpl tumble inconfusion amongst the first fallen. For a moment Joan scarcely believed what she saw, for she did not expect such a success. her success however encouraged her to strike the confused enemy again and this time a fierce volley of carbines and rifles was added to the shower of hand grenades, and the glandelinian cavarly column was severed in twain, and their leaders and the men howled in rage. Joan then took to deploying her column into two squares so as to give her troopers more freedom of action, and then she renewed the attack, but this time the explosions and their rifle fire made no impression upon the glandelinians whatever for they advanced with the lances at the ready but silently without yelling as was expected. One of her officers suggested that she give the order for them to flee, but she understood that would have been foolish for the horses of these Glandelinians could run as if driven by a gale. In a moment the foremost of the column closed with the child scouts, but Jimmie Vivian had seen this fray, and so had Jennie Turmer and Mildred Maxwell, and they came up with their own troopers and soon had cut through the glandelinian column in the fiercest fray of the raid yet, mangling the glandelinian column--a task by the fury of the triple attack that proved not only easy but excitable and agreeable. The survivors of the glandelinians were not confused or scared but as thier their own numbers were were badly depleted and they had not succeeded in inflicting harm on the christians they finally recoiled from the terrific encounter and disappeared toward the south...2.2.2.2.2.22

"My boy a boy and girlscout troopers and the others must be the best fighters in the world" thought Jean, as the whole column now moved forward. "For these gland elinian cavarly troops has been the terror of the christian generals since the war began and I alone have been with the help of James Vivian and the others been able to almost destroy a section of it. Yet it is singuliar that never before did I discover how powerful an intercession us girlscouts and boys too recieve from God because we are so good and Loving toward him Him. I wish He was here so I could kiss and hug him tightly."

She and her reinforcing column met no further assault from any of the enemy though by the sounds some terrific conflicts were raging elsewhere, and soon she reached an open square in the camp where stood a column of boy and girlscouts under Joe Greene.

"Great news, I have great news for you.""she shouted as Joe green and his girl and boy staff came forward to great her. "Prince Fenrod and his sisters have destroyed six miles of the enemy camps south, and ten miles of it north while we have been doing the raid up here, and have this evening aided by reinforcements sent by the aid of Our Dear Blessed Lord destroyed a portion of general Braggards division of cavarly by the might of our strong assaults."

This was indeed great news. As the two columns merged joe Green made her tell everything she heard about the success of the Princesses, as well as the details of her wonderful fight with the Omarian cavarly.

Then she seeing her rode up to Susan Farrol who sure appeared as a smiling angel in the glare of the fires.

"And now my dear friend."said Jean smiling in return, when all her news had been related for at least the third time "Here is a pretty present I have brought you from the Company Street." With this she drew the shoes from the provision bag and handed them to Susan, who gave her a dozen kisses in payment and was much pleased with her gift. The little girl though riding horses had never worn good shoes before, so now the possession of these, which were not much worn, filled the childscouts heart with joy. he admired the violet leather and the graceful curl of the pointed toes, and When she tried them on her feet, they fitted her as well as if made for her. All the time before this she had helped in the raiding as well as possible, and t now they had been heading for other sectors of the camp searching the neighborhood for more child slaves hidden away by the glandelinians. So now they all rode along very happily, followed by Jimmie Vivian and his Abbiennian cavarly escort and presently they came to a big camp left whole and entire by the fleeing foe.

They had no sooner got here when some one shouted;

"Look out girls" The glandelinian cavarly is coming."

Jean however who was somewhat in advance had no more time to turn her head when a number of glandelinian cavarly men surrounded her, angry because she was the leader of one of the bodies of raiders and and intent of slaying the girl for revenge. she realized her danger and expected it was her last but the boyscout column had come up and dos dispersed the rebels, and soon the whole column swarmed forward in a forest of men and child scouts and lances, and their angry yelling was terrible to hear and the glandelinians retreated in the greatest confusion. When she realized how this happened Jean was no longer afraid but continued to devastate the camp by setting fire to every thing untill her raiders had everything going up in flames. She was greatly astonished to find how she and her followers had again escaped in injury and won a conflict without loss. But she didn't know that those who were good and loving toward Violet and her sisters had oodles of good luck, and sure she was at times like a sister to them.

"With such good fortune as we have had this day" said Jean "We shall soon gather enough provisions to have sent to the christian armies that b need it."

"True" answered Joe green "and as the boy prince may decide to raid all around the glandelinian encampment I believe it is best for us to start and rejoin a portion of his line of raiders right away. Do you agree with me Jean?" he added.

"I agree with you" she replied. "If we must rejoin the raiders we may as well start before glandelinians assault us in such heavy numbers that we cannot escape at all. for it seems Braggards troopers are determined to nip the progress of the raid in the bud, but now we shall fool the enemy, and continue the raid, and when this raid is over Violet and her sisters I am sure will gain great credit for it for, but "she added with a smile" Will decline the honor and try to make it appear as if Fenrod did it all."

"Yes "laughed Jane Mellfort who was riding alongside of her," and He will claim they did it all so as that they'll get all the honor and glory glory."

You may be sure however that Violet and her sisters were not so well pleased to have so many of the Omarian cavarly try to frustrate the raid, and there were more conflicts than they had dared to expect even though the raiders by dint of power and fury managed to beat them off time and again with the greatest loss but suffered losses themselves now. These Glandelinians too were savage natured natured at all times and hard fighters too, braver than their wickedness allowed brave even to dare devil recklessness and indeed their tempers had not improved since their conquest by the raiders and the destruction of fifteen or eight teen miles of an encampments and the raid still progressing around the whole of Manley's mighty glandelinian army without much hinderance. Moreover the raiders were also eating up or destroying the provisions of the glandelinians, getting away with thousands and thousands of munition and provision wagons, and countless wagon and cavarly horses, cattle and everything you can imagine it being the fiercest and greatest raid of all times. But amongst the raiders was one foreigner h whose name was Aurtner George and he had shirked some of his duties and kept out of as much fighting as possible, and done things so much that the officers grumbled and complained untill violet and her sisters were heartily tired. Joice had the man sent to them them.

The man again appeared to be an English man and an officer in the army too.

"Shame on you and an officer" Joice said with an angry sneer on her face "to allow yourself to be driven out of an encampment by these glandelinian soldiers. Why do not you go back and fight them!"

"No human can fight against those devils." returned the man in an almost surly voice. "You Princesses can do wonders because you are either celestial children or under the magic protection of the guardian angels. I and my troopers escaped with our lives only because we were quick enough to make a fast retreat in time, but should I return with the soldiers to try to ecapture recapture that camp the same terrible glandelinian power that burst upon us will crush us all to atoms."

"Bah you are a coward" said Penrod himself sharply, and violet and her sisters looked at the man tauntingly.

"I am not a coward." said the Englishman. "I have slain in battle scores of these Glandelinian soldiers, by the might of my sabre and my good right arm, all my life have Glandelinian soldiers usually feared me. But no one would dare face the tremendous power of those Glandelinians. 'It would not be courage it would be folly, and sucide to attempt it. you say you are terribly against sucide."

"We are not demanding of you to commit sucide" said Violet hotly "Neither do we allow or demand of any one to go where we wouldn't go ourselves. and how do you know that angels protect us with magic. We escape with our lives because we do not run ourselves into danger impossible to escape from, and do not expect others to do the same either. The Glandelinians have no terrible power that you say. There is no record in any of our manuscripts or dairies that you have killed scores of enemies, and yet you say you have. If you run away from a squadron of Omarian cavarly there sure is a proof you are telling us a story. We have ourselves often dared to face what you call "the tremendous power of the Glandelinians and got ourselves into the tightest places and grave peril and are here to tell it. You have not the courage to attempt it. We will give you one more chance and if we hear any more reports of you you'll be dismissed in disgrace. We don't want our hearts hearts dragged down in the dust by any cowardly persons. If you believe you are afraid of the enemy it is better to resign now before you may do something that will cause you to be shot as a coward. Otherwise lose that cowardly fear and do the same all the other soldiers do. This is your last chance. So remember. Now go."

And the man went but he sure was red in the face. But this rebuke and the entrenching beauty of the Prince Princesses whom he had only now seen for the first time in his life cured him of his cowardlyness.

"I'll repent and meet their power with cunning" he said as he slowly rode away. "I wouldn't want to offend such good little Princesses as you are for all the world. I'd rather die first. Your very presence has cured me."

And with that he rode away. In fact however the man was not really a coward but he had never met such fierce Glandelinians as the Omarians and that for a moment had cowed him. Though there was no record of it he did slay in one battle twenty of his enemies single handed but had not said anything of it. As he went off one of the christian boyscouts came up and said to Prince Penrod;

"I have found where the Glandelinian boy prince is. We could steal over to that section, and capture him while he sleeps."

"No one can reach the headquarters where he is as he is well guarded" declared one of the girlscouts. "He also bears a charmed life and cannot be be injured."

"We do not intend to injure him" said Penrod. "We could hold him and by holding him make one of our highest generals surrender to get the boy back again."

"Does the Glandelinians fear that we are heading twa d tward that camp at all" said Jennie.

"I do not believe so" said the boyscout.

"Well" mused Penrod "There is surly surely some way to capture that boy. But for us it is a dangerous job. But no soldier could do it, and only the cunning ways of any one of my sisters could accomplish it."

"I could go myself and undertake the job in disguise." said violet. "I'm the strongest of my dear sisters despite my smaller size and by some stratagem I could manage to capture him and have him prisoner. He could not dare to try and defy me and no wickedness can stand against my cunning or that of my sisters. But I hate to do it though. I know I nor my sisters do not like to be stolen from our own friends and parents."

"Oh yeah" said Penrod almost getting sarcastic." And yet that did happen to you often. Getting soft hearted are you for even your enemies. The Glandelinians themselves would love it to even see you and your sisters in hell whether you sinned or not. They sure have no sympathy for you, and they have been cruelr to Jennie than any one of you. But maybe as it is a very dangerous stunt perhaps you are a little afraid."

"I'm not afraid" answered violet not paying attention to his slight rebuke. It is only the Glandelinian soldiers and bullies who are cowards. I hate to do it that's all but your rebuke is just in one way and not so in another. I did not say I would not do it. I intend to at any cost, but as you and my sisters are the best shooters, and better than any body with any weapon you must shadow and secretly cover me or my adventure will not be a success. Let's start for that direction."

They then moved forward, but in spite of this assertion, Violet was not so sure if she really was so brave as all that to try this stunt even though she was cunning. For several minutes she thought over this plan and that, and also prayed and tried to decide which was more to sure succeed for though she could escape incase of being frustrated she didn't want to fail, and never had she or her sisters failed yet. She had never seen the glandelinian boy prince Prince but had heard so many tales of him from scouts, and especially from the Gemini Supreme Persons, that she had learned to respect him in some ways, for though a glandelinian it was said he wasn't exactly a bad boy, and did sympitize a little only with the Glandelinian cause and thought his Father was crazy to carry on such an unholy war. But then it wasn't that he was not sinful like glandelinians are. Spurred on by the knowledge that she and her sisters could accomplish wonders in this raid if she captured this Prince, Violet as they neared the spot finally decided to trust more than ever in the help of God in this interprize and also her native wit to defeat a simple minded glandelinian boy Prince however powerfully guarded he might be. Therefore she did not decide to try it by an assault, for even if defeated the soldiers could escape with the boy, and so he turned her uniform coat inside out for in that way it was gray and being mistaken by the guards as a boyscout officer of the Glandelinians and telling the counter sign correctly she was admitted while in secret her sisters, Penrod, and the whole cavarly d squadron surrounded the house in the gloomiest sports around it. Prince George as his name was was not in bed as thought but was sitting up la playing checkers with one of the generals when an orderly came to him saying that a girlscout officer of small size and of unusual beauty had arived and desired an audience with him.

With many misgivings for he had heard of the raging raid though it had not penetrated here yet, and fearing lest it would be one of the Vivian Girl Princesses in disguise, the boy nevertheless ordered her to be admitted, and she soon entered the room, and bowed before him in mocked respect. Violet was a girl to him of a beauty that he could not hardly look upon, but she was nearly a head taller than him he only being six while she was now eight years of age. To him she had strange unatural flashing violet eyes and the strange white complexion a person would see on a child that is really angel possessed. Her temper and that of her sisters against anything wicked or when irritated against such things was something dreadful, and yet her face wore a strange almost unatural angelic expression, which increased when ever she smiled sweetly--often even when she meant the most righteous mischief against the glandelinians.....

"I have come" said she in a low voice "for I have often heard of you and really wished to see whether you really are a Prince and deserve to be rendered homage to. I am told too that your little Highness is one of the best looking boys in this territory and invinceble in fights, and therefore I have wished to come and see you."

Now Prince George could not find words to reply to this speech. As pretty as she was and n so unatural in appearance he disliked the appearance of the strange girlscout officer and believing it may be one of the Vivian Girls in disguise coming to try to spy on him, he was reallly afraid of her, and too he was full of deception, but understood that if she really was one of the sisters if of Penrod, nothing could decieve her, and therefore could find no way to sham his real feelings. So he wasted time before fi giving his answer, which he finally made in these words;

"I am not sure whether my sispicions are correct or not in fearing you are one of the Vivian Princesses in disguise, but if you are, I have had no quarrel with your Majesty or with your sisters, even though my country is at war against yours, and my only reason for coming here is to see the war. There's a raid going on I heard with the purpose to liberate the children made slaves, and to recover the goods our side had plundered from your cities and towns. If you are one of those Princesses, you had better move out before you are captured."

While he was saying this, Violet had been studying the boys face stealthily from the corner of her eyes, and she had said to herself;

"He is so small and o innocent that I believe I can capture him alone and with ease. He does not seem very terril terrible, and I suspect that if I do capture him we can frighten the Gland elinians in leaving us alone if they want us to leave their Princes alone. Then aloud she said to him;

"I wish you or to invite you mighty little Prince, and your friend the general there to visit my poor headquarters in this encampment, where all my followers shall do you honor. Will you come." In this she told the truth. Though he would have been captured no harm would have been done to him.

At pres present "replied Prince Georle or George uneasily;

"I must refuse your good invitation."

"To morrow there will b e feasting, and beautiful dancing girls, and games and fireworks and so forth (within the christian though)" said the girlscout speaking as if eager to intice him and at each word coming a step nearer to where he stood but so slowly that she didn't even seem to move an inch.

"I could not enjoy them while a battle is going to rage" said the boy decidedly.

"Are you sure of that?" demanded the girlscout, and by that time she was close enough beside Prince Geo ge George. "u suddenly she leaned forward and threw both of her strong little arms around the boys little body, holding him in a grasp that was like vice. a vice. Now the general with pistol drawn sprang forward to rescue his boy Prince friend, but violet kicked out viciously with her foot and landed with the toe of her shoe squarely on his stomach-- a very tender place to be kicked especially if one is fat, and he sure was a "Fatty". Then still hugging the Prince tightly, just as the guards outside were overpowered and boyscouts came in she called aloud-

"I've got him. Bring in the ropes."

Instantly four boys came in and bound the boys hands. At her direction thet they next siezed the general, who was still rubbing his stomach stomach and bound him hand and foot. Then soldiers appeared and carried the man away while the scouts had charge of the boy Prince. With a laugh of happy triumph, Violet now led her two captives into a well lighted room calling to Penrod and her sisters to follow inside but to retain the troops around the building to prevent any Glandelinians from gtttting in getting in. Great in deed was the astonishment of Prince Penrod, and violets sisters, when they saw that the Glandelinian Prince of the mighty Glandelinian Ruler had been captured by her alone. most of the boy and girlscouts who were admitted into the building now crowded around violet and the boy and jeered at him, and some of them would have struck him had not Violet cried out;

"Hands off o comrades. Remember he is only a small boy."

"Yes" leered one of the girls couts. "But the Glendeliniens don't care what you are when they have you a prisoner do they!"

"but be reasonable" said Violet pleadingly "At his age sure it ain t his fault what the enemy soldiers do. and remember too he is my prisoner not yours. I can do as I wish with him myself."

"Well violet dear, what are you going to do with him?" Inquir inquired Penrod."

"We shall hold him for ransom on the decree that we won't liberate him unless the chief of the enemy generals forms a sworn written statement and han ds it to us through a courier during a momentary truce in which it states they'll let us alone hereafter. But nevertheless no one must harm him remember or it won't do us any good. He is a pretty boy too, and gentle. This general we captured may be able to tell us something we wish to find out."

"Penrod scowled at the general, but said nothing. When it was made sure that the building could not be recaptured by the enemy no matter how big a cavarly force they bring against it, violet and her sisters and wished themselves to be alone in the big lighted room, and then ordered the general and the Glandelinian Prince to be brought before them, and their bonds removed. They came sadly enough feeling they were in serious straits and at the mercy of these Vivian Girl Princesses should they intend to be cruel to the prisoners. But they had no such intention, not especially to the boy, but the information they wished to obtain they decided to get no matter what was done to the general. The boy Prince faced violet and her sisters with a dignified bearing that indicated both pride and courage, though he was over awed and inwardly afraid because of their almost supernatural beauty. Jennie especially attracted his attention and violet too who had discarded her disguise.

"Well little youngster." said violet in a cheerful tone, because she was pleased with her success "One of your boyscouts played a very mean and clever cl sce scheme on my our best sisters (indicating Jennie with her hand) and made her suffer badly, so we deemed it right and proper that we should capture you by my being a little treacherous too. But as you are such a small boy, and appear gentle enough, we won't do you any harm as you may fear, for we,ll only hold you as a sort of little host. put let me advise you to while you are our prisoner to obey our every little whim without question or delay don;t get angry or ugly, and you'll soon regret when the time comes when you will be free that you may have to leave our presence. Maybe then you won't want to go at all. We Princesses are not cruel and though I captured you I nor my sisters mean no harm. I'll retain my promise and you'll feast with us in the christian lines to morrow more as our guest then a prisoner. but you are one just the same. So remember behave and we,ll be your friend. Do you understand me?"

Prince Prince George bowed, but made no answer. Then she turned to the general and said with at first a little frown;

"As for you I am sure you have the bearings of where the child slaves who are going to mas be massacred to morrow are contained. I notice you are altogether too fat and awkward to do any real fighting but would desire if possible to join in some of that murdering of children. Well we do not care to allow it to be done and therefore I wish you would tell me where that camp is located so we and our raiders can liberate them and bring them to the christian lines."

"If that is something I would not tell." answered the general.

"I thought so "smiled violet mischieviously, while her sisters giggled. "Well choose your way. We cannot force you. It may be however that I and my sisters can use a big fatty as you are for a nice pinch pincushion."

"What "! Cried the Glandelinian general in horror "Would you stick pins into a great general like I'm."!

"It certainly would be great pleasure to do so. And why not." returned Violet. "You are as fat as a pincushion as you must yourself admit and when ever I or my dear sisters here need a pin I could have you brought to me."

"but Princess" he argued "They say you are so goody goody and do not be cruel. Yet you would do that."

"It is not a matter of cruelty at all." retorted Jennie who was always fiery against Glandelinians. "What my dear sister means is you're going to tell us what we desire to know or otherwise we'll do something that will make you give in. Those children are more important to us than you are and we mean to save them so there."

"But I'm not supposed to tell."

"Anybody got any pins" demanded violet.

Unfortunately nobody had. Then she thought of something still better. She laughed at the generals frightened look, and ad ed;

"By the way are you terribly ti~~c~~kished ticklish!"

This was a question this fat general always had been dreading. Fat people usually are so ticklish you cannot even touch him, and yet this man was a record breaker for being ticklish. He gave a moan and shook his head.

"Unless you tell me what I and my dear sisers would love to hear I and my dear brother" continued violet should love to tickle the bottom of your fest or your sides with a feather or a broom straw. Unless you give in to us we'll command some one to hold you while two of the boy scouts will remove your shoes."

"Oh your Little Majesty" pleaded the general "I-----I----"

"Don't call me Yo r Your little Majesty and I&m not any such thing to yo u" cried violet, while she and her sisters were convulsed with la ughter. "Tell us where that child slave camp is and we'll leave you alone. But you sure do not seem to be in a merry mood."

"I feel merry indeed I do your Princess I do." protested the prisoner anxious to escape the tickling. "your Princesses Your Prince, Your Prince, I---I--mean

I mean your Gracious Excellency, no I mean Ill I'll do it I'll tell"

But as he professed to be merry,his round red face wore an expression of horror and anxiety that was really comical.

"Tell us where it is then!"commanded Jonnie, who also was greatly amused. The prisoner gave a sigh of relief, and after clearing his throat, nand trying to repress his sobs he gave accurate direction as how to get there."

"Yes but that is not enough"said Jolce."you'll have to lead us there so we will get there before two this morning."

"nd for our raiders is the route safe from interference?"demanded Penrod.

"Yes."

"Be sure you will not do anything treacherous"said Hottie giving the prisoner a sharp look.I now the difference between a tiger and a lap dog.You are the lap dog and we're the tigers.Bear the warning in mind and do not try to fool us."

For after all her success in capturing these two, violet and her sisters were a little afraid of these two and realized especially the fat general had to be watched.

The encampments in which Jean saunders and her troopers were moving through stood between the main redoubts of one of the Glandelinian positions and the Weeping willow Run, and a large and dusty Company street wound in this burning camp leading from the camp tward these positions.This path was used by general Manleys messengers, and captured children and child slaves and also soldiers captured by the enemy during battles and so forth were also sent by this way to toil in the redoubts and camps behind it.Jean had spread her column into two long formidable lines that they could give a good army and probably prevent the troopers from being molested by the Glandelinian cavarly, for they really were were surrounded by unseen dangers, and often during their progress for ward they could hear gusts of heavy firing.None of the child scouts on this occasion were seperated much from each other and their leaders cautioned their followers to be very careful.Jean realized that in going through this portion of the enemys territory she was sure undertaking a dangerous adventure and there was no certainity that she or her followers would return safely to the christian lines.But they were brave, and to save child slaves and capture provisions would enable them to do what the world would prise them for, so it was deemed best for Jean to continue her side of the raid. he was a brave little girl, and she was often forced to take chances that even Violet and her sisters were spared from. A passing soldier scout, had brought news to Jeans raiders that Violet vivian had made a prisoner of a Glandelinian boy Prince, and that Jimmie vivian and his raiders were devastating a great section of camp tward Randall and Side Lights Run, but these conquests and struggles were matters which however interesting, did not concern Jean just now.They were more anxious over the report that the Omarian cavarly under Braggard or Baldwin had become more reckless in their fury than ever, so Jean decided to try and avoid further encounters with these soldiers as much as possible, and especially to be careful that she would not encounter the fierce cavarly called the "Wheelers"

However it was necessary for Jean and her raiders to cross the path that led from the burning encampments tward the redoubts, but once avoiding these redoubts she and her followers were not sure to meet with any storm of fire, or a dreadful assault, for she had resolved to cut through the camp and so reach to the far rear of the redoubts without entering that region, for should the redoubts be manned by an army of soldiers they might open upon her column a terrific fire of rifles and cannon and annihilate all entirely.For an hour or two she had found the riding easy enough, but then after leaving the camp she began to meet resistance from unexpected sources.The Glandelinian troopers were heavier in numbers and tried at times to bar the approach of the h child sc out columns, and they had to fight their way through to get any where at all, shooting, stabbing, lancing, and bom bing and so forth, end finally they came to a spot where a long wave of Glandelinian cavarly under general Rinkitink effectually barred Jeans further progress. Jean was dismayed at first, when she encountered this obstacle, but she gave orders to her followers to draw weapons and charge.The charge was made with such vehemence that the glandelinian wave parted into many sections as if by magic being torn asunder by the vigorious ness of the charge, and all the child scouts and their cavarly escort passed freely but the cavarly escort suffered some loss , and one boyscout was killed. in the fierce encounter. The Glandelinians however wheeled, rallied and counter charged, deploying to line up across their way, but the struggle though renewed did not favor them, they were easily cast aside, although usually any number of cavarly men could scarcely have drove the Glandelinians so easily into confusion.No one was lost on the child scout side this time and a heavy loss was suffered by the Glandelinians.Jean however was somewhat worried by the evidence of a strength amongst the enemy that she heretofor had been ignorant that they possessed, for defeated twice in a disgraceful manner, the Glandelinians rallied and renewed the assault with redoubled vigor, testing their power of attack in many ways, but the girl and boy scouts and their cavarly escort found that no column was too big or vigorious to worst, and naturally enough all the girlscouts gained courage by frustrating the enemy, and Jean became confident that she and her column could protect thme themselves in any emergency.When presently during one of those squabbles, a Glandelinian lancer rode tward her with the purpose to run her through grunting horribly, she jabbed the soldiers horse in the side with her own lance and sabred the Glandelinian across the shoulder twice. caring with rage as his horse reared he strove to jab her in the neck with the lance but she again managed to dart in properly and by swerving her horse suddenly was missed by the lance, and then the soldiers horse fell from the effect of his wound, throwing his rider headlong. He then regaining his lance tried to run her horse through the body to throw her and have her at his mercy but she sabred him across the back before he could do so, and he fell stretched out writhing in pain.

The girl only laughed merrily merrily at this incident and renewechor advance with her constently victorious followers. put the cavarly of the foe had had enough of it and the christian raiders were not again molested. At a distance a Glandelinian cavarly patrol watched the raiders pass without starting any more in their direction, and the "Gargylian Curde"Glandelinian cavarly also much dreaded by christian cavarly leaders crept out of out of their path as they approached, and disappeared beyond the redoubts. Thus everything favored Jeans advance to rejoin her main body, and she and her followers made such good speed that by eleven in the night shey encountered the main body of raiders and rejoined them.

Our story must now return to one of our characters whom we have been forced to neglect.The temper of James Vivian was not sweet in favor of the enemy under any circumstances and when he had a grievance against the Glandelinians he was inclined to be quite dangerous. so when violet and her sisters and Penrod conducted the raid along the central sector of the enemys camps and spread around the Glandelinian army to the north camp capturing and burning everything in their way, andhad captured the Glandelinian boy Prince, James vivian had moved in his own raid elsewhere.Before leaving for the raid at Penrods pro position, James vivian had managed to glance through one of Emperor Vivians Record books and discovered descriptions of many things violet and her sisters had suffered at the hands of the enemy, and had therefore became very very angry. Also when violet captured the boy Prince the enemy not yet having learned of it tried desperately to stop James Vivians advance of destruction around the main Glandelinian camps but to no avail. owever while moving forward tward Congoes Junction James vivian saw the Glandelinian hordes lead in person at this section by general Braggard, and they deployed into three huge columns stretched out in a long wave to oppose his advance.He realized too that if he didn,t stop the progress of the christian raid disaster would follow.He saw too good portions of the encampments filled with christian cavarly and realized from this that the encampments here also were in the hands of the raiders.A terrific explosion too had occured somewhe somewhere, one of similiar force that was made by Penrods raiders before after Jonnie 'o sad mishap with Fred Lowden, and therefore Braggard was nervous. In sudden anger, aroused fiercely by the sight of the Glandelinian warriors, and the realization that unless he tore through that wave he was in the power of the dangerous Omarians under Regoes and Bragg ard, James vivian also deployed his own cavarly just as the glandelinians with their long lances at the ready were moving forward in a charge at thunderous gallop.The christian lancers also prepared their weapons at the ready, and just as the foremost of the Glandelinians reached within a few hundred yards, the christian columns suddenly yelled fiercely and dashed forward in a wave of their own, and the two opposing columns closed in a fearful shock. It was a terrific conflict, and great loss occured on both sides, but the Christian cavarly attacked the Glandelinians so fiercely that the big and powerful Omarian column, which did hot did not expect a counter attack, was to say as to say doubled up by the pressure of the assault, and forced to recoil in some confusion.The great weight on the on pressing christian cavarly columns hurled into retreat the Glandelinian column just behind the one demolished, and the christian cavarly still crashing on struck the next column and drove it into panic, so that within twenty minutes after a desperate conflict at hand to hand the whole wave of Glandelinian cavarly horrified at their frightful losses was recoiling though still struggling and shouting and in the mixup being cut or shot down by hundreds until they could tear away from the maddened christian hordes and retreat to a safer distance.. Dead horses were piled up in a heap, and two thousand Glandelinian soldiers were dead, and five thousand wounded, Finally after some desperate efforts General Braggard, managed to rally his shattered columns and rushed forward himself to the assault, very angry indeed, and hoping by the sudden collision to bear the christian line before him and cut it to pieces. James Vivian was ready for him, and a second time the christian wave of troops tore their way through the Glandelinian hordes, and this time the christian troopers threw all precautions to the winds, and followed the retreating Glandelinian soldiers tearing through and through and back and forth through the masses of confused enemy soldiers using every weapon that was available. The Glandelinians then tried to close in on them, but the assailents assailents therefore fought more viciously and savagely, and soon freed themselves from their enemies and cut their way through, driving the Glandelinians into hopeless confusion. The Glandelinians fought with reckless bravery, but the Concentinian and other christian cavarly were now so wild and excited, that it was not safe for any one to stand in their way. None of the men could bear up in the pressure of the raiders assault, and when one or two columns rallied and tried to stop the progress of the christian troopers, the assails assail ants cut them to pieces and sent them flying for shelter.

The Glandelinians now retreated helter skelter, and coursing over the fields after them, James Vivian found himself approaching one of the child slave camps full of sleeping slaves and without pausing to think where it might lead he and his assailing troopers crossed over and proceeded on their way. A few minutes later a great column of fresh Glandelinians stood in his path. It was the division of General Cor, but James Vivian led another assault, and the assailents literally rode through them without slackening their speed and to the scare and horror of the suddenly awakened child slaves a terrific cavarly fight raged in their own camps. A portion of the Glandelinian horde was annihilated and the rest retreated through the camps in wild disorder. It was at this moment that James Vivian while his columns were on their mad dash after the enemy turned in at the gates of the camp courtyard, and as he was dashing one way with his troopers, anoty another cavarly force under Bilbil was coming another to rally the confused soldiers, and therefore they crashed into each other with great force and there was more savage fighting in the child slave camp than before! The Glandelinians for the moment tore through the christian column, and one Glandelinian soldier made for James Vivien, who however was a very powerful fellow, almost as strong as Jack Evans and with a side sweep of the handle of his lance he sent the man off the saddle sailing through the air, over the horses head, and he landed on the ground outside the gates, where where his hat rolled into a ditch, and he lay still. General Bilbil was somewhat dazed by the unexpected encounter, but he continued his rush upon the christian vav cavarly rather blinding blindly, and so struck the christian raiders a terrific blow but in the midst of the fierce fighting, which terrified the child slaves into flight for a safer spot, Bilbil fell from his horse mortally wounded and Corgoes was shot through the head, the enemy being deprived of two great leaders.. Strange to say since this time James Vivian did not do much raiding himself. All during the time violet and her sisters did the raiding, James Vivian did all the fighting and fought Glandelinian cavarly continulously for nearly five hours that night.

The poor but righteous Vivian Girl Princesses were now forced to be in a righteous bad humor as they progressed toward the encampments of the child slaves for one of their orderlies had come from scouting to say that a number of the Glandelinian prisoners including the fat "guy" had rebelled and he refused to lead the raiders toward the child slave camps for fear they might be saved and would rather see them all massacred on the morrow!

"Bring them prisoners here to us" Penrod cried.

"Yes and lose no time" added Jonnie savagely. "A good whipping may cause them to change their minds."

So the orderly collected a number of men and went to fetch the rebellious Glandelinian prisoners, while Violet and her sisters ordered a number of soldiers to cut switches from the bush bushes, Jonnie having an ugly pout on her face. One of the other Glandelinian prisoners close by had been ordered to stand at attention and as he was very close to Jonnie she overheard him say a terrible most horrible and shocking blasphemous word against God, and all in Heaven combined. Violet and her sisters feeling as they do toward God could never hear even a bad word from anybody. At once she flew into a terrible rage, and slapped the Glandelinian prisoner twice with her hand---- blows that tingled too, for her hand though small and hard had force behind the blow, and when the rascal blasphemed she was not inclined to be gentle. The Glandelinian soldier however recieved the blow without a shrinking or uttering a cry although they stung his pride far more than his body. And too she had slapped him with a scream of anger. She alone however had heard the blasphemy and therefore Penrod and her sisters were so startled at seeing her slap the soldier that they thought he had assaulted her and drew their pistols and would have shot had she not hastily explained why she slapped him. Therefore the prisoners would have received a beating, had not the orderly returned at this moment and attracted the attention of the now angry Vivian Girl Princesses. The orderly also had brought the report that all the child slaves at that camp were loaded down with chains during their toiling hours, and the reason why they were going to be massacred was they were so weak and ill they could scarcely work much much less work in the fields and redoubts and elsewhere. Penrods and also his good little sisters eyes were dimmed with sorrowful tears, when they learned how the child slaves were thus abused, and how hep helpless their plight was.

"Why do you refuse to lead us on further toward the child slave camp?" demanded violet in a harsh voice, as the glandelinian prisoners stood before her and her sisters defient and haughty. "You ought to consider yourselves well off that we gave you quarter. You would not give me or my sisters quarter if we were your prisoners."

"We do not wish them rescued."

"Your wishes and our wishes are not in the same boat" retorted violet with a sneer. "Why do you wish to see them murdered?"

"Because they have not the strength to perform the toil their overseers demand and therefore are absolutely worthless." answered one of the prisoners."

"You shall we whipped then unless you continue to proceed with our wished." said Jennie herself as she directed the soldiers to produce the lashes made from the branches of the bushes. This terrified the prisoners for they were only overseers themselves most of them, and they feared a lashing so much they'd lay down their lives to avoid it. So they readily gave in promising they would lead to the very spot. Violet then turned to Joe Green who was close to her and commanded "Get me that big whip with seven lashes. I'll give it to the orderly so he can use it on them if they start to rebel again. Now hurry,"

Penrod himself as he was retutning to where Violet and her sisters were grouped together he met a girlscout riding up on a horse who asked politely;

"Can you tell me where to find the Vivian Girl Princesses."?

"They are over yonder" Replied Penrod "but hold, who are you and what do you want to see them for. I don't remember ever seeing you before and as you are a stranger you'll have to show me a permit. "

Penrod was in an angry and ungracious mood because the proper camp of child slaves had not been raided yet. She however showed the permit, and told him that her name was Susan Farrol.

"I see. I believe I have heard that name but never met you before so excuse me for being suspicious. Why do you wish to see them."?

"I have some important information to give to them." answered the girl who really was Susan Farrol. "The information would do them good and our own cause in general."

"You may go to them if you desire." said the boy. "but we careful not to run into any Glandelinians."

"Why should they be able to harm me who can fight just as good as any girlscout." Inquired the child innocently. "But I am grateful for the warning and I will try not to encounter encounter the foe."

As she started to ride off the boys eyes fell upon the vest she had on and recognized recognized it has the one the boyscout claimed to have lost. It was something in the form of a Glandelinian boyscouts vest.

"Stop" she cried in an excited voice, and the girl obeyed wonderingly.

"Tell me" she continued more gently "Where did you get that vest!"

"A soldier gave it to me this evenig evening." she answered. "It was captured in some general headquarters building which was not destroyed.

"From whose n general."

"No one told his name."

"Maybe general Negoes.!"

Maybe. Is it not pretty in its designs!" asked the girl. The soldier said violet gave it to him and he presented it to me, and it fits me perfectly."

By this time Penrod was trembling with eager joy, which of course the little girl could not understand.

"Whose command of girlscouts do you belong to little Maid!" he asked.

"I am in the command of the Vivianites, and my father is in the army too."

"Well Susan Farrol is a pretty name, and yet as I can see you are of Foreign birth I,m surprised you are one of our girlscouts as few would ever want to be one so I give you good credit and honor for it. I am Prince vivian of Abbieannia, and the vest you are now wearing belongs to one of my boyscouts. It was not cast away as my sister thought but was lost. Will you let me have the package that is in the vest.!!"

Susans eyes filled with tears for she understood she couldn't deny the Prince.

"Must I give up my pretty vest then?" she asked sadly."It is the only best one I ever owned."

Penrod was sorry for the poor child, but though also he understood how important it was that violet or his sisters should regain that envelope and plans he didn't care how it was done as long as they recieved it.so he said almost pleadingly;

"I don't want you to give up the vest Susan but there is a important envelope with papers in it that Violet,and her sisters my sisters are search searching for.Please let them have the important papers susan.See they will re reward you for it handsomely.But you can retain the vest."

On this information the little girl did not hesitate.She had desired more than anything to please Violet and her sisters, for through them alone she really had been given a girlscout officers commission, and she hated to go against them in any way.Therefore she smiled and w said;

"That is why I wanted to see them.But as you are a Prince and their brother I will give it to you to give to them."

"No that can't be."said Penrod."If your mission was to give it to them in person you must do it.Do that and indeed I and they will promise to grant you any favors you may ask of us." And he proposed to lead her to his sisters. Penrod had seized Susans horse by the bridle and led her tward led her tward where Violet and her sisters were grouped.At that moment a party of glandelinians rode past, but were defeated in the melee that followed and through a blunder in the intense gloom violet not recognizing him and believing he was a glandelinian boyscout and hoping it was Gerald Starring strove to capture him.She urged her horse tward him with upraised sabre, and the gloom also decieving him he clashed with her, and held so gallantly that her blows could not even unsword him.Susan was horrified by this scene, and Penrod realizing he had no time to waste, rushed at the furious Princesse with the purpose to cut her down.She rushed at him with lance at the ready but he stood up in his saddle with his own ready and facing the furious but astonished little queen met her lance with his by a sudden side thrust and with irresistible strength disarmed her in a hurry.But she drew with the suddeness of lightning from a her bosom a long sharp dagger and with the swiftness of a lightning flash aimed a blow at Penrods heart.He struck it as it came hurling tward him with his sabre and sent it flying away.Violet realized the boy scout was a terrible foe and unless she could manage to outwit him she would be either slain or his prisoner. She called upon her angels and God First to protect her, and charged him again with her cutlass drawn, but suddenly from somewhere there was a great flare of light that suddenly enveloped them, and both saw to their to their horror they had been fighting each other by mistake.

"My God, Penrod"she screamed "I---I--- though you was------"

"And violet, my Heavens and we've fought each other for real for the first time."exclaimed Penrod in equal horror. Thanks be to God we didn't hurt each other.We were decieved by the darkness.."

Violet rode up dejectedly.

"Oh I hope I didn't hurt you"she almost sobbed.

"No I hope the same with you."He cried."curses on those Glandelinians.They were the cause of our blunder."

"I It was the light that prevented us from doing ourselves harm"said Violet recovering herself. though she was terribly shaky.Oh Heavens what if you had killed me or I had killed you. Thank God my sisters didn't witness the fight for if they had come to my aid you would have been lost."

"I believe that"said Penrod wiping the beats of sweat that had come on his forehead."But where did the light come from. It's gone now and sure it was no camp fire or search light."

Violet could not understand herself where the light had come from, but then suddenly she remembered her prayer but did not say anything on that.The coming of the light was very mysterious, and its going too equally as mysteriously.Susan had been so horrified by the scene that she was still more horrified when it was seen Penrod and violet were the ones that had had the terrific fight.

"For Heavens sake don't say nothing to our sisters about it"Begged Penrod."They would feel terrible even though it happened through a blunder."

"I won't say a no word"promished Violet faithfully. "But oh Heavens Penrod I'm so shaky and upset.I'm nearly sick.I hope it won't never happen again."

"For Heavens sake too Violet"said Penrod don't worry so much about it.A mistake often is unavoidable and it was the angels that possess you that saved us both even though we can call it a draw. We need some little blunders sometimes to test ourselves out.We I We always have sham fights when I try to learn you things and in this real scrap you held out gloriously.I feel positively sure had it been Gerald Starring you assaulted instead of me it would have had a different ending, and he would have come out second best, and would have either been out for good or your prisons prisoner.I wish it had been him instead of me.But through this scrap we had I now understand the strange power that protects you and your sisters.Had I really been an enemy and meant you harm I believe this wai would have had a bad ending for me too.Let 's go to your sisters, and lets forget the sad incident, for susan has a very important document which she wished to give to you.I hear the raiders have raided the child slave camps as you wished and are bringing them to our own part of the camp.We'll soon have to beat it too I am afraid for when the enemy come at us too strong we'll be getting the worst of it."

So violet controlled her sobbing, and went with Penrod tward where her sisters were.In fact they did not even realize she had not been at their side and were surprised to see her coming with Penrod and susan, but that what surprised them still more was that Violet had no weapon whatever except her carbine and two pistols.However as Penrod showed interest more on the plans and of the slaves now free and the overseers captured with them he prevented their questioning by saying to one of the Overseers,

"Give me the confounded keys which unclock these chains, that I and my sisters and our followers may set these poor children at liberty."

"And be quick about it."Screamed Violet .

"And if you don't obey you'll be shot on the spot."added Jennie.

The slave driver fearing the boy Prince of Abbiannia, and his sisters too tremblingly obeyed the command, and Penrod therefore removed all the chains from the child slaves, and comforted them, especially more so of those who were crying or sobbing, telling them that they would slave no more, and if any of them had parents living they would soon be restored to the homes in the countries where they rightly lived.Penrod command most of the other soldiers to lead a raid elsewhere for all the slaves should be recovered before the raiders should began a safe retreat to the christian lines.The chains of the slaves had been all rivited fast to their ankles and wrists but the christian soldiers managed to severe the bonds free and set all the child slaves free.They were very grateful as you may really suppose, and the eldest of them agreed to support Prince Penrod in whatever action he commandes.Commanded.The number of slaves could not be made out, but nevertheless the slaves were continually being brought forty, the guards and overseers having fled in terror at the approach of the raiders, and soon the chains had been removed from these child slaves also.The little slaves had been treated so cruelly by the glandelinians, and so many of them had seen their child slave friends murdered in massacres that they were amongst the eldest ones eager to become boy or girlscouts so they could fight and get revenge on the glandelinians, so Penrod didn't hesitate in granting them their request but formed them into companies gave them weapons secured during the raid, each company being given their own leader, and being promised uniforms when they reached the christian lines before morning.Then Penrod called the leaders together and instructed them to ride the horses given to them and their comrades in good order for the child slaves or the elder ones thus given the commission said they could ride horses.

They readily agreed to obey him and being armed as they wished Penrod signalled the order for the raiders to bri begin the retreat before Braggard would bring all the entire Glandelinian cavarly upon them and cause disaster.As the raiders were recieving their swift signals to start the retreat violets sisters rode up to her and Jennie asked;

"What happened Violet dear.You have lost yout weapons and you look so blue."?

"Susan Farrel not having heard Penrod request violet not to say anything about the fight said;

"Penrod fought with her.She attacked him in the dark.She thought he was Gerald Starring."

This news however did not upset her sisters atall for they often had fought each other fiercely through blunders too but only when disguised, and neither had ever been able to whip the other.

"But poor violet dear"said Jennie"Why be so blue about it.We fought each other often too by mistake. Brace up sis, and forget it."

"I sure wish it had been Gerald Starring"said Catherine hotly."If it had been Violet would have won the victory. But that shows now that even when in a real fight none of us can worst Penrod.Now we can sure rely on him for protection.Cheer up violet.It was God's will that should be just to show you and us what an expert Penrod was.Don't you remember you said one day you feared that if you and he really had a angry fight you might worst him at that.Now you did, and he whipped you.That shows what That shoes what he is Violet, and that should relieve you.Nobody can do you or us harm when he is with us.That's right Violet.You're smiling..now you are laughing.It's only a joke after all.But Heavens we would like to have seen the fight."

"But"said Violet getting sober again,if you had I'll bet you would believe I was in trouble and if you came to my aid I'm afraid we would have one brother less."

"Then God be praised we didn't."said Joie."We heard the sound of a conflict between two persons but thought it was a Glandelinian and a christian soldier fighting."

Just then Penrod rode up, and when he learned that his sisters heard of the fight, he burst out laughing, and then so did Violet for after all it was funny when a person came to realize it. Penrod however realizing the retreat was soon well under way had been growing more and more uneasy and told his sisters he and they must get away from this territory as soon as possible if they wished to retain their little Prince prisoner.

Just then a big Glandelinian column of cavarly came dashing up, but before they could intercept them, or even unsling a rifle to fire, Penrod and Violet and her sisters, with the Prince in their midst had rushed down the Company Street as fast as their horses could go, and out into the courthouse of the buildingmeaning to escape at any cost.Susan Farrol followed them her horse going as fast as it could, but a lance had almost hit her, and turning in her saddle she brought six glandelinians down with well aimed shots, and then resumed her retreat.It was that at this moment that Colonel Damon Cream in his mad dash down Company Street Number one turned in at the gates of the courtyard with his cavarly squadron of "Omarian Grays, and as he was coming one way, and Penrod and Violet and her sisters were going the other, they ran into each other in a suddenness that was surprising.The conflict was short but fierce, the Colonel was pierced through the eye by Penrods lance and fell from his horse, his followers were suddenly dispersed by the fury of the Princesses, and by the wildness of Susan Farrol who was a fierce as a little "Hell" in a scrap, and the enemy was so broken up that they could do nothing to stop the escape, and the nine children continued their flight.

"Gosh"said Penrod"I'm astonished at these Glandelinians.They come from everywhere."

"Yes dear brother"said Violet"I expected no such a sudden encounter."

"They interrupted us and it was their fault so almost annihilated them."said Joice.

"Well there was plenty of room without their taking our path."declared Jennie.

A Glandelinian officer called Ingagoo came riding up with his Omarian cavarly all excited, andsaid;

"Where's those Princely brats of Abbieannia.?"

"None"replied Major Hanson of the squadron which had been dispersed."But but they cannot go far, as our camp is soon to be recovered by Braggard who is hurling forward hundreds of thousands of our cavarly supported by heavy guns and mounted grenaiders.However I have found one of our generals who had been escaped and that fatty what he is.As soon as Braggard can sent forward his divisions we'll again be in possession of what is left of our camps, but goodness knows we'll never recover the loot they robbed us of.This raid will be in the newspapers of the world and ruin our reputation entirely."

Saying this the officer who was none other than general Stoneman urged his horse forward to try and size up the situation.A part of the camps were being recovered however and there was great rejoicing among the enemy you may be sure, but the retreat however of the raiders was slow, and dangerous to be meddled with.

"But where in the world is Prince George of our Emperor Gann onia Procellis?"questioned General Ingagoo, but the confused soldiers did not know and it was some time before one of the lieutenants remembered that the boy had been with the fat general who had managed to escape.Ingagoo commanded the soldiers to lead him to the headquarters where the Prince had been but when they arived there, not only was the Prince not there, but the building was in ruins.Then a search was started by cavarly throughout the territory, but reports came that they could not find the Prince anywhere, and it was suspected he had been captured by the raiders, and a gloom and horror fell over them all.When they returned to the section of Camp Nomber Two they discovered that the bridges acrosss the river had had ha been destroyed by the raiders, and the big encampment beyond a fierce and magnificent conflagration, and from this they suspected the fierce horde of raiders had retreated toward the south, pushing everything they secured before them, and that the raiders having captured Prince George no doubt were forcing him to go along with them.Ingagoo was much perplexed what to do because to follow the raiders at night was dangerous, and therefore he came up to his staff, and sending a messenger to inform both Manley and Aronburg Federal what had happened decided to hold a council over the whole matter. Zella the Glandelinian boy Prince's little sister was now crying because the boy was missing, and she could not be able to return to her parents in Glandelinia without him, but the Glandelinian general comforted her, and promised she should be protected untill the boy could be recovered and restored to her.

"The Christian dogs"the general said"Are not as mean as we are to the children who are christians, and therefore I'm sure won't harm him.The only way that can be done is to try and recapture him and if it can't be done one of us will sign a temporary aristrice and try to regain him by a big exchange of prisoners for him.So cheer up."

The general then went into his own headquarters in a part of the vast camps that had not been touched by the gigantic raid, to consider what should be done next.

"Our fault said General Ingagoo"Is that we have not enough watchful guards and therefore we are raided without warning. "These christian raiders never have any blundering faults in the raids, for if they would have conquered only one of our camps at a time, we might have been able to crush the raid, but they always embrace a wide territory at one time.And it is so gloomy out, and evidently there are so many of the raiders that we do not dare to follow them."

"What has become of our "Wheeler cavarly squadrons"I n which we could trust to shadow and trail the raiders, and find out who really has the Prince?" asked Colonel Stanley.

"We left it guarding the extreme northeast camp tward where the raiders were reaching before their sudden withdrawn began."replied general Ingagoo"But I wonder if we could get it to stealthily follow those raiders?"

"Why don't you ask their main leader general White Feral?"suggested Major Foleydi."

"That is a good idea."returned the general "if the raiders didn't ruin our telephone lines."He went to the telephone alright and finally saw he could get a connection.He finally got the "Wheeler"cavarly general on the line, and asked;

"Are your cavarly there in the same position."

"Yes sir."

"Well the raiders are recoiling from different sections.Move after after them slowly with your whole force and get Braggard to reinforce you.Sent scouts to see who has captured our Prince and recapture him if possible."

Then the Glandelinian cavarly general asked;

"How may we follow them.What direction did they go?"

General Ingagoo replied"Move to the southward, and you'll come withinsight of the retreating raiders.But do not start any fighting though.And do as I said, sent scouts to see who have captured our Prince."

"All right sir.I'll start the advance, right away and signal Braggard to follow with his whole force.Itll try to overtake them by morning and if an attack is safe I'll make one."

"Very good then, good bye" ried general Ingagoo, and then he turned to his officers and said"We shall be able to advance ourselves whenever we please, but what then shall we do.Christian cavarly scouts in great numbers and they'll bring aid to the raiders."

"Take me to the christians and make them take me and free my brother." pleased Zella.

"No"answered the general."They would also hold you and not free him.We always persecute those Vivian Girl Princesses, and can expect the same from their own side.Already they have hundreds of thousands of child slaves also in their possession, and the prince has been carried away by them.Not untill we learn who have them will I consent to any ruse.If we cannot regain him we'll have to make negotations and exchange a big division of prisoners and more child slaves to liberate him.He worths more to us than all those and to regain him I'll gladly give them up."

"Quite right." Exclaimed Colonel Billbile."

"On second thought"said Major Stoneman"I agree with you.If the Wheeler cavarly are careful in the advance I believe we will be able to perform the task you have decided to undertake."

They counseled together for a long time as to their mode of action and it was finally considered best to let the cavarly first discover who and the Glandelinian Prince in their possession, and first of all also to try and liberate him and capture or destroy those who had him in their grasp..

However to follow after such an enormous body of raiders, and all who were on horse too it would be necessary to follow with a great army of cavarly which was needed to assist them, and then if they could discover clews they could march against the whole column of raiders from threedirec three directions and storm them so fiercely as to drive them into confusion and in the confusion probably liberate the Prince or compell his captors to give up the Prince in order to save themselves.This being the best course to persue, they resolved to start their own cavarly right away, as it was not ~~prudent~~ prudent to delay untill morning....Zella was indeed intensely grieved over the loss of her brother and wept bitterly but the officers tried to cheer the girl and declared they would let her accompany them on the advence if she cared to go but she said she was afraid of the dangerous christian cavarly and would rather remain behind.

The commander in chief of the Glandelinian "Invader "cavarly in the meantime undid under general"Boobnead" had galloped around to the most southern most part of the Glandelinian encampments as fast as their horses could go in the hope to intercept the retreating christian cavarly,,, However when they reached that section, the general saw another column of cavarly coming and realizing it was a portion of Braggards division of Omarians clapped his hands together three times which was the signal along Glandelinian cavarly generals.The Glandelinian cavarly them came swiftly tward them,and soon they were united into one.Then they all began to advance swiftly in the direction in the direction indicated by one of Braggards leaders.They rounce the rounded the point of the camp where the conflagrations had not swept, and noticed that the river shore was lined with glandelinian cavalry men who had discovered the retreat of the christian raiders but had seemed undecided whether to persue them or not.This was probably because they had recieved no commands what to do, or perhaps they had learned to fear the powers of these fierce christian cavarly from Weeping Willow Run, and were unwilling to assault them, unless their commanders ordered them to do so.This section if the of the landscape in the vinicity of the river was very uneven and some what forested, and general Brainer who knew fairly well the rout the retreating raiders might take, yet was puzzled to decide which pathways they now viewed in the strong moonlight.first he thought it was this road, and then he guessed it was that, so considerable time was lost as to his uncertainity, for it was evident the raiders were not coming down either road.They finally decided to advance in a way as to be able to form a strong line across any and every road in this locality, and to send strong bodies of patrols a short distance to explore the country from slight rises of ground, so general Brainer moved his columns forward into four divisions.A great number of patrols went ahead and mounted rises of ground, and for an hour remained watching in every direction without seeing any trace of the retreating raiders, and now Brainer believed they had gone too far to the north, and must return to another section that was much nearer the christian lines itself. Once again the Glandelinian cavarly advanced, and followed a big winding road southward untill they thought they hadat had reached the right place to intercept them....2.2.2.2.2.22

They finally decided to sent a squadron to explore a part of the country to see where they themselves were, so Colonel Francis Inga who was appointed to do so rode forward with two hundred and fifty men.For an hour he searched over quite a good sized territory with out finding any trace of the retreating raiders in any directions.They then followed the winding Weeping Willow Run south untill they thought they had reached the proper section.By this time however a heavy clod obscured the moon and made it more gloomy than ever, for three hours had been spent in search of the raiders,and Colonel Ingas instinct warned him that it would be safer to rejoin the main division before it was too late, and before the raiders would come up and suddenly cut them off from escape.None of these cavarly leaders ever realized at this time how fatal this day of search had been to their plans, and perhaps if general Brainer realized what was going on he would have spread his entire cavarly over an immense territory and if metting meeting with the christians would have fought with the fury of wild beasts, than go searching in the wrong direction.

They were going south, and the raiders were going north.

However not understanding or owing anything of the cunning plans of either the young or the elder christian Princes or of Violet, and her sisters ,(the little foxes of Abbieannia) they continued slowly southward. All around them was delightfully still, and where there were no clouds the stars gleamed with unwonted brightness in the Heavens, and the moon again coming out behind a cloud tipped the small waves of the river with silver.

Some of the officers as they rode on so conversed together of their times of excitement and horror during the raid, and Hellar one of the officers told them his own simple narrative of the history of the Vivian Girls as he heard of them, and declared that of the seven the one called Violet violet was the one wanted most.Another officer claimed she might be the most dangerous little girl in the world, but Hellar declared that every one of them was nothing at all compared to their brother Penrod.Then General Rinkitink to a muse them offered to sing a song, but one of them protested in his gruff way claiming that he is too loud a singer, and if he did so his rough voice might bring the raiders upon them unexpectedly.

"But I wouldn't sing loud"replied the general"And as for the situation remember the poor Prince, who is in the possession of thesecraiders."

"Well don't we remember"protested the other general."Anyhow why didn you not choose a cheerful subject instead of complaining always about the Prince.Really he couldn't be in danger of any harm, for those christian dogs are not the same sort of soldiers as we are, and surely won't harm the boy.General I'm readlly surprised at you."

"But they might avenge what sufferings those brats the Vivian Girls have gone through at our hands, and take it out on the boy"!."

"No they won't.Don't worry on that score."begged general Billbile..

General Ingagoo was very eager to liberate the prince however, and fearing that the other cavarly may have gone down the wrong direction he started forward with his own cavarly and began on a northwestward course.They about a million in number followed seven roads tward the northwest, general Ingagoo going with the first column, and the others following the different parallel roads, while general Dainer followed with the Dragoons. Before long they saw a big wall of horsemen stretched in a long line before them, all carrying long lances, and on either frontal column of this line stood beside their horses their officers, armed in a way that any one could tell they were the cavarly of the Gargoylian Cad Cardes.There however is no Glandelinian cavarly any fiercer than the others by rights, but they are however varying in cruelty, and as dare devil in their courage as they were cruel to christians. General Ingagoo rode up after saluting the two chief officers and said;

"Does this road lead tward the direction where the christian raiders had gone."

"It does replied one of the officers"but no one is allowed to pass who are not glandelinian cavarly."

"Nevertheless"said the general"We intend to go forth and persue the christian raiders.I am general Ingaboo of the Omarian cavarly, of the left grand division of Braggards army, and I must liberate that boy prince from the hands of the christian dogs.."

"Now when the officers heard this speech, they glanced at one another and laughed, and one of them said;

"GENERAL Manley was right,for he said the raiders surely must have the boy Prince, and that you and other cavarly would be following the raiders with the purpose to try and recapture the boy Prince.Also the general commended that we must barricade these roads against any columns of cavarly that are not of our side but sir do you believe we can repeature that Prince. who was captured.You sure are cuasing us to laugh."

General Ingagoo was surprised at hearing this, and demanded;

"When did general Manley give you this order!"

"His Excellency was here this night"replied the officer,"And rode away again but an hour ago.He suspected you were coming here, and told us to join you if you will, but I'm positively sure we'll never regain the Prince. It is dangerous to come too close to the retreating raiders."

This report made the glandelinian chief general of all this cavarly very anxious, not for himself or his cavarly, but for the boy Prince for he feared the raiders were up tosome mischief. so he hastened to give the proper orders, and this line of cavarly then almost joined with him.However one of the men said to the general;

"I was scouting about two hours ago and what should happen to pass me but two strong patrols of what appeared to be Winwie Abyssinkilian Dragoons, under a dozen officers wearing white uniforms, the soldiers a red, and about two or three hundred children who appeared to be slaves were also in the midst of them.I followed some distance in secret hoping to see whether the Prince was among them, but he was not, and no sooner had I started off to try and meet a cavarly squadron I met almost face to face another and bigger squadron of gray coated Calverinians.Here in their midst were hundreds of slaves but too the boy was not amongst them.Then a third column passed me. I suspected they might have placed him amongst the child slaves to hide him but they didn't."

The cavarly now followed a long wide o road the road seemed at times to slant downward and then upward, but here they were coming within sight of a portion of the burning camps, and the wind being from that direction the air was hot and close and diff cult to breathe. So far none of the scout patrols encountered on the way had ever seen the raiders. However General Ingagoo rode up to one of the officers of a patrol called a "Flying Flying Patrol and demanded news of the retreating raiders, telling them not to fear the "christian dogs" as his cavarly would protect them from a sudden attack.

Then he had learned that a section of the raiders had indeed passed this way, and heard that the raiders did not have the Prince but that that he was in the possession of the "Vivian Girl Devils", who had spirited him away in an unknown direction.

"Seems to me" said general Beauty, when he heard this report, "That is it is those Vivian Girl Brats has carried your Prince away tward the christian lines, to prevent us from rescuin rescueing him and has caused us to waste all this time following after and searching for the retreating retreating raiders. They themselves might do something terrible to the boy or place him in a dungeon where we cannot find him, or give him up to those fierce boy and girlscouts and allow them to cut him all up." (what either a big lie or a mistake.)

"Perhaps you are right" answered general Ingagoo "But I am determined to find him wherever he may be. But it won't do to persue with cavarly they are to dangerous. I'll send boy and girlscouts to trail them."

General Ingagoo said this with firmness and great courage, but he was greatly discouraged and disappointed to find that the boy was in the possession of the Vivian Girls and who had carried him away, and who if really in earnest are impossible to be captured themselves, and that it was still more impossible to wrest anyone from them too. And especi especially if they had their brother Penrod with them. However he tried not to feel disheartened believing he would succeed in the end in spite of all opposition. Ingagool left the command to another general and returned to the camp to rouse boy and girlscouts to trace the direction the Princesses had gone. About six were to foolow among the girls, and twelve among the boys all armed to the teeth. The leader of the boys however happened to be Fred Dangar and Gerald Starring. They also were in charge of the six girls. First Gerals Starring demanded one of the soldiers if anything had happened since the destruction of general Aronburgs headquarters.

"A great deal had happened" replied the soldier. "Those Vivian Girls and their brother have gotten away in the direction of the southeast, every one is afraid to follow them, and we dodo not know what to do."

"Vivian girls run away with the Prince" exclaimed Gerald Starring in the greatest astonishing astonishment and glancing at Fred as if he could not understand aright. "Where "there in the world did they go to!"

"No one can tell" declared the man tossing his head despondently. "They left the camp and departed together a few hours ago in a boat, and they carried away with them the Prince. No ammount of soldiers cavarly or infantry could stop them. They have that dangerous little madgirl Susan Farrol with them, and she's a deadshot the same as Penrod."

Now it seems when Violet and her sisters with Susan Farrol fled from the ravaged Glandelinian camps with the Prince in their midst, they had wits enough although greatly frightened for the moment at the swiftness and numbers of their persuers to retain the Prince with them at all cost, while Penrod and Susan with hand grenades and good pistol show prevented the Glandelinian persuers from gaining on them. The Glandelinians who persued however very closely had never before seen the Vivian girls called the "Terror "of the Glandelinian armies so badly frightened but they nevertheless were because it was a most dangerous exploit to carry away a Glandelinian Prince and if they were captured they sure would be in for it. When they came running their horses across a small bridge of boats dragging the horse the Prince was on by the halter, the great fright of the Princesses had the effect of letting one understand the danger they were in.

"Quick" cried Violet to Penrod. "Destroy the bridge with hand grenades or we are lost."

While the grenade explosions were tearing away the bridge, the nin nine continued onward, and soon had met a good sized party of Abbieannian cavarly.

"Those Glandelinians have a wizard in their general Braggard." Jennie gasped. "There is no standing against him if he brings on his entire cavarly force. The christian cavarly must retreat another way and decoy the enemy."

"Oh have you discovered the danger at last." replied Penrod almost scornfully. "Who is acquainted with general Braggard more than me, who have been Abdelkob Ned Bayer, and other assumed names in the Glandelinian army." And he almost grinned.

"Don't laugh" please" cried Jennie piteously. "It is no laughing matter. These Glandelinians are dangerous, and our cavarly will have to retreat properly in order to avoid a close engagement. that shall we do Penrod dear. I must confess I'm really scared. We did a dangerous thing in Kidnapping this Prince you know."

"Come and ride as close beside me and Susan as possible and retain the Prince in our midst." he said growing serious." And let us converse on the subject carefully."

So they did so and as they rode or they conversed long and earnestly. "Those fierce Glandelinian leaders will do all in their power to liberate or recapture this Prince, and even if possible recover all the spoils captured in the raid and to punish us all severely." said Joice. "If they come a million strong against our raiders they may destroy our columns, and if they capture us we'll die in the most cruel manner. I can see but one way Penrod, to prevent the dirty Glandelinians from doing all this, and whatever else the sinful Glandelinian leaders pleases to do."

"What way is that?" asked Penrod"

"The raiders with all they have must go northward, go in a circuitious route and enter the christian lines by way of the Kendall and Gidelights Run. We our selves must get away with the boy from this terrible territory territory as soon as possible. We must carry the boy away on our famous gasoline boat, and hide the boy where our persuers cannot find him untill we can safely reach the christian lines."

"I know another ting thing we can do" said Penrod hotly. "We will use the boy Prince as a prisoner of war, not as a host as before planned, and from a secret source send word to our persuers that if they do not go away and let us alone and let us go away in our own way, we will put the boy to death. As he is a Glandelinian Prince, and as his wicked Father is the wickedness man in the world., and as you and your sisters have suffered immeasureably at the hands of the Glandelinians too often to menti mention, it would be a justification before Heaven to retain our threat if the Glandelinians don't heed the warning and let us be. Now I understand you might protest and so would your sisters on our plan but if we must escape you must submit,. They give inreadily enough for they realized what you have suffered at their hands and will believe the threats fact, which will be one if they heed me not. It is a terrible thing to do, and I hate to do it or plan it, but remember the enemy showed you and your sisters as much mercy as I would show to a maddog assaulting a loved one, and therefore we cannot be softies now. Also we can notify our persuers that as long as we are let alone he will be safe though a prisoner although still safely hidden within the christian lines. Then if the boy is well behaved we won't treat him as a foe, but as a host prisoner and will remain with us only, untill we can get a good exchange for his freedom. This will show those Glandelinian generals that no matter what you, your sisters, or set out to do, we DO it. I believe I believe sisters that in this way we can compel those Glandelinians who may persue or trail us, even though they be soldiers, or only child scouts, and probably will be the latter to obey us, for every one seems very fond of this boy Prince, who have never said to word to us since he found himself our prisoner! "

"It isn't a bad id ea if it has to be carried through" said Joice reflectly but a little sadly "But where can we hide the boy Prince, so that the Glandelinians cannot find him. The enemy will send spieswithin the christian lines and if we have him in our headquarters they'll trail him there."

"It is the only place though" said Penrod. "We can have all our regiment of boy and girlscouts to form a strong impenetrable cordon about our headquarters, and many are angel possessed too as you are and possess strange but slight enough ammount of supernatural powers that will enable them to protect the prisoner from discovery. If we can manage to get the boy Prince to our own lines and headquarters before the persuers finds out what we are doing, I'm sure our plot will succeed. In this dear sisters, you will be getting one good satisfaction out of what you had suffered and we can even retain him as a prisoner and cheat the enemy worse than ever by doing a good thing to the God we love by converting the boy to the Catholic Chu Church and probably f cause him to turn for our side. Then we'll laugh Glandelinia in the face."

"But do you believe it would be impossiv impossible to convert him!"Said Hettie."They say Glandelinians are as hard to convert to God as a serpent is to learn a difficult language."

"Iiv If it is necessary"grinned Penrod",e'll request your angels who possess you and your s isters to help us in our interprize.For I do not intend really to release him at all for the full duration of the war.My plan really to get him was because of his age.If we could have captured his sister we could do the same to her.But if our persuers won't listen to reason our blades will do the proper thing.They gave you no mercy and neither will we if we are intefered with."

"B ut it seems"protested Angeline "It wouldn't be right to retain him so long as it would be wrong.He belongs to his father even though his father is our ene my and----"

"Enough"said Penrod."He belongs to his father, but when you were f requne lty f requently captured the enemy didn't care a rap whom you belonged to either. If it is fair for the enemy to do that to you, well then it is fair to deprive their K ing of his children too as long as we will and it would be nosin either and you know it. We cannot be soft ties now as then the world and even probably Heaven will be giving us the Ha.Ha.The best way we can strike Glandelinia b a bo blow is to do what is dreaded most to the Kings son. And that is save his soul and probably cause him to be on our side..That is if we get him to our camps without rigorous pursuit."

"Well"said Jennie herself , and very decidedly."You must give us time to considerate on the matter.This is a strange and untimely incident and it is hard to tell too whether it w ill work It may get us into more trouble than we ever had been before,So let us mediate on the matter, and you must avide abia abide by our councel, for by the law of Father we have the say."

"All right"submitted Penrod."but if you get soft hearted, then I'm sorry we ever went and captured the Prince and went to all this detail already.It would be better to liberate him right now."

Violet and her sisters therefore gave the plan considerable thought in the next f ive minutes.They realized many facts, there might be graver danger in the interprize and that the Glandelinians would press their search most desperate des perately for the ab abductors, and would under any conditions conditions not even contact the child kidnappers but try their greatest efforts to capture them with him.Too they remember every time it had happened how great was the sorrow of a mother especially when her child was stolen f rom her and how the mother had gone down under the strain and even went near a collasp for the mother it would have been a living death, not b ing able to find out whether her child was mistreated or dead.Penrods death threat against the little boy did also seem unreasonable unreasonable even though justified if their persuers didn't give it up, but would they really do so.?There was danger that the persuers would not listen to any negotations whatever but even fire on the one bearing the truce flag.It seemed also unfair even if justified to be swiping away a little six year old boy, and then the sorrow that as was occassioned the boys sister.They remember how when they themselves had been stolen and seperated from each other of ten for a long time not knowing whether each ones sister were mistreated or dead and how they with strain worrow worry and grave sorrow had exacted a terrific toll on them and caused them to weaken hourly and be almost on the verge of a collaspe. They did not comprehend what to do and Jennie wished most ardently that her guardian angel or some spirit who ever it was would whisper advice in her ear whether to go by Penrods council or not.But then emperor Procide of Glandelinia had no wife, his wife had been slain by him once in a druken brawl because she had always been a "Goody goody"be a Woman and wanted to leave him to save her little sons soul.The boy Prince though too was not exactly a bad boy, he had not even shown the slightest resistence when violet had captured him, and did not even cry now because he was a prisoner but remained quite and not acting naughty at all.Therefore oh for the voice in her right ear.What would the council be.hes Penrod right or wrong..They felt they could not do it, especially because of his sister.Why didn't they capture her.You see dear reade r Violet and her sisters at least had hearts for innocent children oven though they be for the enemy. Therefore they wished the council from heaven.Jennie most pleadingly Begged God and His Blessed Mother for for the Council, and Penrod seeing that they were s low in giving in to his suggestion f n finally said as for Second though;

"Jennie dear, why don't you say Your Rosary Carefully and mediate on the sad Mysteries, and then asked the Blessed Mother for the council.?"

"That is a good idea"returned Jennie, and at once she drew her 79beads ry from her small bag in which she retains it , and then while they were heading for the river ward where they had left their boat she recited it to a finish, though the meditation on the sorrowful Sorrowful Mysteries almost broke her heart for that time she felt such sorrow over His Terrible Sufferings and of Him dying on the Cross. Then when she recovered herself. she said the "Oh Mary Conceived without Sin "six times and then begged The Blessed Mother to council her angels what she should do.suddenly a voice came into her ear;

"Penrod did no wrong.Be by his council.It's wise and will mean your safty. Do not refuse his advice. Glandelinia is a vile foe of Heaven and you did right.The boy is yours now in our eyes and you can do with him as Penrod councils.Get to your boat as soon as it gets daylight, and bent it down the river.The persuers won't do as he believes but We'll guide you safely down and you'll escape with him.Do as Penrod suggest.He's wise in the planning."

"I agree"Penrod she said."What do you say sisters."

"I don't said Hettie."I move we return the Prince.

"Who's the lead of my sisters?"pleaded Penrod.

"She is"smiled violet pointing to Jennie."he choosed her because we all love her not only the best, but much more than our selves."

"Then you will accept her decision all of you."

"I---well yes"agreed Hettie."We'll have to as we can go back on her."

"Then we'll get ready to hasten off our raiders on a safe retreat and then down the river in our boat"said Jennie."Do you understand what we are going to do!"she demanded of her prisoner who had not shown no disturbance all thisctime to her surprise and that of her sisters, for though they had conversed with Penrod they had not done it loud enough for him to hear.

"Don't know"answered the boy in a puzzled look.

"Who are we!"demanded Hettie.

"Violet, and---and---and I-I--I don't remember but I see you are girls and one boy.A Glandelinian girlscout stole me from general Pingaree who is fate and gave me to you."

Violet couldn't help laughing at this."

"No Glandelinian gave you to us."she finally said"It was I who captured you.I was disguised."

"What are you going to do to me!"he finally demanded."You do not seem so dangerous, and yet you are so pretty every one of you I cannot move my face away but must see you all the time."

"We are going to bring you to the christian lines.?"

"Won't they hurt me.?"

"No if you be good.If you be good and act right we may even be good to you and let you see us for a long long time.But if you act naughty, we won't be nice.Do you understand?"

"I won't act naughty.But where is my sister."?

"She didn't come."

"She's a bad, bad, girl.She'll kill you for taking me away."

"No she won't I'm going to try and capture her too soon."

"Don't do it pleaded the boy."She's bad. She won't sorrow for me long for she often fights with me. She'll soon forgot.I don't want her.She hates me."

While this conversation was going on between the boy and two of the Vivian Girls Penrod, and the rest of her sisters prepared their large and swift boat for the journey.But they couldn't leave untill all the raiders had left this section of the enemys territory in safty.Too violet and her sisters had been astonished to hear news of all the strange events h that had occured elsewhere, still they found comfort, when they realized the raiders were easily safetly starting the retreat and part of the raiding troopers were heading north.Now one of the boyscouts of the christian troopers had done a whole lot during the raid for violet and her sisters.For a time they had been greatly worried sh when the raid started wondering how the boy would conduct himself, and soon however the appeared and stood close beside their big gasoline launch.To his surprise all of the Vivian Girls except two who stayed with the Prince rode down to the boat and dismounted to give this boy a good hearty welcome and many jof joyful Misses.He had been so often lovingly embraced or kissed by so many grateful girlscouts that he was not at all embrassed even when the fair Princesses did it.violet and her sisters found that Jean Saunders was with the boy.It was Jack himself.

"Now that the raid is completed and we will have to all runwarn a run away if we wish to retain the spoils"Jennie said"There's no one here who have done a lot to our aid than our little boyscout captian right here, Timp Timothy Groveton needs a First Lieutenant badly and as Angelinia Arenburg said she couldn't find no one to fill that van vacancy it is our duty to appoint one for him, and as little Jac Saunders is a good, honest and worthy boy,I and my sisters shall elevate him as the chief lieutenant to Tim orthy Greveton."

The boy h imself st first did not believe himself worthy to recieve such a commission, but his friend Jean pushed him up tward Violet and her sisters and a little embrass ed he therefore accepted the commission. inally The boyscout said trying to hide his embrassment;

"I see you have a little boy with you that appeare to be a Prince. Who is he and where are you going with him."

"He is mperor Frocile's son of Glandelinia, and we have captured him. We are going by boat either north or south with him. Probably we'll go north ."

"North"cried Jack astounded by this speech. "I beg your little ighnesses, on my bended knees for your sakes not to do so cruel a thing to yourselves as go north in the boat with the captured Glandelinian Prince!"

"Why not!"Inquited Penrod. "Iam their brother, and their guardian, and I understand how it feels. I assure you my good boy friend, that we have quite enjoyed our little adventure to night, although there has been considerable excitement between I and one of my sisters for a short time."and he winked at Violet, who did so in return.

"With you noble sir it is different"said the boy"For you are an unusally gifted boy and have learned a lot of tricks which you have told and shown me and therefore may do as you please with your enemies. But to go north when that territory is swarming with patrols of these fierce and most unruly Omarian Curies would be during the whole trip to live a night of anxiety and grave peril even on the river, and the chances are they might murder you and your sisters within an hour, and succeed in recapturing your little boy prisoner. As you are such good little girls Princesses, and have done no harm to any one whi who is good, and have always been such saintly little girls, and gone through so much trouble in the past, and such dreadful sorrows, pain and anguish, I do not believe you would do right to condemn yourselves to such a dreadful fate as going down the river north ward."

"Very well"replied Penrod glancing at his sisters, warmingly,"We will say no more about goind down the river to the north. We merely wanted to shorten the journey as much as possible, as had promised promised promised my sisters "

"Forget that promise"pleaded the boyscout, earnestly"Your dear sisters have never been safe from molestation for all the time the war began, because they are brave girls. But if you go down the river northward they at once will become the prey to the Glandelinian cavarly hordes who are trying to intercept the retreat of the raiders, and probably will lose their lives in the attempt even to protect themselves."

Penrod looked at the boyscout in surprise and also alarm.

"What then can we do you please them and you!"he inquired.

"Nothing more than to go down the river southward, and disguise yourselves and the captured Prince as well, and allow me and Jeen to accompany you as a body guard."

"Perhaps"exclaimed Susan Farrol,"Jack has some wisdom concealed in his braine more braine than we gave him credit for. But let us use that wisdom for the present to council us what to do in this emergency."

"What you call my wisdom. "said Jack"Is merely common sense. I have noticed that many spies become foolish and allow themselves to be captured because of overconfidence and not listening to good advice. Other spies become famous and die later on the gallows or go through the "Sunset dance. If you Prince Penrod, and your sisters become over confident you will hereafter never appreciate the joy of living for what the Glandelinians will do this time if th they ever capture you now."

"Lend me your hand as I would like to shake it mo most heartily.""said Penrod. "and as the boyscout did so Penrod continued"But remember we can face plenty of peril going southward t oo. The enemy seeing we didn't go north could sent persuers to go south."

Yet during the council, they found indeed, that the advice of their new boyscout chief was both shrewd and sensible, and they profited much by his words. Violet and her sisters gave general Buzzub the full command of the retreating christian raiders and told him to retain an orderly condition of the commands if he could. Then violet and her sisters allowed all of the child slaves who had been liberated by Buzzub to choose by whose ccava ly they should go to the christian lines with, and to see that they recieved provisions and clothing, for when rescued the child slaves girls and boys were all absolutely naked as their enemies never allowed child slaves to wear anyt anything whatever. This was done to prevent them from running away, and if they tried to do so to gut their bodies as soon as recaptured. When these child slaves had departed with gateful grateful thanks and many blessings showed showered upon violet and her sisters and Penrod, and all the christians in general who had done so much to set them free, and as the elder ones promised to become boy and girlscouts for gratitude, Penrod and Violet and and her sisters made preparations to get the raiders at this section on the retreat. violet and her sisters said they were going last, and that they within h the christian lines were then to await the coming of them and Prince Penrod and others with their prisoner.

"My greatest worry"said Penrod to his comrades"is to find out whom to appoint to be in charge of this retreat, and so I'll appoint Buzzub as he is an reliable leader and can do so in a very capable manner. As the headquarters of the Glandelinian generals have beenvby us and our followers rightfully despoiled of all their valiable valuable furniture and draperies, and rich cloths and paintings and muntions and so on as well as gold and silver and ornaments we might as well so see to it that these can be used to be replaced in parts of the country once raided by the Glandelinians themselves. Remove all the goods and chattles to your houses which you have captured and replace every thing you have captured. Hurry and retreat as fast as you can. We have no more time to waste. Loaded your horses with the goods and the captured wagons and then away with you tward the christian lines. We'll follow southward down the river in our boats, and we all have fifty of our best armed child scouts with us."

Penrod had during the raid, and helped by Violet and her sisters plundered the headquarters building in which they had captured the boy Prince, sending enough wares away with his soldiers to be able to restore many raided christian homes as handsomely fitted and furnished as had been the ones of the enemy already destroyed.

It was a great forcat of highly stood lances carried by men on horses that set out swiftly from the raided camps at about two in the morning on the retreat tward the christian lines, carrying all the now happy and rescued child slaves lots of prisoners, and all the goods for refitting many homes, pushing before them great almost endless traine of all sorts of provision munition and other wagons, and god only knows whatelse that is captured in an enormous raid as this. As He and his sisters, and the rest with him saw the raiders depart, Penrod felt he had already successfully accomplished a part of his mission, but he vowed that no matter how dangerous the trip he would see his sisters and himself safely within the christian lines and no interference either. It was while the last of the column of troopers were preparing to leave the devastated camps that Colobel Bob White who had also been of great service in getting them ready, came to Penrod and His sisters in a thoughtful mood and said;

"Your High nessnessse"My followers have been urging me to let them in secret and in disguise shadow your boat along our side of the shore to be able to protect you in case something bad should arise. From what your boy scout friend has said and even told me, Glandelinians may even try to shadow you and your sisters instead of persue you in the open, and that would cause us to be inconstant fear of what may happen. Therefore I have come to request for you to allow us to do you this favor. And By God you deserve you deserve protection more than any of us do."

Prince Penrod and his sisters were very much pleased,, with this proposal and not only granted Colonel White this permission, but instructed him to have with him as many good expert shooting cavarly men as he choose. In addition to this he appointed Colonel White to have a number of child scouts aid him in this enterprise, and the soldiers and the child scouts approved this order because they loved the colonel and understood him to be able to protect anybody with perfect ease... As soon as the last column except Colonels Whites had disappeared from view Penrod and violet and her sisters prepared to go down the river southward. They were all anxious to get away before Glandelinian cavarly arived if possible, and Penrod had no desire to remain in the Glandelinian camps. violet, and her sisters were the first to enter the boat with their little Royal Prisoner, and then with fourty scouts entering with Jack, Jean, and Susan, and Penrod last Jennie soon started the gasoline motars and were soon out of sight and going full speed down the river. Gerald Starring and his followers arived at this spot some hours later when h they learned that the boy Prince had been spirited away from the shores and was a prisoner of Violet, and her sisters.

"I shall follow them of course."said the Glandelinian boyscout to Fred"and if I cannot capture them or rescue him I shall search every christian camp in disguise untill I find him. Let's get going in some boats of our own."

Indeed though they could not do any harm to them the Glandelinian soldiers who now stood in a great crowd on the river shore were as glad to be rid of their many unwelcome visitors as violet and her sisters and Penrod were to leave. Though it was so late now at night, through all the excitement of the raid, Penrod and Violet and her sisters and on all on board of the boat had not eaten a bite since noon time, therefore Three of the Vivian Girl Princesses underwent to get a nightly meal for every one andvth mselves and soon prepared a fine meal on the boats cook stove, for any of the little Princesses were good little Chefs, and had often did plenty of "Chefing" for their dear Fatherv and Mother. The meal was served in the boat, and some of them thought the best part of the meal was the honey which they spread upon bread that Violet and her sisters produced. Violet and her sisters preferred butter on their bread, for though they did love sweets, they declared Honey was too sweet for them. Penrod then said mischieviously;

"Maybe it is, but you and your sisters are not good sweet eaters then. Sweets are good for growing children and for the ster strenous times you go through it is good for you."

"Never mind Penrod" said Jean roughishly. "Your dear sisters would make Honey taste like horse radish in comparison they are so sweet."

Every one smiled except Violet and her sisters. Fortunately it was too gloomy to night to see how they blushed.

The Glandelinian boys scouts themselves got into a boat of their own which was also a swift gasoline launch and finding they had gone southward followed after the fugitives. But although the Glandelinian boat moved swiftly it failed to gain on the fugitive boat, which was operated by two powerful motar driven engines.

The main section of the christian line does not border on the shores of the Weeping Willow pun as is supposed from which it is seperated from the main Glandelinian army, and the army under general Vivianna, which is a part of the biggest christian army ever formed or brought up in this locality. General vivianannas christian army was seperated from Emperor Vivians by the Glandelinian armies under General Leonia Johnston, from which it extends tward Kendall. The Glandelinian army under Johnston was stretched across a large sandy waste that is open on one side to the beautiful Weeping Willow pun and the other side had no barrier to seperate it from general Nero and Blain Nighlingners christian army, therefore it was on the river shore of Vivianannas army---in a spot quite deserted by Glandelinian scout patrols that Violet and her sisters landed. General vivianna army was in encampments and positions very large in extent, and is only seperated from general Nero Anderson christian army and ten thence tward Emperor Vivians army on its eastern borders by the Weeping Willow River itself that cannot be crossed without pontoons, unless they are good swimmers and also understand where dangerous bogs and and where there are not are not any.

Emperor Vivians army then slowly almost engrouching tward Big Girl Knool, and opposed oppposed here and there by one and another Glandelinian army time and again were numerous by this time and very mischievious against the enemy being in encampments also of wide extent, connecting their positions with one another by arches and passages. Their positions were impassable, even probably the Heavenly Angels aided by the legions of hell couldn't carry them. Always the christian soldiers are very busy, constantly on the watch, constantly forming and unforming positions, forming positions secretly at another place secretly forming pits and snares and traps to catch charging Glandelinian soldiers, and perhaps this is the reason the christian soldiers are so hard to beat in battle.

Emperor Vivian at this time had transferred himself and His Brother to the armies at Big Girl Knool, and this army at Weeping Willow pun at the time it was concentrated here was under the personal command of James Vivian.

Penrod and his sisters had expected to be persued by Gerald Starring and others in boats, so they made all the haste possible, giving their engines plenty of gas, and Jennie did her best efforts to retain the speed of the boat as much as possible. To their joy they were not even persued evidently of it or if they were none of their persuers were in sight, and therefore landed on the sandy beach of their onw armies at the very approach of day. guards were left with the boat, while Penrod advised his sisters to bring with them Jack and Jean and Susan and then with their little little Royal prisoner, began the journey tward their own lines. It was not long before they passed the sands, and reached the territory where the christian camps were easily passing the sentries, and pickets because they were acquant ed with the counter sign and more important still had the pass,,, but they were still a long way from the entrance into the encampments. There was a dim path winding between lots of stones and boulders over which they could not use their horses and also over which the tramping was even difficult even on foot, as the paths led up hills that were small mountains, and down deep steep and abrupt slopes, where any mistep might mean a fratfracture of a let leg arm or head. Therefore it was after three hours since they landed before they found themselves within the beautiful encampments, and found themselves nearing their own headquarters. At their coming were they in an instant a u surrounded by a good sized group of soldiers, who came from the tents...2.2.2.

They were jubulent to see the Princesses and Penrod return return and had recieved of it for by this time the majority of the raiders had returned safely and the rest were coming in with all that was captured in the raid. An officer rode up joyfully and politely and said;

"I recieved reports you were coming, but did not expect you so early in the morning. But god be Blessed that you all returned from the raid safely.. as you did...!!!.!!,,,!"

"Then" said Sir Prince Penrod "Perhaps general Viviana is expecting us."

"It is true" replied another officer with a happy smile. "It is your own brother Prince James who expects you for he returned early from the raid this morning and bids you follow me to his presence. And Then all of you and all the raiders must sleep all day to day and to night too for surely you had no sleep at all."

"We all feel mighty sleepy." laughed Violet "but we sure had exciting times nevertheless last night, and especially I and Penrod, and she winked at him."

"Who is the pretty boy you have with you?" said another officer while the soldiers crod crowded closer to see. "Was he a child slave dressed so magnificently."

"No" said Violet again glancing at Penrod almost mischieviously "He's a prisoner of ours. You may not believe it sir, but we captured Emperor Precilas little Wson. We didn't get his sister though. And yet he doesn't care that he is a prisoner for some reason or other."

"He certainly must be a strange boy then or his father was cruel to him" said one of the soldiers. "What is going to be done with him."?

"We have not fully decided yet" laughed Juice "Maybe we 'll exchange him for a great number of child slaves or maybe we'll retain him and cove con vert him first."

The officer was willing to lead the way to their headquarters, and therefore the beautiful Princesses followed, Penrod going on behind, with Susan Jean and Jack following, taking their little prisoner with him them. Through several long company Streets the officer guide led them and at last they entered a small gateway and finally reached their own headquarters. They passed the waiting room for military visitors, and as they were in the building the three child scouts drew long breaths of astonishment and opened their eyes as wide as they could at the magnificence of the main room. By a big writing desk sat James vivian himself. He was this time dressed in velvet robes richly embroidered, which had large buttons of cut rubies. On his head was a diamond crown, but in his hand he held a writing pen and had been writing something down. However though they could have Violet and her sisters did not put on their princely garb just then but only replaced their own hats with their smaller crowns which made them seem prettier than ever. He rose to greet the magnificent children as any loving soft hearted brother would do, nodded pleasantly enough to the others, and said in a cheerful cheery voice;

"Well you eight Sweet sweet little Majesties, my my dear little angel sisters, what can I do for you since we came from the raid. I thought you were preparing for a good long sleep. I sent for you so you may have your breakfast and then go right to sleep."

"Before we retire for we are awfully sleepy" said Penrod "it is my desire and also the desire of my dear sisters, "To place in this building, in your hand our care the little Prince prisoner whom you now see before you. He is a He is a glandelinian prince. He must be carefully guarded to be prevented from recapture, for we were followed by Gerald Starring, Fred Dargar and their cronies, and they have the cunning of fixes and are not to be trusted. Please don't let strangers in, and we have already changed the countersign and passes for any part of the camps. In return for the favor I and they are asking you to grant, We will give you a dozen hugs and kisses extra before we go to breakfast and to bed."

"Very good indeed" said Prince Vivian, nodding approval for like all the Relations he loved Violet and her sisters more than a million bags of jewels and an extra ammount of Gold. "But who is the Prince prisoner you have brought here, and why do you place them in my charge instead of guarding him yourself. He's seems innocent and gentle enough I'm sure. But why in the world did you capture him. It'll cause His Father no end of grief and worry and also--------"

"The prisoner" returned Penrod before Violet or her sisters could say anything "is the son of the Ruler of Glandelinia sure enough. We did right in capturing. Remember how often your own sisters mine and they being Fathers daughters have been captured, causing you a world of grief, and them too for often they were seperated from each other for months not telling whether they would ever see each other again. The Glandelinians as you see yourself are very evil people, and God only can tell how many children were murdered by them before and since this war began..Therefore we plundered them of of all their riches.By good fortune Violet was able to capture this Prince and we caneither hold himfor to Exchange for a great number of child slaves, or do whatever our Father proposes or convert the lad into Christianity which is the best plan and one which would hurt the enemy the most.Now the enemy has a boyscout leader who is as dangerous as if he was a "terrible Wizard", and who have followed after us to try and find this Boy Prince and to set him free.Therefore as we have no means to sheild himfrom capture we intend to have the whole child scout army surround this headquarters, and also have brought the little prisoner to youfor safe keeping.

"My dear brother James"said Violet addressing her good and loving brother; "Penrod wishes us to recieve more creditfor this and that which we don't deserve.I don't believe of course it was through him this time, but everbody in camp says we were more responsible for everything captured in the raid than anybody else.Do not believe this report I implore you.It is all a blunder. All we did was to follow behind the raiders and do some little work of rescueing child slaves."

"I now more about it than you do violet dear,laughed Prince James."I consider it peculiar because there is no mistake. You and your sisters were too excited to even understand what you were doing.Even your brother Penrod don't know theh half of what you and your sisters did.There is more threat of truth in their reports than you even suspect because sect secretly I have been watching your every move and no body did what you did. However it is none of my business but I also from a short distance saw that scrap you had with Penrod.

At first not being able to descern things inthe gloom, and only being able to recognize you and suspecting you was trying to capture a Glandelinian boy scout I would have ridden to your aid had not that light come and revealed you to each other before you did each other any permanent harm.The fact remains that you violet are an expert fighter, even though your brother beated you, and it would have been too bad had that been Gerald Starring you attacked.

You have done the most wonderful thing yet in your career by capturing that Glandelinian boy Prince which seemed a grave impossibility.Probably the raid was conducted so fiercely in that locality that every one must have fled in panic and forgotten him, or else fled to save their own skins, not bothering about him.Also the fact remains too that your best boy brother Prince Penrod wishes me to put your little boy prisoner under my care so that the Glandelinians will be unable to recapture him.And for your sakes wh, should I not please him in this little matter, when in pleasing him I please you. Gene Emperor Procile of glandelinia anyhow is not a mighty ruler or a great warrior, because it is never heard of that he comes and leads any army in person while our Father is in battle most of the time.It leads to a fact that Procile is a coward at heart heart and expects his terrible generals to do all the fighting for him.You little girls always say you don't deserve this good thing done to you, and don't deserve that, and yet you're so good that you're possessed by angels.You have never yet been able to prove that you don't deserve all the good that does come to you to make you happy, while it can be proven in the easiest way that what you suffered you don't deserve at all.In my heart I sympatnize with you in your trying to be humble despite your high rank but you don't seem to realize that Our Blessed Lord said those that humble themselves will be exalted.You try to escape being exalted, and the more you try to be humble the more you get so exalted.But nevertheless as a matter of Christian Policy we good Abbiennian Rulers and our children muat stand together, and trample the demons under our feet.And you say you don't deserve to be so happy or to be treated so good.Then why don't you succeed in escaping from it.You can't that's why."

Penrod, and violet and her sisters were surprised to find their elder brother so cad candid and so well informed, and yet they tried to argue argue on that there must be some mistake, that she and her sisters did not deserve such good things, because Our Blessed Lord though more holier because He Was God-Man did not recieve one consolation in His whole Life for one minute, and that on the Cross, and during the whole Horror of his Sufferings He did not deserve the cruel Fate no more than they deserved their own, and that it would be wiserfor their elder brother to side with them in their argument than with those who always wants to praise them so much.But Prince James only shook his head, as he too Violet and Jennie on his laps and smiled saying;

"What Our Blessed Lord Wills for you to have you must submit to.The fact that you are so happy at times, that you have such goodythings coming to you, and that you are so successful at all times never meeting a failure my poor dear sisters is evidence that it is God's Will for you to be so, and that that he prefers that you stand it no matter how happy you may be.And the fact that you have suffered a whole lot too is evidence that he does not

Will either that you may be displeased by being too happy all the time, but then here's the point dear sisters.You and your sisters could have avoided all this horror and suffering too had you so willed.But that you didn't proves that you and your dear sisters are the bravest children in the world for no matter what you suffered you are only the more defiant and frustrate the enemy all the more.You suffered intensely yesterday morning because of the massacre, and now you made this raid to repay for those five hundred children you could not save.Therefore as you are really the best one I prefer to deal with you side with your opinions and so forth but only where it is really right..Our Blessed Lord could have also escaped all that suffering had he chose to do so and He didn't.Neither did you chose to escape from the horror of your experiences.But you'revtimes are getting better, you're getting more dangerous to the enemy, and the only reason the enemy don't fear you as they fear the child scouts, as the fact shows, there are not enough like you. Were all the child scouts the same as you I don't know what would happen to the enemy.I believe they would give up and go home declaring themselves hoplessly be beaten.They won't engage the child scouts but runs.And see here, here's the proof that the Glandelinians are more afraid of you than of the child scouts.But I'll went a question answered first for proof to show you what I mean.For the least number how many glandelinians ever chased you in a persuit."?

"That is a question none of us could answer."declared Joice."But they always come after us in a squadron.And sometimes we licked them all anyhow."

"didn't an equal number of glandelinians ever come after you?"

"You mean seven of them?"

"No "said violet smiling."We could easily beat ten or twenty of them."

"Well that shows by the numbers they're scared to tackle you in a small numbw number.And child scouts never go out in small numbers.."

"We understand by our experiences"said Jennie"that the enemy is afraid of us."

"The fact that you are such great scouts then shows all the credit you deserve.I read once a billion people throughout the worldclips pictures out magazines, newspapers and other reading matters of you and your sisters, to retain, though how your pictures get in them is a mystery to me.I believe the photographers do it."

"Well they had no right to without our permission"said violet indignantly. "They heard our orders and don't obey.Those foriegners make me sick."

"If I ever catch them at it"said Jennie"Iell place them in a guardhouse till the war ends.."

"By the way"Prince James said"Turning to Penrod"Has this little glandelinian prince any connection with the army under Izner Myletze.?"

"Why do you ask?"Said Penrod.

"Because I could not dare offend that general after what he once done to my sisters when they were arrested by his men.Made them eat at a banquiet he held gave them the best food he could supply, and two days after gave them passes and saw to it they were free.We are very powerful you understand, but if this Prince happens to be under Izner Myletzes protection, I would have nothing to do with him.Myletze is an enemy of our con cause it is true, but in heart he loves my sisters, and would harm them in no way.Therefore I would not dare repay kindness with evil.No Wonder Myletze in his career has such good luck since that time."

"I assure you dear brother that the boy has nothing to do with General Myletze"Penrod hastened to say."And I never would spy on that man never for I know what he did.Am ain't that right sisters."

"Yes"said violet."He treated us as if we were his daughters."

James Vivian questioned the boy Prince on that matter, and the Prince said;

"No I never wish.But he said almost sobbing at this question I "I wish I had. He's the only general who don't stain the country of Glandelinia with the blood of helpless christian children.I hate the others.2"

"Do you care you were made a prisoner!"

"I don't now.I like them."pointing to violet and her sisters.

"See somethings strange there"laughed James."Even the one you seize a prisoner is a friend."

"I--I ----"began violet and could say nothing more.

"How about that Gerald Starring you mentioned?"asked the Prince."I never heard of him before.Is he a glandelinian spy general.!""

"Oh he's merely a treacherious glandelinian boyscout, he is very ferocious and obstinate, and he is assistan assisted by a Confederate called Fred Dargar, and other who is in a hospital with a torn face, good enough for him.He posed as I and caused Jennie an world of woe.she tore his face."

"Oh a treacherous little snake eh, do you say. That certainly sounds as if he is a little being of the Infernal regions, and it also sounds as if he and his followers would do anything treacherous to recapture the boy Prince" said James Vivian with a doubtful expression."

But Penrod assure him that Fredrick Lowden was in a Glandelinian hospital some where and may not be seen for some time to come.,

"As for that Dangar boy, whom you call a "Confederate" of these rascals" continued the elder Prince "he is a dangerous one too but I have never met any of these Glandelinian boyscout Chiefs or whatever they are. But I believe I have heard of them, and from all reports they are not so good at their commission and boyscout duties as to be able to really outwit us. However in spite of what may turn up I will earn the loving hugs and kisses you have promised me by keeping your prisoner safe in my headquarters and have the child scouts camp around the building to keep every stranger from approaching it."

Violet, and her sisters certainly then keep their promise. However the prisoner felt or began to cry when he thought he was going to be seperated from such beautiful little girls, and be locked up in a cell or room, but Violet, and her sisters positively assured him it was not so, and that he would would be seen by them very often for they resided here, and this was their own headquarters. "And" violet said "you're to eat breakfast with us even though you are a prisoner."

"And you shall never be locked in a small cell" declared Joice "For this house is no prison. You were never treated right by those over you in your army we can see that by your actions when we captured you and therefore being with us you have passed from the control of your heartless guardians into our own more considerate care. You are a captive it is true, but we won: won't treat you as a prisoner. Only don't try to run away or you might be shot by the soldiers. Promise that won't you."

"I won't run away" said the boy, and he told the truth. "He didn't want to. He found some strange attraction in them and he didn't want to go away never,"

A little later a great breakfast feast was spread. Prince Vivian Penrod, James vivian and the vivian girls having triumphanted in their plot and raid were so well pleased, that instead of going to bed as they proposed proposed that morning they held high but righteous revelry with the big christian generals who were invited to the celebration untill a late hour that day having forgotten all about having been sleepy. And they all dined in great state at that in the most lofty domed dinning dining hall of the headquarters where the little boy Prince could not hardly believed his eyes for the splendor. And where fourty soldier waited waited upon them. The great chef anxious to always win the favors of the conquering raiders had prepared his tizzetta finest and most savory dishes for them, which even the little prisoner ate with much appetite and found delo delicious. Indeed even everyone found it so delic ious that they ordered the chef brought into the banquet hall, and presented him with a curl of hair from each and a ikiss on the forehead.

"You are welcome to our love and respect" said Jennie to the chef "for you do for out sake love to cook us the best every time."

"He left the room blushing in the face as if he had scarlet fever.

A few minutes after when the meal was half tu true Penrod who had been much frightened during the time of the discovery he had been fighting his s his dear sister Violet so savagely now began to turn the matter into a joke.

"Why my dear sister violet" said he "You almost had me whipped as if I were a mere school boy being punished by a Teacher in the Country I came from, even though I disarmed you of every weapon you brought to bear against me. That reminds me to demand of you an exclamanation. What made you do it Violet. It happened of course during the fray with that small party of glandelinian cavarly. And where did the wonderful fighting qualities come from?"

"Why" said violet smiling, it I" It must have been from the excitement of the conflict. After the Glandelinians scattered being worsted, I saw you coming and was some distance from my sisters. It was that gray coat you had on that decieved me or some one who had something gray on for I saw it. I believed it was a glandelinian boyscout, and hoping it was Gerald Starring, and desiring to capture him I made the assault upon you. After the battle lasted a minute I should have realized it was you, for nobody fights that way but you. But I was too excited to realize at the time, and the more you got the better of me the madder I got. I was determined to capture you even at the risk of my life, and when you disarmed me of the cutlass I was going to draw my pistol when that light enveloped me. You demand of me where I got the fighting qualities. Why Penrod I'm surprise. you learned me all that and then ask me the question?"

"How is it that I disarmed you so easily then."

"Why Penrod there is no girl as strong in the arm as you" she said almost pouting."

"That may have been it and maybe not" laughed James Vivian. "Probably you didn't get your training complete. But goodness me I sure saw the fight and it was some scrap. I saw violet charging down, and then the crash. Now you changed each other for three minutes neither whipping the other. It was the best draw I ever seen in a fight, and Violet if you didn't get some training there, in that real fight with your brother, then don't mention it. But it sure was the best fight I ever saw,"

"I am afraid then I was the cause of it" said Susan Farrol. "I had that gray vest on in which was the papers which I gave to Joice, and I believe violet must have saw that and changed for me. If I had been caught I believe I would not have had any show in the fight, even though I wouldn't know who I fought, Penrod was in violets path, directly in front of me and he met the shock."

"That must have been it" said Penrod.

"It was" said violet. "I saw something gray and changed for it. I might have struck her instead but you my dear brother was in my way and we did the fighting, yet that gray seemed to be on you all the time. Wasn't you scared Susan."

"Yes I was. I thought it was a enemy soldier fighting Penrod." But I was chilled with horror when the glare revealed the real the truth.."

"You wasn't horrified any more than I was." said violet soberly. "It was a wonder I didn't faint, so horrified I was when I saw Penrod, and that it was you Susan who had on that gray vest. It was that vest that decieved me."

After the morning meal Penrod and violet and her sisters showed showed to their little prisoner the finest rooms the building contained. There were many pleasant apartments, but the Prince wanted to share the shame bedroom with Penrod and violet and her sisters so then they allowed him to have his will. As the bedroom they occupied was large an extra bed was placed there at Penrods order. Therefore at three oclock in the afternoon having been tired out by the nights events and having not slept since the night before they retired early to their big sleeping apartment placing the little boy in his selected bed in the center of the room. They carefully bolted the door of their bedroom that no strangers might enter, and placing guards outside their windows, they then said their evening prayers, had the Prince learn some too and then got into their beds, where the little willing prisoner feel fell asleep in an instant. Though his sisters soon dozed off Penrod lay awake for a short while thinking over the nights adventures but presently he fell sound asleep also.

Gerald Starring guided his followers truly in his persuit of the fugitive boat of Violet and her sisters and the others, but the boyscout had been so delayed in trying to discover the exact route, that it was fully three hours after Violet and her sisters landed on the shore of the christian side of the stream that Geralds boat arived, and yet he did not land at the same place. He discovered the fugitive boat going down the river in another direction but observing it with his field glasses Starring saw that those he were after were not in the boat, and that there were too many children scouts in it to try and assault it without disaster to himself. Nobody not soldiers even could whip the christian child scouts and therefore why should he fight it. He had no intentions of fighting anyhow. He wished to regain the prisoner by some sort of scheme or nigotiation. He realized however violet and her sisters must have headed into into the christian lines. His companions did not wish to go forth on so rough a journey tward the christian lines even if they could pass the sentries safely by some sort of scheme, but they would not desert Starring or his "Confederate" even though their own safty lay just beyond the river. So they all bravely left the boat except three who were ordered to retrace their path down the river to prevent it from being captured. They traveled just as slowly as Prince as violet and her sisters and brother did but they went by a shorter route so that they gained more time than they did and therefore when they were about half way, they discovered Violet and her sisters and the others with them, and with their prisoner in their midst.

Had Violet and her sisters been alone with the prisoner the two boys and their followers might have attacked them to recover the Prince but they had three or four dangerous child scouts with them besides their still more dangerous brother, and so at Fred 's suggestion, they all hid behind a high stone untill the Vivian Girls and those with them, who had not observed them had passed on by with their prisoner. Then they continued to follow them but spread out so as to go behind one stone after another as not to be seen, glad that they had not chanced a fight with their dangerous little christian enemies.

"If that Penrod was not with them, or those child scouts, we might have chanced an assault upon them however." said Fred.

"Yes, but Penrod is the worst one, and he remembers what happened concerning Fred Lowden and therefore is as dangerous as a Rattlesnake." said Gerald Starring.

"Never mind "nswered Dangar."I'm sure we can get h im if we can only f ind means to enter the christian lines."

For they time they proceeded in silence and then Fred Dangar began to grin in the pleasant way he was wont to do before the misfortunes came upon him and Gerald through Fred Lowdens blunder with Jennie.

"What amuses you now?"Inquired Gerald.

"The thought of how surprised those little enemies of ours would be if they realized how near to them we are , and yet how far away.I have always wanted again to go close to these christian armies, which is full of strange mystery and peril, and all sorts of strange and dangerous adventures,but my devoted boy and girlscout s ubjects forbade me ever to go near the christian lines, fearing that the christian child scouts would capture me."

Starring seemed sobre all of a sudden.

"Are you afraid now that you are here so close to the christian lines?" Demanded Dangar.

"A little but not much.It is not of the dangers of the encampments but if those we are following would see we are shadowing them we would be in hot water for they would turn and attack us. And not to escape us either but to get us.Therefore we are on a dangerous journey tward the christian lines and I believe we should have carried extra good shooting irons to protect our selves.Especially the one I really fear is their brother or what they call him those only name it understand is Penrod."

"He doesn't appear as dangerous as they are,that is his sisters.He doesn't look even rough at all."

"If you ever had an adventure with him on that confounded train as I did you would not say that"retorted Gerald."As for that Violet she's a screaming wildcat and so is Jennie.It serves Lowden right for his fooling with her too much.He had no right to abuse her in the first place, and anyway he had no right to capture her.He should have captured violet as we planned the blundering fool.We didn't want her, we wanted violet."

Fred thought this over and said;

"I have a good very reliable gun in my coat pocket. would you care to have it." requested the boy.

"Well let us see."returned Gerald Starring,"you may need that gun yourself.But t herefore too we can all be in danger without it.It is best none of us should seperate too far from each other, and if you stay close to all of us of us you may be able to protect us from harm in case they discover us.That one called Susan Farrol for instance. she's nearly as dangerous as Penrod. he's a foriegner of Irish Nationality and we have learned ourselves these Irish if they're Americans are Hellhounds to trifle with whether they be man woman or child if they are against us.Therefore we better remain close together.I believe I could fear her the most. he is pretty but I don't like that sinister looks she's got..2"

"Very well"agreed Fred."I'll not allow any one to seperate too far from us.

They finally now had reached the surburbs of the christian lines but as they were not acquainted with the counter sign nor had no pass they saw it was impossible to get in, and to slip past the sentries was impossible, there were too many.

"What shall we do now?"Gerald demanded."They're in the christian lines now and we cannot follow now.And we have our gray on you see too."

"We can get in on a flag of Truce."said Fred Lowdwn.

"That may be possible,"said one of the boys, but they"they would only let three in and you would be blindfolded untill you were within the camp."

"But if you Face that Penrod he'll capture you anyhow"said another.

"That's going against the Truce and I don't believe he'd do that no matter what a grudge he has against us."said Gerald ."I'm going to try."

Therefore the boy out of his broad white hand erchief made a flag on a stick and then he and Fred approached the sentries, and told that for a good reason they wished to get into the christian lines and see Prince James vivian. On this conditions they found they were readily admitted al right much to their surprise, and one of the soldiers after blind folding them first brought them into the generals headquarters and when within, they were ushered into the Prince's presence and this was after the Vivian Girl Princesses and Penrod were in their beds fast asleep.

Prince Vivian however was suffering inwardly from what he learned his little sisters had suffered, and therefore was unusally cross and grumpy tward the enemy. After the blind fold had been removed and the boys with Gerald still holding the flag confronted the general or Prince the latter said;

"I know what you little rascals, and arch enemies of my little sisters came for.you want to get the little captive away from me or them, but you can't do it so you had best go away again."

"The little captive is the Prince of our own Ruler, and if possible I intend to liberate him."said Gerald Starring firmly.

The Prince stared hard at Gerald, and his two companions, wondering at his audacity.Then he glanced a little harder at Fred Dangar and said;

"I suppose you are his friend Fred Lowden, and that you are next to him in rank?"

"You guessed it the first time."Replied Fred.

"How tall and stout you are for your age indeed."exclaimed the Christian Prince."If you two boys had any common sense you wouldn't side with such a wicked cause any more, and then we'd all forgive you."

"I was just believing how crazy your own country's cause is"said Fred."Really Prince Vivian, we ought to be friends instead of enemies, we are so much the same in everything but disposition and intelligence.."

Then Fred began to grin, while Prince Vivian stared hard at him not nowing whether to accept his speech as a compliment or not. Now the Princes eyes wandered to Gerald Starring, and he asked;

"Is your other companion Lowden in the Glandelinian Base Hospital?"

Gerald met the Princes glowering glance with a gaze equally surely and defiant, while Fred answered"He is your Majesty but far far from here where your smaller brother Penrod cannot never get him."

"Is his face very badly scratched up?"Demanded Prince James curiously.

"That I cannot tell.The doctors and nurses won't let us see him.Why don't you tell him something Gerald.."

But Gerald remained silent and would not say a word.

"Do you expect him to ever be able to return to military duty again."continue continued the Prince questioning Fred.

"Yes"was the answer."but now long we do not know."

"Well follow me"strangers"he said, and led the way to the roof of his headquarters. The two boys stood on the edge of the roof and the Prince regarded his visitors with a scowling face, and this made Fred somewhat uneasy and he didn't stand too close to the roof for fear the Prince would push him off.You see even though his suspicions were wrong, uneasy is the mind that is full of guile.From the roof they could see the enormous christian camp so extensive that it seemed unknown miles to the other end of it.. From some far distance there sounded a loud shrill note from some bugle that seemed to echo through every part of the camp.Instantly from the nearest tents poured brilliantly uniformed child scouts in great numbers forming suddenly into line formation but three double, the boys on one side of the company street and the girls on the other, untill the immense length of the Company Street was lined for a great distance with them as far as the eye could reach in one direction.All were armed with glittering Lances with tricolored pennants attatched at the spear head of the poles, besides two braces of dangerous pistols, and ca rbine and sabre and all were mounted on horse before you could tell what they had done.Gerald Starring was amazed that anybody could command so great an army of christian child scouts.They could easily be counted in his own army they were so few.They began to march and counter march their horses in unusal and very orderly array in a movement which showed they were deploying to surround the Princes's headquarters, which they gradually did, the tents being removed by soldiers as to form them in a circluar position around the building.Then The Prince again turned to his visitor, bad them follow him and they returned to his own chamber, and he once more seated himself upon his chair, while guards were at either door.

"I have shown you "said the Prince"only a part of Missis Angelinia Aron burgs body guard.The Royal Armies of boy and girlscouts called the "Vivianites" are not in his army but in vivianannas again, but of which this is only a part called Turroughs, a re as n numerous as our armies concentrated here and can do many things your side do not be acquainted with at all. You have come here bearing a flag of truce but believing you can force me to give up the captive of my sisters, and I wanted to convince you that my power is too mighty with the Help of the Good God you despise, and your followers despise, for any one of your side to p oppose.I am told that you are a wizard boyscout and depend upon the very Deavils in Hell to help you, but you must under stand that to get the boy away from my sisters is harder to get him away from them than from me, and that though I'm guarding him, he is with them instead.You must know, they do not seem to be mortals whether they really are or not, they are angel possessed, and understand many things ordinary children don't, so if you are obliged to try to get him from them, the chances are they are a hundred times more powerful than you can be.If you wish to secure him you'll have to request them for the boy and not me.Think this over carefully you Glandelinian boys, and very carefully too, and try to realize even though you are not prisoners and free to go you're in mine and their power also.I do not believe you can force me to liberate that boy Prince and I tell you you cannot coax me to do so, for I have given my promise to my sisters and their brother Penrod, and I wouldn't break my promise to them for all the world..Therefore as I do not wish to entertain you any longer, I request you to go away and peacefully too, and leave me alone."

"Forgive me if I do not agree with you Prince Vivian"answered Gerald Starring."How ever difficult and dangerous my duty may be,I cannot leave these christian lines untill every effort to release the boy Prince has failed and left me completely discouraged."

"Very well"said the Prince evidently displeased."I have warned you and if you really desire to try and obtain him you'll have to see the Princesses themselves.If they give in to you which I'm they won't I won't object. And if evil comes upon you, understanding what you often have done to them or caused to happen to them, it is your own fault, for they would show you no mercy.Fortunately you arived with a truce flag and therefore on this occassion they cannot cause you to be a prisoner.But they'll drive you from the camp, I'll guarnentee on that.They are all asleep and therefore I will not arouse any one of them, so you will be given a tent in our camp to day so you can remain untill to morrow when you may see them if they'll accept it.But remember as you're our foe I never will converse with you again."

This seemed an unfair and uncourteous way to treat once declared enemies, but they could not say anything to him, and therefore still holding their flag they followed the orderly who had up on him had been appointed to guide them down a well lighted passage and into the company Street, and through several archways into the company Streets untill they were shown a good sized tent wher in which were two nicely well furnished beds.They were shown the beds they could use.This tent for some reason especially no doubt for accomodation accomodation had a sort of sliding door.They were also though enemies given to their surprise a swell dinner by one of the officers.

"you are not prisoners you must understand as you have your truce flag, and truce pape papers"said the orderly,"Neither are you welcome guests, as you are enemies of Abbieannia, and the Princesses and also having declared to oppose our Mighty Princesses, and their two brothers, and all their hosts of child scouts.But as long as you are within our lines and done treachery we bear you no ill will nevertheless, and you are to be well fed and well cared for as long as you remain in our camps untill you have interviewed the Princesses about their prisoner.But if they refused you you'll have to get out of camp again.Eat hearty, sleep tight, and pleasant dreams to you."

Saying this he left them alone and at once the two boys began to converse together as to the best means to liberate the boy Prince. Fred's advice was rather unsatisfactory to Gerald, just now for all that he said to his last questions was----"Be patient, brave and determined."

However how Hoever Gerald finally suggested, that they try to discover in what part of the encampments the boy Prince might be confined,"not ever guessing that he was in James Vivians headquarters, as that knowledge was necessary before they could take any action. So together they started out, their guards not stopping them but secretly following them nevertheless to see that they don't get into any mischief.They made their way unapposed through a number of company streets and so on.In some places were great batteries of cannons being erected, and in other sections men were forming redoubts.Also they came to the main encampments of the Glandelinian girlscouts.There seemed here girl scouts everywhere--many thousands of them--but none seemed to paid the slight est heed to the two grey uniformed boyscouts.Yet although the two boys continued onward here and there untill they were weary, they were unable to locate the place where the boy Prince had been confined, and when they tried to return to their own tent, they found that they had hopelessly lost themselves as the camp was strangely formed. However as they remembered the number of their tent for tents in the christian camps are numbered, and also the Number of their company Street a girlscout of the Lagoians finally led them the way and they finally found their way to their own tent, and to their own surprise, thanked the girlscout for the favor. Before they went to sleep they told some of the guards not to let any one come to their tent, not even Glandelinian prisoners or nobody..

However though the next day came which was still early in November Violet and her sisters nor Penrod did not awaken, and not untill any one of them were free from being asleep would Prinv Prince Vivian permit the two Glandelinian boyscouts to see poor converse with his little sisters, or even to know in what part of his headquarters they were.

"I will allow no one to arouse them until they awaken themselves" he said in a surly manner. "ut when you do ss see them I firmly believe you have no means of either By force or otherwise to recover from them the Prince, whom I have agreed to not retain at their request."

The two boys did not agree to this.They were determined not to leave the christian lines untill he had liberated the Prince although he did not then imagine how that could be accomplished.They dreaded also the audience with their pretty arch enemies the Vivian girls, whom they knew they had been so mean to and whom surely would grant them no request under any conditions or proposition whatever..They realyy did not want to go before them fearing that Violet, or her sisters would not respect their truce flag, and finally on hearing they were to be summoned, Gerald Starring turned slightly pale on hearing this unwelcome news, but if they were to try and liberate the prince he would have to face them and try to hope for good fortune, when facing "These fearful Princesses" of Abbieannia.They learned queen was with them.

"Who is that Susan Farrell"demanded Gerald Starring of the soldier who was to escort them.

"She is a little Irish girl who once lived in the American State of Illinios"replied the soldier."But she now is one of our best girlscouts and has a fine commission with the Princesses.Too bad they such terrible foes for you to deal with.You boys would have been wiser to have gained their side by being reasonable."

"Doesn't they care for us at all!"inquired Fred.

"It isn't that"said the orderly."But since that day when your companion Lowden did that dirty treacherous plot to Jennie, they have always been angry and agrived about it, and are still also at times downhearted.I can't imagined why you two have come here even on a flag of truce, for to their opinion you sure have not been behaving very well to them but molested them terribly.Good thing your truce flag protects you or otherwise you would be a prisoner and then you would be afraid to face them than you are now.As for their little Wizard of a brother Penrod he won't see you though he'll be watching you and your friend from an unseen place if if you try anything treacherous god help you.He to them is the most powerful guardian in the world despite his size."

"Woe is me"thought Starring to himself"If they determined to capture me despite my truce flag."Why did I and Fred not stay where we belonged."

They were shown their way into James Vivians headqya headquarters again without this time being blindfolded and put into the reception or waiting room.Then after waiting some ten minutes they were ushered into the beautiful presence of the Vivian Girls, who this time were not in uniform but were in civilian clothes, beautifully white and blue fringed or frilled..As the two boy c boys were ushered in Joice had seized the little Prince by both hands and drawing him to her held him fast so he could not be snatched away. They however had known who were coming for James their brother had told them as soon as they had risen from their beds and came to kiss him good morning..

They looked on both Gerald and Fred very coldly, and Jennie said with a sneer;

"Oh so it is you come into the christian lines under a flag of truce hey.Afraid you would be made prisoners I suppose in your quest!"

Gerald was astonished at so severe a greeting. Making a low bow Starring said;

"I believe we have met before on a train Princess Violet."

"Indeed we have"replied Violet herself with a mischivious grin."If that coach had steadied itself you would not have needed to come here under a truce flag you treacherous snake. You tried to slay me and Penrod and yourself with your sucidal intent to escape but it didn't succeed.I understand all about you and your companion here, and also the doings of Fred Lowden..you ought to be ashamed of yourselves Gerald starring and your companion to treat me me and my sisters so badly as you have done. I nor my scouts nor my sisters never had molested you or any of your young followers when we did our duties for out country in your Glandelinian camps.Yet you declared war against us too and done us a lot of dirt.It was your doing that caused me and my sisters to be so widly and sadly seperated from each other and as prisoners some days before the Evangeline St Claire battle, and Jennie to be in the hands of that beast Augustinia St Claire."

"How do you know that I was the cause of all that."Whined Starring trembling as her angry fiery eyes flashed upon him with a strange uncanny light.

"We do tell you it is true and you lie if you say such things, and that's just as bad if not worse."rere retorted Jennie herself who was very indignant. You put up that boy Fred Lowden to make up as Penrod and so basely decieve me so that I almost died from the fright and grief of it.What do you want here.I'm surprised you ever wished to come to see us being such bitter and wicked enemies!"

"We came"said Gerald Starring to demand of you and your sisters to liberate the Glandelinian boy Prince whom your elder sister had confined in her arms."

"Who told you we would grant you any favors on that or other ways"snapped Daisy Haughtily."Get out of here while your flag of truce saves you."

"We won't"said Gerald Starring.

"Yes you will, you will"cried Jennie, stamping her foot at him and her eyes suddenly flashing hells fury."

"But you don't understand Princesses"said Fred."You wouldn't care to be seperated seperated far from your parents or have our general made unhappy any longer or seperated from the little boy.Why it's dreadful Princesses, and I am surprised at you for you are said to be such goody goodies and yet you kidnap our Prince. You may not be as good ad everybody said you were."

"You can't tal us out of anything that way."retorted Catherine."That's an insult and you'll rue it if you continue on.We did nothing sinful in carrying that boy away, and many a time we were carried away because of your compai companion Starring.I won't allow you to cause me or my sisters to be made unhappy any longer or allow you to interfere with out our plans.We have tried to cause you to see reason and never could have succeeded in softening your hearts. hy it's dreadful you two boys, and we never deserved what you caused us to suffer at the hands of the Glandelinian soldiery.Instead of you being surprised at us, we've still more surprised at you.You boys are more wicked than we thought you were. Don't coax us for we won't give up the boy not to you.If Manley comes to us with a proposition we desired to count on we might exchange him for a lot of liberated child slaves but you came here for nothing..I promised my brother Penrod too that we would retain him. We never break our promise to any one.We are surprised that you had the guts to dare and come and face us after all you did to us.you are as bad as a robber and outlaw.So now to trot out of this camp and get away within two hours or so soon as you can."

"But we want the Prince"retorted Gerald Starring."

"Is that so"declared Angeline."You were told before we do you no favors."

"No "persisted the boyscout shaking his head "I won't do it untill I have the boy Prince."I cannot allow you or your sisters to triumph ov r over him."

"In that case"said Angeline suddenly drawing her pistol"I'll show you two some fancy shooting.Get out or if I count ten and you ain't out I'm going to shoot despite your truce flag.you don't respect it on us."

"Don't shoot, please don't shoot"screamed Fred Lowden in horror.

"Do you really mean you'll shoot in spite of our flag"!

"I certainly will"replied Angeline her eyes aglare with angelic fury.

"Please don't shoot, please don't shoot--retain the gun there--I beg--I implore you, and we'll do anything you say. "pla ed a pleaded Fred Lowden his teeth chattering so that he could hardly speak.

"Get going then while there is yet time."snarled Angeline."We don't waste it ourselves."

The two boys went away in haste indeed believing themselves lucky the Vivian girls didn't make them prisoners.

They made preparations too to get away from the christian lines as soon as possible for fear that Violet, and her sisters might suddenly change their minds and order them to be arrested as spies, for spies they were.But violet and her sisters were not of the sort to brea a truce flag from any side, as long as it still had twenty hours before it expired and therefore though frightfully against their will to do so, they had to let the to boys go. But Violet told Penrod to give orders that if those boys are seen still loitering near the christian lines to arrest them after all. After an hour after this exciting scene, Emperor Vivian and the Empress aga in came in from afar to see his brave little daughters and Penrod and his elder brother, and with sobs and tears of joy embraced their brave and adventurous children. All the others within the room stood silent untilll greetings and kisses and embraces had had been exchanged, and Violet and her sisters told of their intercourse with the two Glandelinian boyscouts and how they made them hastily go away and refused their demand.Then also the Two Rulers embraced the three good child scouts and thanked them warmly for so loyally supporting their brave Princely children, and Empress Vivian kissed Jeans lfo rehead and blessed her for giving so much assistance to her children..

Emperor Vivian had been standing nearl Prince George the little captive no not having heard or even learned of it that Violet had captured hij , and him and was surprised to hear the boy say though a trifle sarcastically,

"Joyful reunion you had with your daughters and sons wasn't it.but it makes me tired to see Grown people cry like children when they're suppose d at least to be an Emperor and an Empress....2.2.2.2222 "

'Oho"exclaimed the Emperor at first frowning severely for it wasn't a safe thing for nobody to throw glare at him."Ho does it happen my boyscout that youa Glandelinian and so well dressed happens to be here."

"That's my business"returned the boy in a surly tone, for when scolded he gets equally defiant., for he had his Glandelinian nature and wouldn't be chided by anybody.Violet and her sisters had had no chance to try and convert him, and Penrod doubted if it would be worth while..

But Penrod said;

"Dear father he is a prisoner.This is the boy we were telling you about which brought that starring sa pe snipe, and his Confederate in an effort to regain him.Angeline sent them off in a hurry, and she sure was hot I'll tell you. He is the Prince of Glandelinia, and Emperor Procile's Son."

"Is that true that you are a Prince of Glandelinia"demanded the Emperor.

The boy made no reply, but dropped his head as if ashamed.

"This is a great discovery. "Said Emperor Vivian addressing his daughters and two Sons .I' "I'm afraid though if the Glandelinia Ruler loves this Prince exceptionally you have done a dangerous stunt in capturing him.But it is hard to tell nevertheless for this Ruler is very cruel, was cr, cruel to his Wife and caused her death, and it was said for fear of his father this Prince ran away from home, and too refuge in the Glandelinian army.I heard this story some days ago and heard that a most diligent search had been made for the Prince without result.His sister ran away with him for she was more afraid of her father than he was. Therefore I am well assured that in this boy you have captured an any unhappy Prince.It is probable he believes himself safer within the christian lines and therefore is the reasonthat he didn't mind being a prisoner as you said.But it is a blow to his sister.Maybe those boys will tell her where he is and she'll come after him.If she does, she can only be with him if she submits to be a prisoner with him."

"Dear me Prince George!"Demanded Violet,"Why have you never told me this!"

"What would be the use?"Demanded the boy in a low voice and still refusing to look up."Mama before she died made out of me a Christian and also of my sister and that is why father hated us.Don't let him get me, he'll kill me and my sister."

"How was it the Glandelinian generals protected you?"

"They did not hear I was a christian and I didn't do anything Christian because you can't in the Glandelinian army.So what is the use.?"

"The use"repeated Jennie puzzled.

"Yes that's the trouble"said Violet.."No one not even us could do the least thing Christian there if we wish to spy on the enemy, and also there is no Christian services of any sort.Christianity amongst those Glandelinian armies is absolutely dead, and everything in religion lost.Even I or my sisters with all our bravery cannot dare chances of being seen saying the smallest prayer, if we wish to succeed in a spying mission.We have to say them secretly..but I believe therefore we could easily get the boy safely through A christian course if we can dare retain him without messing things up.but I believe we can be able to do so, and if Emperor Procile interfere we'll fix him as we fixed his father some time ago when we shot him to save a little girl he was murdering. We'll retain him at whatever the cost, and show the wicked enemy that though we got away as often as we were captured, they'll never get him away from us, we won't even exchange him now."

"Is your sister a Christian too though a Glandelinian"asked Hettie,

"Yes. She'll be so grieved over my being gone she'll cry her eyes out."

"You miss her badly.?"

"Yes."

"When it is possible"said Violet determinedly"We must get her too."It won't do to seperate brother and sister so cruelly."She can pray that she'll come after us, and we'll be merciful to her if she really is a good girl and acts sensible. Is she brave?"she added.

"I don't know."said the boy.

"Violet giggled and said whisperingly in Joices ear;

"The worst blow that could happen to the Glandelinian Ruler is to see his children brought up into Christianity and their souls saved.I heard often how he hated them, and it is a God Send, and His wish therefore that we should have captured him and did.. oo Too bad we missed his sister.But God will help us on that...."

Some time that morning Starring and his Companions had returned safely with within the Christian lines and stated to the officers in charge that the Princesses had been interviewed by them and that Violet and her sisters had threatened them with death because they demanded the boy from them. However Starring said"I have captured the horse belonging to Princess Jennie and intend to retain himself myself.

"George's sister Princess Mary was there, and had been weeping at hearing the neas. however she was a brave girl and recovering said thought she thought to herself (You had no right to steal the horse you brute) "Is that the horse?What a beautiful brown color he has."

"It is "said Starring and I mean to ride him too. I' I'm going to try it now."

The little girl through her tears giggled softly to herself as she heard this, for she had often heard nobody could ride the horses of the Princesses, but the Princesses themselves.The horses had been trained not to let an, strangers on. Starring mounted the horse, and when he was firmly astride the saddle he called in a loud voice;

"Giddap."

When the horse paid no attention to the command, and refused to stir, Starring drove his spurs viciously against the horses body, and then the horse did start suddenly.He ran swiftly across the company Street, and down another, and then stopped so abruptly, that Starring sailed over his head and bumped against a tree, while the horse then ran on and nobody could stop him.The boy bumped his head so hard that his hard boyscout cap was all benged out of shape so that it covered one eye and a part of his nose. In landing on the dusty road he was soon all covered with a dust.Perhaps the nature of the camp saved the bad boys head from being injured.Mary despite the grief over the loss of her brother was highly pleased at the antics of the runaway horse and laughed merrily at the bad boys comical appearance, but Starring muttering, and growling as he staggered to his feet and it was evident that he was not in the least bit amused.Indeed Mary could see that the boyscout was very angry, but though she laughed he couldn't dare do anything to herfor she could have him punished.He gave her an awful scowl however as he strode angrily away.

Despite Despite the peril of undergoing such an adventure Mary was determined to try and get into the christian lines and either secure her little brother her herself, or allow herself to be captured in order to be with him.She didn't believe the stories of the Vivian Girls told so often by Gerald, and if they really were so mean to him it was then his fault. She however by a secret route left the Glandelinian camps at night, and after crossing the stream in a row boat which she rowed herself she soon was on the christian side of the shore. After she had traveled a short distance she was aroused by a soft strange graying sound that filled her with anxiety because she could not account for it.It was very dark in this territory, the light of the moon having disappeared behind a roll of veatyttdtd heavy cloud but she butshe managed to feel her way among the stiny path but found it might heb she might be going the wrong way.Just as she made her way to the opposite path way, there came a cry from some sentry, and a shot followed, the bullet almost wining her ear.The little girl then had a curious sensation, that despite the gloom the christian sentry had seen her motion, and believing she was a glandelinian soldier creeping tward him had fired a shot.Only the rocky condition of the territory saved herfrom being hitBut nevertheless it was a most uncomfortable feeling, and she laid herself down very low amongst the many big stones not nowing what to do, and not daring to do anything for a minute or two. And as the strange grating noise had ceased, she felt a little easier untill she heard some one cry out;

"Did you hit him Henry.?"

"No-I didn't.Maybe it was my imagination but I believed I saw an object moving stealthily amon st those stones.But it's gone now.I've signalled for the officer of the guard, so we can search the territory."

A few minue minutes later she heard the noise of footsteps and heard the grating sound again, and also sawthe gleam of flashlights . She didn't want to be captured here for she would be charged with being a girl spy. She stole away in another direction and came upon a rude corridor through a large rocky sceneey and dimly lighted as the moon again came out. It did not appear inviting so she hesitated to go through it forfear of sentries, which may effectually prevent her escape in that direction.

She would not worry if it was not for the fact that the christian guards might not mistake herfor a Glandelinian girlscout spy, and as the Vivian Girls were so often persecuted by the glandelinian soldiery notfor spying, but just for pure meanness there was no telling what the christians might do to her.Also she realized that Gerald Starring might have tricked herfor revenge of her laughing at his discomfiture in trying to ride the stolen horse, for he evidently had given her this direction when she told she wanted to go into the christian lines anf find her sister herself.Or probably he had plotted to cause her this trouble so that in case she was captured she would be charged with being a spy, and she had no intentions to spy, as in fact she was more for Abbieannia anyhows ince her father was so wicked and cruel. she was anyhow for her mother and not for him. One way she believed had been left however, by which she might escape, and she dedice decided to see where where the path to the left led too.So going forward slowly, she ventured into the dimply or dimly lighted pathway . When she advanced a few steps, she heard again the sharp report of a rifle. She ran to cover at once.She waited breathlessly for the result but nothing happened.Yet the only way of escape lay ahead of her and she prayed as her mother had told her, begging God to help her saying she had not any intentions of doing the christian army any harm only wished to find her brother who had been stolen from her. She decided to go by hands and Knees and therefore along the narrow path way she crept, untill turning a corner in the narrow road, she found herself in a large extensive opening into fields and so forth where many yellow sided tents rose in circus formation with lavander tops, and red curved borders, and which tents were numbered.It seemed empty and ser deserted save for where the camp fires had died out or still slightly glared and flickered here and there.. The moon only made a dim light here that permitted her to see that a big company Street led through, so being sure no guards was her, she crossed the company street as quick as possible and went between two tents.

"Hey there little girl where do you think you're going" came a sudden voice from seemingly no where."Halt I say or I'll shoot."

She glanced around but saw nobody in sight though the voice did come from a girlscout by its sound, However she did not obey the command but continued on ward coming into a company Street which though broad had the curve as of a river.But here she halted behind a big tree because she saw a company of soldiers coming on horse. She would not mind being captured if she was captured in the right spot, for then she could tell them who she was and be brought before the Vivian Girls.She heard the voice of the girlscout again, and a sound too as if some one was following, and the sound of the voice halted the cavarly soldiers.Just then a heavily armed girlscout came riding up.

"What's the matter"demanded the soldier in the leade.

"I'm searching for a girlscout wearing gray"she answered."I saw her slip in between some tents and now she's gone."

"There's no one in sight here,"said the officer"and if anyone passed here we could have seen them.That girl might have escaped you you."

By this time the girl was hiding between two other tents but these tents were not so large and were closer together so she could squeeze in between and easily hi hide herself.O e One of these tents was vacant, and therefore fearing some of the soldiers would search between the tents, she decided to enter that, but then on second thought believed empty tents would also be searched.Beyond was a big clearing in the camp and she thought if only she could reach that she could get somewhere before she was captured, if captured she had to be, for she had heard there was no possibility of escaping child scouts of the Christians once they're after you. The Clearing was surrounded by immense tents of beautiful shape and design and it seemed as the whole clearing was deserted.Observing this from her cover Mary saw what she thought was another company Street at its farther side, so with all her might she ran full speed for it. he reached the clearing but the officer and soldiers and the girlscout had seen her fleeing figure, and had she not been a little girl she would not have escaped without being shot by half a dozen soldiers. She reached the clearing however with them coming a thundering after her from another routte.The solemn silence before she had heard the coming silence had made her hesitate by chosing this company Street.Upon reflection however she realized unless she ran down this broad road and went across to hide she would be captured, so she boldly ran across the road and got between some tents before she was seen.Scarcely had she gone two paces between the tents when some sort of a crash resounded behind her, and by squeezing through between the tents she had caused something to disoldge itself and it almost closed the opening through which she had just come.She paused a moment believingthe noise would arouse those within the tent and the persueing soldiers, and seeing she was right, in her fear she so squeezed out at the other part and beat it across another company Street.From the occupants od the tent she recieved a perfect hail of bullets, but because of the gloom not a bullet hit her.They fired however not realizing it was only a child. and seeing only a fleeing figure of some shape in gray.

Hiding behind a trees she again paused a moment, but it still seemed best to proceed. But she changed her mind for she saw a number of soldiers swarming from three directions having been aroused by the shooting.It was now the horror of the situation occured to the poor girl with full force.But he But she resolved not to submit to her fate without a struggle, and realizing realizing she possessed a set of good reliable pistols, she suddenly ran from cover with the intention to shoot if necessary, but found herself crossing into a grove without having been seen.

By now the dim li light of the Moon which before had guided her had vanished had vanished as a cloud again crossed the moon, yet on peering into the gloom of the night, he she saw at some distance a number of good sized camp fires flaring up, which cast a subdued glow over the company streets and the nearest nearest tents. By this dull glow she made out the forms of a good number of men on foot following toward where she was hiding from two directions. The men were Abbiennians she could tell by the forms of their hats for the tops of their hats were heavily covered with coarse plumes. Presently one of the men glanced toward her hiding place and called out in a horase stern voice;

"Who is that there. Come nih hither my pretty girl. What are you doing hiding behind that tree. You are a under arrest."

At this she started to rush away;

"Halt" came the cry.

The little girl made no reply to this challenge. She realized she was in dire peril, and yet they being christians she didn't care to shoot either. But it But it was now too late for va in regrets either, although she feared that if she did shoot at any of them it would avail her nothing against these great numbers. Therefore the little Princess resolved to employ other means to escape escape theseee soldiers, who doubtless were forming a line to bar her escape down the company street. But she retreated suddenly between the tents as she often did before. A soldier rushed toward her but she managed to trip him and he fell sprawling. Then she ran across another stretch of ground, but just as she reached a certain road instant instantly the ground began to sink beneath her and in great alarm she turned and made a leap that enabled her to grasp the bough of a strong tree and regain a footing on soldi solid ground. Scarcely had she obtained the solid ground, when a mighty crash resounded throughout the camp in this section as if a grenade had exploded. She had come near fearing falling into a pit. The Grenade no doubt had been hurled toward her. She glanced toward where the pit was and understood had not she instantly grasped the branch of the tree, and regained her footing on the road she would have plunged into the deep hole that lay before her.

By the light of the moon again, she saw another Haven of refuge and the thought came to her that possibly she could reach it if she ran fast enough. Of course this could not be accomplished without her marvelious speed of running, but Mary had the feeling that one good powerful sprint might carry her to a point of safty. She could not stay where she was, that was certain, so she resolved to try it before the soldiers discovered her here.

She started forward and then, exerting all her strength, she ran as fast as she could. Swiftly she flew, and although her heart stood still with fear but only a minute elasped before she reached the spot. Only pausing to draw one long breath of relief, Mary did not lose time in crossing another Company Street. Then she reached the edge of the camp in that locality, but when she came came in sight of the open woods she paused abruptly her eyes nearly nearly blinded by a glare of strong light which burst upon them. Covering her face with her hands, she retreated behind a wide tree and by gradually getting her eyes used to the light she was finally able to gaze without blinking upon the strange glare that had so suddenly changed the condition of the territory. When she had passed through this section of woods in first entering the te territory from the river it had been entirely dark. Now the entire wall of trees were one blaze of fire, indeed the whole territory was one monster conflagration, and the heat that came from it was fearful. It wasn't moving toward the camps however, and Marys heart sank within her as she believed it was some terrible obstacle placed there by some cunning christian guards between her and the safty of re. re recrossing the river. There was no turning back for it would be impossible to do so without being captured. Neither could she dare go through the burning trees. In this dilemma she feared there was not anything that would save her now and she bitterly reproached herself for coming this way at all. The fact of the fire really, was that some glandelinians had set it for the purpose to start a conflagration in the christian camps for revenge of the big raid. However it was not in the nature of Princess Mary to despair for long, her past adventures having taught her confidence and courage, sharpened her wits and given her the genius of invention. She sat down and taught earnestly of the means of escape from her danger and at last a clever idea came into her head. This is the way to get ideas, never to let adverse circumstances discourage you but to believe there is a way out of every kid difficulty, which may be found by earnest thought... There were many points or parts of the flaming woods where the brush and trees were not so close together, and therefore if she could wet herself good and hold a wat cloth over her head she could pass through the flaming woods safly. Therefore she went to where she had seen a rain barrel and she got into it and soaked herself good. She got out leaving herself wringing wet tore off a portion of her uniform dress wetted it till it was dripping fast. When

When this was completed she did not long hesitate to take advantage of her wet clothes for she understood her best chance of escape lay in her crossing through the least of the conflagration before the fire got so fierce it would be impossible to do so. So she rushed for the opening, and from there began tearing through the forest as if she was a frightened rabbit being chased by the Hunters dogs. A withering wave of heat at once enveloped her, and flames even seared up around her, and the smoke was dense and for a time she feared she would suffocate, or that her wet clothing would become so hot as to scald her before she could crosss cross the flaming area, but she held her breath, prayed desperately and continued to hold her breath to prevent the hot air and smoke from entering her lungs, and maintaining her rush with desperate resolve.

She understood this part of the forest was not extensive, but before she realized it, she had suddenly left the burning area and came into a nother opening toward a branch of the christian camps, and she rolled helpless upon the ground, gasping for breath. Her skin was was so red that it resembled the shell of a boiled lobster, and her clothing felt very hot, but her swift motion had prevented her from being scalded or burned, and her shoes had heavy soles which saved her feet. After resting for a few minutes, the little girl felt strong enough to go on. She went down the Company street, but up rose before her a party of boy and girlscouts who immediately surrounded her and began questioning her, and finding that after all she was only the sister of the boy Prince that had been captured three of the boyscouts decided to bring her before violet, and her sisters .2.2.2

Before breakfast this morning, or dinner rather Penrod had been pleadingly requested by Violet and her sisters to show them some new tricks which he said he had learned by the Indians, and therefore he decided to do so, the little boy Prince being able to witness it too.

"There is one trick I'm going to show you" declared Penrod after he had come out of his room into which he had gone for a few minute minutes. "See this curious skein of golden thread which one of the Indians have given me. If you twin it all about me I'll show you I can escape through its net. It's untangable and unbreakable see it is a good trick.."

With this he held out a ball of small glittering gold twine, which was really pretty and curious. Violet accepted the ball or skein and coiled it around Penrods body, at the same time weaving it into a net untill it had enveloped the boy from head to foot and placed him in a prison of gold.

"Surely" said violet somewhat afraid; "You surely could never getbout of that!"

"Oh no" replied the boy, and grabbing a certain part of it which seemed to be protruding our out he pulled and the whole thing fell to the floor in a tangled mass and he stepped out. Violet rubbed her chin toughtfully and stared hard at Penrod as if she couldn't believe her eyes.

"I understand so many things that it would be impossible to show them all at that" said he.

"But that what you did is almost magic to me" said violet "Because it is unlike anything of the sort, that I ever met with before. Suppose you wind me up in it and let me try it"

Penrod who understood how to do it soon had it all in the form of a ball again and he then impresoned violet in it as she had done to him. violet tried to free herself, and her sisters tried to help her but the more they tried the more she was imprisoned.

"Now see here Penrod dear" laughed violet "You sure have me a prisoner long enough. I give up, you'll have to release me."

"It is simple enough" said he. "See that end of the string sticking up right under your nose!"

"Yes. What is it to do?"

"Ye Just give it a pull."

"he did, and the whole thing fell from her and she was free."

"Simple if you only get the hang of it." said Penrod. "You and your sisters should learn that some day as soon as possible, and then you can release yourself from any rope around you, even though it is tied."

"But we always did get ourselves losse somehow" said Joice "We always thought the glandelinians would stop trying to harm me or my sisters, for as often as they tried they had never succeeded. The glandelinians believe we are harm proof so to say and were merely wasting their time trying to injure or destroy us."

"You may be right, yet I hope I am not so impolite as to argue with my sisters" returned Penrod, but "but for all your experiences with the glandelinian soldiers my dears, you do not know them as well as I do, for I've been in the glandelinian armies most of the time and learned a lot o about them.

Therefore I hope you will pard on me if I'm not satisfied whether you can do everything swiftly against the Glandelinians even though you are in some great degree angel possessed. However I beg you to believe truthfully that no one in the world among any wicked, I don't even believe the very devils in Hell bear you and your sisters nand even I as much ill will as these Glandelinians d o.I had a dream one night and it seemed that some angel appeared to be me and told me that it was my duty to do everything possible to learn you all of my strange capers and tricks, so through that the enemy therefore cannot even do you the slightest harm let alone try to destroy you, but I'm afraid there is some truth in that dream and that in my se sleep an angel did appear and told me that for I've been feeling queer ever since. And too we have done a very dangerous stunt in capturing that little boy Prince, and the glandelinians will positively refuse to leave us alone now untill they have either succeed in doing us dirt or recovered the boy. Im I've been very scared over the situation ever since and therefore whatever you do girls, never leave my side, or go out on an adventure without first telling me or General Evans about it. I'm glad too you have requested me to show you some new tricks. They're new to you but not to me.. Therefore be wise sisters and try your best to learn whatever I try to show you. To morrow if it is possible I'm going to try to learn you the old ones still more. That accidential fight that I and you had violet last night, was one good s e step to learning for you held out very good, and if it had continued I believe you'd have had me. At first I did not appreciate the assault upon me believing it was a glandelinian soldier who had rushed me, and fought you as calmly as if nothing had happened, but was surprised and did not understand how it was possible for me to disarm you so easily, when believing you was a Glandelinian soldier. But remember we have not completed our test of pryship, and as I owe that Glandelinian boyscout Fred Bowden a big grudge for making up as me and decieving Jennie so badly into believing it was me I will be glad to discover the hospital he is in some time and drag him out whether his face is better or not."

His Penrod lost no time in summoning a number of girl and boyscouts, for he was going to show Violet and her sisters a most astounding feat which no one in the world had ever seen before. At first as he saw a batch of Glandelinian prisoners pass by Penrod glared wickedly at them.

"Though you may be able to see the trick I'm going to perform" said Penrod please leave this particular room for a few minutes. I shall remain in here with a number of girl and boyscouts who are lined up here, and you see they have a good number of sharp blac blades in their hands. Don't get scared by what you'll see when you observe me through the open door, as it is something that you cannot appreciate appreciate now but will later. But you must not come into the room for it will be dangerous."

Then violet, and her sisters left the room bringing the little Prince with him.

"I wonder what he is going to do now!" Demanded Jennie, when they were standing by the open doorway."

"He means to do some unusual trick" Replied violet "He may be in some danger if he doesn't succeed in that trick. Where did that knife come from I wonder.!"

For from the hand of one of the girlscouts a long sharp knife suddenly appeared in the air near Penrod twisting and turning from side to side and darting here and there in a dangerous manner without any support whatever. To their consternation Penrod with a movement of his arm thrust it it aside. Then another blade shot through the air, and another, and another--- untill the small space in the room seemed filled with them as the boys and girls threw them quick and fast. Their sharp points and edges darted tward Penrod perpetually, and it seemed as if nothing could have saved him from being cut to pieces, but he seemed unusally fast in all his motions, and he either thrust them aside as fast as they came or even caught them and sent them sticking into the wall. As it was not a blade touched him. Penrod darted here and there in the room room thrusting aside or catching the whirring blades, and the glitter of so many knives seemed rather tiring to the eyes of violet and her sisters. Perhaps for ten minutes he repeated this astounding stunt, the blades darting about him at times in bewildering fury, then the child scouts recovered them. Violet and her sisters had their heads cautiously into the open doorway while all this was going on, gazing spell bound in amazement, horror and bewilderment, and felt the same awe too as if they were gazing upon something profoundly magic. Finally Penrod called to them and they were in great awe of him as they came in and stood stood about him.

"Well what did you think of it." he demanded with a grin.

Violet and her sisters could not find speech for would words.

When he felt sure they had recovered somewhat from their surprise he finally said;

"And now tell me dear sisters if the enemy really know my ways wouldn't they get tired to trying to injure you.!"

"Eh---heh" Said violet. "I and my sisters see now that you can protect yourself in many ways."

"But because you are angel possessed you you believe you are as well protected as I am with all my strange arts., not of course meaning to show no faith in them!"

"Why do you" inquired Jennie uneasy at the question, because they remembered they had undergone trials far more greater and far more dangerous than any other persons had ever encountered, and therefore were somewhat alarmed at the question, for although they realized they were in the condition called "Angel possessed, they could not remember a real miracle being accomplished to save them from the enemy, though something had seemed to give them marvelous strength for their age, and strength alone would not always enable them to escape from danger.... But they believed the angels were responsible for the coming and finding out of the character and ~~relationship~~ relationship of Penrod and Jennie said almost reproachfully with a little sadness in it,

"You are a migh ty poorly informed brother of ours Penrod dear, and I'll give you my best crown if you may not be possessed with angels yourself. It may have been through you many times in the past without our ever imagining it that we may have escaped any danger that we had been threatened with. Somebody by the name of Adelaide caused Evans to find me at Augustinia St Claires place and I never knew it was you."

"Your hole crown is not worth one of the valuable smiles you can give" answered Penrod. "It is true I was the boy, but I had stumbled upon the place just before Evans came. Augustinia St Claire was never burned in the fire. I'm hopinh hoping to see him captured one of these days. Of course I do not understand what had become of that co cowardly toad, for if he is not dead or captured by this time I will admit he cannot be captured. But he his is wanted badly for what he did to you. But let us forget these sad incidents and----

A boyscout was at this moment ushered in.

"Darlings of the Nation" he stammered. "We have a girl scout or something of that order a prisoner. She was persued through the Company Streets and finally captured. She says she is the sister of the boy Prince you captured. We didn't believe it, but thought we'd bring her here to let you see for yourself. We suspected her of spying but she stoutly denied it."

Violet, and her sisters looked at each other.

"Bring the prisoner in" said Penrod, but he scowled.

"Be careful" whispered violet when she saw his black look. "She may be better than she believes, and she's certainly brave to chance all to try and get to see her brother. We'll pretend a little harsh at first to see how she acts. Then if she is all right we'll give her a fair trial, and if she is really a good girl, we'll do all our best to get her to become of our side if they will. Otherwise we'll have to exchange the boy as as proposed."

A minute or so later the child scouts appeared, bringing the girl in.

"Tarts and tadpoles" almost screamed the girl prisoner. "They're angels in here in the form of little girls. Let me out please. I didn't done nothing."

To her violet and her sisters appeared so immeasureably pretty in bueaty bueaty and also inform that the little girl was dreadfully awed and scared. If it was not for Violet raising her hand sort of dignified in manner the child scouts who brought her in might have been rough to the girl prisoner.

For a moment Violet, and her sisters looked sort of disdainfully on the little girl, but seeing her tear stained face, and realizing how they themselves had felt when often a seperated from each other Violet finally said;

"Is it true you did not come to do any spying Princess !"

"yes." the little girl sobbed.

"Violet gave her a searching look and something in the little prisoners eyes showed violet that hshe was absolutely telling the truth.

"Did you give yourself up or was you captu captured!" was the next question.

"I-----I-----I------ as was captured."

"Well little girl who may you really be!" demanded Jennie. "and how dare you come un invited and all alone to our lines, and do things that may have caused you be to be arrested as a spy even if you are not one!"

"I am PP rincess Mary Procile" returned the little girl between half sobs "and I couldn't resist coming here to find or see my brother whom your soldiers captured and carried away."

"you love to jest I see my baby Princess" said viole, Violet almost sternly; "and the jesting is fairly good. It was no soldiers who captured your brother but I myself during the raid. We didn't know he had a sister. But why then therefore did you willingly thrust your head into the lions mouth. When you were free why didn't you stay free. We did not Know we left the little Glandelinian Princess in the Glandelinian camp during our big raid. But since you managed to escape us then, it is really good of you to come here of your own free will to be our prisoner."

She said all this, when really in her heart she couldn't help feeling compassion compassion for the poor child who though a Glandelinian had had not the character of a Glandelinian. But the child through her sobs answered

"I don't care what happens to me so long as I'm by my brother. I can't stand it to be without him. Oh please don't take him away from me. Oh please don't. You wouldn't want to be seperated from each other. You know how it hurts. Please let me have my little brother again. Please do."

"If you wished to have had the chance to come and see your brother, why didn't you come into our lines carrying a white or truce flag" said Angelina rather sharply, "or any one coming in as you did could easily be suspected as being a spy and would have a hard time getting out of the mess too. The guards say you were pursued from one company street to another, and if a number of scouts had not lain in ambush for you you would never have been apprehended. This is an offense nearly as bad a spying, but it leaved you out of the trouble, since they found no important despatches on you."

"I didn't know the guards would let me in on a truce flag" sobbed the little girl.

"If they let those snakes Gerald Starring and his companion come in with a white flag they would have let you too." declared Angeline. "The fact is most of you Glandelinians whether you are good or bad have no confidence in us anyway, because probably of the many reports given out about us. We could retain you as a spy but we won't. But you're our prisoner just the same because you came into our lines uninvited."

"I don't care but please let me be with my little brother."

"We will at that since you're here now. But remember" said Violet, "That you'll have to stay in this building building and not even so much as look at any Glandelinian soldier. We may Exchange you and your brother for a whole lot of child slaves still held in the enemys lines. Only then can you go free."

"Oh, no, no please don't do that." cried the poor little girl almost weeping bitterly. "To day they were going to send me home to my cruel father. Please let me stay here."

Violet and her sisters looked at each other and then at Penrod. They had not expected to hear this and were surprised.

"What is the matter with your father the Glandelinian King" demanded Penrod. "You surprise me girl, for I thought a thought all children are supposed to love, honor and obey their parents."

"Oh he's cruel, cruel." she sobbed. "Two years ago he murdered my mother because she was a christian and made us be christians too. He married another woman and she's a wicked stepmother. Please don't exchange us please don't, we are not bad and won't do nothing naughty. Please keep us here in your the christian lines."

"Our pleans would be badly upset if we did that" said Penrod to his sisters for he really meant it. He and Violet and her sisters had really intended more anything else to capture the Prince and ransom him for a great number of child slaves, and now having the little girl too, it would have brought a great number for the exchange. But after all to their surprise, and also happy joy (though they hid their happiness just then) the two children were really christians, Their Father was an inhuman brute and surely must hate his children even though they are his own, if not his step children. After some conversation among themselves, violet said to the little girl;

"Whose child are you really. Your dead mothers or your step mothers.!"

"We are our real mothers children."

"Then you really are the children of Emperor James Michael Procile Ruler of Glandelinia!"

"Yes" she sobbed.

"Come here" said Penrod. "Let me ask you some questions. What we will do decides on the questions we demand! First how old are you and your brother!"

"I am eight. My brother is seven years and a half !"

"Where did your Father meet your mother !"

"I don't know. He never said anything about her. He always fight with her for saying her prayers nig night and day. We couldn't go to Church as there are no Christian Churches in Glandelinia. They're all communisimm."

"What religion does your or did your mother belong to!"

"I'm not sure what they call it but here's something which the soldiers never saw me have. Maybe you'll be able to tell by that!"

She to their surprise produced a Rosary, and a Scapular."

"Catholics" said Penrod. "I understand now. And your Father is intensely opposed to that!"

"What is opposed" said the child too young to understand the meaning of the word.

"Oppose means fight against it, to hate the Catholics she explained.

"She He hates all Christians" said the little girl wiping her eyes for she felt somewhat relieved now. He would murder us if we ever return returned home. He wanted to do it but we ran away. He said all Christians in Glandelinia have to die. He would have us cut to pieces as they do the other christian children."

"He sure must not love you then" said Penrod, and I cannot hardly believe he is really your father if he is so cruel as to sacrifice you that way because you are Christians. But then it has happened in olden times so it may be. And now because you are afraid of him you would remain stay here and remain prisoners and not be exchanged.!"

"Yes."

"That is something which we have nothing to say on." declared Joice to Penrod. "The Laws of our Far distant anchestors cannot be changed as it is the Rule of the Abbieannian Parlement. The best and only hope is that the enemy will refuse the proposition. Therefore we'll have to do it. But it hurts to think of it."

"Come to think of it there is a way out of it" said Jennie "For I read the laws yesterday. "Their fact being Christians shows a way out especially if they're persecuted by their cruel Father. If it is true that he would murder them if the soldiers brought them back to him in Glandelinia we would be responsible for it outselves for exchanging them especially if we were conscious of the result. No we won't exchange them nor will we give them up. We'll retain them them and if they act accordingly to the way we desire of them we won't ever hold them as prisoners. But they'll be on probation for a month anyhow. So rest easy you two poor children, you won't be exchanged or given up. Shows us your gratitude by being good, and we'll see what we will do in about a month."

At the same time this was transpiring Angelinia Atonburg was visiting her friend Jennie Turner, who is the Royal girlscout of the Vivian Girl Princesses, and she was glancing through a letter which Angelinia Atonburg had handed her wherein to her surprise was inscribed all the important events of a disaster that had occured near Weeping Willow on it being the record of the destruction of the town of Garee by the christian raiders of the night before but at this point there was a blunder in the raid for the capture of an age man was recorded, with the Glandelinians and all the garrison of the town, with the curious escape of some foriegn boy. Turning over some of the following pages of the long letter Jennie Turner read how the little boy had come into the christian lines trying to rescue his parents with a statement that the raiders made some mistake and that his parents were not Glandelinians. The two girls were very much interested to find out how well the boy succeeded, but discovered that the boy could do nothing at all, and and the helplessness of the poor boy aroused Jennie Turners pity and indignation. The parents were held prisoners by a four flushing English men in the christian army who was one of the sort who thought he new it all.

Jennie Turner therefore went to the headquarters of Violet and her sisters and reached there just as soon as Jennie had told her two little prisoners that they would not be prisoners any more, neither would they be seperated but would be put on probation for a month and if good be allowed the freedom of the camp. She was readily admitted, and told the princesses all about the little boy. He told that she believes the foriegn parents were arrested during the raid on the charge of being glandelinians and that the little boy had proved that the two were not, but that the officer in charge would not liberate them, and that the officer was a Foriegner himself!

"I believe that Foriegner officer has no business treating them so awfully mean when they have been proved not to be Glandelinians" declared Jennie Turner "and I wish you would let me to go that part of the camp and help them out of their trouble."

"Go my dear if you wish to." Replied Violet "But I believe it would be best for you to take Timothy Groveton with you."

"Oh I'm not afraid of men of our own side who only blunders" said Jennie Turner "but I'll be overjoyed to have him for company anyway. And may we use two of your own best and fastest horses Princess!"

"Of course you may. While you are gone Jennie we'll be here, and if you are resisted by the men telegraph to us and we'll come ourselves. You know where the two prisoners are.....!"

"Yes" said Jennie Turner.

"Well then go, and god bless you."

The girlscout chief leader then led violet, and her sisters and kissed them good bye for she was determined to start at once. She found the boyscout captian Timothy Groveton, who was putting his troopers through some drilling processions and when she told him of the little boys plight, he willingly agreed to accompany the girl chieftian to that part of the christian camps. The boyscout leader who was a cheery boy and had a winning smile!! brought up the two magnificent changers always ridden by the Princesses Jennie and violet, the horses Knowing them and then they mounted and started off. To get to that part of the camp they had to cross the dangerous region nearest where great fires were burning. No one who was not acquainted with this territory would have dared to cross it without the aid of a guide, for they might have been caught in the path of one of the fires and been destroyed. But Jennie Turner understood the ways of this ground, and the ins and outs. The journey had been however accomplished in about an hour, and on arriving they at once went toward the encampments where the two old couple were still held prisoners. With the papers signed by Violet and her sisters, the officer had to let the two prisoners go, stating that mistakes happens and it is hard to tell which are Glandelinians and which are not glandelinians. But Jennie Turner did not answer him but went the two to where their little boy was, and there was a joyful reunion.

Because of the unusal success of the immense raid, and because the results were immeasureable Emperor Vivian with his usual hospitality ordered a splendid banquet banquet prepared and invited all his highest generals and officers, and everybody who could come no matter how low on in the military service, and all the child scouts as well to be present that evening to attend the event..(spent) Jennie Turner who had had not joined the raid on this occassion had nevertheless learned of the event that had occured during the raid-(paid) and she became especially interested in the capture of Prince George and the coming of his sister. so she hastily remounted the horse loaned to her by Jennie, and taking violets alone swiftly rode to the Vivian Girls headquarters, where she saw to it the horses were restored to their proper stalls. Realizing that the uniform custom of Jennie Turner must have become badly worn and frayed owing to her own hardships and adventures, Violet ordered a special outfit prepared for the good girlscout leader, and had it laid in her chamber ready for her to put on as soon as she arived, so she would not be shamed shamed or embrassed at the banquet. New customs were also provided for them selves and for all the child scouts who were to attend, all already new and made in the elaborate and becoming brilliant style then prevalent in the land of Abbiennia, and as soon as Jennie Turner arived at their headquarters, she was escorted by the orderlies to her room, that she might bathe and dress her. self. Jennie Turner after she was properly attired, recieving the permission took charge of the captured glandelinian prince, and his little sister, and went to a private room were where they were not likely to be interrupted. Jennie first questioned the little girl Mary long and earnestly about the manner and treatement from their Father the Ruler of Glandelinia, and whether they really would care to be set free again and sent to the camps by an exchange for so many child slaves. But they both protested that they did not want to go there again saying that because they were Christians they were forever disgraced in the eyes of the glandelinian government, and had at first fled into some of the Glandelinian armies believing they were safe there. Finally Jennie Turner pointed out that any person who incurred the enemy of a wicked man could be assured that they could have the desire they wished, but that their being retained in the christian lines would cause the Christian armies a lot of trouble for the glandelinians would be bent jon regaining them at all costs. The boy was not as convinced of the truth of this assertion as his sister was but yet his sister said;

"We have heard that the Princesses, and especially their brother are the most complete angelic girls in all the world, and as powerful as angels, and therefore didn't believe the glandelinians could do any harm to them no matter what they did, whether they had Penrod to protect them or not. Finally all went to the banquet. Penrod was already dressed in Princely raiment and although he seemed some what awed by the unusually pretty assemblage he came to join the festivities. Timothy Groveton was there too and when he realized too that Peorn was a Prince he did not know whether to be sorry or glad for he felt he would miss the companionship of so great a boyscout he had no long been accustomed to go out with on scouting tours, while at the same time he rejoiced in that Penrod had come to his little sisters again. Indeed all those who had not now it before all discovered the young Prince vivian to be an exceedingly courteous lovable and pleasant person, although he was some what more reserved and dignified than were violet, and her sisters... Ah indeed but it was a great feast that Emperor Vivian and His Wife the empress served in the great open square outside in the encampments that night, and everyone was as happy as could be, and as though no war was never going on. General Jack Evans was there beside Penrod, so was James Vivian and many others.. Besides Princess Jennie sat Jennie Turner, and Angelinia Aronburg, and the latter was almost as sweet as the less pretty of the Vivian Girls and that was Hettie, but nevertheless all the Vivian Girls outshone all the rest in their loveliness..s. Emperor Vivian was delighted with all the boy and girlscouts, and Penrod himself joked with some of their leaders and others as all were very agreeable people. But what amused the boyscout was or most was a bunch of pictures of the glandelinian Generals Generals which one of the girlscouts had cut out of papers to make faces at. Generals Johnston and his Son John Manley were much the laughing stock of every one present but when Penrod and Violet and her sisters saw the funny addition to a picture of Federal made by who about that became it was so comical they all laughed untill their friends thought they would choke.. Then while the banquet was in progress Penrod composed and sang a song to "General Aronburg Federal," which made everybody laugh to tears which was something in this manner;

"It's very strange how big a beard and how large an caulliflower ear,
Is worn by Mr General Aronburg Federal;
"And yet I fear indeed badly that a Donkey if he had such an ear, could not hear,
"If it were on such a thing that resembles a Monkey.
The Beard is heavy and long, and full of rice;
And is so awfully very hairy, that the rice is eaten by the lice.
"It's quite becoming to Mr General Aronburg Federal, but might disgrace the coldest ice..."

This song was recieved with such a uproar of laughter that it seemed as if nobody could ever be able to recover again, and Violet and her sisters were the loudest, for the slightest funny thing could set them off in a hurry. When the noise was over however Emperor Vivian himself sang a song which had recently been composed but it had such long verses that it couldn't be put down here.

It was very fortunate that the famous Jack Evans the most popular popular person in all Abbiennia next to Emperor Vivian was not absent at the time of the banquet, and he had a chance to see the two captured princely children and seeing that they were Glandelinians was surprised to see that even they were allowed to eat at the same table with the Vivian Girl Princesses, where they were royally entertained, and where the both of them recovered much of their good spirits and composure and tried to forget their dreadful experiences, experiences with their cruel and wicked Father, and Stepmother. Evans however did not say anything, but he nevertheless thought a lot. At first he could not help feeling pretty sore about it, because he had come to hate all glandelinians and a hatred which he could never overcome, because of what Violet and her sisters had so often suffered at their hands, and therefore to see them do this to the children of their arch enemy Emperor James Precile, ruler of Glandelinia and the main cause of the war, and persecutions against them was done thing that he couldn't understand. Atblast however Emperor Vivian desired to return to the territory of Big Girlknool as he longed to be with his armies there and see howcwell the city was being protected from the menmace of the glandelinian armies in that location. James Vivian was also anxious to return to that same spot with his father, although he had been very happy with his little sisters, but positively nevertheless his Father needed him there. As for Prince Penrod he had become so greatly attached to his sisters that he would not leave them under any conditions. On the afternoon of this day the two bade good bye to Penrod, violet and her sisters and the rest, but with the advice that as soonas possible they too must come to Big Girlknool as their presence would be badly need ed by the army. Violet and her sisters decided to go within about ten days. When they were for the first time allowed outside of the head quarters after the royal Persons were gone the two child captives were amazed at the beautiful appearance of the christian encampments. Everywhere besides tents of red yellow and purple colors were buildings of the same tri-colors with fortified positions before them. The towers of the headquarters of the Princesses were magnificence in appearance and also impressive. General Turner had been very active and unusually skillful in directing all the duties of forming the the proper positions outside of the christian lines to prepare for any battle that might be started, and he had also erected a pretty military cottage for himself, not far from the headquarters of violet, and her sisters, and there Penrod found Angelinia Aronburg, who was using the place for her own head headquarters. not only had the general accomplished this is in so short a time but he had made many new schild scouts out of the older rescued child slaves so they could fight for the freedom of their comrades still prisoners.. So pleased was Penrod and his sisters with the good judgement, industry, and charity of this christian general that they gave him a higher commission and put him in charge of no more than hald of the christian armies. Then they all settled down to prepare for any emergency that might come, for the enemy was revengeful for the raid that had occured, and also for the capture of the Prince and Princess, and for the discomfiture of Starving and Dagar, and there was no telling when the storm of battle would suddenly roll upon them. Penrod watched every place where violet and her sister would go, where they could be quickly rescued if danger ever threatened his now dearest sisters.

Jack Evans occupied a Royal chamber made out especially for his use, and very seldom was he even away from them as it may seem because sometimes he was not mentioned. But let anything start with the Vivian girls and he was there as if if was a "Ghost". Indeed to everybody (Christian only() he was a jolly man and his merry disposition set smiles on the faces of every one of his friends and made every one near him as jolly as he was himself. When Penrod himself was not too busy with affairs of military State, and for watching to the safty of his sisters he loved to join the great man and listen to his songs and stories. For he found General Evans to be, with all his careless disposition, a shrewd military philosopher, and also a great fox. Yet despite all his merry nature Evans if passing a Glandelinian internment camp, where prisoners were, changed entirely. Though he said nothing to them his face would be as a thundercloud, and had the real scowl of an ugly bulldog. But that afternoon in conversing of over the many adventures of the Princesses he said to Penrod;

"God even appreciates your loving devotion to your sisters and your protection of them. But no matter where we are the beauty of life is its sudden changes. No one can tell what is going to happen next, and so we are going to be constantly surprised and entertained. The many ups and downs of my fair angelic charges a has never discouraged them, for as often as they were down, they may must have seen a change was coming, and the change came. The Glandelinians who have persecuted them never has had any luck. Though he was never captured yet I have heard Augustinia St Claire had gone out of the child slave business because the fact is he is so unbelievably cruel, that even the Glandelinian government, refusing to be outdone in cruelness ha has disbanded him and refuses him the job. Peldon for stealing little Jannie from Hyletzes lines when he had made out her free papers is wanted badly by him. I do not understand why, but as cruel as he is himself, yet John Johnmanley would give a bigger reward for the arrest of Peldon than for your capture. It is my believe that that fellow without distinction steals child slaves from the Glandelinian armies, to sell to private owners, and therefore as these child slaves are government property, that fellow surely puts himself in a hole. He therefore ought to be sooner or later be captured either by our side of his own side, for he has to face danger everywhere. That's the result of his cruelty to you in the hellmellpell or whatever you call it, penetentiary about a year or more ago..."

Just at this moment an orderly came runni running to say that a great wave of christian horsement was approaching the christian encampments from the south. General Evans sprang up surprised. The others followed him a just as soon for they had much cause to be excited at hearing of this. Penrod was there with the first, and the captive children soon joined the watchers. And presently, while all were gazing eagerly at the approaching cavalry squadron "Evans callee called out-

"Get on your uniforms Princesses----get them on as soon as possible and return !"

"Is there something wrong, then!" said Penrod himself gazing with surprise upon the great general, who glanced violently in their the direction of the advancing cavalry.

"They are my Abyssinian cavalry from Gilgad territory" answered Evans "For I recognize the standards flying from their lances. So please dear Penrod see that your sisters are in uniform as soon as possible. Our whole army advances at once."

"What can you fear just because the cavalry is coming to you!" asked general Charles Brown astonished. But before he could answer the question general Bobo who was standing beside general Evans said;

"It is evident that because of the raid general Aronburg Federal is up to something. We need everybody here to prevent it. I thought I heard firing but was not sure. But now the van of the cavalry had come down the Company Street. They were fifty in number, their horses beautifully decorated and the soldiers wore the gay uniforms of their style. One splendid horse brought along riderless had a especially decorated sadle over which was was draped Emperor vivians royal robe of purple velvet, embroidered with gold buttercups.

This horse however was his own givine given to him as a present recently by his dear friends, Violet, and her sisters. Then a tall man handsomely uniformed urged his horse forward after issueing a command to the main body of cavalry to halt, countless thousands in numbers, and saluting said;

"God Be blessed for our good Fortune, we have found your Excellency at last."

"What's the trouble" demanded the general.

"We have sent a messenger for you sir and he had searched for you everywhere, everywhere, and it is said all the army at Big Girlkool is in despair since you are not there to command a portion of the army. We could not appoint a new commissioned general, because no one can command as you do so we sent him to find you. He did and we came right here."."WERRITYHGCFDA

"And what now!" demanded the general again

"If your Excellency we wish you would come and be in second personal command of our army near Little and Big Girlkool as that place is being menaced by the fierce Glandelinian armies."

"I cannot. I have no orders to move from Emperor Vivian. Sent a message to him."

"But sure you can anyway, get the permit of the Princesses--begging your Excellency's pardon for the contraction or contradiction."

"But why in heavens name did you bring up the whole cavalry here for" said Evans almost angrily. "If that place is in such danger that army needs the support of your whole cavalry, and here you come up here with it. Of all Blunders-----"

"But this is not that cavalry for we didn't come from there" said the general of the cavalry. "We got the message from that territory. The Princesses are desired there too and this cavalry is to protect them en route on the journey."

"Tis a horrid fate that they need such a big body of cavalry to protect them-" mormed Evans. "I would die rather than see them even slightly injured--- there is nothing hurts more than see them in danger."

"We will find it more safer for them to be accompanied by this cavalry division, although I fully appreciate your Excellency's difficult position for their behalf and am truly sorry for them and you" said the cavalry general. General Brown had listened to this conversation thoughtfully, so now he said to his friend;;

"The cavalry general is right sir. It is your duty since they aptured those two Glandelinian princely children to have them protected by a whole army of strong cavalry men since their brave exploits in this war has made them face even unseen dangers, and outside of that I see no escape for them. This situation cannot be avoided."

General Evans sighed.

"Then "said he turning to the cavalry general "To morrow I will push forward with this whole army for that territory and therefore they'll but with your cavalry. But to do so we'll have to force our way against general Federal and sweep him out of the way."

Then all the christian cavalry shouted with delight and brandished their sabres. The last peaceful days within the christian lines on the keeping willow run were long remembered in deed. For never before has such feasting and jollity been seen in that army. General Evans made the most of his time and every one laughed and sang with him all the afternoon. Then at last the hour of parting for every one of the assembled officers arived, and Emperor Vivian and his elder son was escorted by a grand procession to his train. Then as he mounted the platform of the view car the soldiers of the cavalry procession paused with their sabres pointed into the air, while the infantry soldiers, and the child scouts stood in long lines shouting a royal farewell to the Great Ruler of Abbieannia. Then came a Sudden Hush while Emperor Vivian stood up on the car platform and with a bow to those assembled to witness sadly his departure, sang the following song, which he had just composed for the occasion;;;

Now in the meantime general Aronhang Kayo Mond Richardsonin Federal who had ordered this recently massacre of children to be made had before the raid occured gone to the point on space of ground to see how things were going on.He observed the exact truth, over five hundred children lay in mangled heaps, and not far up the bloody lane lay over two hundred and fifty dead Glandelinian Guardian gurdes.He examined the severed ropes of the rescued children, and trailing the foot prints on the ground realized whathhad occured. At first though he was madd or than a march hare, he had said nothing. but b making sure he wasn't watched by the christians who may be scouting in the neighborhood he examined some of the bodies of the murdered children, and Kicking some of them aside left the spot in a rage. He realized it was the Vivian Girl Princesses who had interfered with the massacre, and he had found proof of it through the coats of two of them which they had left behind. in their excitement. At first he did not say anything to that, though he finally returned to camp, and held a council about it amogst his generals.

Then finally toard evening while the council was just concluding came the dreadful raid. He with his field glasses saw at a distance all that was going going on, the conflagrations started, the fierce conflicts of the raid, and the dreadful sweeping victories gained by the raiders. He discovered too that Penrod and the Vivian Girls were leading the raid, and he swore adosomething terrible.To be frustrated this way by his enemies in the massacre, and then to have the same christian enemies descend upon his big camps in a fierce raid was more disgusting to him yet.But what made matters worse almost unexpectedly and without warning the raiders also burst upon his own territory and the ensueing event occured where a later on Gerald Starrinb Gerald Starring and his friend and a soldier had to get the general out of the Kell. The general in the raid upon his headquarters had lost every "pleasedw thing he had, even his uniform hat coat, and sabre and pistols, besides everything probably already mentioned during the description of the raid..even his chef had been captured, and the special child slaves who attended to the cleaning of his headquarters.

His it cost him a full night of hard labor after the raiders were gone to restore order and reestablish his lines, and also to try and stop the progress of the conflagration set by the raiders.that startled him the most as was when that following morning he recieved the report from Gerald Starring that the little Glandelinian Prince had been captured during the raid, that he and his companion had been over there with a flag of truce to try and recover the boy, but that instead of surrendering him, they refused to even give him up, and threatened to shoot them if they didn't get out of their headquarters despite the white flag he showed.He stated too that later they had seen his sister Mary go forth from the camp, and that she was determined to try and recover her brother where they had failed.

The general was frightfully angry over the events, and called the boys little fools for even taking the dangerous chance of facing the Vivian Girl Girl"Brats" as it were.

"Those Those Vivian Girls don't respect no body of our own side"said the general,"and you made fools out of yourselves by going over there even with a flag of truce to have any intercourse with them.being acquainted with those "brats"as you two are you should have known better. If they find out the little boy is a Prince they'll never give him up untill our own Emperor surrenders or starts a terrific exchange for him.Never go near them little gutternips again .I forbid it. "

"But it was our duty to rescue!!!"

"There's no duty that calls for you to go before them little Centerpedes. Had they chosen to do so they would have made you prisoners in spite of your white flag of truce.Seldon do they respect the truce flag of our side, because we don't respect theirs.They would not even give us a half days Armistrice to bury our dead unless they saw fit.It surprises me that you had the nerve to go before them, the way they hate youfor the trouble you and your followers had brought upon them, and especially what Fred Lowden did to their "bratty"sister Jennie or whatever they call her.Why it seems you don't have even any respect for your cause by going over there to have even that sort of an interview.I'll bet if you had had Fredrick Lowden with you that time your white flag of truce would not have saved the three of you from capture. The idea that you had the nerve to face them little "devil possessed" tigresses. And after all the trouble you caused them.You sure must have had a very reckless spirit to do it. I'm surprised that they didn't didn't shoot you as it was.But listen to me.Don't never go near them again unless of course you want to capture them. But I defy you to try that.They'd have you instead. Stay away from their territory or otherwise you will be responsible to only yourselves what will happen to you.They're your worst enemies and you should know that by this time."

The boys went away their hearts burning with hatred for them and him.

"Brat those Vivian girls."He hissed in a rage;"They are the ones who rescued those five children and slew the soldiers but how in the world did the y have the nerve to do it against such odds . Ya gos gods if I ever live to rue this day I'll really make myself a tornadoe as all the christian enemies call me. Wait untill I lay my hands on them that's all."And with this he rode away shaking with rage and discouragement for he knew within himself that he himself did not really dare to tackle the Vivian girls who would shoot him on sight without mercy.

This was indeed the most daring deed that Violet and her sisters had ever accomplis accomplished since the war begun. Think of only six children armed with only two braces of pistols and one su pply of bullets only fifty at thatannihilating about fifty Glandelinians with really only thirty bullets having hit three or four men at times with one single shot. Had the Glandelinians known the charcter of their assailants, or had the little girls ran out of ammunition, or had the Glandelinians by a bold and deperate charge(Which they feared to make however) overpowered them they themselves would have been cut to pieces at that very point, as these Glandelinians being Kurds were the most dangerous kind to tackle drunk as they were were or when not drunk, when bent on murder when and draining of childrens blood.

It was not because they were drunk that the Glandelinians failed to over power the Vivian girls it was because they were frightfully exposed to the childrens deadly fire while every one of their own storm of shots though goodly aimed never touched the little girls because they were sheltered by high rocks and v buol boulders.

It was also from thedsadliness of thefire from the guns of the children that the Glandelinians did not dare to make a desperate charge. At other times the Kurds desperate fighters as they were would havebeen horrified at such a accuracy of their enemies aim, but in their drunken frenzy and their lust for the blood of more children drove them to continue the attack as against such a deadly fire untill the last of them had ben shot down.

However all of these Glandelinians were not slain as supposed. Only twenty five were killed while fifteen werewou d w wounded three of which suffered mortal injuries. None of the wounded however were taken up untill three days later after the incident when a party of Angelinians coming along this point brought them to the camp. General Hansonia had went to se the scene of the massacre the fourth day after it happened and had all the bodies of the children and the Glandelinians cremated. A thr thrrough search for the clothing of the children was made but a pile of ashes and particals of half burned clothes showed that the Glandelinians had destroyed the clothes to prevent the knowledge of where the murdered victims were taken from. Taking a large party of Angelinieih s besides Evans and the Vivian girls Hansonia went to the first town along the road leading to the slaughter ground and inquiring found that no children had been stolen from there and that no Glandelinians of any sort had made their appearance though there had been rumors of their dreaded presence. From one man however who had two children of his own Hansonia learned that a bunch of Glandelinians under general Stancer about fifty five of them had raided an orphan asylumn in the country avout tr three miles from the town and carried off six hundred children from there and rejoined a party of about seven thousand the other hundred children which they butchered on the way to the selected slaughter ground. These Glandelinians as our readers may know had not come to his town on account of thenearness nearne nearness of the mighty christian armies who were only a franction of a mile from the town the sea of white tents and tabours being seen plainly in the distance. W

Whose Glandelinians they were the man did not know though he declared they looked like some of Federals Kurds. He had encountered the Glandeliniand while out riding on his horse. They had not molested him however excepting compelling him to change horses with them.

"Fierce looking devils they were indeed." He told Hansonia:"Though dresse dressed in splindid light blue uniforms several of them appearing to be great officer general of high rank."

From this information Hansonia was flabbergasted and tr retuning returning toard the christian lines planned to have every town and childrens orphans asylumn untill he could remove the hep helpless to safer regions. As he approached another town with the intention of inquiring about the sc slaughter he encounter ten thousand Glandelinians heand h and his force capturing them without a battle Nolans cavarly declaring that the fools as they called the Glandelinians were attempting to raid the town with the intention of slaying the children in it. These Glandelinians were mostly Mc-Hollestinians and surrendered without a fight their leader general Burnsbuy having killed himself after his surrender.Hansonia had inded captured a whole brigade.

As he progressedo on he encountered another party of murderers under Bostos and Barado which brought their whole force and strength to bear on Carpenters army just as Hansonias whole force of fifteen thousand men were h n earin nearing Chambers asl asylumn. A battle of the deadliest fury for such forces in size ensued and after frightful carnage Bostos succeeded in breaking through thr christian lines but the northern wing of the christians was swung around to the point of attack the Abbieannians beating and crushing down every fresh barrier of glandelinins that rushed to the attack. For fully four hours the Abbieannians gallent ly aced he fresher forces of Harado the glandelinians being slwol slowly driven back where they threatenedwith annihilation soon fled in a panic. The glandelinians lost four thousand eight hundred in killed and wounded. The n obal noble christian general Sumpter with three thousand of his men were slain and five thousand of the others were mowed down t Thus the annihilation of an army corps following in a victory however for the christins the Angelinians carrying off the children and nuns to the christian lines where the enemy would not get them.

The next day fearing a reoccurance of t the child slaughter Hansonia sent a large force of men in pursuitand these warned all the inhibatants of the towns to come and go to the christian lin es before it was to late for there was no telling what would happen.

It was not long after this when iolet and her sis/ sisters discovered that Ambrose Fuller was swinging one of his main wings across their way and they feared that another battle of terrible description was threse threatening. Violet and her sisters raced northward to spread the news of the impending batle. Even big forfe c forces of Angelinians under a general that lo ked very much like general Roswell uster ohnston to the little girls was advancing on Ambrose Fuller with hostile intention.

CHAPTER 7

THE BATTLE OF WEPPING WI WILLOW RUN .....

He November the 12th. 1913

Ambrose Fuller ahd seen the advance of general oswell uster ohnston . Ambrose was alarmed for he well knew that Johnston was a demons fighter , a dare devil general who was always bound to win a batle at all cost! Ambrose before this had withdrawn from B , and entrenched therennd now both were [illegible]. A [illegible] get no help from Federal for if Federal should leave Boonia Hansonia would drive inat once and then all would be lost.

However he decided to show f fight t throwing one of his main wings across Weeping illow Run to impede the christian advance. Violet and her sisters having [illegible] the situation rached at once to ansonias headquarters and told him what they saw.....

''Gosh this gives me a good chance to give Federal a good time.''He said;''I'll strike him at once.''

Fedsal however saw the critical danger which threatened him and Ambrose full Fuller, and advancing general ashine the heads army moved these across ohnstons path by night fall forming a strong barrier, chained with the ha heaviest c cannon. This was the cleverest trickthat general ederal had ever done having saved Ambrose Fullers army from defeat without a single action though all that evening there had been reported the heaviest kind of firing along wickles line of Abbieannians and terrific storms of explosions.

Hansonia was terribly angered by this strange action of Federal, who had outwitted him so cleverly, and having been already angered by the recent massacres of children and the helpless conditions of hid own daughter, was now now extremely furious especially at the delay of some of the christian general officers whose armies were to sur sun ort him He went to general oswell uster Johnston which he reached by nightfall and he and all of Roswells generals were assembled to inquire about the strange movement Federal had made and to debate on what should be done. General oswell uster ohnston wanted to make a general attack upon Jessempine Je Jensinia's army t (The general called Smash-in9 in-the-head() but Hansonia did not think it wise for should Jensinia get worsted Federal might might thro throw his main rage upon thewhole of the christian army and cause a worse battle than he wanted to fight on this line. Hansonia hd had the expi opinion that Federal had the bteer of them on account of his ge clever trick and that it was better to compell Federal to attack by ma making a strong demonstraition upon Adele-de-gardes army under Mc-Hollester Johnston, and threaten Break-in-the-necks fr nt at thesame time.

T hen should Federal start anything they would crush Adele-de-grdes army, force Break-in-the-neck to retreat or suffer annihilation while at the same time general Aronburg could throw in his wege weig [illegible] force and spank federals Elft wing.

Roswell uster johnston however did not believe that Federal would make an attack and that as the Glandelinians were mainly on the defensive and under orders from Manley that he cu could not be compelled to attack, under any conditions. He also del declared that redsal was only an offensive man at certian times, seldom losing a battle, and mostly on the defensive.

He could not even believe that any of the christian armies would ever cross the boundary line of alverinia unless to their annih ilation for anhaum anley had as many fresh armies than he needed in alverinia better fortifications better equp equipment and more guns. To demonstrate more threatenly ansonia had previously laid seige to Mc-Whirther and ivian ickey the strongholds which had recently held out bravely against many formidible attacks by land and sea. General Cimmillianis the glandelinian commander at Mc-Whirtherhad reseigned his command at the approach of Hansonias great army of Albiean ian s and Angelinians being ac afriad to fight against this sturdy well known christian general who had i given Manley such heavey blows in so many battles previous,y fought in angelinia. General Clinton had als also resigned and so had Med Woldonia. At the danger which already threatened the two strongholds ederal had been angered to the highest pitch and so save tnethe cities from the destruction which already threatened them he decided to give Hansonia battle at in full force at anping Willow Run which he had intended to do anyway when he threw the great force in on johnstons way.

Despite all of oswell usters Jon h Johnstons ar guments Hansonia had decided to force Federal to attack not knowing that wicklcios line consisting his main rith right grand division was already giving away before a headlong drive which also struck the lines under enings and general Mc-Hollester Fillimen.

Farly that morning as he was riding back tward the christian lines while talking with iolet and her sisters and all this while he was startled by the sound of heavy firing going on in thesouth and the air semed smelly with powder smoke.

Sending the vivian girls to th soun sound the warning he immediately spurred on his o horse and re raced for the scene of action. Ariving at the scene of action Hansonia saw large columns of landelinians under general Googenghie miner attacking Fillimens lines with indescriable fury. Fillimen was overwhelmed as hansonia could see and fearing serious danger ordered up the reserve forces to Fillimens aid to also to the aid of the columns under Nichilous and enings. Fillimen was now relieved of the pressure along his lines the army under Gogenghie minder ing reduced to fragments and routed to the main line.

In revenge of the blow recieved Hansonia at once sent orders to general oswell uster ohnston to strisk against general Smash-in-the-headin full forde force, while he would rive large armies at general Ade le-de-garde.. .. and Thomas Celeve land Buster on ohnston swept upon eak-in-the-head like a whirlwind but encountered a curtain of fire from five thousand cannonand was forced to withdraw a part of his force with t e loss of over thre hundred thousand.....

Itwas the most terrific slaughter ever witnessed in a single charge, but by this time th the whole of his army was ready and sup orted by a terrific drum-drum fire of eight thousand guns stormed Jensinias lines in full violence.

Smash-in-the-head in his desperation threw all the divisons he could muster upon oswell uster johnstons army the scene of battle m becoming like another mighty inferno many miles long, piles of dead and wounded rapidly strwing the smoke covered batle field.

Smash-in-the-hoed was in ade,edelemena his army being assaultied by overwhelmi g overwhelming numbers and raked throjgh and through with shells of al calibre from two sides. In vain he m hammered away with all the artillery he could bring to bear but could not silence the dreaded christian guns.The thousands of weeping willow tress were rent and shattered and sp ap splintered by the storm of shells and shrapnal and everything was borne down before the storm of death and destruction.

Smash-in-the-heads left wing was annihilated, and the center of his army almost reduced to fragments and t two thousand of his his guns were disabled but still he stu stuck to his position giving terrifiying hell t o the christians all along the line. The firing on both sides was incessant and earthplitting in the din and general Ledger Mc-Hollestarine smash-in-the-heads hea n beat leading general was killed while trying to change the aim of a gun which had bursted just as he fell killing twenty five men and wounding one hundred and fourty mortally and injuring n thousand seriously taring a great gap in the redoubts seven feet high as they stood.

Already general ashin-the-heads line was bended into angle shapes by the pressure of the christian onsualeonsl ught and he sent a man to beg aid from federal. In the meantime Hansonia advanced heavy forces simultaneously upon Adele-de-garde and Break-in-the-necks driving upon these two strong Masoidic lineslike s moving wedge amid a sea of m fire of musketryand cannon.

Four fourteen times hit within one hour amid murderous annihilating slaughter Adele-de-garde repusled his assailants an even counter charged ith frightful fury his own three thousand guns seeming to fairly split the air ad and defy heaven with its din and the very field of battle at this point became a sea of havoc and destruction. It was like a great hell of battle and many christian generals nt not named madly gave up their lives in this seething inferno of hell and damanation.

General Googenhiemer who made one of the counter charges with a large force of Mc-Hollestinian cavarly was killed amid a withering hurricane of bullets and nearly his whole command was mowed mowed down in that sea of death and disaste disaster and devastation.

[illegible]

General Break-in-the-neck alone met the heavy onslaughts like the breakwater meets the heavy surges of an onrushing sea during a storm but general Epsons continians concentinians who made a headlong charge had surmounted the great redoubts at the center under a curtian of artillery fire of ten th usand guns and poured in a curtian of musketry fit fire simultaneously the din deafening hundreds of thousand thousands for life. Not a Glandelinian officer or private who met the curtian of fire survived to tell the terrible tale. Fourteen times amid the same worldy hell and damnation as lon along Smash-in-the-heads lines Break-in-the-neck trind by the most violent counter onslaught to force the fury stricken Concentinians back but fourteen times his most massive divisions such three million strong were torn and mangled to piecesand driven back with the loss of hundreds of gallent officers who also madly gave up their lives to reake the salient while many thousands of prs prisoners were taken.

General naminican, Randal , crabber, Bargin and Moor were killed in one of these mad shrieking onslaughts and five other generals Zoolania, Meddide, Costlike too much Fol indian, Gal lonia Convention and Tomas Arenburge were severn ly wounded .....

It was a sei serious break inhis line but Ge Clev[illegible] all costs evenmat the cost of a[illegible] if necessary. He even was jealious and ev onvious over the great seried successes of Adele-de-gards men, and concen trating the guns that were not yet in action he opened a spasmodic artillery fire upon the breach blowing the breastworks men and all into the air. However over the works poured the christian troops and a desperate hand to hand fight ensued... Both oppis oppis opposing lines writhed and twisted like sons , long sn ake but so n faded away in thick wreaths of smoke. At this moment Break-in-the-neck was severely wounded and borne from the field of carnage. Terrible confusion ensued on account of his fall the Glandelinians retreating in na pani c abandoning all the guns t that could be drazed away. At this critical moment and when all the cap tured guns were literally blaspheming god, hell and heaven, with their cannonading thunders as to say , Accountants arived with a large force and said thehellish carnage strove with might and main to rally Break-in-the-necks panic stricken divisions. A

A storm of shells was bursting everywhere with the rapidity of oppecorn over a hot fire and though Accountants was also h d badly wounded his [illegible] firm and an swered the christians with fier ceand terrible volleys..... The firing along A[illegible]tants lnes was so severe that the Concentinians were finally checked but not driven back.Gener[illegible]n Lingtonhouse Mc-Whirther who took Accountants place thr'e threw a heavy and fearful counter assault upon Epsons lines, with continued and bloody fr fury untill break-in-the-necks panic stricken soul columns could be rallied.

Hansonia seeing the advantage already gained decided to take the opport unity before it was lost and launched heavy masses of Abbiennians and Abyssinkilians upon the massive columns of Adele-de-garde's army while Angelinian and other Abyssinkilians columns under [illegible]assen and Morten rian t reinforced the Concentinians and the combined threw themselves in heavy force upon Mc-Whirther 's army.

Mc-Whirther was overwhelmed by these three accombined forces and had to fall back not being able to hold out against the increasing pressure any longer.

The army under general Smash-in-the-head suffering the loss of a quarter and a half of their army was also forced to give way before the furious attack of general Boswell Buster Johnstons army general Ranger covering the retreat with long lines of musketry fire.

Smash-in-thehead a, alone had lost three hundred and fifty thousand on killed and wounded out of his six hundred and ninty thousand men along his center alon alone and many officers , besides generals Horten and Gallsonia who were killed.

Break-in-the-neck on ena Smash-in-theheads left right lost five hundred thousand and Accountants of the same wing two hundred thousand in slain while Adele-de-garde also on smash-in-the-heads center lost one hundred thousand the combined l[illegible] already being one million one hundred and fifty thousand in killed and wounded.

Adele-de-garde[illegible] holding his ground and every effort to dislodge h[illegible] frustrated amid heartrending carnage anddestruction of [illegible] beautiful meadow[illegible] The [illegible] the bate batt le was working havoc in nature itself having already raged from seven -e-clock [illegible]ng untill nine oclock with some advantage wit[illegible]

Hansonia wondered if he could hold the advantage he had gained as Federal during the momentary lull was advancing fresh forces to the support of Smash-in-the-head and Mc-Whirther. Hansonia quickly decided upon a plan. Giving strick orders to general [illegible] Buster johnston and Epson to hold their ground ground at all costs Hansonia sent a monstercus force in an endeavor to turn Federals right wing facing Vivian wickey and roll it up.

The second blow after an hours lull came u again upon boswell and Epson the fresh forces of Glandelinians under general Henry Tum Turmer, Angelic Angelonia and Hedden attacked in [illegible] column. The Concentinians raked the assailants with the big guns they had recently captured making more horrible carnage than before. Mc-Whirther was even reinforced and storme stormed the christin linebut his left met an annihilating fire and recoiled with general Angelic wounded mortally.....

During the [illegible] time when Violet and her sisters had gone at General Boswell Hunter Johnston's request to sound the warning, they had brought with them for safe keeping and protection a large force of boy and girlscouts. Pen rod was with them, and so was a strong cavarly escort. They had managed to sound the warning, but at the time when the enemys assault was the heaviest upon general Fillimens lines and when the enemy was temporarily victorious before reinforcements could arive to his aid, the column of boy and girlscouts and the christian cavarly escorting Violet and her sisters was suddenly and fiercely assaulted by a big column of Glandelinians belonging no doubt to a portion of General Smash-in-the-heads nineteenth Corps. The fire which was opened upon them was so heavy and severe that the cavarly was driven into confusion and suffered heavy loss and their chief leader was shot dead from his horse and his horse captured. By dint of unbelievable and even immeasurable courage the boy and girlscouts managed to hold the Glandelinians from pressing on, but nevertheless though Glandelinians fear child scouts, they didn't on this occasion and therefore drove on in their assault with such insane ines inaccessable fury that the child scouts were forced to retreat as quic k as as possible and ten of their number too were dead and fourty mortally wounded and Penrod lost his horse, and suffered a slight wound in the army from a bayonet which despite his unusual dexterity in what he could do he had been unable to sweet aside. There had been too many Glandelinians against him.

There was only one hope for them to avoid even getting caught in the main horror of the dreadful battle and that was to retreat to the small village of Fingaree not far away which they did.Part of it as in was in flames but the refugees with Penrod and the vivian girls took refuge in a small hotel and met the assailants which surged around the structure trying to force their way in. The swelling hundreds upon hundred inflamed to the proper pitch by seeing that the "Hated Vivian Girls were in their midst converged upon the entrances using the butts of their rifles as battering rams.There was a dreadful roar of sound heard even above the battle raging elsewhere.The boy and girlscouts having had time to prepare were ready behind the bars and other obstructuions placed as barricades against the doors.They tossed hundreds of hand grenades into the oncoming yelling throngs, and seeing fire apparatus in the building and finding the water on, soon huge streams of water with great pressure good and cold too were hurled upon the mob who poured at times a withering fire upon the structure.Its members however met each chalange with violece.

Pushing them on were Gerald Starring and Fred Dargar screaming at the s top of their voices but remaining out of range;

"All of you soldiers are yellow dirty cowards if you don't get those Vivian Girl brats and string them up and their crazy brother too.Under their urging a fierce convers converging attack was made upon the building, and the havoc caused by the hand grenades were disregarded and the fierce rifle fire poured from the building too. imultaneously there were rushes at several entrances and these soldiers carried great logs for battering rams. Fourty men carried each of the three battering rams but all of them were mowed down at one discharge from the building and the logs rolled amongst the other glandelinians throwing them into confusion.But the entrance at one place was gained and the besieged child scouts and surviving cavarly men fought wity with sabre, clubbed rifle and with hand grenades and even with pails of line lime dust which were thrown into the eyes of the assailants.But the glandelinians forced their way in and the defenders were forced to retreat however to the stairs, and them up them to the second floor.There with some machine guns inflading the stairs they held their fory fortfor two hours.There was a sharp battle for the possession of the elevators in the building but these were soon in possession of the christian cavarly men, and run up under the roof, but this victory was gained with bad loss on both sides. Although several hundred of the mob of glandelinian soldiers gained entrance to the first floor, it seemed they dared not storm the stairs for fear of the machine guns, but from points of shelter they maintained a hot rifle fire up the steps without a seconds intermission and the sound of so many shots in the building made a sound as if the structure was turning into a "Naughty Volcano".The mob of glandelinians battled desperately in the fierce attempt to capture Penrod and violet and her sisters.For a long time a most stalwart defense was put up by the massed cavarly men and the boy and girlscouts. Violet and her sisters were in the conflict as much as any one else and so was Penrod who had joined as soon as one of his sisters had dressed his wounded arm. Inside of the building none of the children were hit while the loss amongst their assailants was dreadful.

At this time it was evident from the sights further off that Fillimen had being reinforced by Boswell Buster Johnston, for though the Main Glandelinian forces were not yet then retreating, they were being held at bay, and therefore at the height of the conflict at the structure one of the cavarly men managed to send in a wireless telegram to one of the christian generals in charge of the christian"Storm Wave".The Telegram reached the general in ten seconds at at where he even stood being brought by a swift mounted courier;It read;

"Have Vivian Girls besieged in hotel in town of Pingaree with Penrod. Glandelinians assaulting us in great numbers and are already forcing forcing their way in doing great damage.Request you order general or Colonel Lysonia or who ever is handy to come to our rescue before the rasvals sin.".

With general Filimen being ad abis to advance, General Drum or Drongoole came dashing up with a great body of Christian cavalry, but in the melee were were worsted with their general wounded, but during the confusion violet and her sisters with Penrod, got away, but so terrible was the panic caused by the fierce attack of the enemy through the whole town, that Jennie and violet got seperated from Penrod and her sisters, and had a very hard time to find their way to them again.

This indeed is supposed to be a long, long, long story about sev en beautiful little Girl heroines. Of course as the reader has seen or would have seen if they were there a great many people are connected, directly or indirectly with this story for it should have to be when there is do such an enormous squabble aging, and so many are in it, and the story has to be so full of adventures. for no war time ever existed that did not have many other lives connected with it, even though every life itself is a thing alone, seperate and distinct, and complete in itself.This description is what we may learn of when a battle is raging, and the Vivian Girls had to be involved in it for its full duration.This story is what we can call the combined sorrowfulness and joyfulness and excitement of life in war time, in time of battles, and yet when so often what Violet, and her sisters had suffered and gone through with some readers may say then what good was life in such a state.Yet all these things,, which influence with thrilling adventures, horrible experiences experiences scenes of dreadful disasters, sorrow and suffering, and grief and may really entertain them are me sly mostly through their own will suffer as they might, their joys and quiet times were merely little pauses in the great drama; gaps too that surely have to be filled, else life would have been too heavy for even them to bear in such times of sorrow and dire peril.Their friends and loved ones constantly claimbed Violet and her sisters didn't deserve all they had to endure.That is true. That is positively true.But as they themselves would answer "Neither did God Deserve to suffer all he did suffer, nor that he still suffers because the nations of the world are still so sinful.But it isn't necessary to fill up these sort of gaps in this story.If they didn't really wish to suffer horror and dangerous experiences, they could have saved themselves themselves by fleeing up north to Abbiennia where they would be far from danger.But Their Nation needed their services as much as it needed the services services of their brave Father. The country was in danger from a cruel and sinful foe and therefore they would be cowards had they fled to safty. If if Shthey had done this, there would need be so marvelous and so long a story inmany series of sections in which it is written of the family of emperor Vivian.The nature of their adventures will always give you something to ponder on when you read through the many volumnes, and see whether girls can be even braver than boys, for men nor boys I'll guarentee wouldn't dare to even imagine to go through whatbthey did.They are in this story too really angel possessed, or otherwise they could not have endured what they did. Once sometime before the battle of Randall in a small town Restaurant Violet being in there alone at the time eating her dinner saw two persons sit down to play a game of cards.

"I see"she overheard one of them say."That is one of the beautiful Princess(s and I believe she is violet."

"I don't see"she heard the other say,as he tossed down a card-"How it is they can gamble with their lives as they do."

"But they do"he she overheard the other say."But But it sure is unusual.Yet I hear nevertheless that though they do not appear to they carry with them a very great sorrow if not fear.If our country should lose in this great and desperate war game I would wonder then what she and her por poor sisters would do."

"What ever is beautiful and tender in their lives would go out likev a light"she heard the other say. Though they may fill their lives after that even in exile with all that can be obtained and called beautiful, and though they may cherish a great and holy ambition, and do a splendid and worthy toil and deeds for others in any great profession, the empl empty place in their lives that had been Faiths would never be filled, never as long as they lived.

And als although they may live saintly lives and do everything that causes the sad and sorrowful to laugh,(as he) and the erring to weep, and the whole would could love them deeply when they are alone by themselves in their secret chamber and in the silence of their private home they would cry out to the silen ce"Oh our empty hearts.Oh our empty hearts. Nothing can fill it again."

But to give the reader a perfect ease of mind this could never Happen for if it did, then when it did, a cause so holy going to ruin would cause Our Dear blessed Lord to appear as if he didn't tell the truth when he said; "The Gates of Hell can never prevail against it.And if that can't which is a million times more powerful than all Humanity, what can sinful nations do? But nevertheless this was threatening them, but this went on in the only early stages of the tremendous conflict conflict.Always against the good the earliest stages of persecution and sorrow continues, in the end it's a immeasureable horro wfor the wicked. In fact it was better and safer for her had Glandelinia quit the warfare right now. See for instance the battle of Weeping Willow Run raging during the meantihle meanwhile.The results were a laughable one to violet and her sisters.The Christian armies were having everything their own way.All the fiercest efforts could avail the Glandelinian armies nothing. The gaps torn in their lines could not be filled.Their losses could not be replaced.The Christian army increased against them for every action.It is often so only it requires a very brave spirit to try to make up for the losses and win a battle in the face of impossibilities as general Federal tried.

The situation was unusually different with violet and her sisters.The awful excitement in the hotel fight in the town did not cause them to fear any thing, and they en enjoyed the fighting they did as much as the enemy ached to get at them.There were no regrets in their hearts for this trying ex perience, the fierceness of the fight to hold the hotel, no hidden hurts, no heart breaking pauses resulted from their thrilling time sepm spent together in the bloody hotel ti fight, for this is a story of seven beautiful little heroines, and although as I said a countless number of people did touch their hearts, helpled and blessed them, and made them happier than most children even deserve to be even when good, they have no real part in their story but nevertyeless nevertheless because of the titanic conflict there was and no means whatever to leave them out of it, though Violet and her sisters, their three loyal and good brothers, and parents alone deserve to be in it. So then if we fail to go into extreme particulars, such as why the Vivian girls did all this when they could have been safly at home, as who made their beautiful uniforms and private princely clothing or who really cooked their food, what they really as always eat what they refuse to eat you need not be at all surp ised surprised.They always attended if possible Three Masses a day, but there no time for thatbto be mentioned in every chapter.Therefore the clothes were made, the foor they loved best prepared and everything else too you may be sure of that.The only point is that the seamstress and the Chef are not the interesting articles in this long story and so they are placed where they belong in the Mess Halls and the military sewing rooms, or anywhere but in these pages. as there is no room for them. It isn't really probable that the enemy could could get the best of them either, it is not left out as a deeply plotted story either, sometimes things occur which could cause a person to laugh to wonder a great deal, to probably doubt in many of the unusual events, plenty of thrilling adventures, but as to any fatal disasters to the Princesses or the best of their following mentioned in the story there's nothing of the sort in it.The worst of the experiences of the Princesses will occur at Brigano after that these sad and exciting incidents will begin to wan and no harm afterwards will ever be able to come to them again. The wisdom, their exploits and the bravery of the children is the chief charm of the whole story, all the charm it has perhaps.But it is a wi wisdom that will uplift your life, if you give your full minds to it and help you and others to make of it something better than filling up a gap between your cradle and your grave. Maybe for some it would probably be nice to be Angel possessed.It didn't seem so for violet and her sisters.It seemed the main source of their sorrows and sufferings.Yet as for the Princesses, they nevertheless because of that condition had the angel nature in them to their friends and followers, they were a Heaven on earth, but they were wont to say of them"To the enemy they were a "Hell" but the story about them has a good purpose, their lives for their cause, their doings for their cause had a righteous purpose as you could see if studying on their adventures mishaps and sorrows and sufferings when you grasp the real meaning of it.They were made to fill expresly expressly the gaps of millions of other human hearts, they came into exisa existance to be a Saviour of their nation for in this story God send them into the world Angel Possessed endowed with a sort of inner sight that showed them the proper places they were to occupy this inner sight is always called Sympathy.It is chiefly born in their souls but sometimes it has parents,, and the parents names are "sorrow suffering, and Experience. They though Princesses were not as Princesses are. They were never haughty, they hated vanity, pride, and con conciet, they believed ev erybody of any rank were their equals, they were great chums to all their boy and girlscouts, and general officers too, confidants and the best of friends always.It was a beautiful friendship indeed, such companionship betwsen them and their scout friends and everybody else they were acquainted with.No matter what their u sufferings were and had been, they in their hearts did not hate the enemy either but would have given their very lives for the enemys conversion. There had been a great many battles which the story mentions where the vivian girls had had experiences but never none such as what occurs and occured in this three days battle of Weeping Willow Run. Too there had been a great many girls who had been in this conflict for the possession of the hotel but the loss of life had occured amongst only them which this time was an unusual occurance.The Regiment which had accompanied the Vivian girls was an old timer too called the Standards, and therefore it was somewhat of a sadening saddening occurance to them.Penrod had however seen to it that their bodies were recovered during the retreat to the hotel in the town and the wounded also dragged out of harms way. nd while then he didn't do anything unusual about the loss as he might have done he did put it in his prayers to God, and so entirely did he accol associate it with all his desperate pland plans and purposes, so truly did all the survivors do their duty in the hotel, that he gave scant notice to the dreadful loss inflicted upon the glandelinians, while his sisters during the testing contest stayed at his heels , herever he went to fire his shots, did something upon a word, a glance from him and was so truly happy if he so much as escaped another injury during the dreadful fray. As for the assailants that found their way for a time into the build ing, they couldn't so much as go up one step without being shot down, yet they scarcely thought of the consequence of that, the thoughts were only for their brothers safty, they understood that well enough, and covered the steps, all they th u had thought of , or wished for, was to see the enemy get the worst of it for his sake. And oh how violet,and her sisters did hope and pray that sooner or later troops would come to the rescue, and yet Penrod was goaded on more desperately for his own love of them when they recieved from him a smile, or a loving look.

As grave as their danger had been should the enemy have won they were not scared, frightened or emotional, they only were glad if Penrod succeeded in getting away.But during the conflict in their heart there had been an abiding wish that grew and strengthened as the minutes during the desperate conflict went on, a wish that grew unchecked, untill it became a great loving desire in their souls as unchecked wishes always will among the good, a wish that this cruel inh inhuman war was over. he wished too she had brought a bigger division of boy and girlscouts then this would not have happened.Only boy and girlscouts were feared most by the savage enemy they had often told themselves, and only boy and girlscouts could f inr fight the enemy at every disadvantage and win.violet had remembered hearing Angelinia Aronburg once say, that when the enemy fled from the christians it was usually"Before the s u squadrons of child scouts.violet and her sisters were very young,,,,, but they understood neverytheless, and grew more and more to love her girl and boyscout troopers, and so did her sisters. They The enemy didn,t love them and to the enemy they were of no use to the world but to just be pestering people. During many a time violet and her sisters had thought a good deal about these things, especially when the enemy armies had gone upside down over Penruds desperate raids, and when ever they thought of it they would go off into their own private chamber and have their laugh out untill they couldn't laugh any more. Violet and her sisters certainly were unusual they took to everybody they saw in the army and the people took to them. No body can despite how pretty they were, jennie and violet were the two prettiest and nearly equal in beauty, and their solemn big gray eyes or violet eyes seemed always to be somehow gl looking you through and through. You could always always identify Jennie when she went out for a stroll.for she always loved to carry a princely walking cane. Those who had guily con conscioussness were always glad to get away from her, and her sisters, and their searching eyes. Then too they always had a sharp way about saying things, and they were too truthful to be popular with any one not loving children, they were unusually polite, and once when a great Christian Lady asked Jennie if she would like to go home with her to live she said;

"No Madam My only real home is in Heaven and I only care to live there and nowhere else.I love to be in God,"

The lady was surprised at this unusual answer and benefited much by it. And once when Charles Brown was invited to a Royal Dinner by Emperor Vivian, the little girls always have having the same priviliges as their parents were permitted to come into the parlor and listen while the older people and military officials were in conversations.violet at the time sat on the edge of a big green sofa just where her pretty solemn eyes could watch every movement take in every detail of the visitors. He was a great and good man, not vain, either a great type of an Abbiennian, and full of love and admiration for children.The beauty of violet and her sisters was his main attraction.Though he was a great politician too and also a great orator, and a exc-llent fighter.He conversed a great deal on the subject of the enemy the plans of enemy generals, and the others listened. Little violet listened more closely than all perhaps, at least the great general was believing she did, when more than once he caught the solemn eyes fixed upon his face.Their gaze flattered him indeed, and therefore he went ahead and told more stories, some funny, some heroic, and himself the hero of them all, and all true too believing he was bewildering with his greatness the little seven audience before him, especially the violet eyed little Princess.Then suddenly he turned to the child edged off to the end of the big sofa, and exclaimed;

"Well little angel Princess, and what are you thinking of, that you look at me so steadily.?"

He certainly expected a compliment, any ordinary little girl would have understood her manners well enough to have given it.but violet was an unusual child, and truthful to such a degree that she made everybody love her int ints intensely.Moreover her darling sisters often told her"You are the little angel of our Family. At any rate be this as it may, she generally spoke when she was spoken to and they say said when she did so she would surprise every one.It was the general wa who got the surprise of his life.He didn't have to repeat his question to her, either for no sooner had he asked what she was thinking of then the little girl replied quite soberly;

"I was not thinking of anything.I just liked to look at you because I heard you are a man angel to all those who are under you.Therefore I love you."

You may be sure there was a happy season reserved for her by and by.

For her parents were deeply impressed with the lovely saying of their daughter. The general however laughed and he immediately said;

"She told the truth at all events.but she's the best angel of us all."

Violet and her sisters had made themselves very pupular with everybody(a little too popular to the enemy), and their prettiness was so unusual that because of their beauty they were a little feared by many who were inclined to be a little afraid of "Celestial persons" During the times when they rested themselves after travels and scouting tours and other duties the two great charatstics which stood out with such unusual distinctness all in all their after life and which influenced and affects so many countless lives and touched their own--their love for and familiarty with and for God and nature. Who understands what secrets the different directions of wind breathed to the brave little Princesses as it stirred through the tree tops over head. who can say what grave and beautiful messages from the sun waved in the graceful greens of fields of grain and wheat which they often saw?Or declare if the clouds placed themselves for their pleasing, while their dreamy eyes followed their mystic movements, their strange fantastic shapes, their great converge, their roo rolls, they heaviness and storm color, and now their sensitive spirit caught their meaning.They could tell by what shape of cloud a thunderstorm was coming. Never were they scared of lightning.They did not even fear the cyclone cyclone either though they didn't of course want to be in the path of one for they had several sad experiences with them already.But who knows.who knows.? No one could comprehend how merry they were for who knows if those sad passionate outpourings which s they called"Pleadings with God were not the be ginning the first springing seed of that most intense love of Him which illuminated their lives, and the lives of others, and taught them the nearness and dearness of a Personal god, to go out with, to converse with with he their many human friends.When ever they feared disaster was impending because of the war, or because a massacre of children occured they always prayed with each other to God or His Blessed Mother on their rosaries, especially when their troubles and puzzles became a burden.So when the enemy was trying to turn the hotel upside down in order to capture them and Penrod they had continually prayed while fighting desperately to save themselves and others And what violet said in her prayer was;

"If it be Thy will don't let the enemy win.They might do it but I understnad understand you can dispose.It is not a bit of trouble to you and therefore I implore you.I do not plead for myself because I could be an angel just the same if I died, but please save to those here and my sisters and Penrod.you can save us all I know you can.you are the Greatest and most Loving God of all .You can do anything.And I and my dear sisters will do a great deal for You too. We will try to become still more good, though good we are.. nd Dear god in the near Fure don't let the enemy massacre any more children, never, never, n-e-v-e-r."

off for a moment into dreaming what a horrid world it would be if the enemy enemy succeeded in wiping out all girls and there would be no more girls in it. There would be no brothers and sisters to love each other, there would be no pretty frocks dresses to see on every day and especially on sundays, and no earthly use for the dolls in the stores in cities and towns. And there would be no parasols parasols at the beautiful picnics, and nobody to love the good boys who would love to have girl companions and friends. Girls in Abbiennia were not afraid of mice rats nor harmless snakes, though they may be of bad pis posionous ones.

And besides throughout the whole world there would never bee seen any millinerd milliners, and dress makers, and oh ----Heavens there would not be any mothers and aunts. and so forth. And right there the attempt of Glandelinia's annihilation of christian female element drove them to an unusual horror for they understood that would never never do. So during ll this time of the excitement they decieed c decided decided they would--if at the helm and head of human affairs would do anything to make make the glandelinians stop this annihilation of children, and they shudde shuddered to even imagine how many little girl children among child slaves and stolen children from orphan asylums have already been murdered. Yet they could not give up the puzzling situation no matter how hard tney tried, and therefore realizing the horror of it too should they be captured and murdered they fought side by side with penrod at the head of the stairs and themselves poured upon the enemy striving to come up a hotter fire than all the child scouts concentrated in its vinicity. too if you will go to the trouble to observe, you will find out that the Vivian Girl Princesses were as brave as they were good, and as good as they were pretty and had the character of persons who never understood what sins were or as if sins did not exist. Yet too not to slay a Glandelinian in this cause was a sin whether a necessity or not. They were really an angel possessed, and when their fury was up they were were seen by Penrod to have the nature of angry angels as they she wed here, their inhuman disposition during the fighting was made to the assailants to hell. These are the natures anyhow that Violet and her sisters were born with, and for which they must and did bless a long holy brave anchestry since they are the things too of which such a character is made.

Persued as they were often by Glandelinians really anyhow the glandelinians were afraid of them. Never was it recorded that even twelve glandelinians persued six of the Vivian Girls, as six of them has shown they could easily as the reader observed himself handle fourty or fifty.. but there is this advantage beyond measure, whatever the inheritance may be it may be softened for the good and the righteous sanctified indeed for all Abbiesnj Abbiennians did not seem to have even the slightest even in their possessions. Abbiennia for a nation of her sort with every person so righteous as if sin did not exist was a miracle. a most tremendous miracle. If the world comes to destruction Abbiennia alone would be exempt. Violet and her sisters were the possessor of a great Faith in their own Church, the Abbiennian peligion(catnolic), all their reasoning, and rebellion against God's enemies and sin and struggles against it grew worse and worse, and Jennie herself the worse of them would gi give anything to see Satens Face when she stuck her tonbu tongue out at him in defiance. but they were angel possessed. The Devils would run away from them, would not come within a mile of them.

But there is no disputing the fact that violet and her sisters had come to hate this terrible war. And there is no desputing the fact either that they had come to hate the Evil ones more and more because they believed they Caused Glandelinia to do all this. demons hate little children more than anything and violet, and her sisters understood that. They retained the rebellion against everything evil and sinful in their own hearts however, so far as the outwide world was concerned.. but as the war had grown out of "babyhood", and the little Princesses began to understand out of reailty something of the great and unhuman naunat, nature of the war, the rebellion in their souls waxed warmer and stronger and more bitter, untill one day before the battle of Cedernine had occured, they had gathered up all their old dolls and all their other girlish toys, painted faces on them as if they were fiends, and beat them into dust between the stones of the pavement and scattered the dust over the place that had been their playhouse saying as they did so "We are glandelinia sowing the earth with the dust of the demons. I am done with it. If glandelinia doesn't repent let Her reap her own condemnation. We're through with her and everything that is her concern. These dolls are the demons whom we have beaten to dust. Let the same be to them."

And they were through with Glandelinia. Glandelinia was never again to be a State of Abbiennia. On the other hand they spied all the more. Once when they had escaped from the enemys lines and were so far off from a christian army or two to ever expect to get something to eat they had had the most trying time of their lives to save themselves from starvation. They had tried to fish, but the fish refused to bite. To obtain food they tried many things but to no avail and had gone nearly a week and two days and were so faint they couldn't hardly wal when they were finally rescued and given food. This they claimed was one of their worst experiences. Violet once even tried to escape from the enemys lines when a prisoner on a generals young pony when not one of the Glandelinians were conscious of what she was doing but it trotted off with her into the barn and bumped he her head, and retained it on her or its bac for hours threatening her if she tried to get down either with its hind leg or its teeth, untill some one of the glandelinians missed her and the pony, and finding him quietly munching in his stall they found her in the saddle st sitting upright as if she were a little white pretty savage, still stiff, half frozen, stolid as a warrior, waiting untill somebody came as the pony dared her to descend. he met her after fate in much the same way as if she had died for the attempt but that with these glandelinians isanticipating. she had a lonely time these days, not having seen not having seen her sisters, for it was before she finally succeeded in escaping and nobody dreamed of the busy little brain and fiery heart throbbing in her little body. The glandelinians called her a centepede, a fierce little serpent, and unusual as it was left her to herself and did not go near her. They fed her only once a day and that was in the morning. As long as they had not tothered or tormented her she was willing to be left alone, only she had loved to have the chance to secure some information. She hung upon the words of officers, caught queer expressions learned their ways and signals and pondered upon the mighty mystery of being and hated more and more by the Glandelinians because she was the daughter of an Abbiennian ruler and more so because she was a "Goody goody,".

But now in this experience in the hotel, during this frightful conflict something had happened which made her indeed wish that the cruel conflict of the war was a thing of the past--oh wish it with all her strong young soul. This battle of weeping willow Run were frightful three days of inhuman conflict, when the enemy raved in fury because he couldn't win, when the enemy all day on the first day had been constantly repelling the christian advances, when many glandelinian snipers had been in the tree tops all day sniping at christian soldiers and shooting them by hundreds, when small machine gun nests of the h enemy were being operated in the wet weeping willows against the christians. It was a fearful day, a day for a battle tragedy anywhere. Perhaps many children will be reading these volumnes too boys and girls perhaps together, and may have not thought much of such things, but you will soon, and when your eyes and your shoul sh ll have simultaneously opened to nature and to human need, you too will notice how it is and may be when the sun shines and the heavens of a november day are fair, that great tremors and convulsions of war opens up somewhere as if a volcanic eruption, and that great tragedies comes to all of us. just as a ship goes down sometimes on a quiet, and sometimes on a tttttttt, stormy sea so joy dies in a human soul. very ripple of happiness rolls away, and the deep waters of sorrow and anguish comes into place again. joy never returns at times to fill the heart utterly emptied any more than the ship ever w sails again, or the sea gives up her dead.

But nevertheless the sea bird sings across the place at morning, and yet at evening or night the silver stars shine. That is all. So the shock came to Violet, and her sisters and penrod,,,,---a sorrow that bowed his head and almost broke the hearts of the poor vivian girls. One of the boyscouts they had loved very well, Joe Greene had recieved a fatal shot while defending the top of the stairs with them. Died did you say? come call it dying but his death nevertheless was the sort, as of a light that goes out when you pull the switch. The shock of it to violet and her sisters was a great blow, and as they had tried at first to bring him too and then saw the bullet hole in his head, they quietly poured their whole rebellious souls out to god over the nature of this Glandelinian assault shooting at children more than at the soldiers..

"The Glandelinians need not have donevthis dear God" they urged. "You understand they not not have done it. He was one of the best boyscouts we had, Timothy Grove tons only best boy friend, and there are lots and lots of good girlscouts who were murdered too. The glandelinians thanks to you dear God have however never been able to make them prisoners but those who died for our Dear Country are bigger and better angels. The glandelinians could have often taken us too and murdered us but didn't. They could. They could. they could. They felt sure they could.. Oh Dear God if it by Thy Will I wish you wouldn't let any more girl or boyscouts die--never, never--n-e-ve-er. Let the enemy be cheated of their victims. But then I know if that happened there would not be any blessed little child angels, but oh----" and overwhelmed with the horror of the situation, they fell back to their old answers to all their reasonings "Thy will be done amen."

While the conflict still raged they then wondered too how it would be with noone no one ever dying, the old just dragging on forever, the bad worrying the good, the poor always hungry, the cruel and sinful always offending God, earth crowded, heaven empty, and probably deserving Hell too. Subdued by the horror of the situation they were forced to creep a little to better shelter, and when finally rescue came and they knelt where the boy scout lay w wrapped with a flag.

Then the sad scene in camp as all child scouts after that event came to pay their last and saddening respect. Violet and her sisters tiptoed softly about the room tearful and silent, being sure no one would be noisy. On a stand beside the window his toys and boyish possessions had been collected waiting to be put away out of sight. After the heart breaking fashion that we have. He had no parents therefore no parents were needed to grieve. Here were his marbles, twenty red agates among the the whotes, and striped chinias and lots of small ones of various colors. His baseball as good as new, for he had never had time to use it much, and a top that he had shos wed Violet and her sisters how to spin. His military gun a brand new one indeed leaned against the wall. His new uniform hanging by a hall tree. A small walnut box neat and carefully retained held his fishing things his tackle.. Already had had become almost as beloved by Violet and her sisters as if he were a brother. They had spent many hours on the river shores already with Penrod and Violet and her sisters. Here were his books school and military, boyish things and mostly, mostly pictures and many good ones. Violet and her sisters were bent on giving him a higher comission, his riderless horse now nibbled the grass outside the window, twice his nose had rubbed the shutter, as though he might be hi hunting for his little rider and master. Violet and her sisters touched the small reminders on the table, gently lovingly, indeed with reverence. They whispered the young heart of them, conversed to them of the beautiful, brave manhood into which by and by he would have passed. Again the useless ness of the sinfulness of Clandelinia, her murdering ways to which misfortune was placing her rose before their mind, and of Glandelinias cruelty, chafted and fretted in their young hearts. Suddenly a great thought came to Jennie. She stepped over to the coffins side and glanced down long and steadily into the quiet face of the young and dead boyscout, so calm and so beautiful in his heroic death garb. She placed her sunburned fingers warm with holy life upon the marble hands folded on the boys face or breast rather, and clasping them fast, the Vivian Girl, strange child she was from her nature, sensitive and hungry for or from their pity for their good following registered a righteous vow with her her dead boy companion in his coffin.

"Our Dear Blessed Lord in Heaven surely must have needed you" said she to herself "Or else he would not have taken you when he He might have taken men or my sisters country or any one else instead. I don't understand why he did take you, for in our country there is for me, for as me you were good indeed, and every one of us loved you. I'm angel possessed, and too pretty for my health too; mayby for our own countrys welfare and safty is why Our Dear Blessed Lord doesn't take me or my dear sisters, even though I'd be such a beautiful little Heavenly being. I under stand it is His will already, and always His will be done but how hard it is some times when you lose a loved one. But---" she leaned over, lower and lower untill her pretty lips touched the dear ear of her boyscout companion, and whispered;

"I'll have your best friend Jac gaunders take your place. He'll do your work. I'm going to be your sister in heaven. Pray that Jack will survive."

Jennie Vivian did hett not forget her vow. not even when the saddened child scouts were slowly and regretfully lowering the little casket into the grave. And when that sad day all was over, and the tent that had contained him had fallen into that sombre quiet that always attends the passing of an inmate and not even yet disturbed by the noise of battle, and the various members of the child scouts were accomplishing their best efforts and bravest too, to get even with the enemy enemy for their loss of a comrade, jennie had Jack gaunders in his place. Paying her vow she called it for you must understand that all child scouts were her companions as well as to her sisters, and they had ears that caught, a memory that retained. you see Our Blessed Lord always compensates for all that he denies. Nobody should ever forget God's own compensations. Therefore many boyscouts were their compensations. He and her sisters sought Joe greenes brother, James, sitting alone, through with weeping it seemed, but bowed with the desolation that follows the death of a loved one, and Jennie and violet slipping on his right and left side, ventured to steal an arm about his his neck. He did not move except to cover the small hands with his. It was doubtful if ever he knew who were there, he only felt they were real through hearted sympathisers, and he answered to their sympathy even the giver of it. The touch of bthe two children tightened about his neck;

"I have placed dear Jack in his stead." said Jennie--And I asked my brother Penrod if you could fill Jack's place, and he said you could do it, when I told him why I wanted you to. He'll be a brother to you, and I will be like a sister."

Joe's brother looked up caught the Princess's heart and meaning in her eyes, opened his arms, and tuking the two of them to his bosom bathed their faces with his tears. To all of the boyscouts and girls too violet and her sisters had always been the best of chums. That was even at the first of the organization of the child scouts, and as the days and months had sped on as months and days will, whether we laugh or cry, the comradeship grew, and strengthened, and develo developed into such a beautiful thing.. that at the very last up to now there were thousands who were disposed to believe that Violet and her sisters and the child scouts "Were One." When Violet and Jennie was embraced by Joe's brother they couldn't help giving forth a giggle despite their grief for him and the loss of their comrade.

"hat said they "Do you love us as if we were your sisters. Good. We love you too," th"then they all let him do it to them, tried to cheer him, and did succeed in some measure for they always had a way to comfort anybody. Therefore it was always that every one did their level best to comfort them when in sorrow too.

They gave him jack's commission and gav gave Jack joe's comission. Jean Saunders did not accept the loss of joe as some might have thought as much as she had loved the toy. Of course in her scout dutues she had been busy, and she scarcely had the time, with her command and other commands, and the recruiting of new scouts, and her own following, and the military affairs of life of military style, her hard tims to recover from wounds she recieved, to watch the doings of joe green who had so voluntarily repudiated glandelinia and her ways. She understood joe greens immensely and had hoped some day to see him to be her brother as she and he were loving each other so much. He loved Jack took but in reality he was her brother. Yet he didn't show any grief at Joe's death even though he too was such a good friend. But there is too such a sorrow, where we can't cry or show grief, and he had it.. So when he heard of the death of joe greene he sent for the one who had reported it and then went to see his dead friend. Violet and her sisters grieving for his death saw him, there nodd ed sadly to him, but saw that Jack didn't cry or even show any signs of sorrow or even the slightest remourse. But it does show in a persons face nevertheless. Jack's face was as white as a sheet.

The manner of violet and her sisters however to James greene touched him. At the sight of him, the remembrance of Jacks white face, Jeans illness because of the loss, caused their hearts to harden still more against the sins that brought all this sorrow and horror and grow more stubborn against it. After a while when joe controlled himself though he still held violet and Jennie in each arm he fixed his sad eyes upon the m the seve, and said with sadness;

"Why did you and your dear sisters who could be safe at home ever come to share all this horror."

"We have to. There's no way out!"

Violets answers were usually brief, but always pointed. The questioning went on.

"Why do the enemy do so much meanness to you and your sisters!"

She came back with the question—

"Why do they do it to the other children, and child slaves."!

The faintest shadow of a smile played about the pale lips of the boyscout, just for an instant.

"You and your dear sisters ought to know, you are old enough to understand-- that you have behaved in a manner that is unusual for even little heroines. put it is too much for nice brave little girls as you are----"

"We don't care---we are not nice little girls to the enemy. They hate nice little girls, and the prettier they are the more they hate them. To them they are no good to anybody. They slay little girls more than they do boys, and mostly only girls. I've seen terrible things, which cannot be described and so have my sisters, and we are tired of it. The enemy can't scare me. They can't do it to me or my sisters. They have tried to and we're here yet."

A hint, a shadowy hint of the aspiring young soul of Jennie, just daring anything in the face of a cruel and savage foe, was borne to the boy at that moment. He extended his hand to Hettie and Daisy who were standing close, and beckoned to the others..

"Come little Angels sit down there by my side, and don't stand. It is I who should stand. There now. Do you believe you and your sisters could go through all dangers the wars future holds for you and still live it through!"

"Yes we do. We believe we will see the end of it."

"Was it you violet who once came to me in an ugly suit of boys clothes, dressed up in trousers and boots, and handed me a dispatch you captured to give to your Father."

"Yes" she giggled, "but the boots were too long for me, and the trousers too strong, and I had to wave every dangerous creek in the territory and hide in tall trees to escape my persuers. And when I did so I had to almost work as if I was a man. To the enemy little christian girls are nothing. To them we are every dirty name they can call us. But we have done plenty and should be proud of it, but ain't."

James held his breath---There had these strange little angel possessed pretty creatures calling themselves "little girls" been hiding all these years! To him it was as if it was the sudden discovery of a beautiful jewel too costly for a world of worlds to buy lying amidst a brown pebble. The heart w that was desolate for his darling brother turned with sudden fullness to the darling

Princely friends before him. He placed his hands on Violets and Jennie's golden heads, and lifting the beautiful but solemn little faces to his said;;;;2;2;2

"If anything terrible ever happens to you beautiful little Princesses, than then Abbieannia, and the whole Christian world would be desolate indeed.It is always best for all of us to be extremely careful, and to do the best we can with what we are.Many friends I learned have often told you about the great women heroines of the world, who have lived, and their great works and daring, and you copy after them. Yet despite all you suffered you are content.but I can tell you dear Princesses this much;you can always become anything you wish, anything, a great deal, or nothing.It lies with you and your sisters entirely.god for you that has done his part, and you have done for Him everything you could too.We can and do always form of ourselves, built into what we please on god's foundation. you have always remembered that. I sure wish I had little sisters as you little brave girls are.You never forget the sorrows of others never forget never indeed. Your own no matter how severe are only a past memory as if it were a last admonition admonition for some slight wrong doing. your actions recently seems to be a last warning to the enemy.If I was on their side, Than Heaven I am not, I believe I would have feared for Glandelinia, and not for you. your safty is assured.No matter what might try to occur.I can see it in your eyes. If you were gone the world would drop into a deeper deadlier since than ever expected.but it never will be. god has some intention for your creation and it is coming.Let Glandelinia beware.I do not say why because I do not know now.but I see it in your eyes."

While they were sitting here together along the distant battle lines change had followed change. Fortune for the enemy had fled, the enemy lines had shattered themselves against the "wall" christian lines moved away in horror, everything gave way in horror, died, and renewed in the same, but they still sat there.It was no place in the battlefield for them.Though they are Princesses Princesses when it comes to their safty for their own welfare, then the christian generals, though far under them in comaission show authority that is not denied. When they're told"keep away from the battle it is keep away and they 'must' obey.If they wont the generals would lead on, they will retreat. This battle since the tragedy caused these hours dreary ones to try their souls, and much for adversities has its mercies to knit their hearts and souls in sympathy and love. Right glad was the boyscout of the companionship of the Vivian Girls and penrod;; who sat there whistling at his side, trudged with him to the river shore, sang if he was sad, and showed their love for him then, as for always afterwards.

But all their bravery could not keep off the shadow of the horror of battle that dogs the christian cause to an age and its misfortunes, rages as if the infernal regions changes place with the earth, tand threatens that which causes the strongest heart to grow faint with fear and despair.The horrors of war that pants and shivers everything in the path of even adversity.They at times could see the battle so close it almost showed its "fangs of war"to them.This was the day in that terrible hotel strife when the glandelinians had with grim horrible unfeeling faces and with blinding fury tried to get in to capture them and do the horrors to them they had so often seen. to drag them out, little girls sacred to the touch of those who love them, the dear dear Princesses, and yet horribly failed. They recieved no quarter at the hands of the counter christian assailants.No prisoners were taken. Yet when the Vivian Girls were besieged in that horrid hotel strife s strife.Oh blessed Christ, who does not Know and understand the agony of such a scene. The Vivian girls crouched at the at the head of the stairway, shorn of its carpetings by the firing of both sides without hitting each other, and watched with burning eyes the fall of Joe greene, and the almost diss olution of a place that had been called a "Hotel." Hotel.The strange fierce glandelinians who dared to lay unholy hands upon the little girls, whose Father and mother and all followers loved and valued more than all the properties of a world, and who graced the earth as an earth can be graced, and yet couldn,t be reached, because they were as fierce then as the angels who possessed them, against the cruel sinful soldiers. They saw and had heard and had sickened with the scene, but they fought. They saw the friends, throng the place to defend them, and to fall in scores..Then after the tragedy now they saw Joe's brother sink beneath the burden of his sorrow. And he had not been in the fray.Joe.The thought of why he died brought the tears to their eyes.He died for them. They saw the future, Heaven and god be praised and Thanked as few children see, they saw the hollow world for him, and yet for him there was no nothinness as his loss made him better friends out of them, and out of all his followers.They felt for him as if it was their loss of a loved one.They learned in that brief day anew the meaning of lifes pain, and and all the long hard lesson of humanitys great struggle against Glandelinia the Devils life. They learned anew what sorrow was, and what friefriendship really means.They saw the day for joe the day of battle was all done, and he for his country and god and for them would, and could fight no more. and with the ending of the fateful day they would gather all their sad renewed knowledge to their aid. seize anew the reins of their angelic life his life and theirs in hand. For some time the boys sat upon the lonely banks of the stream in the late morning of a bloody November Morning.The sun began to slow peep through the yellow leaves of the ancient locust trees that stood as if scarred old veterans in a long straight solemn line along the stream, some safe distance north of the frightful savage battlefield..No crickets chirped among the grasses, there only came the frightful noise of countless rifles, cannon and yelling of combatants, the burst of shell, and the cries of the frightfully wounded all this had silenced the voices of nature.Hell reigned instead.The katydids though usually heard yet in this territory were now dumb, and the birds, the sparrows ogone away anywhere to escape the noise and frightful scene. The animals h of any sort had fled, serpents too.Not even the sound of wild gr geese were heard, the breath of autum unchilled because of the heat of the forest fires of southeastern and other parts of Calverinia seemed or was stilled by that horrid din.All Nature was horrorified horrified, was full of the sadness of death. The smoke of battle smoiled the atmosphere. It's stench made you almost strangle. It smarted your eyes your nose and mouth.

"Only I am left now"said James green softly.

"I and my sisters are a part of you."said Jennie. Vivian.

"We are enough"said violet."We are all to you and our followers.We and all they are one and enough.We all share the same."

"Yes"said James"We ought to be. But what shall we do with ourselves?We cannot go near h the battle lines.The generals protest.It is dangerous and joe's death and the death of fifteen girlscouts, and twenty boyscouts already is a grim warning.How go and where?"

The Vivian Girls glanced in the direction of the battle with an air of disdain... The ground was dry and dusty, up and down as far as the eye could reach there were scenes that at other times would be loved were now also dis disdainful.There was no freshness anywhere, save in the childlikedul souls of the Vivian Girls.violet waved her hand at the scene--a grand sweep that took in everything;

"Let us get out of this and into camp"said she."Let's find room to breathe." It was a fine thought and with hand clasped in hand, started out tward the camp the section furthest from battle and its sorrows and its horrors.The path lay straight through natures heart---it ended, but lets anticipate.

Because of the stern yet loving warnings of their generals to remain out of danger during the frightful battle they had again retraced their steps to their own headquarters.The building a good sized wooden house, and the encampments around it was in the beautiful wilderness of Weeping Willow Run.Doors and windows opened to the sun, and to the hills towering above it as if it was a giant was crowned by Glandelinian batteries , but the battle had not extended to this location and the batteries were silent. The cedars also waved on the crest of these hills and at their base, down among the green valleys, and past and through all moved the silent Weeping Willow Run. The very camps opened to the sun and so did the headquarters itself--it was fortunate the battle had severe results of it had left them this, these Princesses who for their own safty had to remain away from so titanic a "storm"was there was nothing else for them to do.To go scouting or spying during a battle usually was nothing else but downright sucide. The floors were white and clean as always, Penrod was sitting by the open door on the top step.As for violet, and her sisters, in one way how glad they were in heart to really be made to stay away from the roaring battle since it gave them more security and more freedom of the encampments and the forest---that is if a enemy assault never came this way.But fortunately it didn't. The last morning hour had passed, and dinner was soon to be served when Jennie turned from spreading the dinner table..;;2;2;2 to say sharply;

"There I call that decidedly bad. And the way the air waves produced by the concussion of that frightful battle pulls at that curtain as if a cyclone was coming and----and----"""""""

There came a shock suddenly from the distance that lifted the muttlin muslin curtain to the ceiling and made the building convulse as if the earth itself was quaking. Fortunately, because it gave her something to think about a besides words with which to make the comparison she had started upon, it gave a chance for her to momentarily forget the sorrows caused by a battle.

Penrod who had been sitting in the same spot glanced in,and laughed.

"Throw it back Jen,"said he"Twist the thing back and hang it on a nail; so that the wind may come right in. you have no idea what many good things the wind will bring in if you twist that curtain out of its way..."""""""

"Yes I have"said Jennie acting now as small housekeeper"just now the wind brings in powder smoke, the sound of battle and the al distant uncanny cries of the fighting battle lines. As to twisting if we were back in the old times when you and I were young little babies they would never let us twist the window curtains.Mother wouldn't, Joice wouldn't."

"Nevertheless we are here"said Penrod in the new times, and in the "beautiful war"times. And just now there's nobody but me and you and your sisters in this place."

"We are enough while we are here"said Jennie"and as for the curtain up she goes oh that breeze is good, and now what is that?it smells as if a lot of leaves were burning."

Penrod sniffed and then said;"That is probably some small fires started by the battle.There is nothing in all the woods than the sweetness of nature and the enemy and war destroys it all.We all love the woods, for they are the Key to all beautiful and holy thoughts and yet the enemy ruins it all by his forest fires. You understood the groves were our blessed Lords First temples, and they probably were His best too and yet the enemy sets them in flame or destroys by shell fire. And I love to think also that the various birds were His first choristers, flowers is His first incense and yet too the enemy destroys these.The stars in heaven I'm sure were His first worshippers and 'sang together' in the morning, and the enemy would destroy them if he could.We all love Nature for the woods is Gods First Temple."

"Yes"said Jennie"I am sure we do, and Father has often teached me and my sister sisters the beautiful secrets of the forest and the language of nature.We all love nature in every respect for we Love God, and it comes from God.."

How they wished it was May time again.To see the young greens on the trees hear new birds chirping in the trees nests and to see the beautiful spring flowers of various sorts hid among the new grasses. Life since the days before had changed to the brave Princely children, the building and camp I into which the dangers of the battle had set them in crouched as a sort of strange appearance at the foot of the hills the buildings of the camp seeming small and their windows lifted to the hills their doors open to the sun and to the winding Weeping Willow Run slipping ever on to finding the still deeper but not less lovely Atonburgs Sun River.

Who cared if the building was not too close to the roaring battle. No one needed to care for true friends within this territorytwere boundless in numbers..not even the soldiers of the opposing battle lines forgoet the very existance of thes these eight who had wandered to the camps hand in hand but not beyond their memories though hateful memories of the sinful enemy. Who cared if the sound of the enemys "devil yells" howsled hard at the door of the building from the distance, and sometimes------hush don:t let penrod hear, the cries of the many wounded too howled and moaned too away off in the distance.Penrod could guess it however even though he was getting used to such sad alarms.But to the quick ears of the Vivian girls the howles howls of the enemys ; lling came on the noonday winds, startling them at times from their day dreams, and driving them off to peep in that direction and wonder in that plaintive way which usually fills the childhood in the heart and paints the appearance of woman in the baby features, what sad alarms of battle the future might conceal.

They were in danger it seemed even here, and bad enough.But as Penrod said-"There was no danger as long as they had him, and he had them.Then the roar of cannons would come again but the noise of exultant christian yells would cause the gaunt threatener of the battle to be quite forgotten for the time.As Jennie was preparing dinner a strange new familyor new member joined the little party in the first floor of the headquarters---a ninth party, or as Violet and her sisters said"A stray runaway child slave. The new comer was a little boy, a slender sleek looking little boy. He wandered in just before daytime when Jennie was laying out the table clothe for dinner, with the rear door flung wide. he was singing as she dried her cups and watched the sun streaking the mountain tops with silver and beauty and was unaware another little wanderer escaped somehow from the Glandelinian camps had eletected to share their solitude, untill the boy attracted the attention of her sisters who had been washing themselves for dinner.

"The boy had come in the rear door and Penrod had not seen him.

"Mery Mercy"cried violet."how you startled me.When did you come and how.How did you when we are fleeing from the battle craze here.Look at the little boy sisters.He's an escaped child slave for he hardly has no clothes on.Get him something to put on ---but I'm sure glad to see him dearly glad he ran away from the glandelinians. ut I don't understand how he did it."

And as she talked the beautiful little child had nestled down by the little slave boys side, wound her arms slender and white about the little boy and caught her land. violet and her sisters had such compassion on little child slaves they often cried and wept for them.But what was it to o o sob for.A little boy slave who running away ffom from the enemys lines had wab wandered into their headquarters from the distance and the enemys lines from the horrible battlefield from which she and her sisters had been forced to flee from at the stern advise of the christian generals.. She and h rsisters had not loved the sinful armies of Glandelinia, neither had the child slave, she fan i fancied, and the old font of love and sympathy so ready always to gush for the unfortunate, had burst its bands at the coming of this beautiful little half naked child slave coming to seek safty and companionship in the wilderness section of the christian camps.

"what is it honey?" asked Penrod from his seat outside the entrance door among the fall withered vines and mountain laurels. And Jennie made answer as her sisters crowded around the little slave in sympathy;

"Why I believe it is a little child slave boy, though perhaps it's your guardian angel in disguise---for his language is a new one to me, and can't even understand Violet when she speaks to him.I believe he is german."

Penrod arose and went in to see what mannervof child slave had found his rear door ajar.

"Why said he"he is a little foriegn boy all right, and a beautiful little boy at that.We will have to guard him good or they'll come after him and steal him away again."

Jennie looked up from the table and said;

"He has come to the christian lines to stay we will see to that.He even has the staying look in his eyes. You can always tell when a person has come to remain free."

"Yes"said Penrod"That is quite true when they come to us especially--but I wish he hadn't come so soon in such a locality.We're all alone here just now and if the Glandelinians some come to find him we would be in a tight bottle for there are no soldiers hardly here to help us.They're mostly all at the battle front or going. We're in danger here now I'm afraid."

He sighed and tapped the knuckles of his right hand upon his left palm, some thing told him already that his sisters were never destined for the comm common quiet ways.The small feet have already thread unusual paths and would again too be pierced perhaps by the thorns of many more sharp and sad and terrible experiences, unless the war comes to an early close.

"We learn many lessons"he said dreamily watching the sombre top of the distant hills through the open window"We learn many of our sad lessons much too early.But it is true quite true, that we understand when child slaves flee the enemys camps the Glandelinians will sent cavarly and patrols to scour the country for them, and infantry to train them and beat through the brush in their search.When one is young for instance love comes and strong too, but for the enemy love is gone.There we holy love as among outselves I believe there is but one---when we meet it in the silence of pain, sad experiences, the gloom of sorrow, or the blackness of disaster we understand that it not only has come to stay but grows more and more within us.We open our hearts and take it in and it never goes again.We understand when real love has come to stay. Sometimes it tears and wounds, and does not respond to our caresses, but it stays in our hearts, a dear, dear sorrow but it stays and never leaves.If everybody in the world loved each other as we loved ourselves and do love each other there would not be any conflicts stress and strife. But as to the little child slave well have to guard it like a treasure.

Violet had brought the clothe and though it did not fit the little boy as well as it should he was better than before nevertheless.

"well Penrod dear"said she"The little boy came without an invitation, and he will go the same way.We never turn a sad guest or unfortunate from our door. And and now if we could only find out his name."

"Oh call him angel child, most anything good will do for the time he will remain with us.We have had succored many refugees before this Jennie dear." The childs brow clouded...

"But that's been done often"said she"I forget.the sad things Penrod dear forget it.The friends who come to us now comes because they love us, else the sinful enemy has been too much for them too, as this poor child slave here.Now come to your dinner Penrod dear, and you too sisters, our fish is in the frying pan we love fish you know more than meat..We'll eat it, then we'll get George Zimmermon to find out about this little boy and have him care for him."

"We do not need to bother about the name"declared the boyscout Prince with his smile come back again. "We will first give him a good dinner for maybe he he has not eaten for days for he appeares by his face to be very hungry indeed to me, and if you please we'll drink his health and future safty and freadom in milk..."

"Oh cried Jennie"You do hit the nail so straight.Here's your cup.I'm going going to fetch the fish."

"And when we have eaten it"said Penrod"We'll try and catch some more. As soon as possible I am going to teach you little misses girls a real stunt on how to clash with the lance. you'll need that learning badly, as Violet proved to me that day she fought me when she thought I was a Glandelinian boyscout. Come as soon as dinner is over I'm going to teach you now to do it.We have plenty of time this afternoon as there is nobody around."

"Us?Really now?I thought it was only boyscouts, and cavarly men----only those who could fight with a lance."

"Any girl"said Penrod slowly may do anything a boy may do and should.The, have the same rights and priviliges in this country, and should have in other countries too and they all have the same common sense and courage. The world will agree to that some day if it doesn't now. you violet did show me that you had learned some of your drills pretty good in your accidental scrap with me that dreadful night. but in case you learn to be as good as me, I hope by God's help that that don't happen again or the two of us will be done for."

"Now" cried the Princess, while her sisters smiled "That is what we like about you, "you consider girls on an equality of or two boys."

"Not all of them" said Penrod smiling. "Some of them I consider even better."

Violet looked at him sort of mischieviously like and then smiled knowlingly.

"He means us" she whispered to Jennie.

"Now the great trouble about lance fighting" said violet as she was mounted on her horse beside Penrod with her lance in her hand (the sharp point covered by a ball) as she rode in Princely garbe "is that sometimes a boy has a stronger arm than a girl. That is why you worsted me every time in that blunder fight. I believe otherwise I understood a good deal about lance charges and thrusts. Oh yes I do, and so do our sisters, you needn't grin. I know that sometimes I have worsted the Glandelinians in sabre fights but only because we were quicker than they and they couldn't touch us. but lances are bound to meet against each other because of their length. Unless we can find out we're strong enough to fight with a lance we wouldn't attempt it with a real Glandelinian soldier unless we can get him before he can get us. I know and so do my sisters that the Glandelinians love more than anything else to destroy us, and that shows we do need to learn many things. but the main thing I and my sisters do know is.---when to charge an enemy first before he is on his guard. With that clash with you that night I was either too too quick or too late. I never drove the lance at you at the right time. but Thank god I didn't."

Penrod mounted his horse again urged the horse slowly forward, and with his sisters following said-

"You have struck the eynote of the sport. And not alone of this sport but of all sport, and of all serious ventures too. Strength has nothing to do with the results of two men or other persons in a cavarly l clash. The main thing is to drive at the proper time. I had you so often in that fight because you're not learned in the p art of the lance fighting yet. you may best Glandelinian boyscouts but if you can best me any of you singly, I need never fear then for your safty in case anything happens and I may not fortunately be with you. to drive in at the proper time. That is the great secret of all successes. It's worth getting into your memory. You got strength but don't believe so. Drive when you see the opportunity parrary parry when it is proper if you would save your life, or save yourself from a dang dangerous and painful injury: It is always well to remember it. Opportunities never come at the same time Violet. They"

They had already had their drill and were returning home to their headquarters.

The Vivian girls had shown considerable improvement and Penrod was pleased. violet had had a great deal to say to day, for she had been thinking; and she had a fancy that she wanted a good listener..

"No w" continued she" hat I and my sisters like about you is you let a person converse and learn them many things. Most boys I have learned to be acquainted with who were foriegn, are sullen and silent and won't have talking..Now when it comes to that I hang up my tackle."

"Those sort of boys probably have no ears" said Penrod "Though I'm not pretending that they should deserve a concussion in the air and warn them of their danger. Un less they're good and prove themselves worthy of their mettle mettle I do not care much for all these foriegners. Many of them have turned out cowards."

Deep in the woods heart Penrod and the little girls came upon a quiet spot shut in by trees now beginning to lose their summer draperies leaves and so forth except the evergreen. The sweet wild things of the forests appealed always to Violet and her sisters as if they might have been of kin so close was their companionship. They decided to stay here for a while for it was pretty far from the danger zone. violet herself threw herself down among the ferns and grasses and in her old way fell to dreaming while her sisters went a little off to explore. It was so good to live away from a part of the world that she did not love, full of sinful nations. It was so good to be an Abbieannian. Away also from the noise of battle, the slaughter scenes, the confusion, and the pains of mortally wounded, the agony of unrest, the long sorrow of waiting, for joy that never comes comes. he or her sisters were too young to feel these things in their fullest intensity but she felt the great freedom of Nature, the blessed companionship of her sisters, her dearest brothers and parents, so many countless true loving friends, that would hold her image, and also Penrods faithful little heart that would hold her to him untill god stilled it.

Stilled it, ah that was the thought that haunted and harassed her. If he should die---if she should die. he clasped her hands buried her face between her pretty arms and prayed, and prayed as when before she had always prayed.

"We have all the good things even though we suffered so much" she said" nd others have learn to look for. I dare not let him understand how much danger we are in sometimes but god dearest god god My best Friend if it is thy Will let me go first, don't leave me here without him, don't don't please don't. I am so small we are my sisters and the world is so big and cruel. If it be Thy Will take me first I don't leave me here all alone. you know now you can, are you not God our Dear blessed Father!" and she made the sign of the Cross."

The winds crept through the bushes where the sun had kissed them red, a shadow fell upon shine, and through the gloom she saw Penrod and hi her sisters approaching, tney wandering by a rivers side, his head drooped, hands weary. Often had her sisters suffered more than she, especially Jennie who once for a long long time had been in the possession of the enemy, and none there to give her a word of comfort for her then all were gone, gone. ll were gone from her then, even her sisters, for they had been forcibly seperated from her and who at that time of dread and sorrow and suffering and loneliness had no other hope but just to wait for death but which finally never came. And violet for fear of losing Penrod and her sisters had begged of god in a slight mistaken moment to take her first but not through selfishness. but now she placed her hands upon her eyes and cried out sharply;

"please don't listen to me dear god don't. I made a mistake. If Thy Will preserve us all throughout this dreadful conflict, but if any of us have to go, please don't let me go first."

For the sake of others she loved she had always been haunted with the fear of death of leaving her sisters alone and helpless. nd whenever afterwards the fear came, when her head would ache from the noise of battle, her body weary with the military toil and constant horse back riding dangerous experiences for there was sure very much of it it fate wear her gloom the world appeared horrible and dark always and at such times her prayer prayer would be-

"but please do not take me away first oOh Dear god. It would not be right for my poor sisters. Dearest god do not cause me to die first."

Penrod had in the meantime halted his horse and gazed around a little nervously wondering why the little Princess maid did not return. is sisters were close by him also appearing anxious but now they saw her coming, and soon they were back in their headquarters again with the purpose to have a little supper.

"I'm going to heaten the milk now Violet herself called for it was ow her now her turn to cook and while I'm preparing supper Jennie has a questiom that she wishes to ask."

"She has" said Penrod" Well I'm as glad as possible to help her out all I an. come Jennie dear violet us hear it."

She put her wood into the fire herself helping Violet to do the cooking the big milk pot on top of the stove, and touched the tinder with a match, and soon had a good hot fire roaring.

"Remind me Jennie dear" cautioned violet "To remove the pot by the time it goes to get hot. That's the trouble with my own cooking, I sometimes am so excited and thoughtless I often forget, I butnes my bulscuits last night, and left the rice four days in the stew pan. Now remind me of the milk."

"I will" said Jennie truthfully. "Now Penrod dear what I wish to request is- can't you move over a trifle. I'm almost sitting at the edge of the couch. There that is better. Now what I wish to find out is--Are child scouts being recruited into our lines without register.?"

"Goodness no. They are never without my consent registered not. I nor even Angelinia Aronburg or Jennie Turner would never let that go without a register not at all. We got to be acquainted with them because if we ain't how can we tell whether they're friends or not."

"Ah" said jennie her brow clouded as if she were angry "I should have thought you would have answered better, much truer than that."

Then he saw that she was serious. and as he always did went out to meet her mind."

"Something suspicious." he demanded.

"Yes as I discovered that yesterday. Yet Yesterday I and my sisters, we counter counted and counted, it seemed as if we were forever counting. We and Angelinia Aronburg and Jennie Turner were bent over out heavy books and we were more and more engrossed in the work. We wished because at this time it was worth our while to have the census of our child scout troops made out, as the time for it was drawing to a close. As is the custom we had already notified the child scout registers, who to our surprise were exceedingly trouble I assure you for the past few days only a goodly number of stranger children came in from Heaven only can tell where and were found even circulating about the avenues of our child slave encampments. As we often heard Glandelinian child scouts could fool us and get into our camps I and my sisters are suspicious."

Penrod at this frowned.

"Are you positive that you're not dreaming?" he said almost severely.

"Yes. You can have it proved by Violet. some of them I will admit made a truly passable appearance, others were or are scarcely noticeable yet one and all more a singular decoration which we couldn't account for.It consists of a sort of brown circular color in which the coloring and decorations glistened and bade fair to outshine the halo of more than one saint. The pressing point however was to find their signature in our books. And they ain't there.That seems suspicious." suspicious."

Penrod was silent for a moment.He was pondering on the situation.

"Who is the one who is suppose to accept the child scouts at your command thus leaving you free l of the job!"he said.

"Jennie Turner is."

"Would you wish to have an investigation made now?"he requested."Though I'll warn you ay at the start that the situation whether it is against us or not has its hook baited."

"We couldn't do anything now because of the battle as all the child scouts are busy as bees trying to prevent the enemy any success here or there."said she getting up to examine the milk and telling violet it is ready"but go on have it investigated to night"I'll follow the example of Jennie Turner and try to bite the bait off and dodge the hook. But if child scouts are not registered I'm going to find out what's wrong."

"Who's the boss on that situation?"demanded Penrod with a smile.

"Jennie Turner is."

"Why not us."

"We have no time for that sort of work.So we gave her the commission, and she is responsible."

"But why worry about it"declared Penrod" little girls and boys in our county country so we see do not committ the smallest sins or faults, there is no vanity or untruth among them, no one envys each other there's no sinful gossiping and scolding and therefore there's so no such symptoms among our new ones whether they're registered or not.They do their fierce deeds against the sinful enemy in day and night, they revenge on the enemy for child murder, wilful arson, and all such hedious things one shakes to hear of."

"What shall we do about that!"said Jennie.

"We'll investigate that this evening "said Penrod."But let me tell you something which will be a good surprise to you and your sisters whether you only hear it or they too.The sins of the world I have sometimes thought were weighted as I did as if they were common stuff and foods in balances, and too that is not the manner of Glandelinians or me that counts, but the measure of it.But lots of people throughout the other nations of the world committ crimes as Glandelinians do, one does a foul murder, and therefore the scale falls it moves no more. But Glandelinians never the less outrival them all.But let me tell you a story of my existences since the time of the battle of Delight's Junction or even before up to now.Some time ago there were two strange nations one of them an enormous one, where peace and plenty alr always tended on her steps, the other nation somewhat the same but better in appearance. But between this and all at a certain spot of the whole world, there are many other nations that crowd the world like rats, sins by hundreds of millions of persons fill the air with dreadful stench and cause vegetation to die.For Heaven only can tell how many poor food is so scarce in these nations that the children of the poor learn to believe themselves most clever most even to be commended if they find a chance to steal a bit of bread.Boys and all beautiful things are never heard of among the poor and no one ever tells these wandering little wreth wretches that life has something better or that God and His Blessed Mother and all His saints lived and retained their eyes upon the the world which His very tought had made, In one of these two big nations however, a number of Roses started to grow.They sprang up in a night.At first it was only a small and tender bush, but graceful and fair, and soon had little blossoms as pure as snow. The roses however were always white, beautiful white ones--whose destiny it was to do more than blossom and be beautiful beyond comparsion.The people of both nations saw the rose bush blossom blossoms that would not recede summer or winter.One nation breathed the perfume of these flowers, the other even so much as would destroy the bush, but of the other nation would even clean their hands so they might only feel the roses spotless petals an no and not leave a stain. And the nation possessing these flowers grew sweeter more cleaner and beautiful than ever before because of these flowers.Men gentle before became gentler yet, women holier and cleaner nobler and more strong, the very children too, and through these roses the nation prop prospered and grew beautiful and strong and retained itself aloft from the rest of the sinful world, and though always a nation for every one of good people became holier yet.The nation is as clean as the bloom of the roses..... It was hoped that the whole world should have grown better for that beautiful staunch rose bush that could still retain its own sweet innocence among so much filth and crime throughout all the war torn world. But nearest that Rose bush also a beautiful scarlet Poppy blossomed.It was said to have bloomed uphigh against an oriel window exposed to the very street where every body could enjoy the scarlet loveliness.It nodded its head where the weary poor were passing, and it shivered if a breath of passing air from a sinful creature touched its fluttering petals.It had a strong beautiful but almost intoxicating perfume. It's bosom always opened to sweet sympathy.It blossomed for the rich and poor alike.One day the Master passing through the world, spied the beautiful roses.He smelt their perfume, saw the matchless whiteness of their petals, and heard the gratitude of the starving millions giving praise to Him because the white roses had been left to bloom and brighten earth up to now. And it pleased Him more.He smiled upon those pale beautiful flowers, and stopp stooping plucked seven of the most beautiful blossoms.

"I'll wear them in my bosom where they'll never die even though plucked"said he lovingly and yet sadly."These poor blossoms have so little chance, their petals are so small yet they do much toil and work for me.These beautiful roses have taught noble lessons far nobler lessons than any flower that grows even though the Poppy did plenty too, and they lifted their own faces always to the light.Their sphere is limited but the perfume of their quiet puriety out rivals all the palace hothouses.."

"Who do the roses represent!"said Jennie.

"You and your sisters"said Penrod.

"Who is the Poppy."

"I am."

Violet Jennie was silent. A light of some sort in the heavens flashed by and there was a burst and a cloud of blue smoke to mingle with the smoke of battle. Suddenly some outher other sound seemed to ring out a distant warming there was a sort of a concussion somewhere and Jennie almost tumbled off from the couch but regained her footing.No one spoke even her sisters appeared to look strangely serious.Then Violet suddenly said;

"Supper is ready."

They ate in silence.Jennie was leaning an arm against Penrods shoulder and both sat silent during the meal listening to the distant sound of battle a peculiar yet encouraging sound that told the enemy we was losing badly, a breeze stirred the branches of the trees outside.Penrod was thinking of the future and wondering vaguely what its mysteries might reveal to her. But she was pondering on the story of the Roses and its rush bush.She seemed to understand the rose bush was Her Fathers Archestorial Tree, and the loveliest of the roses to come on that bush was she and her sisters. And in fancy she could see the hosts of earths disconsolate waiting there by the rose bush for any word of comfort they might use.

That even Evening Penrod was at work alone. He was toiling at the register name books. He however could not discover anything but he was a little suspicious. It was indeed most provoking.

"SMUGGLING CHILD SCOUTS IN WHOM I NO.

"Smuggling child scouts in of whom I do not know anything perhaps! What! even within the embattled christian lines and how!"

"No that is quite impossible!"

And Angelinia Aronburg bent a scrut scrantizing glance on the prince.He surely didn't seem to have the slightest de doubts of the accounts of both Angelinia Aronburg and Jennie Turner.However when Angelinia Aronburg started turning the pages over herself if only in a show of comfort to Penrod, two of the illustrious great favorites of Empress and Emperor Vivian, passed by them into the hall.Two of ravishing beauty, and who loved each other as sisters since holy love establishes sort of a relationship between beings who have a perfect understanding no one of the other.One of them wore a bright purple uniform coat, and a yellow satin dress and had the heart shaped hat.In passing they waved in a loving firmedly way to Penrod but seeing the preoccupied attitude of Angelinia Aronburg one passed a remark, and both walked on laughing. Poor Penrod he smiled after them and watched them move out of sight.Then turning once more he felt heavier than ever the job of searching the pages.

"Happy Jennie and Violet"he thought,"Nothing to do all evening but love each other. Dearest sisters.I wouldn't give [illegible] them take the world for one finger of them..They're too precious. And yet I have seven."

During this time Angelinia Aronburg had been continually figuring.As she did so Penrod glanced out side.Since the battle had stopped for the evening peaceful and fair were the meadows outside, and peaceful the very hills beyond them. Peaceful for the time was the Weeping Willow Run the glad blue river of Culverinia singing its way to the Aronburgs pun The setting sun slanted the long golden beams across the wheat the barley and the grain abandoned by the fleeing farmers but guarded by the christian armies or it may be the ripe short stubble through which the winds love to linger, lisping a death song to summer.But would Winter come for a real.It was November and the weather was as warm as summer because of Culverinia's forest fires.A termonither outside said 96 in the shade. But nevertheless fair were the meadows, but gloomy and red were the heavens a blood red color in the east and yellow yellow overhead, and purple in the west, the mountains appeared strange in color.The mountains bended above familiar ways along which Penrod and his sisters loved to linger in affectionate companionship and as it were clasping the hands of angels instead of little girls in a grope grasp which nothing not all the after mysteries of life, the wonderings of sorrow, grief, horror and terrible adventures, the horrors of war or the rejoicing of hope could serve to unloose unclose. They were not with him now. But they were not, because he was busy and like good little girls they didn't want to disturb him. This was important to them and he should investigate. Yet what visions what weird ecstatic glimpses were vouchsafed to them, the little girls with their eyes upon scenes they should not have deserved to witness, and Penrod sighting the shores of the sweet All gone, with the eye of memory.. What visions indeed, what what blessed visions. Who of us can say which is fairier the visions of hope or of memory. One makes possible of all things, the other causes all things to be real.

As Angelinia Aronburg was toiling over the pages Penrod was dreaming of violet and her sisters. He couldn't understand them. His seven sisters were hardly different in any ways. Joice and Angeline the two eldest though also unusually sweet sweet looking made him thin of the blessed Virgin as a child. They were the same as her very proud studious brave, adventuresome loving, full of sympathy helpful in everything, sunny tempered and always eager to help others. But Jennie Vivian oh. Jennie by her sisters, and by everybody was looked upon as the leader of all, all petting, all things done to her to spoil a child only the more brought out her naturally fine and loving nature, but to the enemy she was wilful petulant and fierce. She didn't for her own side however know what an unpleasant task was.

If you wanted to gain her disfavor be a person who loves to avoid unpleasant duties. And too he had found out their day dreams were characteristic of violet and Jennie. They dreamed of a great and wealthy nobleman, who had fallen in Love. Love with their beauty and holy live and give them a life of constant holiness and love in return and that "Nobleman" was Christ Himself. He was the only Nobleman they ever had in their minds. Jennie was the worst when ever it came the day for Good Friday as he saw once. During a time of the Station of the Cross Jennie had literally "threw herself out of the Church.

"It's a shame I can't stand it" she had cried to her father Emperor Vivian when he tried to get her to return. "It's a shame" and she burst into tears. "I don't see that had to happen to Him and His blessed Mother on such a day and it doesn't do no good anyhow. I don't see why He should get everything that way, just because so many hundreds of millions won't even repent of their sins and go to Hadenia. It is not right" and in spite of her fathers loving attempt to pacify her she fairly raved and stormed, declaring that the whole world was unjust and unfair unfair to Him even to day, depriving God and His blessed Mother of the Rights and love due Him and Her, and favoring the devil in every way and making a "Cinderulla of the Poor blessed Mother."

Her sisters always felt terrible on those days too but Jennie couldn't really stand it, and always the sight of a crucifix would start a flood of tears to her eyes. Penrod always had his rosarry every time he had been praying if he seen her coming forsear she would see the crufix.. This had touched Penrod deeply and had made him realize what they really where or were and at times caused him to be awesome and a little little afraid in their presence. One time he had when they were with him heard him say to a man say to a companion;

"Things have come to a pretty pass for us. (They were foriegners) I ought to blaspheme god, and blaspheme Him loudly too."

They were astonished, for only they had said it loudly enough for only Penrod to hear them, but they were astonished nevertheless, and so were his sisters, more so to hear him say with a frightfully angry retort. "Blaspheme you fool fall in front of my sisters and I,ll put a bullet in your head."

And they moved off in a hurry too.

"Penrod Penrod are you dreaming" he suddenly heard some one say and glax glancing glancing upward he saw Jennie standing beside him "Angelinia has been speaking to you and you never answered a word."

"I believe I was" he stammered "But gosh you scared me. What is it Miss Angelinia."

"Truly" she said "nothing as this has ever happened before. Our own accounts are exact. To morrow if the battle is over your sisters or Jennie Turner will have to all enlighten the mystery."

"We must enlighten the mystery this evening" said Jennie." She turned to a boyscout."

"Have the bugle sound for the roll call."

The boy all this time had been so intent on Jennie's face that he didn't understand her and he said;

"What Doughnut went up yonder. You mean the Coffee."

Jennie fairly ran into the next room like a frightened deer. Peeking in the room through the half opened door Penrod saw her bent double with laughter. Penrod went to him and said "She wished you to have the roll call of the child scout Regiment. You're enough to make a horse laugh. Go."

The boy went smiling, but greatly embrassed.

While they waited for the boyscouts order to be carried out they sat by the open window and Penrod was in a sort of dreamy attitude, watching as the weeping willow hum Gurl gurgled and sang nearly at their very door, while the little

Vivian Girl, Catherine, twisted a head band of some strange mountain Full flowers and at that moment a big covered wagon came down the slope a little beyond, the river. The man who was driving the horses sat sleeveless and shoeless and without a hat, on the tall seat snapping his whip over the horses a threat in every movement of the long slender thong, but nevertheless he never hit. The tammmmm crossed the bridge, and straightaway found another hill (fillthe dill) to climb.

"There's "Said Catherine. "I wonder in spirit do we come down long hills only to find it most difficult to go up again. Our lives seem that way."

Penrod glanced up, nodded, accepted the hint, and said;

"Yes" said he "The most of us do but never even climb up once. We ourselves go up the steepest hills only to go down again and go down too suddenly, especially, these dreadful years. We have a moments rest at the summit, a vision, a glimpse of beautiful distances, purple and serene, a moments uplifhting uplifting of our beautiful souls, then down we go into the valley of sorrow again and to find the other hill too far away to reach it soon. But then nevertheless it has its other side too probably more higher and steeper steeper, we go down into the mist and gloom of the valley, to grope among the horror a whil before we begin again to ascend to the heights. Up and down, down and up. Life would be would be unbearable otherwise and we would die under the weight of our own misery."

"Well" said violet though she did appear at this moment a little sad "That's good nevertheless considering how small the matter you had to go on. Our Lord our Blessed Lord Himself on his way to Calvery had to go up and down hills on a long journey, and therefore even though it is said we ourselves don't deserve what we suffer, we may agree with that, but neither did he deserve it either. So why should we hide in dark corners to escape suffering when he didn't.! Now we to day or this evening would rather laugh than cry. Now tell me and my sisters something funny. I believe we must be getting more childish for we love to be amused.... ....."

"Not as childish as little Jannie whom I first became acquainted with as Adeldefob." said Penrod, and violet, and her sisters snuggled closer...."Because" they told themselves" omething good and important is coming, we know it is."

"It was when the Glandelinian armiesx were concentrating at the old Mill Stream near Cedemine River" said Penrod wondering why the roll call was not yet sounded. I was crossing the Cedemine Stream one morning early in June. It was hot and dry and I had been riding with Glandelinian boyscouts for hours, trying to find a way to escape the smudge and heat of the forest fires then raging far to the southward of us. The Glandelinian guards too had made fires along the river shore, and seeing a little black haired girl standing under possession of one the soldiers I went ashore. She was very young, and yet despite being a slave even then so chirp and cheery, that contrasting her manner and appearance I requested of her her age, having in my mind however that if possible I'd steal away with her to the christian lines.

"How old are you little slavy?" said I.

"Old? who the slave" said the guard. "Why the little "brat" cannot yet speak our language. She has just been bought."

"Yes I can too" retorted the child. "That soldier lies. "I'm I'm only six".

Then I saw a strange incident. The Glandelinian got mad and decided to give her a bath in the river which water despite the heat of the weather was nevertheless very cold as it was a cold mountain stream. She was despite her protests of the water being too cold led into it. She went reluctantly, very reluctantly. She tried to pull back but it only made the glandelinian soldier the more determined to drag her onward into the deeper current. But the farther they went the more the little girl struggled and pulled, untill finally the strain became too much for him and he called to some other soldiers to help him give her a sousing for her retort. The glandelinian soldiers on the shore followed with laughs and jeers some shouted to leave her alone, she was not his slave, and others said never mind he won't drown her, she needs a bath, and others though Glandelinians hooted and jeered him and said they'd tell her master. But the guard never once turned his face or lifted his eyes, he simply grasped the little girl slave by the throat and soused her face downward,, in the river. She came up screaming and would have scratched him in the face with her hands, but at that moment the master appeared, and raved, and swore and made him turn the little girl over to him, crying out "I'll get even with you for this."

And witnessing that sight without being able to do anything set me dreaming about child slaves and that one in particular, and the responsibilities she would have to face as a slave in the future. And I found myself dreaming what a great thing it would be to help her get off to the christian lines a free child.. And how much easier it would be to first gain her confidence first, before starting her upon a different road. And I don't believe a child slave ever yet ever showed me ingratitude for setting them free."

"Oh said violet "You really experienced that. It was you who brought her her freedom. You did it in the face of any circumstances. How good of you!"

"Did you save her by accident!" said Voice.....

"No Gingigore helped me. As to accidents there were none. I and he got the other slaves with her into our confidence, though we had to face danger, to want death itself if need be if we failed, but we always did the wisest thing and acted as overseers. We did really cause them to toil during the day time as it was the only way to avoid detection by the enemy. nothing but nothing of ill circumstances ever would have robbed us of our success, especially carelessness and over confidence. And away back when you're within the foe lines and want to rescue child childs slaves and escape with them at the start, the first thing of understanding is the effort to prepare the child slaves for the journey from the enemys lines you are preparing for. It is a grand thing first to make for the child slaves so they will have confidence in you to make something beautiful of the life God has given to us it is a grad grandeur to reach the great end over the greatest difficulties. And there is another thought that came over me while I am still waiting for the assemblance of the roll call it is this, and you may take it with you-- against the time when the trick of war and sudden disaster against the time when you may often be caused to thread the ways without me."

"Stop" said jennie passionately. "I too learned a sermon from that team of horses that crossed over the bridge a moment ago. "In was this not to cross the bridge until I come to it."

"It can't be far ahead----"

"Don't mention it even please" cried the little Princess, springing to her feet and a mist before her eyes. "Don't mention it because when you do I seem to hear --the---timbers---crac and cave--under me."

"There, there, there let it go" said Penrod. "I don't believe there is such danger yet. yet. where are you going sisters."

"down the river a ways." said Jennie sadly. "I don't believe the child scout regiment has returned from the battle front yet." come with me and my sisters."

And they put on their hats went to the river shore and Violet began to loosen the chain that fastened their big motor motor boat. As he followed them Penrod said nothing, though he seemed a little sad too, for he understood just as well what she and her sisters would do as though he had peeped down into their little hearts, and read their every feeling... He was not surprised and yet he appeared a little more sad when a moment jennie who was sitting beside him on the boat and starting the machinery started the conversation again.

"What was it" she requested "That you said I and my sisters should gather against the time that time you mentioned?"

"Why this" said penrod right glad she had returned the question. "No matter with drawbacks, what dangers what disadvantages one may labor under in this trying situation--whether it be the persecutions of the Glandelinians; or whether a loss of a loved one, whether false friends among the foe or open foes beset, slanders slanders, cheats liars or murderers, no matter what one may fall upon in our life time only one self can destry one at last. Remember that to steer by. If you wish, why not abandon this career and let's go north to Abbieannia and get help from up there." however she said nothing to this but started the engines. How still How still the world had grown solemn as those last solemn words he had given her "to remember by". he started the engines tearfully, and glanced up to see Penrod retaining his watch on the shore with pistol in hand. By this time the sun had sailed so far beyond them like a blood red ball that the shadow of the big gloomy forested bluffs lay half way the rivers breast, and the stream was very gloomy with the creeping november twilight. It was gloomy enough now.

"Let's go on the return" he said. "what have we done all these minutes. Joice you have have been fishing for I see you have seven trout on your string, what have you on yours violet? speak up we must be traveling"

"I have nine" said she "and yet oh it sounded so pretty I have also been listening listening to a pretty night bird singing somewhere."

"A bird.!"

"yes" said Jennie herself "it was a lovely but lonesome little bird. Not another bird anywhere answered its note."

"And yet his singing was so beautiful, so beautiful, and nobody heard a note of it but us."""

"I'll bet it reminded you and your sister sisters of your times of being seperated from each other and of being lonesome" said he wadly.

"Ourselves? no not them. I wish it had. Why how do you hear we had often been seperated from each other."

"Radcliffe told me many things you and your sisters suffered in the past. Those that caused it or most of them are all dead now. He ambushed them. What have you made out of the bird singing, for I believe I heard it too? Out with it now."

"Why" said Jennie "It was so beautiful, yet so sad, that brave little bird singing its very best in the heart of the sad empty forest that it did remind me I will admit of some lives we hear of and especially when I was a prisoner of that that Foolish man Augustinio St Claire. As bad as he treated me I'd have given anything if he would have repented and saved his soul the poor fool. And while the bird sang those brave lonesome lives we sometimes lived seemed to group themse themselves out before me, and somehow I wanted to speak of them before the world you understand, and then I always wonder did I and my sisters ever suffer as Our Dear Lord did. I believe not."

She in the middle of the boat stood as an little angel before him with her beautiful little hands folded over the wooden handle of her miin minnow gail which she had lifted ready to start upon the homeward strip as soon as the little violet steering had brought the boat to their landing place before violet shuts off the engine..

"You spoke" said He. "that have you said little angel sprite."?

"For the memory of our own frequent lonely lives" said she "we are the same at times as the brave lonely, unheard singers, I have this to say to the whole world. She lifted her eyes to the hills, the bluffs beyond the river, crowned with cedar and heavy with the gloom of coming night; and the deeper glooms beyond, where the denser forests crowned the lofty heights, wrapped now in the mystery of fancy. And with her gaze following that long purple chain of distant christian camps too she sang her message her word, for the unheard singers---"

A Pilgrim Bird/

Our blessed Lord in Heaven opened the windows of Heaven,
And sent out a most beautiful bird;
A sigh and a gleam the same as the joy in a dream;
It leaped into life at His Word.

God therefore fashioned its pinions and plumage,
He painted its most beautiful little wing.
He placed in its little throat a glorious singing note.
And said go forth and sing.

Not for the ears that listen
Not for the loudest shouts that ring,
Not for mens praise of thy glorious lays,
But merely oh bird Go sing.

Did it doubt? did it pine and falter.?
Did it furl its beautiful wing?
Because no one heard, did that wonderful bird,
Lose heart and refuse to sing.?

Way over the wild world speeding
Far over the mountain crest at its best,
Away and away to the end of the blessed day
To sing in god's own blessed wilderness.

And over the lone world watching,
Where never a step is stirred,
In the midnights flow, God's ear bends low,
For the song of His pilgrim bird."""""""""#4%

Penrod had now landed ashore as she stopped on the last verse. Something glistened in the gloom alongside the trees close by, the weeping willow sang low a good night song to a sad and bloody day, the moon rose red over the eastern hills and horizon, and the pale light falling upon Penrods face, revealed the tears there.. Was he wan wondering if his little sister would also be heard? would she ever be the happy one he longed to see her be, and her sisters too?

"Come said Jennie "These fish we have will feel a deal more friendly in the frying pan and as we need supper------- there----there goes the roll call. why was it delayed."?

"I guess the scouts just returned from the battle front. Now is our opportunity here" said Joice. "We'll let the supper go till later."

For at that very moment the bugle sounded as they landed ashore calling the child scouts to a grand review. This was done as fast as boy and girl scouts on horse or on foot fall into line. Of all the illustrious present, an almost formidable number were found without their insignias on the registers and now as they themselves stood in line but on foot, that is violet and her sisters and Penrod but facing them Jennie started to speak and her voice was most severe. Angelinia Atonburg lowered her sword, and Jennie Turner nearly tottered from her horse and perhaps would have fallen if not for the timely aid of two others who no doubt were especially at her side to help her now, there is so much charity amongst the child scouts.

"My dear friend Jennie Turner" asked Jennie vivian in a most troubled voice"Are you trying to decieve me.?"

"No"she answered I---I---" she had not time to finish when just then Emperor Vivian whose army was not in the battle rode up to his daughters and said;

"She is innocent and it is no wrong either.I am the guilty one."

"you my good father."said Jennie scarcely crediting her ears."You, oh that's it, then these new unregistered child scouts, are the child slaves or elder ones Penrod and we rescued in our raids."

"It was at my request and only that."Murmured another sweet voice.

"Ah then my dearest mother, that is understood, then you toiled for father and us. Then it is no blunder and we have nothing to be alarmed at"answered Jennie, she and her sisters being totally disarmed."I am not then in the least astonished, but tell me , pray you for the re-establishment of my faithful recruiting officer, Jennie Turner how started this famous smuggling of child slaves into the into the scout force."?

Then their mother smilingly said;

"My dearest daughters.It was the suggestion of you and your sisters which you must have forgotten."

"Yes,"said Jennie "but mother dear not without registeration.Our Government will be furious."

"I and "iss Angelinia Aronburg and Timothy Groveton can see to it they're all registered before midnight"said Jean Saunders, willing to appease the worry and anger of the vivian Girls over this unheard of blunder.

"o that can't be done"said jennie sharply."That'll have to be done to morrow.I would'nt have been sore but you must understand we sometimes do not know which gets into our troop as so many Glandelinian child scouts would try to get into upset our whole plan. We never allowed any one in unless they were first registered.We never heard of such a thing.Fifteen thousand new child slaves and not one of their names registered.Can any one explain that?"

"My dearest daughter, your love for Our Blessed Lord, and for the millions of poor unfortunate child slaves and my self and your Father is the only guilt here.None of the Child Scout leaders are responsible for this wrongdone without their knowledge by me. I didn't know though they should have been registered. You , made me the main main matron of the child scouts--a you said our camp is the Sanctuary of the rescued child slaves, and their only refuge and safty lies in for the elder ones to become scouts.You gave me the whole situation in my own hands."

"Then there was no blunder after all in one way"said Jennie, and she smilingly approved the action of her Father and Mother, and turning to Jennie Turner;

"The desires of my parents are my own will then and the will of my sisters.I didn't now the unregistered ones were child slaves but thought they were outsiders. outsiders.Take back your worthy books my good friend, you are still worthy of our confidence and your job is still retained therefore.Only you must remember now now to watch carefully everything that is done here after and register them if you see they are not registered."

And poor Jennie Turner did sure thank God and His Blessed Mother, and the intercession of the Princess's mother and father, for the fact that she didn't lose her precious job, for something she didn't do.

A little little after supper, when the eight sat and under the roof of the headquarters proch watching the moonbeams through the tops the wind had made in the crisping vines, Jennie and Catherine snuggled close to the Prince's Prince's shoulders, while their sisters stood as close as possible, Jennie with one small hand clasped in his brown one said ;

"Do you believe that to me it seems to be a very small world after all?"

"Why do you say."asked Penrod.

"Because"she went on giving her reason for so saying before he could request for it"Because only as Abbleannian people can fill it properly and form a righteous home for our Blessed Lord."

"And on the other hand"said Penrod"It is a sadly large world for Him to be all alone in sadly large. Glandelinia is not the only sinful one.In all other nations there are more people offend him than there are those who love him.We can blame them for this war too, for indirectly they are helpers in it."

"For one thing"said Juice "We do not make our fates, though some times it is given to us to do a deed that shapes our destinies, sometimes to say a word that helps to shape the destiny of all others.If the people of the world will sin on and on, and lose their souls, then it is their own sorrow.But imagine how many will lose their souls, and how many did who fall in battle in all the wars of the past and to come, and how many no doubt did amongst the Glandelinian armies. and yet they blame us for the war.....;...."

Penrod was sitting under the lower part of the proch roof, his riding cane in his hand, the fishing tackle overhead on the pegs his hands had fashioned for it, the rest of the Vivian Girl Princesses at his feet, and the little German child slave boy at their feet(the dust) For the little boy had"come to stay", never amongst the Glandelinians had come to search for him was nothing to fear by him now.He had found he was in a very strong encampment of numberless fierce christian boy and girlscouts, and not far off a main christian army. and And he was quite content to remain here even though his language was not their own.Having learned it violet, and her sisters could converse easily or read read just as good in Englisyh english but as to German that was new to them. As said before, it was moonrise time and the brow of the hill was flooded with the silvery glory of the hour. And among the laurael brakes along the bluff the soft o soughing of the wind was heard mingled with the murmur of the river among the gray stones. It didn't sound as if a war had been raging, and w one would o not thought it had there not been such a vast encampment, and such a number of wounded being brought in. As probably written before supper was over two of the Vivian Girls had been fishing as written before(they all are excellent fishergirls) and had returned to the headquarters hungry enough.Now Jennie dropped her little round fat chin into her palm and said to Penrod;

"We might have a story of some of your adventures don't you think. It's a good time for a conversation before we retire for the night."

"Then let's have some good conversation"said Penrod"You and your little sisters always do talk like little angels in Heaven."

"Never mind us about being angels we want a story"she insisted with a smile."I suppose you'd love nothing better for us eight to be in heaven right now!" and she winked at Juice.

"Do you want a story with a moral?"he said not paying any attention to her last words .

"Oh I do not mind."

"Only insisted violet,"don,t point the moral to night it might be too sharp. That sort of a story somehow always causes us to imagine we,re the minnows we bait with.We understand there is a dangerous hook behind them. Therefore Penrod dear, we're not fishes, and therefore don't bait for us.I'm up to all your tricks, and I'll not bite.Neither will our sisters. and angels as you say we are do not bite either.They're too good and loving."

Penrod grinned, and placed the cane beside him on the floor, Oh the handle resting against the pillar.

"You are getting saucy as an angel"said he"with your years."

"No just wise"said she smiling in return."It's all good accociation I assure you, too wise for us to be caught with minnows.Go on with your story."

Violet,and her sisters crept a trifle closer, Jennie's hand in east reach of his knee his hands were folded, his eyes fixed upon the silver flooded heights.

"I didn't finish my story about little Jennie so , was almost day dreaming----" said he"of that long wooded range of hills.I have seen many forested hills swept by the raging forest fires sometimes.No volcanic eruptions could show such grandeur.I cannot forget the time Jennie when she was with me as a little com panion and had confidence in me saw her first forest fire from general Manleys lines.Gingiore was disguised as Manley at the time."

The little Princesses, were hushed, their mood changed, no banter silenced at the story he started....o.o.o.o.o.eeeeee Thd they knew how that close communion that he too held with nature, the constant dreaming of the changing of witchery the silent teachings of many hills had awakened in his own young heart a feeling of nearness to Him and Her, who Made His dwelling in the mount, and rested in the clouds that veilded its face... "I was thinking"said the Prince"of Jennie back in the latter days before the battle at Cedermine.For I had noticed that the more I had seen of her she drew b nearer and nearer to me ,until the time came I couldn't resist any longer and caused her escape ade with the rest in the strange garb Angelinia Aro b Aronburg found her in.I don't know what the little sprite thin s now since she discovered who I really am. But of all my long standing experiences within the glandelinian encampments as Aeldefob it stands to you and your sisters more distinctly that I have seen more horrors of child slavery in that time than you ever have. Withering flowers could not explain their suffering.They appeared to me as if they were many sorts of flowers in all sorts of misery, and it surely was the truth that their condition was immeasureable.Truth however trite, is past all contradiction.I won,t tell you want I saw during my stay, for I understand from your natures you couldn,t stand to hear it.But I will confess, I have proof of it, I as Aeldefob, or other characters I had assumed have rescued and brought to the Christian lines free more child slaves, than I ever rescued during my angry raids.I have saved them from griefs and further worries, and seen to it for their safty that the elder child slaves learned and became scouts scouts. How many slaves I rescued only Our Dear Blessed Lord can tell. but their number was imm asureable, and Jennie was among the first on that time before the Cedermine Strife if not after.."22

Penrod paused to watch a changing light upon the laurel leaves above, then s steep(peep peep) then went on with his story.

The sorrows of the child slaves when in slavery are but the disaster provokers against the sinful foe of future times, their mountains of grief and suffering but the horrors of a war storm to destroy their masters .Yes I am sure they start their purpose, these dreadful child slave horrors form their part against Glandelinia take their place in the great mosiac of Glandelinias destiny. I had the truth brought plainly to me once, when seizing the advantage that Gerald Starring had gone off on a secret furlough I managed to disguise myself as him. Near general Manleys headquarters on the Eva St Claire Stream near Trinoque but far from the battlefield of Evangeline St Claire and before it occured,I call to mind a child slave encampment on a mountain side, high and beautiful, capped with green, and towering above the main Glandelinian camp nestled at its face.

Improvised Glandelinian child slave factories dotted the narrow valley stripe or strip through which the Cedermine Stream flowed bravely, straight from the sides of that hill At night when I sat by the stream the moon would seem to balance her silver bow upon its brow, and I had seen the clouds also come down to rest rest upon it and veil the scene in a sombre pall.. To me it was the grandest rise of ground if our christian armies could have secured possession if it, the enemy called it Imporia Ridge, and from its form it seemed to me the noblest of God's handiwork. I used to wonder sometimes as I sat there after the duties of the day I was forced to perfoem to prevent suspicion if that hill might not even reach His heaven, and fancy that the angels rested there that evening or in the evenings, and helped to light the stairs, or come and cheer the poor unfortunate tired out child slaves..Full half of my time while within the foe lines trying to plan a way to save jannie------it seemed to me I spent as a Glandelinian boy scout by the name of Seldefob, wading across the stream with the child slaves sometimes waist deep the in the water in, the stream that sang against the mountains bea base, watching the changeful changing wonders of it while I "overseered the toiling child slaves.I remembered how we went up and down a sort of gray path, straight and endless to our fancy out from base to summit, reminding m of the broad gray belts that girdled the great wheels of the factories machinery. Sometimes when the clouds would rest so Black as to blot the pathway from my sight, I used to fancy that it was Mt Sinai, and that that holy mountain was being blasphemed by the Glandelinians who used it for the camps of their child slaves. And the blacker was the cloud the stronger was my fancy that God was in it with Moses protesting against the child slave horror, for I had heard one Christian prisoner say that "God is en even dwells in the darkness." And I managed to get the child slaves to believe it with alll their hearts, and during my lis liesure hours I used to secretly go out and hold communion with Him at the foot of that great hill and I felt was a different boy when those communions ended.One day one od the child slaves who appeared to have been badly beaten by a Glandelinian overseer came into my own tent, fell groaning upon the bed, and signed desperately for me to come to her.I remembered that she had tried to speak to lay one hand upon my head for she knew I was a christian boy spy while with her other hand she pointed upward t and the mountain top.But before the hand could reach me she was dead in my own tent.Her little lips had breathed one word"Her" before god sealed them. S e she tried to say "God will reward you" and that uplifted silent finger was pointing me the road to Heaven.I remembered that I was glad the hand had pointed upward and I said to little jannie later when no Glandelinians were around"that little girl has gone into Heaven with God, and prophsied that I will be successful throughout the war in everything I do. However she was a loss to me, her girl her loss caused me grief which drove me almost to a different scene as grief grief too heavy for us christians will.That child had been murdered by the overseer beaten to death.That night, I crept into his room where he was asleep and paid him for it .I committed no murder, it was justified. After that I had to get out,so I caused little Jannie's strange escapade and went myself. To prevent myself being followed I burned the bridges across the stream.I felt like Adam when he turned his back on Eden for those child slaves had been good company to me, but in that camp they were no more.They were gone, gone forever from the Glandelinian army, safely lodged within the christian lines.I was not persued for the Glandelinians thought I had been captured when the slaves. and that the raiders had stabbed the overseer.As for me tearful and awed,I glanced upward at the beautiful inspiration of my early days there, and the clouds were over it from base to summit, such as I had never seen them before. I disguised myself anew and I journeyed on, over the mount,, and through the cloud.. since then I have learned that God does dwell in the darkness and every cloud that veils the hills of hope but hides his beaming face... I learned another lesson from that hill, a sad hill, for it soon became the scene of dreadful battle carnage for one may see the common bush afire with God in only one have eyes to see.I remained in another part of the Glandelinian army for a while hidden as a sea scout. I wished to visit for a time the scene of sorrow which had overwhelmed me at the death of that child slave a yarning with the same communion with that beautiful nature that I always love..The yearning within my heart could not be hushed.I thirsted for the old scenes as David thirsted for the water in the old Well of Jerusalem.My soul too was sick, my heart was severed with its loneliness, and I believed if I could see the old scene, feel again that sweet old meekness to my Maker I can retain the burden on my shoulders. I reached there after the frightful extensive battle of Headrick Junction or Cedermine. But when I reached the place the same scenes of the mountain was not there.There was the stream where I had waded, but how small and narrow, and half strangled with the filth and horror left by the battle. The child slave factories were no longer there, or what was left of them were charred timbers.The long road too was not there, and ruin and devastation was everywhere.My b a beautiful mountain where god and that little dying child slave met to go to Heaven was gone into desolation and death.Thousands were recovering the fallen of both sides. From the ruined towns of Collyer and Tandy, and Headrick Junction was stretched an enormously large christian hospital camp one that ran straight and broad to the top of another hill, also dotted with the ambulance huts, and shorn of all that god and nature gave it.Thank God and His Blessed Mother I didn't witness that horrible battle. They tell me no battle has yet reached its horror not even now. I could not hardly accept the heartless overthrow of such beautiful scenery. broken cannons injured wagons, bodies of dead horses, conflagrations raging, countless dead bodies in gray and lavender uniforms it was awful. I nailed a christian stretcher bearer going down to resume his place among the rescuers, he alone seemed a part of the old dream, and he knew was no delusion.

"Sir"I said"I ask your pardom but wasn't there a beautiful mountain over there on the further side of the stream.?"

The fellows ruddy face but broadened into a sarcastic grin.

"How sure"said he"The devil has destroyed what God made.See what a start He's got."

With that he pointed to the ruin and devastation, and bidding me to come again to see the old hill when the world was remade passed on gloomily to his toil. Then I stumbled on an old friend of Gingivres, and conversed with him about this thing.He was already an old man and he said;

"The hill is still there but because of the devastation wrought by the battle you cannot recognize it.Our christian armies captured it after bitter fighting a few days ago.It is said to be the bloodiest battle ever seen.But don't despise the hill"he continued god has had His use for it, and by His help we drove the enemy off of it and rescued many child slaves.It's purpose too was to fire your boyish soul with lofty aspirations.That purpose worked it's mission to your life fullfilled you did a good charity job on it.So it goes to give a lesson to two great contending armies, God's latest use for it."

"I never grieved for it again, scarce thought of it, untill we came to this quiet spot within the christian lines,, and now it seems my "Glandelinian" mountain has come to me again, and in the clouds that veil its face,I love to imagine that God waits as He waited for me on that mountain.He has a beautiful mission for me to fullfill, and which some day sisters dear, in the far or near future may mean to me and you, the happiest years of our whole lifetime."

That night while Penrod slept under the shades of the hills bordering Weeping Weeping willow run, Violet, and her sisters together lay sobbing on h their pillow.They had heard again the sounds of warning that they were going to have more grave sorrows. For half of the christian lines in this locality had been shattered by the battle though victorious and despite the raids, had scarcity of food provisions.In their own headquarters there was only fish in the larder and a dust of meal. How to retain the truth of their miseries from him was their greatest care.Jennie was the last to lay awake pondering trying to solve the riddle of a crust of bread for eight.She got up at last and tiptoed to his room. A sight of the peaceful boyish face, asleep upon the pillow, could always calm and comfort her.It calmed her now, so sweet and gentle, so full of Christ, it lay there in the moonlight, while the gaunt wof of hunger threatened. She stooped and left a kiss upon the quiet brow, then stole back softly to her bed. On se only she stopped, lifted the muslin drapery from the window, and glanced out upon the distant hills.No they were not visible clouds of smoke lay on them heavily.

She dropped the curtain, and after again saying her night prayers returned to bed whispering the while;

"God is in the cloud, smoke or vapor"and with the whisper fell asleep Knowing that all was well.....

Violet and her sisters had wished to do some duti s duties near the battle field the next morning, but the contest was so terrific that their own father positively forbade them to go near any of the action. As they would not disobey under anyconditions t is morning therefore with Penrod and a number of child scouts off duty they were out by the safer part of the stream fu fishing. Another another furious action of the battle(in the battle) had come, another horror had started. The Christian successes however were growing so fa t no fast indeed but for the loss es they were so fleeting might might almost cease to hope for victory. But all the christian soldiers showed a strong spirit, and a courage that was dangerous to the enemy. But as the Christian successes grew, waxed strong and so forth, the glandelinian armies failed. It was a forlorn hope. But during the efforts of their duties in the face of th the awful conflict another of the child scouts was shot and badly wounded. This time it was a girl, and a new comer too. The doctor said there was no hope for her recovery, but violet and her sisters sisters refused to see it. Adversity from the enemy, and the sorrows and frequent lonelinness of life had taught them strange strong lessons, lessons too hard for their young hearts indeed, but they had stood it. They went to where the child lay on the ground and told the doctor they would bring her to their headquarters to care for her. When they started off the doctor said;

"Do not cross that bridge. It leads to danger."

Violet answered;

"I shall not cross that bridge untill my foot is on it." She understood that some secret danger lay ahead. So when they were journeying through the woods with the wounded child scout, two of them carrying the stretcher, they were forced to stop for before them lay a deep gulch but narrow. They could easily leap it if they had nothing to carry, yet it was wide enough that two carrying the stretcher could have an accident.

"We will have to form a brig bridge across this chasm" said Penrod. "It is beyond crossing by you who are carrying the stretcher."

The little girls were silent for a moment---a great sadness was in their souls. Before a few days would pass they felt sure the wounded girl would be beyond all human aid. "Yes Penrod continued gazing meanwhile down into the chasm" we must bridge it before we can get across with the stretcher."

"Then Violet said;

"Penrod dear" said she "We don't need to go this way. We can follow this road. It would take too long to form a bridge."

"Aye" said he "I understand." but it may lead to danger and delay the journey? I don't want to expose myself too too much danger for if I am shot and killed you and your sisters would have to trod the road alone when I'm gone. And you surely do not deserve that sorrow."

She and her sisters remembered that saying all day--how he desired to live more than anything for them and their safty. It meant much told of many things, beautiful and sad, to their young hearts. All day the boy Princes words jingled sadly in their ears but making a sort of melody. They fitted themselves to the rippling of the river, hurrying down to the Aronburgs Run, and to the wind sighing among the large ceda s d cedars. At last they fitted thme themselves to rhyme and as they went on and struggled among the gray stones and laurel tangles, while two of them carried the stretcher Violet recalled a song she had once learned, but she couldn't sing now, though she thought how each person must name it for him or herself and fit it into the emptiness of their own life, bridge the chasms of sorrow, the gulches, the dangerous and deadly sinks for those who were following in their steps. A tiny blue vapor curled up somewhere from among the gray stones to whisper the river mists how some of the battle haze was coming their way. Their headquarters was in sight, and they had already made some headway headway with the wounded scout. As the others had gone down a slight rise of ground violet called to Penrod;

"We are the last to be coming down there, and meet you on the level. Don't the rest of you try to climb to me; the heights causes one to be dizzy."

She recovered her lunch canteen slung it over her shoulder and descended and soon followed the rest.

"One man" said Jeni Jennie trying trying to put up some joke to make the others feel more cheerful" A man demanded of me and my sisters if I and they didn't understand it was wrong to catch fish on Sunday."

"Yes" said Penrod" And what did you answer.

"I didn't answer I demanded a question too." I demanded of him if he didn't remember it was Friday instead of Sunday, and we needed it for our Friday dinner as we didn't eat meat. He said that it was all right for little children to eat He meat on Friday. I said I didn't care to eat He meat at all whatever he meant and then he told me I should have paid my poll tax. I demanded of him what that was, and he said He remembered that as beautiful as I am I remind him of an angel came down from Heaven but forgot to go to school first."

Penrod broke into a laugh so loud and so long that Violet and her sisters who did not feel like laughing much since the girlscout was wounded so seriously declared they didn't see any occassion for so much mirth, so he drew imself up with a sudden start, and offered to carried the other end of the stretcher saying that he should have been there at the first, but they wouldn't let him which was the case at the first time.

"As you're so good at the gun and knife you need your hands free" said Violet. "Suppose we're attacked and you couldn't drop the stretcher could you?"

"I could lay it down fast enough" he declared. I----I-----"

Something swift and heavy passed them with a sort of moaning sound, followed by a concussion that sent Penrod one way, Jennie and Joice another. The other little girls stood aghast--there are moments in life when words are words. This was one of the moments, and they had set the stretcher down under cover and stood behind trees waiting for another long lance to come. Penrod did not laugh he was one of those rare souls who understand when and when not to laugh. All he did was to try and locate with his eye where the lance had come from and to say quite soberly with his two pistols drawn" eTerra;"

"Yes confound those Glandelinians" snapped Jennie "Those rascals nearly got us all when we were on an errand of mercy. Shoot at rescuers even. I've half a mind to jump into the river and fight them single handed."

"Better not "declared Penrod soberly "I'm afraid the current is too trong for too strong for any of us to swim."

She paused on her way down to the water and glancing at the blue current steadily said;

"I don't know about that. I have always had the idea that if I or my sisters were tossed out into the water, even with stones tied to our feet as on one occassion and ropes tied around our hands and told to drown or swim that God would enable us to escape and swim. I used to hate swimming in that sort of cold water like a maddog, but I don't believe we would really perish unless we got caught in quicksand. Yet we often escaped that too. Anyhow we can reach out headquarters sooner by using our boat. It's here. Maybe that lance came by a short range fighter near the battle. I don't believe it was really aimed at us."

They soon were on board with the wounded child scout, who had not yet come to her senses.

"We will have to loo sharp now." said Penrod "I'm not so sure the boat will do to trust. Will you fetch the stretcher along."?

"No It will be too much for the boat. We'll call for stretcher bearers when we come nearer ourheadquarters."

They therefore sent the boat slowly down the stream. Joice stood erect to see where they were going, her long bobbed hair curled strangely about her head, arms bare, shoulders erect. Then it was seen that some one from the opposite shore had set out swimming then several more, and then more yet, beating the water with long swift strides, trying to overtake the boat. They had not seen these persons coming however, and when one of the men planted his feet upon the side of the light craft the thing went tossing and rocking like a cradle upon the still deep water. Violet who saw him lifted her rifle butt to beat him down for the men were gray, while the water slopped and slushed over the boats side with suggestive ferocity. The action of Violet aroused the rest, and as they all used clubbed rifles, and realizing that no univ uninvited passengers were allowed aboard midstream, the swimmers dropped into the water again, and contented with trying to follow alongside the boat in easy reach of it, but suddenly realizing the fact Jennie set the engines going full speed, and soon left the swimmers far behind. It however showed after all that Penrod was slightly mistaken that a good swimmer could swim the stream and it was well they gave good heed to it. They were soldiers of some sort they knew whether they were glandelinians or not. and perhaps it was only ignorant instinct that prompted the pursuit. The boat went so fast that it went slightly aground on a little island of willows, where there nevertheless was a snug nook. They decided to halt here for a few minutes and see if they couldn't bring the wounded girlscout back to consciousness. Here the plaintive pleading of the water was sounding in their ears. The sun still slanted far to the eastward, showing it was very early in the morning so they hoped there was means to saving the girls coutls life. By this time the boat was free again. The boat was going against the stream. A strong river breeze had sprung up and fanned their brow, filling their nostrils and throat. All the strong young lives of the Vivian Girls awakened to the pure clean gladness of nature. It was sogoodm so good, so good to live just to live in God's great sounding beautiful wilderm as wilderness for a time without being within the reach of the sounds of war for it could'nt be heard here. They felt the goodness, the sweet gladness of being in every thrub of their beautiful untarnished souls just spreading their wings to meet the angels that possessed them. Because of the war Because the war, life for the future, was a sad dreaded mystery to them, even a mystery they had not yet dared to look upon. For see it as they would, in any light they might, they felt sure that stretched before them would often be sad lonely paths, through shadows, over rough ways. Yet as the light boat passed onswiftly, through the shadows of the forest shattered river while the glimmer shadows of life hid in the gloom was born to them a faith, fresh and as fair as the nature that had mothered it, strong as the hills towering above the stream, that somehow sometime all would be well for them. The great king who fashioned all and watched it, from the mighty ills to continents flowers like mine, its little dusty out where the very fluffs bloom, would not forget his beautiful little creatures--but surely not at all, that time will soon come when despite all their sorrows and sufferings of the past they may laugh at an enemy who had strove its utmost to do them harm. The great glandelinia may howl, the flowers of chil childrens lives would bloom on forever under the eye of their Creator. The boat passed swiftly beyond the shallows into the stiller deeps. Those who did not operate the machine saw the morning was still very early. Jennie smiled slightly and made the boat go a little faster for their headquarters was in sight. Then when but half a hundred yards distance from the christian camps Violet doing the steering turned the boat about to make a nearer landing. There was a low, sloping clearing that appeared tempting. Violet wondered why no one before had found it. Then at the very moment when about to turn into her new found landing place, the boat grated heavily hit something sharply underneath the shadow pirthed water, and with a lurch went spinning into midstream again. Violet and her sisters understood that it had struck among the branches of a submerged tree. Jennie in her excitement had stopped the engine with the purpose to reverse, but then again came a man alongside the boat howling and screaming trying to get into the boat until Joice beat him off with her rifle butt.

"Down sir you who ever you are will you!" she shouted as the bounching bouncing boat took in gallons of water. "Let go of the boat sir. Stop----ch." There was a splash and she went into the water just as her rifl butt descended upon the scoundrels head. Penrod was throwing off his coat in haste as Joice felt the cold clear mountain current close about her. But she as a good swimmer and she ever shore-ward crying to Penrod. "don't do it. I can swim any river. I'll be the first to leap land ashore. Hurry get the boat ashore."

Dancing down the stream Penrod saw that it was sure and said "Blessed be God" most fervently. She come up as the boat came in alongside, laughing, and reaching for the hand he held out said;

"I can swim. Needn't worry about me."

They finally got the wounded girlscout into the headquarters. Violet and her sisters understood there was a sermon in the exploit. Before Breakfast, while they had the wounded child scout placed in Jennie's bed, when the battle battle mists lay over the hills, Violet and her sisters sat at the morning meal silent, but glad, waiting for the sermon. After a long pause, so long indeed that they thought he had gone to sleep while eating, he said softly, slowly earnestly as though he had been thinking upon it for a long long time;

"It comes often so whole nations are tossed into the raging seas of life, hurled overboard as to say. For all it is either sink or swim. Those who will among nations may swim, and they who will not must therefore go down. I doubt if any go down who are worth the lowering of a boat. That one particular is Glandelinia."

Then after a moments silence he placed his hand on Joice's dear little head and said;

"I am glad you and your sisters are such good swimmers. I didn't know that as no one told me. We always must go through the effort no matter how deep the water. We are always strongd stronger for the effort. And if one goes down in the stream it is better to drown feeling that one has tried at all events. Remember that. It is worth our lives to be good as swimmers."

But no e now a shadow lay upon this house. A sombre thing that hovered ever near, and still nearer, even gloomier and more harder to face. For let it fall in any guise, at any hour it may it never finds us ready for its coming; that old, old, old, shadow----------deqth death..... The glad good hours at or upon the rivers side were ended, the tramps through the woods, the long in uninterrupted days of pleasant comradeship, the evenings spent in splendid interchange of thought, lessons, learned, chasms bridges by gentle council and wise warnings, all were done with now. The loom of life had slackened, the duty was done the time had come when the Creators voice should bid "come". Violet and her sisters felt miserable, Penrod was as silent as the grave. The little girls had hung upon his every word, eager to catch each crumb of time left left them. The beautiful toil that made their thrilling so tof living was forgotten, every thought was given to the mortally wounded little girlscout, whom they had brought down the river. There was no saving her. And if violet and her sisters thought sadly of her earthly deeds or needs it was with a feeling that the ravens were onve fed once fed, and ceased to worry. Their own strength was so small too, they sometimes fancied there would be no need of food for them too after a little while. Their own steps faltered, their faces paled before the shadow thr atening overhead, and feeling how fast their strength was going, another terror had seized them and their frightened inward cry had gone up to God;

"Don't if thou will let her die. Oh please dear God don't let the little girl die. You must see we love her don't let her die to satisfy Thy vengeance Thy foes.. Spare her if you will Please."

At about nine in the morning the wounded girl had recovered consciousness, and seeing who had brought her here called violet and her sisters to her, and while they Knelt on beside her bed their pour faces tear stained she said;

"I am so sorry we took people lives for the sake of it there is no hope for me. We have surely been always good children, have old children, dear Princess."

Jennie bent her head, and kissed the hand of the wounded child laying partly side of the covers, and said;

"We are better than good chums" said she--"have If chums and we have always loved each other."

The listless fingers of the wounded child closed upon her own while she looked at Jennie's sisters and Penrod "I don't know what you and your sisters and good brother will do without me" said she softly, most tenderly.

"Oh we'll do what we can" Jennie laughed, chocking meanwhile with a sob "We will do something."

"When I get to Heaven to day" said the wounded child "I'll plead to the blessed Mother and Her Son to spare you from ever such a scene as this among yourselves."

Then violet and her sisters went outside to some remote place, and wept and prayed for help, for better light, being careful that their sobs might not reach the dying child scouts ears and so cause her going to be sad also. They felt in every girl and boy about they had as though there were no other humen soul--so near and dear were they all to each other. Once they had prayed to God to spare the child scouts as many as possible. Yet for even a few was the parting just as hard as if one was their brother sister, or parent, so much charity the vivian Girls have, the need of them as great as when a smaller child each one of them had leaned upon their own loving father. Life for them grew sombre now, the great solemnity of that foreshadowed sorrow and loneliness swooped down upon them, and yet they prayed and prayed. In all the world violet and her sisters had often seen themselves stand alone seperated from each other, weary sorrowful and grief stricken children, almost done, almost without hope loss of love, loss of happiness, upon the very threshold of destruction and prisoners in the hands of the foe. It was getting to be a serious menance to violet and her sisters of the loss of girlscouts lately and they decided that they would not put up with it much longer. Violet and her sisters lost patience over the affair believing the glandelinians were getting getting more and more heartless and furious and that they themselves would decide to prevent this in the future. The wounded girlscout told violet and her sisters that she really had not been shot, but that during the time she was doing her duty there had been a terrific crash, that she had been hurled into space as it seemed, felt agonizing pain beyond tolerating, and then lost her sis senses.. violet and her sisters had felt strangely anxious all the time that they had sent or allowed the child scout troop to go forward to the usual duties during the battle while they themselves at the command of the generals had remained in a safer place, and early that morning they and Penrod had stopped at the army camp church to entreat our dear Lord and blessed mother to watch watch over the child scouts. You therefore can imagine their wall nigh despair when this comparatively short space of time afterwards, the news of the terrible devastation of a part of the christian lines a little forward of the dutiful child scouts, was announced by military child scout and their anguish untill they knew that their bright beautiful girlscout lu lieutenant though badly injured was still living. Violet, and her sisters with Penrod had in the face of all danger hurried to the scene of disaster as soon as they had heard the news, and found that both her companions a boy and a girl had been shot to death, but the poor little butterfly of a girl was still living though with a frightfully shattered shoulder, and such bad injuries to her face that it was said by the doctor that if she did live she might remain blind and terribly disfigured. It had been their own efforts and their prayers that had made her regain consciousness. When ever they themselves had ever been wounded violet and her sisters had always been wonderfully patient sometimes even when it happened they would suffer dreadful misery for weeks, and twice Jennie herself had been blind and in utter darkness but when it comes to somebody else suffering they cannot hardly bear it. They were always sweet tempered and more thoughtful of others, than selfish persons are only thoughtful of themselves. Several times if not of tener Jennie herself had had swhips slash across her face as to tear her cheeks and to cause the danger of leaving scars which could have disfigured her and mar her beauty but miraculously because of her goodness and charity for others God had spared her that cross. And it was the same with this wounded girl scout. She thought only of violet and her sisters, and when she had regained her senses almost her first words had been. "God will punish the glandelinians not for what is done to me but what has and will be done to the poor Vivian girl darlings of the nation. Yet the Vivian girls were so considerate for others that for many other things God had filled their souls with such perfect joy that all the troubles and griefs of the very world could not haral, ruffle their calm and perfect happiness, and always when something wrong went wrong God always restored their normal situations again as rapidly as their grief has come.

You see girlscout was willing to live too if that would help the poor Vivian Girl Princesson. But she understood she was going to understood she had received a friend, which only a tremendous miracle could save her of. Later that morning violet who had entered the sick room heard her conversing with a priest of of that fast approaching hour when she must go.

"Our Dear Blessed Lord is our God, and will be our guide even unto death" said she. Violet stopped a tumbler in her hand where she had mixed the girlscouts medicine.

"Comrade" said she "How do you manage to understand these things. Did you see a vision?"

"No. What have you in your hand little Princess" said the girlscout.

"Your medicine."

"What is it made of? How do you know it helps me when I'm mortally wounded,"?

"Because" said the Princess the doctor mixed it. You take it on his word."

"And so I'll take my Blessed Lord" said she "just on His word."

Violet and her sisters were the same boys and yet oh what strength to their poor weakness was that brave dying girlscout who seemed to hover on that earthly shore for that sole sacred purpose of helping her and her sisters.

"I could stay with you if God willed it" she told her as she recieved the medicine "I know you need all of your dear boy and girlscouts."

"And I would keep you too if God willed it" said violet "and so would my sisters. "But His Will is His, and His will be done. But What can we do, what could we do." Inwardly she prayed "Open the Way for me and my sisters Dearest Lord; and if it is Not Thy Will to leave her Here then Thine be done, but oh if it be Thy will show us a way to prevent our child scout hosts from being shot down in the future. It seems as if the Glandelinians get the best of You for every child scout of our side shot to death, and we don't like that. But if it is Thy will, then Thy Will be done."

The wounded child scout stroked the head she leaned against her knee pushed the burnished golden waves from the childish brow and said;

"My Dearest Blessed Lord has spared me many days nevertheless to labor for our beautiful cause. But now He Calls me hence. Already I can hear the river flowing hard by the City of the Saints and His Blessed Mother."

She listened silently it was a voice from the beyond, and not a voice from earth nor burdened with an earthly message. "Sometimes" the voice went on "It is given us all to do a great work, in God's world. It was also given to me, but often, have fancied since our lives have been put together in comradeship in this wilderness war, since I have come to know you and your sisters well and the deep soundings of your beautiful little souls, I have fancied that to some it is given Princess to do many great deeds for Him. sometime or something tells me that it has been given to you and your sisters. In the silent watches of the night it has come to me that Our Blessed Lord has need of you and your dearest sisters, and if it be so He will surely call, and you will not mistake the voice for he will converse as he once conversed to Samuel. I indeed understand you surely would answer "Here we are Save our nation if Thou wilt--and if the way of your stirring military duties duties for God be lonely, duty hard, or dire dangers threaten, I always can say you and your sisters will fear not, as you didn't fear in the past, nor did you or would you ever turn aside. You have girded your harness on your shoulders and have fixed your eyes upon the gliding stars. You have never stopped though your feet were weary. Therefore God will bless your lives and preserve you forever more."

The girlscout paused, sighed, and was silent. The late morning wind breathed among the sun cast shadows, the battle smoke mists lay heavy through the air like a curtain, and when violet, and her sisters looped into the girlscouts face lo----she---was---dead----...

The same encampments stood in the long foothills of Weeping Willow Run valley. The clouds from battle made fires crept down to hide the face of the beautiful hills, and the unhappy little Vivian girl Princesses, and Penrod turned to face the strange day darkness. The faint desolation and sorrows brought brought on by the tremendous war had bitten at them frequently, but the biting did not annoy or torment them now. They would invite a wolf into their headquarters before they would invite a unrepentant Glandelinian soldier soldier. No empty house was never as empty as their own hearts wherein dwelt only, sad memories mem ories. Yet their own experiences had left them many sad and yet good xperiences many good and well learned lessons, and many precious pre cepts. After this wilderness scene of encampment life could be no more a home to them, yet there were many to whom they could turn for help. And they decided decided to stop this loss of their best friends. They would not any more let ant any of the child scouts go too near the dangerous battle lines. In the midst of the loud battles roar they buried her in her coffin only preparatory for the proper burial, and then violet and her sisters went to where the child scouts were still in their duties too near the battle lines and ordered their withdrawal for their safety sake. The battle went on as usual that day, the enemy "whipped" the Christian lines so easily, as a child snips a man with his finger. That night Violet and her sisters had a dream, and to their surprise and great relief God Spoke to them.

"You and your sisters have prayed for many successes, and I allowed you more than you prayed for. You often begged that few child scouts should have to be lost to you. you requested that your child scouts might die before their reasons failed, and at the last they always spoke your names. You always prayed that your best friends might not be grasped from you, and yesterday you kissed em your boyscout friends bow for the last time, you a angel on earth and your sisters too. I granted every wish, answered every prayer you offered. You are unusually grateful, and still you desire to serve your country, and desire to see the overcoming of Glandelinia who vexes Me with Her sinfulness and rapine and murders. They have persecut persecuted you and your sisters beyond My own Endurance Infinite Being though I am. Glandelinia Beware for I am God. And yet Oh little angels upon earth, you may go through many terrible experiences yet, but never can Glandelinia harm you, body or soul. My angels possessing you will never leave you will not let harm come to you, will not leave you and your sisters thus to to through the dangers alone. As much as possible remain close to your brother Penrod. I have sent him to you as a visible guardian angel. I love you and have need of you on earth. You must live longer than anybody ever lived before and yet stay children. It is My will. come continue as you do. Time will come and you will never regret your past fierce sorrows for what the far future will bring. Come My Temple doors are Open Open. I promise you Glandelinia in time will beg your forgiveness on her bended knees. She'll be at your Mercy. Then I'll strike her."

She awoke and her sisters too with the morning. comforted with a great purpose. our perhaps the purpose had been born, really born from their earlier experiences or when they were imprisoned amongst the Glandelinians so often. The battle went on again to day. They watched it at a far distance. The battle did not seem to favorable to the christian lines on this dreadful morning. It seemed as if the enemy was holding his own. who ever was doing most of the defending they couldn't tell but nevertheless it was still a much fierce conflict than the day before. The Child Scouts were surprised this morning by not recieving an order to go forth to do duty. finally believing violet and her sisters had forgotten to give the order Jennie Turner and Angelinia Aronbing the two girlscout chieftians rode up and met Penrod who was sitting on his horse watching the battl battle. They questioned him and ask they asked he suddenly had a black look on his face.

"IT CAN' "It can't be helped" he said suddenly. "No they did not forget the order. Nobody is going into any danger zone to day. he spoke to Father about it and he told us to positively forbid any child scouts going near the danger line. Father doesn't allow us to go near such a territory, and we don't understand why we should send you either. Here's joe Greene gone. Nell Mandley died died in our headquarters yesterday morning, and we have fourty others dead to our credit. so nobody is going into the danger zone to day."

"but the Christian Generals need our warning signals and----"

"what's the matter with the general Signal Corps" said Penrod bitterly. "Are we to be in their place. Let them do the work. We'll cover any danger threatening but none of you are going into the danger territory and that is all there is to that. It's my law and I SETIT DOWN."

However the two did go off feeling greatly relieved at that. It had stung them two high girlscout leaders pretty bad to see fourty of their girlscouts go to their deaths the day before, and therefore it was a relief to discover no one was to go out to day. Besides it was supposed to be the place of the signal Corps to accomplish such things. In the first place violet and her sisters would never have sent any one out there had they realized the peril of it. It was never their intention of sending children to their deaths, and they even didn did not know they were in a zone of danger in the first place. Penrod was in advance, and Violet and her sisters were on a higher plane of ground a little further to the rear. Finally he rode to them.

They had seen the short interview between him and the two girlscout generals, and as soon as he rode up Jolie said;

"What did they wish Penrod dear?"

"They thought we made a mistake when we didn't order them out on duty."

"Did you tell them the circumstances?"

"I certainly did. They'll all remain safely in camp to day. They are not to expose themselves. In a real fight at close quarters they always come out without a loss, but when shot at by Glandelinian snipers, it's different. I might to make fourty Glandelinians pay up for those fourty children. I suggested it to Father but he didn't believe it wise. Yet ain't fourty child scouts worth more than fourty child murderers.?"

"They are, but He must understand best. but if we could only capture the snipers, and some of those who stormed us in that hotel we'd show them something pretty hot."

"Burning at the stake perhaps."

"I wouldn't waste a match on those scoundrels"said Violet with a sniff."They're not even worth that.Even the Eternal punishment is too good for them so some day-but never mind.We all have our sufferings now, but some day will come---"

"When we'll have the last laugh"grinned Penrod.

"And a good one"suggested Jennie."We'll always cry, weep and suffer now, but when the time comes and Glandelinia begs for a retrive from the war on her bended knee----"

"She'll not get it."said Angeline"untill she comes to our own proposition."

They watched the battle through their field glasses.They were elated over the generalship of Charles Brown, and Roswell Buster Johnston.They could not see the armies under Blain Nightlinger or Nero they were too far off, but had recieved a wireless report, that their assailaing waves were like the storm waves of the sea beating against a foundering ship, and the ship was the Glandelinian forces opposed to them, and it certainly payed to have good Generals and to treat them good.What made general Charles Brown fight so desperately good was what Jennie had once said to him"I love you." They watched the raging fury of Roswell Busters line of artillery.Sometimes they were so active that they couldn't see the guns, nor his line of battle either.They wondered what was happenig happening. But the fact was the enemy in counter charging never reached his guns nor his first line of trenches. It was a mad forlorn hope.Many of the survivors though they had to go at it again and again, thought their generals were crazy or a drunk. They were forced forward to do the impossible.The Christians would only rush them, wear tear down one wave of Glandelinians, over turn the other, crush the one in the rear and sent them flying, and when the glandelinians rallied, and returned to the assault with reinforcing numbers the christian soldiery would do the same thing all over again.Some of the under generals sent a messenger to General Josipine Jensin that it was impossible to hold against the christians under Oswell Roswell Buster Johnston and Charles Brown and Hansonia but that General had the believe "there is no such thing as Can't where there is a will there is a way. If you don't succeed, try try again. The battle raged fearfully. The losses in the two days battle were nearly half as big as at Cedermine.

General Aronburg Federal was appealed to by General Leonia Picknell for reinforcements, but the main general sent the report that General Stanlilas needed all the men he could retain as Blain Nightlinger, Hansonia and Nero were storming his position, and would not desist in the assault even though the enemy soldiers clung to the position as if they were an army of leeches. For both sides it was a matter of endurance.So fierce was the conflict, and so exciting the d in that Violet and her sisters would have rode closer to the scene, but Penrod wouldn't let them.He understood the danger, and wouldn't let them go through any chances as little Nell did, and who paid sadly for her life for it.

The Glandelinian during a battle were no respector of persons.They would just as soon shoot our Dear blessed Lord down if they had the chance.They were were that wicked and sinful. But in this battle most of the time the enemy were not on the offensive. Violet and her sisters even with the best effort of their searching with their field glasses never saw a Glandelinian come into sight sight never saw a particle of the christian lines even so much as stop in its advance. Violet, and her sisters could not understand how these two two christian generals could do all this against the Glandelinians, while recently they heard that elsewhere General Adeldegard Michaelana was victorious and hurling assault upon assault with great success. But then everybody could not wine contest at all points at once.Here or there, a general can be better than his adversary.The adversaries of against Roswell Buster Johnston and Charles Brown were not often all probably such good military leaders. And those contending against Adeldegard were probabl, not so good as he was. Military leadership always depends on the outcome of a conflict.The better one is in his military career the more sure he is to win and violet and her sisters understood that.Yet so grand was the scene that at times they were tempted to go into it any now but then they held back as they surely would not do anything foolish, or that they would be sorry for afterwards.A If anything happened to any one of them, it would be the happiness happiest moment of any of the glandelinian generals, and they were determined to deny the Glandelinian generals of that sinful happiness. Therefore they remained there they were, within sight of the titanic fight but too far off to be even reached by a long range Glandelinian Glandelinian cannon.When ever the smoke did all things out of sight they would wait untill it cleared and then use their field glasses again. They left all their generals do the commanding, and gave Roswell Buster Johnston plent, of credit for what they were doing..... .2.2.2.2.22

Roswell Buster Johnston gave his adversary a hot reception slaughtering every Glandelinians that came within rangeof his guns. General Phillimannia was killed in trying to scale Roswells works with his men and nearly two quarters of his men went down..... Hansonia steadily reinforced Roswell and Epson Epson who inflicted cruel losses upon the enemy. Three time McWhirther and Smash-in-the-head threw three threw big columns of their commands to the assault and three times they were replused with their columns mangled and bleeding.

However Roswell and Epson had a great time to hold off the desperate assailants. Though suffering three bloody repulses they only went at it again and again and in full force this time. Hundreds of thousands were mowed down but the attaci attack continued with unabated fury untill no on both sides suffering woeful losses. General Rocks two divisions of Glandelinians were annihilated and scores of his officers were down while McpWihirt hers army was badly smitten having half od of he numbers killed wounded or prisoners. Smash-in-thehead had four times tried to turn general Roswell Buster Johnstons lr left flank but the flankers had been cut to pieces and put to rout. Though a score of bloody onslaughts had been made McWhirther and Smash-in-the-head were unsuccessful and begged Federal to send enough men to overwhelm their enemies. At the same time that he sent an army to turn Federals right, Hansonia sent general Canconia and Barger to make a determined adfance upon Ambrose Fuller and crush him if possible. By noon the bloody battle was in full away the battle line extending for over fourty eight miles miles in varied formations. AGAIN Roswell and Epsom had been successful, Smashi-in-the-head and McWhirther having been driven back with more frightful loxx loss than before their second line of works having been taken by storm in which wi six hundred thousand fell in that signi single onslaught.

But strange as it was to say, Adele-de-garde still held his position and it seemed as if he could not be driven out by any means or by any numbers whatever.

This great Glandelinian had worked frightful havoc upon his assailants mowing down as many columns as would get withihin range of the terrible deadly guns. All that bloody morning onslaughts had been made against Adele-de-gardes army. General Shanner had annihilated Flynns army during the persistent assaults made against his masonic lines but Hairbreadth Harry had arived to Flynns aid and in a sweeping counter charge crushed Mullanes and Felex Spruders armies of christians t rolling the survivors up with frightful losses Flynn Spruder and Mullane being killed.

Fight times that morning Adele-de-garde had been successful rolling up the assaulting columns with woeful losses. Hansonia saw that the situation was kind of peel peculiar and funny. How was it, that he could wtwo times in succession smash the right grand divisions of Smash-in-the-heads army and those under McWhirther and Break-in-the-neojk and Accountants while Adele-de-garde crushed all who assailaed him.

He determined t to i find cut the reason. He ordered genera' Phillinia to storm Federals right on the front to hol; to help in the turning movement which the flankers were advancing to make and then asked ..iolet and her sisters to go and see what was wrong; about Adele-de-gardes positions. This dangerous duty made their hearts almost leap into their mouths but as Evans and a force of thre million cave rly men were to go with them besides the infantry the accepted the dangerous explcit. After bidding their best friends a tearful hoc good bye Violet and her ..sisters started cut with the force of christiansled by General John Evans and ..ance. Violet carried the flag with the designs of the Sacred Heard Heart on it while Joice carried the emblem of a cricifix. Jennieand two other of her sisters tore the emblem of the I mmaculate Conception and Angeline a banner with the designs of christian soldiers marching led by angels while evans carried the national flag. For a while they rode on slowly then violet summoning all her ccurage whispered something to her sisters and then to the surprise of evans the other officers drew their sabres and cried;"Charge boys charge. On to victor . Adele -de-garde must be worsted."

Violet and her sisters had at this moment seen the cause and had whispered first to her sisters and they to the officers. Adele-degardes position was in the shape of a large hook which encompassed all the christian soldiers with destruction all who attacked it. Their advance had been discovered as violt and her sisters realized and the only way for the cavarly to save themselves from destruction was to make a dashing charge in full array. All the Angelinian troopers drew their gleaming sabres and charged cn at a thunderous gallop. A sitnering of fire of cannon and musketry was poured upon them .mountains of horses ... were being cown mangled and bleeding. General evans horse had been brought down by a shell, and so had Nances both being wounded their arms chest being lara lacarated. The surviving cavarly men continued on at a breakneck gallop the horses panting and nieghing and the men yelling like demons. In a few minutes they reached the hoof hook of Adele-degardes lins and pou poured over it a vertible torrent of men and horses and all along Adele-degardes aline there was a withering flash of musketryand nearly ten thousand men and a thousand horses went down, but the survivors driven to frenzy plied their da sabres against the hedge of bayonets, many thousands of olandelinians being cut down or trampled under the hoofs of the horses.

Many of the olandelinians in their desperate fury fairly ripped the cavarly horses open in order to throw their riders. Men were cut shot or trampled down in whole platoons the slaughter among the .landelinians being terrific. General He nry had been brought down by a frenzy stricken olandelindan with a sabre gash on his arm his horse having been killed by a score of bullets while general Angelo Callio suffered from a lacerated leg hip arm and abdomen. Adele-de-gardes army was compelled t o abandon the works the newlyharived christian infantry pressing on in the face of a storming musketry fire. John evans through the discovery of the vivian girls had won the fearful charge but at an awf l cost over seventy five thousand of the cavarly force having been killed while one hundred thousand were wounded. However Adele-degarde was noy not ready to give u up the struggle as yet and still retaining the greater number of his guns recieved the assault of the infantry with a tren tremendous storm of grape and canister and musketry. The sur viving cavarly forces had continued to move forward when the reserves of the enemy arose and poured into the assaulting columns a most destructive fire, causing the ca cavarly force to waver and then to fall back laving their twenty thousand more dead and wounded indiscriminately mingled lying among the the works the gallant general evans among the wounded. However the infantry had continued to press on carrying all beflre them irreparably breaking Adele-de-gardes army to pieces and capturing all his artillery and thousands of prisoners sixteen general general officers among them being general auction.The attack and defense was equally obst inate and the losses on both sides heavt heavy. Major general Georgian on whom the attack fell first had held his ground steadily for four hours but when the whi whole of Adele-de-gardes army was routed he legn to weaken and the christians rushed on checking the advance of manitous army and forcing it back in confusion. Seing the situation Adele-degarde tried to extnd his unequaled and unengaged left so as to outflank vanisters right. The movement was carried cut with utmost precis ion and was sweeping steadily on in the face of a terrible musketry fire under which e Every christian troop poured in a fire so rapid that in five minutes Emery's troops had exhausted their ammunition but the olandelinland suddenly assailed on thf three sides rushed out of the infilade confusedly in all directions intnt to only escape from the galling fire poured upon them. Tward one oclock in the afternoon for a two hours march the olandelinian flankers came upon the rear of Federals right wing and stick it a terrible blow. Here one of the terriblest parts of the batle raged. For a time federals right wing under Alexander after a frightful slaughter lasting for four hours was in panic having been thrown into confusion by the irres tible pressure of the at ack. Of the attack. During the heg height of the fright ful carnage general Alexander managed to rally a part of his command and the dvancing christians were met with a murderous storm of grape and canister shot. However things were going hard for Alexander, for he f found found cut from the signal corps that he was assailed on the fr front as well as by a heavy force of Abbieanbians, Angelinians and Abyssinkilians on the rear. Though between two urderous fires Alexander was not the one to give up so easily and did not either and it was his bravery that finally won the battle for Federal.

He had ten thousand cannon which had not been used yet, and fi ve thousand of these within an hour were concentrated upon the assailants in the rear the dreadful est carnage ever seen among their ranks soon checking their advance. For a time the other five thousand guns could not check the christians along his front as too any were attac ing there. The more the olandelinians mowed down the more only came on the assault continueing with the utmost desperation. The destructive artillery rtillery had withered four divisions of the Angelinians before they were finally captured and turned upon the olandelinians. A second time Alexanders men were in confusion but as the assailants in the rear had been rolled up from the field the other five thousand guns were massed upon those attacking in front added by reinforcements. All the time for an hour the Olandelinians and eve n until l even ing held their ground again t overwhelming numbers fighting with great stubbornes . Finally suffering to great a loss, facing a fire of ten thousand cannon and unable to bear the pressure of the cowder charges any longer the Angelinians to Alexanders relief h gave up the attack and fell back in confusion.

Tward three oak oclock Concinia and Darger had reached the armies under mbrose E Fuller who had fallen back in on vivian. A few minutes after the charge of the Convcentinians had been at its worse Vilet and her sisters who had been frantically waving their ga flags were guarded by hundreds of Angelinians who four furiously fought off every attempt of the enemy to cut the little girls to pieces. It was only when the olandelinians under Adele-deardo had been defeated dd the Angelinians succeed in saving the Vivian girls and carry them to safety.

Ambrose Fuller engaged Canconia for four hours and defeated his assailants with the loss of Canconia who was killed and Darger badly wounded.

CHAPTER ... 8 ... THE FURY OF THE ONSLAUGHTS IN WH: IN WHICH ADELE) DE-GADE'S ARMY HAD TO FACE.....

General Adele-degarde after his defeat realized that he was hard pressed by furio s enemies. The recent furious onslaught of the christians had extended ove two hundred ninty acres at the start with the cost of 335,562 lives, while the other and more furious onslaughts covering only 160,000 acres made a death list of 656,000 all these being among the christians. The great Aronburg and Kuaffmann and Nicholtoe onslaughts resembledsome of the christian charges at Vivianis sweeping over 327,898 acres and caused the deaths of over seven hundred fourteen, one hundred twenty seven olandelinians and christians together causing also an annual in stocks of horses, wagon trains and thousands of guns. Adele-degardes whole loss was over one million seven hundred thousand in wounded and seven hundred five thousand six hundred eighty nine in killed, the christians having lost over one mi llion slain and two million wounded.

The advancing victorious christian army was now advancing and sweeping over the whiwhole region soun south of Weeping Willow Run. Indeed approaching upon general Adele9de-garde were literall armies of Concenidians,, Abbieanbians, Tripoligenlians Abyssinkilians, and Angelinians which had taken hold of every redoubt of the ... artillery and can on f fire of fourteen hours.

The grass, ground litter, and young tr trees had been cut to pieces by the storm of canister and minnies which had also madevhickory brooms of millions of tres..... General Adele9d Adele-degarde really did not know what to do and heartily wished that general Tamrline was with him but wishing could not f bring him. He did not even know which way to bring his hard pressed army. The victorious Angelinian armies were approaching nearer and nearer every min te, large masses of the olandelinians at timesfi h fighting the advancing christians with bayonets clubbed muskets, pistol butts or pikes, the olandelinian soldiers fighting with the fury of desperatic.If there is nay harder or more dia agreeablework than fighting an army frenzied with impending success, then I'd like to know what it is.The heavy pressure of the advancing columns, the terrific ravaging fire, the curtian of powder smoke, the exhaustingphysical effort, constnt untill some small mass of christians was checked, for there seme seemed never men enough to relay of make the expsience anything but an attractive one.

It is not exceptional for soldiers to go for nearly a whole day against the assault ing columns without rest, luckily if they got food and water while at work.

Adele-de-gardes men had stayed at their work for nearly a day without resting or sitting down to a mal untill reinforcements came.. The whole of Adele-de-gardes army had fought and repelled thelast raging onslaughts in vain, as they had to flee before the greatest onsets ever seen in this part of the war stricken country deplite the frantic efforts of their commanders.. .... In his retreat for a time Adele-de-gards had been running deper and f deeper into the danger. Lost in thelalfblazing woods, with the enemy pressing hard from two sides he felt helpless indeed. However tward night fall general Phellinia Tamerline came to Adele-de gardes aid.

CHAPTER TW... 9

T HE STORMING WAVES OF THE ONSLAUGHT! THE WORST OF THE BATTLE AND THE RESULT! THE TERRIFIC VOLCANO OF FLAME AND DIN FROM TER IFIC AIR PIERCING EXPLOSIONS.....

As he arived Thomas Phellinia Tamerline saw the retreating armies under general Adele-degarde,; and saw the immense waves of men come rushing on tward Adele-degardes confused masses, and in a few minutes while wicknellian , omas Fera Federall shoemannie were rallying Adele-de-gardes army Tamerline began a scathing onslaught on the advancing christian lines and opened a furious artillery fire of parks of guns of heavy calibreand machine guns of all sizes and numbered by the thu thousand.

Pounded by the terrible Glandelinian guns and compelled to sustain the terrific pressure of the massive Glandelinian attack part of the christian columns under Kauffmann was smashed to pieces, and gave way but the main line held held firm and gave the graycoats a fierce reception. The most terrific firing ever heard broke out along general Aronburgs lines, but the Glandelinians despite their galing losses fairly drove in at the christians in monsterous m waves of men in wedge formation, the struggle now becomming very bitter, and everything being hidden in a sea of smoke.....

General May driving with h a regiment of artillery which were soon concentrated upon the attacking Glandelinians the gunners hammering away as fast as they could increasing the terrible sea of destuction far and wide and making more apnall iHgrible nowlmesthe din of the battle and the slaughter being heartrending general Icheltoe hearing the tremendous firing, and realizing that Tamerline had come to Adele-de-grdes aid and was seding sweeping onslaughts against the christian lines, s send strick orders to general Aronburg tohold his ground at all costsand q quickly brought his forces to Kauffmanns aid the battle again being in full sway after another lull of bout two hours.

Being reinforced steadily themselves the Glande inians had finally pressed forward assailing the christian lines with all the fury they could muser.. General urands colu ns which had assaulted Kauffmanns right in all their force succeeded in making a mad demonstration to turn this wing. Here the conflict was terrific.

Four timesthe main parts of these opposing forces came together into terrific collisions whole divisions of purple coats and graycoats being crushed smashed or q annihilated. Te furious onslaught of the enemy crushed many divisions of Kauffmanns Kauffmanns army the scene being again like a hell of destruction the assailants rushing forward so furiously amid the shrieking roar of the death dealing shells that Kauffmanns lines was thrown into confusion the force of the enemy's attack having become more and more violent and increasing so furiously that soon Kauffmanns line was rolled up in a greater pandemonium of confusion.....

Thousands after thousands of earthrending explsions fairly piercing the i air with mighty thunder heads thousands of feet high, proceeded each outburst of cannon volleys and terrific was the storm of earth and rocks showr showered all around the batt le field.....

Kauffmanns lines was split to topieces, the shells making the heavens hedious with their rattling thunderous roar. Even thousands of monsterous gang-gagnshells whose explosions roared louder and fiercer than ever even thebig guns, an and made a noise that fic lled the air with countless deafening echoes were hurled among the retreating christians, multudes being killed, while a tempest of debris dirt, and wreckage of hundreds of thousands of trees was scattered in all directions by the most terrificexplosions ever seen in battle before which tore craters in the ground as large and as deep as those of mighty volcanoes wiping out whole divisions of men at one shell.....

Twrd night fall when Aronburgs line was also in confusion Ickles was astonished to see the Glandelinians slowly withdraw from the attack when they were about to win a victory. He had soon learned the cause. General Federal had discovered heavy forces of Abbiesanians under general Hamdonall advancing to flank Tamerline, and had at once issued orders for Tamerline to withdraw before it was to late.

The order had not reached Tamerline untill six thirty,, Tamerline withdrawing at eight fifteen and in a furious rage..... He vigoriously protested to Federal that he should sent such an order when he was about to win thebat le entirely and indeed Federal had made a great mistake for this gave the whole defeat christian column already smashed and shattered to rally and thesereinforced heavily were soon to resume the conflict once more..... Had Federal allowed Tamerline to continue the attack and sent heavy forces to repel the flank flankers Tamerline could have easily raised the seige o Mc-Whirther. On account of Fedrals serious mistake in ordering Tamerline to withdraw the christian advance was only resumed, Hansonia taking the advantage by ordering general Catarria to strike Tamerline and drive him from Federal if possible, while all the christian guns were concentrated for a severe bombardment of Vivian Wickey and Mc-whirther. Over plains and meadows for miles and miles far and wide, amid the most horrible roar of cannon and muskatry which shook the earth like the earthquake at Lisbon, big immiese christian columns swept on in roaring waves the firing along the enemys lines now sounding like a terrible tion cannon in action, and seemed like one long line of undualting fire and tongues of flame.

"On to Mc-Whirther ."Was the cry all around;"Abbiesanian and Angelinia shall have their vengeance for the suffering of all the christian children in all the innocent nations. On to Mc-whirther. Break down that sad Christ mas curse on t the children."

Amid the earsplitting crash of hundreds of thousands of shells hundreds of thousands of the assailants were torn to pieces but the survivors continued the attack madly and fourcsile, millions swarming over Tamerlines works at his right in a sea of fire and the roaring clash of muskatry, clash of se steel of steel on steelm shriels groans oaths and prayers and sudden outbursts of series of yells from hundreds of thousands of throats....

Enormous volumes of landelinian argolian kurdsadvanced in furious billows to the rescue ofthe hardpressed Omarians the batle suddenly turning into a ghastly slaughter the halted christians pouring torrent upon torrent of shells and canister upon the Glandelinians their clamor rising far above the withering clamor of the Glandelinian assault. Sudden blinding sheets of rocket flame, like the glow of blast furnacesburst along the opposing lines for milesdarting and qquivering along Bernards front the fighting becoe ing at close quarters whole hedges of bayonets clashing together in an indescribable tumult.

To increase the terrores of the mighty battle streams of Glandelinians surged like a seething army of demons upon the christian wing facing Vivian Wickey all the trenches being fu filled with dead and wounded. As fast as the Glande linian surges on the cries of woeful numbers were of death their silence of eterninty.

Four times the Glandelinians cut the christian lines in pieces and threw them into confusion but four times amid the dreadful carnage Catassin rallied his divisions and sent the enemy flying back with the immense columns torn mangled and bleedinge All this time from the christian batteries the thousands of shells roared down among the ramparts of fort Mc-Hollester which was also assaulted by heavy numbers of christians the Glandelinian guns mangling tens of thousands of the quivering corpse of the fallen. Federal threw heavy forces to the support of the trenches in front of the fort, the slaughter being frightful, the tremendous numbers of the christians rushing on to the assault, stabbing and thrush thrusting hither and thiter, and and mowing the defenders down as fast as they fell themselves. The heaps of dead and wounded rose high, and the thousands of bursting shells flashes in tremendous lightning like displny the crashing roar of the battle seeming to become supernatural.

The twisting opposing lines in their hand to hand encoun ters assumed the appearance of two smoking streams of darting fire surging fiercely against each other ,mingling frightfully among ea each otherin fierce death struggles whole columns vanishing into the turbulent abyyss abysses of awful carnage the opposing lines being as the bodily forms of the gigantic legions of hell, te awful agents agents of damanation, terror and death.

Every inflammable material that the shells struck in Mc-Whirther were set on fire. Men on both sides fell as thick as snowflakes in a blizzard but tremendous numbers of christians especially one of the main wings was parcially wiped out, general Oswellians army being shattered to fragment fragments. In a few hours after he had launched the sweeping assaults Hansonia had finally trained thre hundred and fourty thousand cannon upon the whole line of fortifications of Vivianis Wickey Wickey and Mc-Whirther and redoubled the bombardment as to much susc such a noise as to take away breath and consciousness followed by rapid revolusions of the arrested blood and a tingling sensation of agony through every nerve and fibre of a the body. The constant thunder of the terrific storming rain of shell an curtain of artillery fire and the crash of the mangled and smashed houses made the most terrific sound ever heard in war thousands of buildings going to pieces in a few minutes before the terrific storm of shells. The cannonading increased as for Wedernice, Mc-Hollester, , Marcusian, Silverbel and the others facing the land with their rear responded filling the air with a most terrific deafening earsplitting uproar. A simultaneous earsplitting roar responded throughout the air the shells of the christians being more accurate and down carseend the ruin echoing for miles t the uproar stunning the inhubitants of other towns scores of miles away. Into the darkness of the night was terribly relieved by theintense glow that broke, fierce and sullen against the sullen gloom the whole scene of raging destruction becoming lighted with an most intense sheen of glaring redness a glow never before seen so bright the very heavens being in an earthsplitting uproar fro the bursting shells and cannonballs. The glow was bright and gigantic throughout all the awful darkness spreading like the most horrible skies of hell while a most indescribable terrorizing blood red pile of clouds rising above the distant cities seemed to rew resemble two ig big volcanoes in eruptón eri eruption.

They formed two awful monsterus shapes like titan cloud pil pillars being of terrible blood red hue, the light illuminating the whole atmosphse far and wide.... In a n an hour it had increased to ten fold brightnesss the awful roar of the fiercest cannonading increasing ten times louder as Hansonia let loose with seventy thousand more guns. Amid the horrible roar of the cannonade and destruction, could be heard the awful rattling thunders of the bursting shells, the sky from the burning cities seeming to be more luminious, an unearthly brightness spreading over the sky and darkened st spots with great volumes of black inky smoke tig tinged with pink and red.

Despite their energy the Angelinians who had aw assaulted fort Mc-Hollester for ten hours during the night unceasingly could not cary carry it as they constantly faced an annihilating curtian of artillery fire and finally withdrew leaving many hundreds of thousands of their dead and millions of their wounded and dying behind the theme Tward three oclock in the morning, after Minderni Hansonia had crushed Tamerlines army of nine million men to pieces in repelling his fresh charge which he had made in an attempt to silence Hansonias guns Federal two hours later after a lucll that ,ong long s for the same reason sent tw quarters of his army to a make a general and final assault. These columns placed personally in command of Adele-de-garde by Federal, swept forward to the attack with tremendous fury under an awful fore fire of musketry and cannon that seemed to tear the havens to pieces with the din. While this awful roar of carnage continued two gigantic columns of the enemy came in contact with Catarrias army and the two opposing forces waved a two and fro amid a continous and aw ul roar of muskets the mightiness of which to defy Heaven to describe. One part disolved away and the rest ralied rallied slowly and rushed eastward, every column giving a way before the enemys immense onward rush.

A roar going f going far above ant anything imagined broke from t he forts and their was a rapid earsplitting burst oh shells and high explosives whose concussion s shivered the most massive buildings in a town twenty miles away from the batle field. Every oneof the christians struck by the storm of shells were killed or maimed the roar of the battle having increased with redoubled fury and Hansonia seeing by the help of the bright illumination of the burning cities thathe his left was almost wiped out by the assailants and his center threatened threw Roswell Buster Johnston to the rescue. The fewof the men on the left who did survive the terrible battle had been so terrified by the almost preternatural u fury of the battle and storm of carnage, the seemingly shrieking of nature, the gasping forms of legions of mangled and by the roar of the titanic cannonade that they could not be rallied the streams of glandelinians led by general Adele-de-gd garde hurling themselves upon the newcomers under Johnston the illumination of the light from the fire making the battle scene more frightful.

The The once beatrufl fields and prairiers displayed the horrible slaughter caused by the terrific onslaught of the enemy being littered like a field of flowers with mulitudes of dead boides in purple and gray indescriminately mixed.... The awful flames from the burning cities now and then pierced the smoke clouds. As the glandelinians encountered the solid lines under Roswell Buster Johnston there came a blinding deafening roar of musketry ,like the most awful cannonade itself, is just as the main force of the assailants came and mangling were the cries that came from the many hundreds of thousands of mangled greyconts that writhed and rolled in mortal agony among t e other corpses.

The grass of the wide meadows in front of Roswell Buster Johnstons army lines could not be distinguised from the mulitudes of prostrate bodies. General Glinderns struck at the same time by the advancing columns had his army horribly torn and mangled the opposing lines having disolved into a seething mass of buthery the glandelinians sweeping al all before them amid the earsplitting roar of musketry and the wailing piteous cries of the hundreds of thousands of mangled formshaing heartrending. Suddenly a id the infernal roar of carnage new christian lines undulated in blinding sheets of musketry fire, simultaneously followed by a terrible crashing roar that could have stunned mulitudes but now the surviving assailants came upon the christian works and it now lok looked as if there was one long snake of battling mad frenzied men, that twisted and squirmed in all directions in frightful, frightful death struggles, the whole of Hansonias center being sgulefed in the destructive maw of the battle the whole batle line being a chaos of wild carnage, and fiercer and fiercer roared the cannons from the glandelinian forts the whole battle field seeming to be enveloped in one mass of seething hell and slaughter.

The awful roar of the batle along general Roswell Buser Johnstons line seemed to grow at its worse, want many of his brigades seeming to have been cut to pieces whole columns dislving away the enemy bearing down everything amid the clash of bayonet against bayonet the assailants sweeping Aichers lines before it the whole scene being more reddened by the glare of the burning cities.

To the enemys appalling dismay however Roswell Buster Johnston's army had the form of a great arch whose murderous fire of musketry shifted and wavered with every discharge turning fiercely luminous at timesonly to blaze terrifically forth with an intense undulating glare like streams of darting fire tongues as thick as a blizzard. Adele-degardes columns rool d rolled forward again and aga n again amid the storm of slaughter hundreds of thousands still madly giving up their lives. Part of Roswell's right was beaten in by the fierce onslaught but the tremendous hail of bullets and crashing tumult of bayonets held solid and impene trable and the more did the christian masses gather did the flash of musketry and can on increase their vivid and scourching glare. Aronburgs army was struck a few few m minutes before Roswell buster Johnstons and at the very first onset of the enemy several divisions of christians were cushed to pieces by the pressure of the enemys assault whose armies advanced like a waves of men in a typhon against a idly batered sh ships.....

The she ls from Aronburgs guns blew hundreds of tons of wreckage into the air mingled with huge masses of earth with trees and rocks. The assault came on like seeking masses of wate the sudden musketry fire sounding like the roar of ten billion cannons. The advancing enemy struck Kauffmanns army also also but recieved an awful sudden blaze of musketry as they rushed forward in great surges the crashof r crash of musketry of the enemy who res onded making a sound like the dt detonations of the worlds destruction.

Large numbers of trees were blown up into the air by shells to the distance of fivehundred yards. Columns or ofor whole forests were rent and torn the fragments of trees scattered to a thousand yards the whole battle field being a scene of roaring destruction. The air was thick with dust and smoke the surfsurface of the ground being gouged and cut into deep craters, by the shells, avalanhes of dust and hail of rocks beingscattered in all directions. All along the christian lines under Aronburg and Kauffmans themusketry and cannon was in a blasting uproar and as to say millions of branches were scattered a ll over theuniverse seeming to turn into a seething hell.

The terrific noslaught of the enemy wz was so violentthat Kauffman had to massed this divisions upon the untill their numbers reached their heag highest point the fire of thechristian guns dis disolving the enemys columns into piles and win drows of dead and dying. Adele-de-garde had shifted Nells divisions tothe north and ernards to the south tending sending the sea of human beings to still greater extent on the west of a Aronburgs front the avalanche avalanch of men surging to one mighty assault after another t the slaughter being more terrific, the line breaking to pieces amid a roar of musketry which was louder than a million cannon.

The frenzied assailants dashed madly upon the works the hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians forcing themselves among the defenders only to have their lines shattered by terrific storms of canister. Several christian columns was swept several yards from their works and hurled back and routed t h usands of the mangled beings cryerushed by fallen trees and trampled by the maddned combtants the monsterous forces op osing the landelinians with all their might. The muskets clashing against each other and the ring of steel on steel s made a strange booming and snarling sound and doz like howl which grew more and more intense eve every hour. The flashes of musketry at great sections of the op osing lines seemed as if undulat ing streams of light from the sources of hell or the sudden Phelecithon sea, the ominous roar t of the wide spread destruction being terrible.

The simultaneous crash and thunder of one hundred and ten thousand cannonshook the air, one of the forts probably Marcuacian being already about to reduce a christian battery to silencing, the creaning ruind in the cities echoeing far and wide drowning out th the shrieks of the mangled..... The soud sound of the batls battles roar was like if a world of cannon were in action. Houses by the hundred thousand were shivered into ruind ruins and set on fire in Mc- Whirther by the shells thousands of women and children being burned and so suffocated t o death while the roar of the batls grew l louder as if to mock them in their agony the air being stifling with the mortar dust. The assault of the enemy was now in full army and one section of Aronburgs army was annihilated by shell shells from for Mc-Hollester the shellsexploding and among the christians in the most alarming fashion the battle making a tremendous million cannon like roar which resounded everywhere. Fearful surges of Gargolian kurds alternoel amid the million cannon like roar of their own guns and blazzes of musketry pressing hundreds of residents from their works but one portion of the main wave being cut in twain tottered and wavered for a moment and recoiled but the others though broken and crushed rushed on for a short distance like a terrifying avalanche of men, but with a terrific redoubled roar a fire was poured upon them that cut whole divisions to pieces and the whole surge became a storm of carnage the survivers coming on sweeping whole brigades of christians back to an ernorm us distance the slaughter being awful the columns melting like snow. Other columnscame on bringing behind them a solid wave of men some ninty deep whole mulitudes of them turning into windrows of dead and dying

f. Strong barriers of christian soldiers were swept away by the pressure of the enemys advance, t ou thousands of the retreating Angelinians being cut to pieces by the sabres of the enemys..
Two times the Mandelinians rushed upon the christian works mingling with the des perate defenders the furyl of the Mandelinian assault tearing the christian line in thei their front to pie es pieces.More mulitudes of dead and wounded grew the Mandelinian s attacking with the fury of battering rams upon the lines of chris tians still standing and no architecture could resist such crushing force jo most of the christian army already being in a pandemonui mn of panic and confusion thouh night time was already drawing near again. The gre great ac avalanch of K r Kurds and Gargolies were hurled again and again with terrific violence against the confused christians their bayonets and pikes dos doin doing more damange damage than they recieved.
The irrestible attack of the Mandelinian columns threatened the overthrow of the entire christian center at every onslaught , the destruction of lives being more awful. Thousa thousands upon thousands of Mandelinians and christians together were lying within the trenches within a space of three yards mingled wit h intestines and oied pied pieces of fls fleshe Four hours and hours during the night amid a continoual d sea of fire and smoke both sids surged back and forth in a frightful manner the indescribable roar of muskstry at times swelling above the roar of ar tillery. Soon the whole of Hansonias active army was in confusion and it seemed as if all the desperate atempts of the christian officers to rally the divisions were in vain. The scene of confusion was terrific each man striving to get out of the way of the danger, horses leaping, bounching, rearing on their hind legs and dshing about and frantic struggles to drag the endangered fil field pieces out of y the enemys way were made.....

Despite the greatness of the confusion, there was no retreat only a slow graduall withdrawel. Cannons were dragged hither and thither, hundreds of thousands of men dashed this way and that and there was an indescribable mix up of cavarly horses gun carriages and guns. However at this o moment when the confusion of t he christian was at its height th and threatening to become a literall stampede Adele-de-garde made a serious mistake by with drawing the most of his artillery from a furious artillery fire that was raking to fragments one of his wings.

His intention was to reform his armies and strike the christians another blow before they could rally but he did not go get time as Hansonia was no fool.

It was already noon of the third day of the batle and the great christian general knew that the confused masses could not be rallied in time to meet the second shock and knew that if he did not do somethin something right away he would suffer a crushing defeat. All of his hundreds of thousands of cannon at the right f of the position in f front of fort Mc-Hollester had been withdrawn previously to the beggining to of Adele-degarden onslaughts and Hansonia at once issued an order by wireless telegraph to generals Stonehouse, Storey, and Pelmadge to bring these guns to bear upon Adele-degarde's army before he could reform for another charge.
It took an hour and three quarters for even half of the number to come up but then most to fit the enemy, had ralliedu and [illegible] most of the army had rallied and Adelede-de-garde was not ready for the second onslaught. A part of general Earlie's Mandelinian force at two oclock had tried yo make an attack while Ade-dle-de-garde was reforming but recieved a fire from hot Hortens guns that staggered th them the first wing flagging, then the whole lin e recoiling slowly. After an all nights bombardment and tward the approach of morning, Hansonia had his whole army rallied more than one hundred thousand gun s concen trated to meet Adele-degrde and even a new line of trenches were made of the dead bodies but to Hansonias s astonishment no attz attack came. However Hansonia did not wait and threw over half of his firts wing forward to theeh charge.

Four hours later the im ense forces came back all torn tottered fragments the main leader reiding up to Hansonia with the stunning report that the enemy were advancing in overwhelming force to counter charge.

So all that fourth day the batle raged with the most frightful fury but Federal seemed to realized that to hold Mc-Whirther or Vivian wickey was out of the question , bit but the desperate man that he was he determined to hold it to the last man and not to give up untill he was killed himself if need be.

During the four days battle over fifteen thousand of his best guns had been dis abled or destroyed, but none of the fortifications had been wrecked by the bombard ment. General Boswell muster Johnston during his desperate onslaughts had captured two thousand his guns and over sly hundred thousand prisoners besides generals Genevine Eagle, Cannonin Johnston, Stronck Shrodeon and Dugan. Though Federals intentions to strike Hansonia a blow had utterly failed and though he himself had recieved a staggering blow for the third time in three batules, and in one of his worst conflicts alone at that, w he was not disposed to give up and decided to try it out again. The strongholds of Mc-Whirther and vivian Wivckey were considered by the world as the most impregnable and that the city could never be taken from the enemy, as many recent att empts had met disasterous results as already described. Kauffmann during the third day of the battle had been abandoned by the enemy general Storey Stonehouser surrendering Aronburg to Hansonia withhis entire wing or army of nine million men besides one hundred thousand cannon and three hundred thousand provision and ammunition wagons.

This victory stunned the world. They realized that Hansonia when set at a purpose would do it at any costs. All of this was on account of Ade-le-del-gardes mistakes. Had Adele-de-gardecontinued his terrific onslaught without abatement he could have won for Federal one of the bloodiest bat les that Federal had ever fought himself over twenty mi l'ion having fallen on boh side combined christian losses being ten million and that of the enemy also. General vivian way off in southern An elinia watching Johnston Manley was jubilant over Hansonias succd success. He even acted like a child ready to go out on a picnic hang wild with joyes h it had caused the withdrawel of the enemy to W vic vivian wickey and which now enabled the christians to cross the boundary line into Calverinia and strike for Julo gallio a greater importance than Vivian Wickey still. The whole army gave feasts and prayers and Novenas of Thankagiti Thankagivings in fact thewhole nation was rejoic ing of over the great victories of Hansonia who had broken Fedrals power three times in three smashing blows in three bttles signally, and opened a way across the b boundary line to Cav r Calverinia. Even the Angelinian Pope rejoiced giving Special prayers of Thanks, ivings and declaring that Hansonia had won miricals more than victories as Federals lines had other wise been almost impregnable and impo s impossible to carry and that it had been very wise to force Federal to do the attz attacking. The Pope even declared that Hansonia deserbe a deserved the title of commander in chiefand begged general Angelic Vivian and Hansonia to promote him and make him the highest officer of all the armies operation in Calverinia.

The cities of Mc-Whirther and Vivian Wickey now being besieged by Hansonia the rest was left for Zimmermann to do, but however these cities were not to fall as yet if Federal could help it. Under no conditions could Hansonia be beaten now and it would only be disasterous to dare to even attack him but Federal des decided to resist the attacks that would come and re ply with full force to all the bombardments made upon his lines.

On the fifth day of the battle Manley learning of the results was angered to the highest pitch over over Hansonias success but however Adele-de gardes force of nu nine million men had checked the christian advance at Fre mont while simultaneously general Shroder reported to Federal of the capture of two hundred fifty thousand prisoners t the central boundry line of the Athian ians with the loss of only ten thousand men one hund ed thousand of these being taken le gake general Confection by surprising the christian camp at Mandendon.
[illegible] the battle opened at Yorndorf.
The enemy failed to accomplish their purpose but nevertheless general Hansonia saw that he could not capture the cities as yet and though the way to Calverinia (Calverinia was opened the christian armies were not to get there untill more great battles had been fought.

CHAPTER T . 11

THE BATTLE OF PANDORA.....
FRIGHTFUL KARNAGE AT MILDABROWN.

Two weeks , later after the great fighting at Weeping Willow sun Violet was standing at the gatesof the fence surrounded Hansonias headquarters at the out skirts of Pandora. She was s so ly thinking of a great loss she had sufferad.
She remembered the days when she and her dear sisters first knew Gan ca Pocile and all he did for them a d and her. Now he was gone having been killed at Weeping Willow Rul. She was also thinking of her friends and brothers who were in their graveson s; ou t of t the same battle and of her other old time friends who were gone. Soldiers who passed by and noticed her , wondered how so beautiful a child could be so sad when everything seemed to s bright and lovely all around and Hansonias headquarters where she and her sisters were a nice living was in one of the most beautiful spots outside of Pandora. Beautiful green trees of all kinds grew everywhere. Fields of various kinds of sweet smelling flowers, flowered here and there and there were large grassy meadows as smooths as velvets while not far away was a beautiful lake. Even the brightness of the sunshine made things more like a paradise indeed. And yet it all that passed, only noticed a beautiful but melancholic and languid little girl standing by the iron barred gate. Even all day a long she sat in one of the lawns and did not stirr at untill called.

It was only thre days intervhen the little girls who were asleep late in the morning were awakened by a deafening roar minled with the crashing and banging of timbers. All that night long unknown to the little girls Hansonias whole line had been in fierce action with federals forces once more the city of Pandora was a network of ruined hour houses the death and destuction having happened within thenaroid of twelve hours and ten minutes. The landelinians advancing from the northwest had made thirteen desperate onslaughts the enemys guns suddenly beginning their destructive career in the lower suburbs of the cir city the shell a po pouring into Penros street tore down whole sections of hourses at once in their series of corsplitting explosions and killing and injuring one hundred ninty five peop e people ninteen of which were children. At St Michiels stre t the terrific shell for fire tore down thousands of hourse and wrecked a big grain elevator. The shells simultaneously tore to fragments whole divisions of strong brick and frame hour houses at sicamore avenue ad avenue the shell storm wrecking whole sections of buildings at one volley blowing off many roofs from factirces and two grain elevators striking down whole sections of houses to West St Anns street among them the grain elevators owned by Bernard and Bizzo company.

The tornadic of shells destroyed hundreds of other frame hourses, ripped the most massive hourses to pieces, blew roofs blocks distance in one seconds time and even uprooted all the trees in the bombarded parks, ch Churches were crushed, telephone and trolly poles wre split what ered or uprooted and the rest of the city shot ered as flat as a pontage stone. Out of a ruined grain elevator three hundred men were dug out several days later dead, and on sacrament street nine hundred and fifty t others buried in the collapse of roberts Costelloes he nig lun lumber mills were declared dead. Five hundred thousand dollards damage was caused at a great pleasure park outside Pandora. A large motordome once used before the outbreak of the war was destroyed by a single high explosive and all the club houses close to a large dragcon belonging to the Rodney Graves Geminie Society were wiped out being reduced into heaps of ruins by the terrific explosiov explosions.

Three duc dancing pavilions and scores of thea tors used for the wounded at Weeping Willow Run now, were blown to pieces and thousands were likk killed and many others injured. All that remained of the buildings along this great pleasure park was a strip of onestory ruins and cloudy pulls of dusts spreading over the ruins, defied penetration for many minutes after the battle was over. Above the din of the thousands of great explosions and the falling wreckage could be heard the cries of dying men wch c women and children, this c city having been shelled by the enemy without warning. As the first rescuers of soldiers after the batt e climbed over the wreckage there came to them distinctly the voice of a woman mingled with the cries of little children, but as n these died away.

But the cries of the women continued until the soldiers reached her. Violet and her sisters when with general John Evans, Jack Evans brother, went to see the sights, however, which made them feel more melancholic. Immense crowds of scowling Angelinian soldiers stood in front of the homes that were wrecked, and waited for the entombed dead to be brought forth. The scenes were mucj muck like that during a great fire and many times w there was a child or woman or child brought forth alive and one hut slight ly injured was able to tell the Mirical of which he was spared from death unde tons of brick, iron, and mortar. Close to fifty others were extracted more or less injured, hundreds o more were found alive in their wrecked homes without any injuries of any kind but out of the ruins of a convent over a hundred and eleven were dug out by soldiers frightfully mangled, al being nuns.

The shell storm sweeping like a scythe of war had destroyed five other good homes onSarinia street and killed and injured one hundred and fifteen. Two days later after the battle it was found that one thousand six hundred ninty five had been injured, a hundred fatally. Total loss inkilled and injured together toget her was six thousand five hundred two. Property loss was estimated at three illion dollars.

After bombarding the city the enemy had followed it up with an onslaught on Hansonias lines but each succe ding wave of war had been crushed to fragments or wiped out and the Glandelinians finally gave it up having lost three million four hundred thousand in killed and wounded. The christ christian loss was four million two hundred and fifty six thousand in killed and wounded.

A series of disasters in eastern Calverinia caused by the Glandelinians under Malcom Manley was the most to horrible of them all even are ding those caused by forcest fires and other calamities, even forgetting that the mightiest earthquake.

It affected the entire east indiscriminately and crippling her, for hundreds of miles. The real loss in killed and wounded exceeded all typo typhoons listed to Allemania. In the entire west of Hudsons Manleys destroyers it was estimated that thirty six hundred small towns scores of villages and many cities were almost totally wrecked six hundred of which were totally wiped out by fire with the almost complete annihilation of the child inhibitants. Eastern Calverinia was bloom to atoms by the cannonading from his guns and three thirds of the inhabitants were massacred or driven into exile. In the whole of eastern Calverinia about a thousand villages scores of cities many magnificent ones at that were wiped out by battles, raids and forest fires. Three quarters of Amaggelinia Agethia ealer Calverinia had been wiped out by sixty thousand shells per minute during a battle there and thousands of unknown survivors had been killed wounded or missing.

During the battles of Mc-Whirther and Aronburg the heavy coast defenses on Western Calverinia had been damaged by the heavy gunnery of the Glandelinian ships, fortifications had been completely demolished nine inch guns and twelve inch guns by terrific explosions had been blown to ten pieces while the ruinso of forts Vivian, Marquedan and Mc-Whirther were awesome sights indeed, and the enemy having reached these cities so alarmed Hansonia that he had to abandon the seige of Vivian Wickey and Mc-Whirgther.

General Noro Vivianis on account of the surrender of Mic hollas and his army was now unopposed by Glandelinians and yet did not know what to do. He wondered if if he could rely on the Allieanadians swearing upon Buebaum Manley to win or lose as the war goes. He had intentions to take good advantage of his good condition and strike against Gilcurn while Buebaum Manley was doing his devilish work in the east. But then he wondered if there was not some dngr of leaving Vivianis at Manleys mercy and that he should retake it. A couple of days later it was discovered by the Glandelinians or why the Glandelinians were making such progress in the east.

General Buebaum Manley had made Tom Federal the head of all the armies operation in eastern Calverinia and on account of his being the head Tamerline rose up next to him and these two generals because so many millions of Glandelinian s had rose up in frightful rebellion and joined the christian armies on account of the Glandelinian conscription was now making a vertible reign of terror in the east.

The Abbieanians who were to oppse him were not as strong as Federals armies under the lead also of Tom Federal, but instead of threatening him were steadily falling back before his advance leaving everything to the mercy of the foes. Many magestates of the east to save as many of of the cities as possible had surrendered themselves to talk to the foe, to general Noro Vivianias indignation and rage, and to the horror of the Calverinian Cardinals and the Angelinian Pope.

Realizing the situation and knowing that the Glandelinians would declate the whole east if not stopped general Noro Vivianis gave up the plans of striking a blow at Calmanrinia and made hasty preparations to move eastward to punish Federal and Tamerline or lose the war entirely. He sent a message to general Weinstine Mc-Hollesar Mc-Hollester of the Abbieanians by telegrame which read;

"Your excellency general Weinestine Mc-Hollester!!!!!

"I have realized the condition in the east and advise you to stand fast under any conditions as soon as the opportunities are offered as I am coming east; to give Federal or Tamerline whom ever I meet the battles of their lives. In case you are forced to fight before I get there don't make too rash a send as annihilation may be the result. If you can successfully stand against them do so then."

General Vivianis;
Commander of western armies."

A couple of days later as general Vivianias advance was well on the way the christian general recieved the answer from Mc-Hollester;

Mc Hollester;

"Your excellency general Vivianis;

For me there is no possibility of making a send whatever, for Federal and Tamerline are making or moving in overwhelming numbers Hicknells columns and Tamerline are coming on Hansonias flank. The Pope living in Calverinia was threatened and compelled being the advance gaurd. The Pope living in Calverinia was threatened and compelled to flee and the glandelnins landelinians are in perusit. To at op those ravages is indeed is going to take a hard and long fight. When I learned that you were within a few miles from my armies I will begin the clash if you think it advisable, but I have strong enough force to engage him with if only aid comes in time but to engage or stand now would be sucide. I expect other armies from Allieanadia and from the rapidly enlisting Calverinians but they are to slow in coming and what is worse I cant get word to them.

GENERAL WEINSTINE MC)HOLLESTER.

CHAPTER 12

THE BATTLE OF CLYBOURNE, THE BRAVEST DEFS OF THE VIVIAN GIRLS, WHAT DA MF OF IT, Weinstine strikes TAMERLRLINE A SERIES OF BLOWS! WHAT COMES OF IT! THE FURY OF THE WAR IN THE EAST

Fearing that something wrong might turn up general Nero Vivianis, also with Hansonias army goinginto sep separate columns commenced a forcd march resting only a few hours at night, millions of the soldiers literally sleeping as they walked. On 6 September the twenty sixthgneral vivianias boyscouts an announcded that Federals armies were within sight at last. It is well to state that Nero viviani a did not have to engage the whole of the Glandelinian armies operating in the east the Glandelinian forces being divis divided into various sections, under generals Bicknellian, Tamerline, Hoemann, Ambrose Fullertonia and Adelade Gortcian who were operating in various localities. So he had general Raymond Richardson Federal alone to deal with.

At the approach of Federals army Nero Vivianis concentrated upon the Clybourne stream and general Thomas Federal of Raymond Richardson Federals staff discovering that he was opposed by a strong foe and not knowing who its leaderswere told Federal who decided to hlat his armies and give battle infull force at the vivinicty of the city of Clybourne. At the threatening of a battle theinhibatants fled taking what ever they could with them. Violet and her sisters were distressed and full of dread, for they knew they were in the gravest danger for as Federal was now the main head hwcould do as he wished in any way! He had Phallinin Tamerl ine were men of their words and she and her sisters had many a time gotten away from Raymond Rickardson Federal because he really did not pay much attention to them then ,but now Federal would give anything to bring about their deaths as he feared that they were worse than any spy though they were n o mories as he suspected.

Several days later general Vivianis seeing that the enemy were making mysterious movements asked Violet and her sisters to make a tour to see what they were doing. As they hesitated general Vivianis realized at once/

''I see you are afraid of Federals.'' 'He said;''Is not that true?''

Violet shuddrered;' I cannot help being afriad of that butcher and human tornado.''She answered demurely;' ''If he can readily with the help of Brainard cause all the damage he is doing he can easily bring about our immediately destruction And I'm afriad if I went out scouting with my sisters we may encounter him an get caught. He is always out scouting himself.''

''You didn't be afriad of that.''Said Nero Vivianis;''I'll send a large quanty of men with you so his Guardian Angels cannot get you. That will be all right won't it?''

Yet she would not yeild though the general coaxed and pleaded, as he did not want to force t them. At this moment general Lockwick Baldwin rode up having seen the intrview with Violet a d her sisters and the general.

''What is the matter your excellency?''He asked.

''I can ot get these little girls to go out and see what the movements of the enemy mean.''Said general Nero Vivianis;''They have it seems almost an almost preternuntrural dread of that general Arenburg Raymond Richardson Federal, as I know he is more dangerous now as he is one o of the main heads opening in Calverinia. I promised to sent a large troop to prt protect them and pleaded coaxed and intreated in vain. I will have to send some one elseas I hardly want them to go anyway. I only asked them because because they can can do more.'

''No need to send them.''Answered Baldwin;''I'll go myself.''

''No please don't pleaded Violet tearfully;''you will surely get killed killed and you are the only best friend I have got in this country and you will break my heart if you go an and d never return.''

''Ha,haa.''Laughed Baldwin;''I'd like to se the Glandelinian that ould catch me.''And saluting he a hastily rode off.

''General don't let him t go.''Begged violet;''I don't want him to get killed. I'm really afriad of Federal but I would sooner go than let Baldwin go to his do m.''

''Can't be helped now now.''Answered the great general kind of seriously and grimly;''I never ag change my mindand you ought to have accepted my request in the first place. But don't fear as I'm sure he will come back safe and sound.''

A few minutes later general Nero Vivianis went into his headquarters tent Violet and her sisters fl following with slow and melancholic steps.

''Oh what would I give if this war wasove over.''Said violet to herself again and sighing;''I'm rd tired and sick of it and I never knew it was going to be so terrible.''

Baldwin indeed saw the reasons of the enemys movements. A part of the christian line was already in action. The enemy assaulted in masses many mile long but met a terrible artillery fire at every points. In two hours the battle was in full army the battle front graduallybroadening from two to three miles.

The fortunes of war were hotly contested and remained a long time in the bim balance both sides making tremendous charges. When the whole of the advancing forces came into contact, everything, rock, soil, vegetation besides wholecolumns of men were havocked the christian fire causing greater damage than any time before. The Glandelinians made the onslaught in such heavy numbers t that they seemed to develope in their fur fury twenty quintillion foot pol pounds of energy, while the cavalry forces that joined in the attacks in endless numbers can be said to equally developthirty six million horsepower. The main assaulting columns were literally furrowed the christian fire mowingdown brigades, but the survivors amid the firing that roared like a million cannon hurled themselves in overwhelming numbers that seemed to reach beyond measure and soon forced the first line of the main works carrying all before them.

Hundreds of thousands after hundreds of thousands of Angelinian troops rushed to the lines of works not yet carried and poured their murderous fire into the enemys/ ranks owing them down in frightful numbers. The infantry as the assailants swarmed upon the works fought savagely and as reinforcements constantly arrived from the rear t they handled on like grim death and the slaughter became terrific.

Minute by minute large groups of Glandelinians fell but others continually rushed on to take their places. Now if anything the fury and desperation of the batle was greater than before. However toward noon the battle front of the enemy had receded almost a quarter of a mile t the concentration and rage of the counter charging columns of christians being something awful. The christians counter charged in regular armies as each army followinsun by others.

Despite the serious resistance they met and despite the danger from large forces of Glandelinians that continuously attacked them from ambush, the christians advanced swarmed over the entire line of works barring the retreat of general Hoffmanns Gargolian wurds who taken betwen two fires were badly beaten and the survivors with their leader forced to surrender. Though he was successful in carrying the forst line of the enemys trenches a terrific storm of fire from the whole line in the second trenches halted the christians who got no further. So the result of the battle was a slight advantage to Federals. Had general Vivianis proceeded further he may have succeeded in cutting general Federals army to pieces and scatter the survivors like chaff. Both sides lost over a million in the engagements.

During the later part of the night under cover of a heavy fog following the storm of firing general Nero Vivianis started withdrawal and was well on the retreat the next day making for Zimmermanns army of Abbiesnnians with all haste and enr energy Federal following as closely as possible.

THE BATTLE OF MAXIMILLIAN A FURIOUS STORM OF BATTLE!!!''

''I wonder what general is confronting general Tamerline now.''Said Violet to her sister Joice sh who was by her side on horseback while they were again marching northward Federal having receded all of a sudden at news of a fight at Angelinia Agahie. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

''General Joseph Arenburg is confronting general Tamerline.''Said Joice;''That is what I heard anyway.''

'' It was on the fourteenth of October Vivianias army having been joined by Hansonia and Weinstine when Raymond Federals main armies made another strange movement near Maximilillian and the Angelinians confronting him were practically helpless to resist and they abandoned the guns in a panic and ran madly to the main line. In the mi le of all this turmoil at Maximillian the rak ranks of V vivianias army were throw n into wild excitement and activity by the announcement from from the advanced lines that the guns had ben captured and that Federal was hastily preparing to bring his full strength to bear on general Nero Viviania right wing. With al the possible haste that c could be mustered, after the certainity of Federals intentions was learned the northeastern grand divvision was slowly swung around to the proposed point of attack. The other wings were placed in readinelles to give supportt to the armies who were to meet the first force of Federals vehement blow.

It came with ten fold violence and for three days the armies were engaged in the deadliest battle of the eastern drama of war. On the first day Federal launching the heaviest assaults ever mementioned imagined in endless succession, succeeded in breaking through the first line or the first division of the main line, cutting it to pieces and endangering Nero vivianias armys However though he succeeded in forcing parts of the main forces from the entire two lines of works and entrenchments and crushing Vivianias left and center to fragments the strength of the main assaulting columns were too nearly gone to beat down the fresh barriers, oresented though assault after assault was made with relentless fury.

Millions had fallen on each side or in each assault I mean, and Federal suffered heavy in the loss es of artillery and officers. On his right a part of the captured trenches after sanguinary fighting had been retaken amid the most woeful losses and toward evening of the third day, Federals whole line of action being badly thinned and galled was gradually but continually forced back. General vivianis after horrible slaughter recovering all the lost ground which his shattered forces had abandoned during the first three days actions. The western divisions of the Angelinians under the command of general Aylbourne Halsted being in excellent condition attacked Federal main line of works stretching toward Pandora Run where the heaviest fighting of the late part of the evening occured. While gensal Agonciliios army of four mill on men was advancing with all possible speed from the north to the aid of Federal a heavy blase of firing never heard before was roaring and thundering in the most titan throes to the southeastern part of the battle line. Indeed with thisnew army Federal Calculated that after all he would be strong enough to defeat the forces under general Nero vivianis.

General Agonci lios armies during the early part of the night concentrated all his eastern and western divisions at the Maxill[illegible]maxillian Run where he swept across in ferocious array like some mighty ocean [illegible] against a position which had been made almost impregnable when the severest firing all along the line set in and continued all night without cessation.

Two [illegible] streams of [illegible] to the action between the fields and the advancing glandelinian armies and it was not long before they were impassable as the christian fire deminimited the armies in grey, and hundreds of thousands fell everywhere and the main line was crushed and combated with reasonable success by the christian forces. As Agoncillioss main armies came up the others rallied but general Chambers army was the first to go into fragmentsbefore the christian curtian of artillery and musketry fire, but thi their situation at no time becuse very serious notwithstanding their generally weakened condition and so they had unt ill reinforced to to be withgrawn to the rear.

General Marinins glandelinians laboured so hard and incessantly and suffered such heavy losses that with the death of their leader they were forced to give up from sher exhaustion. General Pilaroioss glandelinians stood their ground before the advancing hosts of Angelinians and in the midst of the wildest maelstorms of carnage and in a sea of curtian artillery fire they met annihilation, their unfortunate leader breathing his last as they poured over the intrenchaments.

The whole christian army advancing at this point had spread out forming into a crescent sweeping down upon the glandelinians under Argonci lios in such a manner as to make the xharge most effective and to prevent retreat from any side. Agoncillios made the most formidable defense he could muster and four hours and hours he gallantly faced the [illegible] of general vivianis amid the most frightful sea of carnage and devastation that Federal himself had ever seen and horrible were the explosions of mines shells, shrapnell and high explosives that se med to rend the earth all along thebattle line asunder and make vertible volcanic eruptions of the most indenriable fury.

S lowly his lines were hemmed in on all sides and seeing that there w was no avenue of escape left general Arroncillios signalled his surrender.

ARGONCILLIOS SURRENDER

T . AND THE PROGRESS OF THE GREAT AND MIGHTY STRUGGLE.

T. The [illegible] that came into the ranks of the christian armies when the surrender was announced [illegible] this. The glandelinian general a grizzled old veteran of many child labor battles in the Glandes-Chiganian war [illegible] to deliver his sword to the [illegible] Before the Glandeses-Angelinia war general vivianis an and Argoncillios had struggled in despute together against child labor n had planned together and had forced legislations together. They had spent many years of their lives together and loved each other with the love of brothers..... and general Argoncillios was a christian despite his nationality. When his arival was announced general Nror Vivianias heart failed him. His hand trmelbled and his voice quaked and a mist came to his eyes.

''I cannot take his sword.''He finally said;''He [illegible] will my best friend the one man in all Glandelinian that I love as a brother. I will have to delegate one of my general officers to accept his surrender and to return his sword. I cannot face him in his time of distr distress. Whom shall I name? Who will go and do it?''

No sooner had the last word of the sentense been spoken than his eyes rested upon general Chan Chambers. Within a few mijutes general chambers went forth his head high and his body rigid, other officers of the staff following behind. Hasrered and disnondent general Argoncil[illegible] argoncillios surrounded by members of hir own staff dpk drapped his sw swo[illegible] Chambers approached to within [illegible] within [illegible] fee fr few feet of him and wt without looking up he held out his w sword with a trembling hand.

''I accept your surrender in the name of the Cond Confedervof Angelinia.''A Said chambers with great dignity being duly [illegible]ted by general vivianis co commanding the forces of the Angelinians in the field and general vivianis desires that you retain your sa re,general Agon-cillios.'''

''ON TO MAXILL MAXIMILLIAN. ON TO MAXIMILLIAN.''

This cry rang exultant ly from the throats of the many thousands of the drawn up colums columns of the victorious army as general Chambers escorted the fallen leader of the glandelinian forces past the soldiers to general vivianis who was observing the furious actions of his left upon t wodemls armies.

Poor Argoncillios his listless gaze directed straight before him seemed not to hear the lusty cheers that w went up for Vivianis and Chambers. The rigid etiquette of war was forgotten when the two grizzled leaders met apparently oblivious to their surro surroundings, they embraced each other, andthe tears ran from general vivianias eyes eyes werg as sinners and fastvfalling [illegible] those those which dimmued the sight of the [illegible]had glandelinian leader.

''ON TO MAXIMILLIAN! ON TO MAXIMILLIAN''

Again and again burst from the [illegible] ranks;

''ON TO MAXIMILLIAN. ON TO MAXIMILLIAN.''

''Yes on to Maximillian.''Cries Cried general vivianis bri nging his form ti to its full height seeming for a moment to forget his old friend. Then his eyes mellowing and his voice softening he placed his hand on the glandelinian leaders shoulder and said;

''It is the fortunes of war my old friend and it has been against you. Though the tide of battle has swept you from your feet my love for you is even stronger now than it was before. Your freedom shall be granted you, your every wish and desire shall be gratified.''

General vivianis then grasped the hand of the fallen leader with the warmpth of true love and with a whispered word of comfort left him to go to some other point of the field. General Nror vivianis saw that heavy reinforcements under c-Hollester Chamberlians was hastily advancing to federals aid and that these divisions sp supremely stong in numbers was moving fiercely upon general Brantoes army in the face of a blasting sea of musketry fire.

For quite a while, while the most of Federals columns had been retreat ing, Chamberlines army having arived from Vivians had been advancing, and soon the battle raged in such awful fury that the Angelinian officers struggling frantically to ke keep their brigades at their posts wore blanched faces despite their efforts to apear cam calm and cool.

Time and again before the frufg fru frightful fury of the enemys assault mos monsterous divisions of Angelinians became panic stricken an and the officers strove with might and main, with threats antrw entreaties and com co commands to force them to face the battle frenzied glandelinians and gmarians. Indeed the scen scene was like hell waring against heaven.

Hundreds of thousands of glandelinians hurled themselves with errific energy against thechristian lines the murderous fire they recieved cutting them down in really three quarters of their numbrs but on would come the fresh forces in all this seething inferno of an earhly hell. Several times they had almost succeeded in crossing the works butsuch frightful numbers fell that the few survivors went back appalled. Amid all the tremendous confusion the explosions of shells that rent the air filled the skies with flame and smoke like volcanic eruptions, the fury of the attack was increased fiercer and fiercer, Violet struggled to general Brantoes side and brave braving the withering storm of bullets and earsplitting crashes of shells cried pitcously;

''General are we in such great danger, that we have to make such frightful slaughter as this. Be frank with me please!''

''We are .''Answered the general;''Although my lines are holding their own in this great furnace of destruction and as any others could under the same conditions. This is the worse attack I have ever seen in all my life. If we can hold them off despite the odds we may be able to win out all right. At present my whole mind is on capturing two massive columns of glandelinians under Aronburger that is moving on my left in overwhelming numbers. They cannot befar from my left now.''

Violet pno pondered for a moment in silense and then she asked;

'' How far is your left wing from here general?''

''About fourten miles.''

''Good God general.''She exclaimed in alarm;''What if they strike!''

''General Noroes Vivianias army will probably routed and smashed to pieces after all his good success the four recent days. Good God butit seems hol j hopeless.''

For a moment violet seemed paralized. Finally recovering herwits she threw her pretty bonnet violently to the ground nd facing the great general with blazing eyes she said;

''General you can rely on me to see that your left holds and my sisters will do the same. I'll see that it is held for you even if I and my sisters gets out to pieces.''

''You, you!''Exclaimed the general;''Why you will be killed.''

''I know it but what do I care.''She screamed;''My sisters are brokenhearted we have lost every beloved one but our father and uncle and so what Do I care. We will risk anything to save your army.''

''Sure but I thought that your father never allowed you litt le girls to goin fighting in thebattles and that you dreaded general federal who can do all threats without any lying about it.''Said N the general.

''Not when your army is in such great danger.''She said;''It's your army and I and my sisters will save it even at the risks of being cut into chunks one leaping into the battle car that stood near by she and her sisters were soon flying toward the east reaching the point of danger in a short time and having with her a large force which rushed to the aid of the others just as the attack began. Seeing that the foe was far fairly storming in their midst Violet quickly dispatched a messenger telling general Vivianin of the danger and asking for aid. H Just as general Mo-hollsseerinian brought one of his fresh forces to the aid to the , left the main clash came and for hours the struggle was terrific and the cannons roared with a mightiness that shocked all who heard it whole the crash of musketry was enough to craze any one from thedin. For f four hours again st overwhelming odds in a Baptism of fire and hells slaughter the christion lines effected by the pleads of the little girls who frantically a wavedthe flags dropped by fallen color bearers held stantullornly giving a punishment far more severe than they recieved and the whole line of batle became one immensecurtian of smoke periced by long streams of flame.

Whole companies of [illegible] were [illegible] and Mo-Hollsentinians as thick as many swarms of bees from a score of hives would reach the christian lines more like a blasting conflargration than a human line, only to melt away a simultaneous withering curtian of fire from machine guns being added to the slaughter being horrotile horrible. Soon the whole gray line surged upon n up and over the works the two mighty lines mingling into one and plunging, and twist ing, and writhing so furiously that violet and her sisters did not believe that as christians could stand the terrific strain much lon ger longer.

Hell upon hell seemed to vent its fury here, both sides seeming to hold out just as stubbornly twenty times Slandelinian soldiers springin g at violet and her sisters only to be cut down by the soldiers in purple that rushed to their aid. The Slandelinians pouse poured on like a shrieking roaring damnanation avl av avlanche of hell though one whole a main line was completely withered bt a tremendous storming tumult of bayonets. Yell after yell deafening to hear was everywhere incessantly mans curses , shrieks and imprecations and one of the Slandelinians had waged managed to chock Jennie so hard that his thumb nails pierced her throat making a painful wound. Just before it was too late and while the sod soldier was chocking her so hard that her eyes bulged and her tongue protruded an Angelinian struck him on the head with his cutre splitting his head clean down to his shoulders his brains bespattering her hair.

It was some time before she was able to do anything and all this time the battle raged with redoubeled fury and the crash and uproar sounded like a thrillions cannon in action.The most powerful mind would be rediculously frail in an endeavor to picutre the awful damanating fury of themassive onslaught, of pieces, the gallent though seemingly hopeless struggle of the christian line against the hell of ravaging legions of men and dan damanating avalanches of da desw dr desg destruction, thousands of blazing guns, in an cannonading thunderous uproar f of titans, piercing clashing tumults of bayonets/ the clann of metes ,and t stalling , jabbing daggers, burning of and crushing of wo on an ribles, the merciless, fiendish pounding on of one monsterous column after another against the six stubborn purple lines, the heart chilling ominious yelling of the combatants the ear incessant earsplitting crash of millions of musketry and the earthrending roar of shells, cannons and the clash of steel on steel. Volcanoes seemed to break loose from the survi ficeof the ground or volcanic volcanic eruptions rather clouds of earth semed to rise into the air withe-thing storming flashes of flame and ruin and the din was terrific more deafening than anything every heard in a batle tefore.

Every ounch of hells raving damanating fury seemed to be hurled into that dreadful destructive battle every force of the grayscoated columns seeming to be directed against the purple lines whose stubbornness to yel yeild to the mighty odds only increased the relentless almost preternatural fury of the Omarians. When the form foremost Slandelinians hundreds of thousandsin number would reach the summit of the breastworks they would pitch headlong and four times violet and her sisters would find themselves at the bottom of a heap f of four or five grayscoats that at times fell upon them simultaneously all dead ones at that hat . The purple lines were at an alangle and forced into a position from which the continued fury and force of the attack could not disoldge it though great gaps had been torn in it t time and again and thousands of grayscoats had managed to go over the works only to piech headlong with a bayonet stab of a musket or pistol shot. Many col u columns of the Angelinians had been swept from the works at certain points but these had ben regained.

The dead and wounded in front of the works lay nigster then the trenchers at some points. V Whil e Violet herself bruised and battered was trying to extricate herself from a fallen man one of the christian generals dashed back and forth commanding every one to hold to the last as reinforcements was rapidly coming.

Violet by this time was on her unsteady fetandseing some portions of the enemys columns giving wayhuhe and her sisters plunged tward the breastworks once more and the little reckless childre n leaping to the top in the face of the enemys storm ing fire the little girls flu flourished their flags and screamd with all their might above the din;''

''Charge them, before they recover or reform their lines. Charge them.''

Several of the officers dashing past at the moment heard their words and t ook t oo k took it up but themen heard noi nothing so great was the din though the little girls flourished their flags frantically.

''Charge them, charge them.''Violet scremed with all the o power of her lu lungs;''We cannot wait. We will all be dead if they attack again.We must save ourselves by counter charging. All of you and I shall go together. Come, who will follow me.''

Off she and her sisters started till flourishing their flags but themen not seeing them in the thick smoke heded not. Violet continually flourished and waved the flag she carried in the face of the nearest Angelinians and again shouted;

''Se there are the enemy. The Slandelinians who have several times tried to ca cause the murder of me and my sisters.Come and avange our sorrows you poor fools or I we will gov go alone.''

The little girls started off again still waving the flags frantically, and looking back they saw nothing but a wall of smoke. Suddenly to their right they saw a giant shell blow a shed to pieces. Another exploded five hundred feet of her and her sisters and dug a deep hole. As they halted in bewilderment another flew up hundreds of ton tons ofdirt tehind her then another exploded on her left while showers of lead whistled all around them.

Looking back in desipr of the seemingly failure to bring the christian forces forward on a counter ch r charge she and her sisters saw only two purple coats pass them a greater wave of firing surged along the enemys lines and despite the tremendous crashing roar they again shouted;

'''We all shall go together.'''

Unknown to the little girls, and hidden by smoke great surges of christians had really rushed past them and indeed the little girls were bewildered by the great wave of firing and did not what it was all about. The Slandelinians had not receded however and had tried furiously to resist thesurging waves of purple coats by every means of fighting they could thin think of and the slaughtwr had become more terrible.

Yet onward and onward pressed the hostile line in purple and back went the whole column in gray in a pandemoniumn of confusion and leaving dad and wounded on the batle field everywhere. By the almost preternatural courage of the Vivian girls and cleverness general Brantces left was saved from annihilationeven before the approaching christian reinforcements could come within sight of the severe and bloody action. A few minutes later as the enemy were still retreating one of the commanding general rode up to violet who was nursing the slight would wound on her neck and dismounting placed his arms around her and lifting her to his chest hugged and kissed her saying;

''General vivianin shall learn of the brave ded as soon as I can get you and your sisters to hisheadquarters. You are the dearest sweetest little girls one nation has ever had if none of us can reward t you properly God can.''

He then lifted her on his horse and remounting again clasped her in his arms and bidding her sisters to follow and embrace embracing her a ll the way rode straight to general vivianin headquarters. All the soldiers who were on their way to the scene of action knew of the deed of violet and her sisters and a fanfare of trumpets was followed by a mighty roar from many thou ands of throats, succeeded by an outburst that was but little less than wild pandemonuim when the seas of wildly flutt ering flags appeared.

Violet and her sisters were overwhelmed. Thier minds seemed to be in a whirl all the time. They were fairly dazedly be theirpopularity with the masses, so much in fact that they could not bring themselves to think clearlyof the futire.

When they were brought before the great general and the great g chrstian ch chieftian heard the story his eyes dimpled with love and admiration.

''Violet and your sisters;''He began slowly and impressivlely;

''You six stand in the pren presence of this vast concourse of soldiers as the most beloved of all Angelinia.''

Dafening deafening a pplu applause halted the s e speaker for fully thre minutes;''You little girls are brought here to receive the greatest honor ever known. All of Angelinia takes this means of expressing its gratitude and great appreciation. Your names forever shall stand out brilliantly on our roll of honour it shall serve as an inspiration to the rising generations, o not every other nation that is friendly with Angelinia that admires all that is f good and heroines now in the name of the whole army I decorate you six with the cross of honour of Angelinia and offer a gallant prayr that all your woes will soon be past that you long after the war shall e enjoy ahappy life and that Angelinia and her people may occupy the warm spots in your pure harts that you monopolise in theirs.''

Then lifting her he pressed her close to his breast amid the deafening cheers heard everywhere and men struggled among them selves to get chances to hugr hug her and her sisters and at ties the crush became so greatthat officers had to intercede to keep the litt le girls and the general from being carried off their fet feee feet.

Just then an officer rushed up on his horse and shouted;;''
''The enemy is concentrating upcnus n in full force. It is general Mn ainnias army that is moving upon us.'''' ow he generals heart sank at this and he had been almost on the point of whip ing the olandelinians completely. The assault along Brances lines had by this time abated but nevertheless his columns were falling back abandoning the fields t o the enemy.
General vivianis was at first on the point of giving up hope but suddenly an idea struck him and setting Violet c down he said;
''Violet , you and your sisters done great bravery beofre. Would you little girls have courage enough left to race nothward and ask Weinstineto come to our support. It isdangerous I know for a bigger force of amarians are north of here.
Of course you can choose. If you refuse Igll simply have to send some one else.''
''We wil' go.''Said violet ;''But couldn't our friend Mr-wollester Starring go r a a, along for company, for to go alone would make it lonsome for me.''
''Anything you wish dear little girl. ((''And I'll send you a bunch of boy scouts as an aid.'' Violet and her sisters got the company they selectedand the whole troop started out quickly. It turned out however that there was no need to go an as the olandelinians had fallen back refusing to fin fight on. So the bat le was con sidered a drawn batle. A few days later news came that the armies under Hoemann and Bicknellain had ben crushed to pieces in a battle at Vivians Run but despite being surrounded the two leades had been victorious fighting their way out of the ring of christian soldiers and routing them for the distance of fourty miles.
But those routs had turned the tide for forces of Abbieanaians under Evans and Dane had come up to the rescue several danes later and these two olandelinian generals were finally forced to surrender. Again the christian nations had won an important vc victory and the two general s Evansand Dane had ben the c victors. Violet and he sisters of course did not know if this yet. General vivianis was almost impateient to tell them the news, as he loved to see them happy once more and decideto tell them at the first opportunity.He met them late that eveningwhen the armies were encamping near Meldonia and riding up to them sa di
''Violet and your sisters I have good news for you.''
''Good news!''Gasped violet;''From where!''
General Hoemann and Bicknell has surrendered their armies at Vivian Run, the news coming in early this morning by wireless.''
General Mro woro vivianis noticed a brightening in her face.
''Oh goody.''She cried;''Now the war will soon be over. Thank God, this is unexpected indeed.''
It was the first time that general Mors vivianis had seen her face so radient or saw her smile since she and he sisters had come to his armies.
''Oh general it makesme feel so happy, to hear that.''
Said violet;''When did they yeild!''
''Lateyesterday afternoon;''Saidthe general;' Hoemann is being brought here and you may see him if you like Ihave heard that you know him.''
''I'll be there and so m will my sisters.''Said Violet.
About eight oclock when they reached general vivianias tent Violet and her sisters saw two tall generals in gray standing by a tree in conversation with general Mors vivianis, and glancing at them shar ply she and her sisters recognized them as Hoemann and Bicknell. For a moment one little girls were mute with surprse and grow dark.....
''Iv'e come to beg pardon for all your n ering that the olandelinians may have caused you and want to say that were did not intend evil.''Said Hoemann with bowed head;''I'm heartly sorry for the past offenses of the olandelinians totward you and your sisters n and beg you to fog forgive me and to tel you that we surrendered not because we were forced to but to get out of the war which wer we were tired off.''''
''Oh happy day!.''Ma Moaned Violet;''Our prayes are peially ans wered dat last. Your excellancy general Hoemann.''She continued;8''Despite all the per secutions of the olandelinians I loved you and prayed for you fa day by day. As I and my sisters know that you were not Olandelinian butchers there is nothing to g forgive as the other olandelinians are mainly blamed for this and not you. I and my sisters are always suspected as spies when we were not, but then nevertheless we all know that the olandelinians would persecute us anyway whether we were spies or no spies. And if we were spies it would be a wickey murderous duty to punish child spiesby death anyhow.''
''They don't dod that because they suspect you as spies.''Said Hoemann;''Thy are heartless wicked men and persecuted you little girls to cause your ruin.Butif you little girls be careful they will not get a any profit outit of it and they will be humbled and pus punished instead. The olandelinians have even slew my own beloved ones and now they have caused my complete downfall by deserting me because I would not follow their horrible footsteps in massacre of children and so in rage we r and bicknell had surrendered. I ask forgiveness for my folly of fight ing against the christi ns which Iprobably did wrong to do an and I long for forgiveness.''''
''Well we will forgive you.''Said violet;''But if you two two are born olande/ landes inians you had a right to fight for your country but my other frinds you cannot see for they are dad dead.''And tears sprang to her eyes....

''I have some apolgies to make a/ n,s also.''Said Bicknell;''I probably have wronged you by fighting aga against your country and probably against God and wish to ask forgiveness. There is no , longer for any cause of enemity between us.''
''We forgive you also.''Said violet/;''But it was your duty if you thought the Angelinian cause was wrong. We f r forgive you with all our heart.''
She shook hands with the two great olandelinian gnerals no no now no more enemies of the Vivian girls and to prove their friendship with Nore vivianis they played a game of cards withhim and smashed their sabres to show that all was off in the war buisness for them.... When she and her sstrs were alone with starring the boy said;
''I'm glad they have repented. He and Bicknell had been ter ible enemies of our little girls before thisoccured for they hated you not because you were children or christians but because you as they believed took sides in the war against olandelinia..... But there is no general compard comparedto general Aronburg Raymond Richardson Federal and even to Tamerline. And theyare really the cause for your misery. Men like thm are not worth living..... They beat any butcher
I have ever heard off or read about. I do n't see how bloody villianious generals like them have such reckless bravery he. It is astonishing. They are worse than Tomas Federal.''''
General vivianis learned that general Aronbur f who was facing Tamerline at Helies Run was overwhelmed ten o one and not needing Weinstine now as he had con tinually recieved reinforcements hesent Weinsines great host to the aid of Aronburgand as Violet and her sisters loned to go with the boyscouts under her and her sisters she got the peri permit but a warning also to avoid Tamerline a much as possible. Federal and Tamsline were in a ter ible rage over the surrender of Hoemann and Bicknell and swore that they were deserers ata most critical time.
At the ap roach of Weinstines great army of Abbieannians Tamerlines army began a recede moving back tward the su southenst. Aronburg had about eleven million men and weinstine had about ninty million w ich made a chrision army of about one hundred million or at least one hundred and one mi lion. They consisted of Abbiennians, Abyssinkilians, Concentinians, Tripolitonlians Nomdobians and Angelinians ,en men from six six f different sectin sections of Angelinia. General weinstine and Aron urg were disappointed at Tamerlines refusal to fight though he had a force equal in size to that of thechristians and tried several times to force a battle but in vain. After a weks hard marching anfand suffering in the torrid heat of the east the two hostile armies one one reareating and the other persueing reached the vinicity of Jennie Wren own(Calverania) in the month of November of n anteen twelve and on the twenty fourth encamped. Tamerline had secured an unassailable position at Jennie Wren Town and general Weinstine dad no not wish to attack him for fear of disaster, though Tamerline challenged for a fight seven times.
In this region there was nothing in sight but a sea of ruin and desolation caused by the many reactions, and forest fires after the fighting at Maximillian un he ne. Thesesights made Violet violet and her sisters think of their losses all the more and many times in secret places they would weep in a breat broken way. It was on a sunday morning after attending t the army mass that staffring ma a most startling and bautiful sight. Violet and her sisters had been returning from mass all dressed in snowy white clothes and with a wreathe of white flowers around her head. Starring stood spellbound, gazing at them with wide open eyes..... He had never seen such dazzling beauty and he could not believe thatthey were real.
He felt overawed, felt as if he was in the pren presence of celestial beings in human form. Not far from them the soldiers were resting there was a mass of beautiful flowers but Sering declared to himself that there was no flower as beautiful as them. He had picked thebest flowers for Violet not expecting that her sisters would be so soon. Her sisters were glad to meet Sat Sa Starring and then violet 's sisters told him of an experience they had just the day before which violet and her had not known of just yet.
''Just yesterday there was a great great storm of fighting at Agathias sun and we almost got killed.''Said voice;''When Hansonias army withdrew from Agathis Run we had been transpotred by one of the generals to this army but nevertheless the batle is lost. A shell buried us in clods of dirt where we lay for hours before being rescued. We managed to keep from sufficating but forgot how we did it.''''
Seci securing a shady place Starring and the little girls sat down to have a talk. The day itself was scourching hot, but nwertheless there was a fair wind blowing that kept them comfortably cool., as long as they remained in the shade.
''How good it seems to be togethr again.''Said Violet;''Yet I wish this war was over.''''
''I too.''Said Starring;' But by the way do little girls have any idea of the danger in case of being caught by Tamerline. He and Federal are the cheif heads of thelandelinian armies now.''''
''Yes .''Said voice;''I have heard of this a few days after the change. But we should worry. It will be us if that will get him if he ain't careful. He and Tamerline are wanted you know. ''

''BUT i HAVE HEARD THAT HIS ARMY IS MIXED JUST LIKE OURS.''

''There are quite a number of different kinds of Glandelinians.U'Said Starring;'' ''Theyare the condennecianc's Omarian Kurds, Omarian Curdes, McFollestinians, Amerolcians, Rorhonians and Gargolianians's.'''

''Our army s is much larger than Tamerlines I think.''Said Violet;''I wondr o wonder if we went out scouting we would se their arrangement .''?

I'''I don't think so.''Said eat Starring;''Though we have a cleverer ability than they. And besides we stare too far away as yet and their lines can't be seen without a powerful field ss glass....''

''I know th at.''Said ennie;''It was in repelling his as ault at Agathis nun that one of our bst friends died and whom we always called our uncle too.''Said Joice.''His name was Gannon Procule.''''

''But is it is strange that he did not die in the oths big battles so four furio sly fought.''Said Angeline bitterly;''I wonder how he came to be killed killed? It was very unusual.''

As he gazed upon violet's sister- he noticed to his surprise that they were en shrouded in a pale whitish light while a strange beautiful fragr fragrance came d from their snowy white gowns. Starring was spell bound with awe and wonder/ t the little girls having the most spirut s spiritual eyes he had ever seen aband they looked so wistful that he could hardly r resist from clasping them to his arms but refrained from the awe of thinking tha perhaps they were really celestial children and their voices were so sweet that theyoverawed th him..... He indeed did fel. feel that he was in t e presence of the celestian ,ivian girls and was on the imu impulse of falling to hisknee knees when again he refrained knowing the that he must do it to God only. However he was so awed and moved that for several minutes he could not speak anv more. He watched them , expecting them to suddenly fade into empty air.

Suddeny a fimilar officer rode up and ann uncing;

''Starring;BGneral ivian has announced to me by letter to order you sir to protect his daughters at any costs untill their other friend Jack Evans can reach their domiangs again. The great war as he fears will soon reach its supreme fury and their dangers may soon be supreme also.... He com ands you also not to say much about their bravery in the battle of Maximillian to no one as this must be kept secret. Will you promish that?''''

''Yes to your excellency I firmly promish, but why should not I tell any one a bout their brave deads, when it would be known anyway.?''

''It is for this reason Jack ollester Starring. Tamerline and Federal who just now are ignorant of the fact will be shocked when it spreads to him and knowing that they are responisible for the christian success at Maximillian, these two rascals would exert all in his power to bring on their sure ruin. Those fairl fair creatrue creatures are loved greatly by God, and he will consider you as a e a fa s false g a guardi n if you allow this news to spread and it will be a Sacrelegious sin.''

Answered starring as he faced the officer angrily;

II ''If that is the case.''

''I'll tell no one, but one being if Tamerline learns of it without my fault I'll kill the damn fool before he lay's a hand on their heads. But to insure their safty I&ll keep quiet about it and not say a word.''

''Very we ll then.'' Said the officer;''I like the way you put that and I can se that you are indeed indeed Tamerline's deadliest enemy. The kinds you are to Violet and her sisters the more God will reward you .''And with this he was off.

''You bet I&ll keep my promish.''He said to himself with a terrible fiendish look; ; Ha any one harm them? Ha harm those fo flowers and I'll make him wish that he had jum ped into he ll.''

He went back to whee thelittle girls sat playing a game among themselves with flowers;''They indeed resembled celestial children and sitting among them he said;

''You little flowers had me in a trunch for a while as you indeed looked more like celestial beings in your snowy white gowns and he dariningly but with a trobling heart drew one of them to he him mbracingand kissing her with tears in his eyes.....

''What lovely creatures they are indeed.''He thought to himself as he wasembracing two of them together;''And they are so cute in their ways. I feel now as if I could tear my heart out for them.''

S That night Starring was still as affected by his first real and long presence with the little girls and could not sleep. He laid down on he veranda of the headquarters of the two cheif gnerals and had lain there for q quite a while; when he hard something precipitateitself to the floor while a shocking crash / followed by a brutal;

''OH CURSES ON THE BLOOMING LUCK.''

Looking toward one of the windows he saw a fin figure in a richly dressed gray dressed grav uniform trying to get in. Beside the window lay a stature which had fallen being the cause of the noise. Starring was up in a moment and picking up the broken fragments of the religious sta ture hurled them at the intruder and then made a rush, and what chance had the rascl in the hands of such a powerful assailants like Starring though he was only a lad of only fourten years.

The intruder who ever he was was borne to the floor in a moment shouting and cursing with great vehemence.

''SHUT UP YOU FOOL FOOL OR I'LL PUT / BULLET INTO YOU.''Said starring wrapping his shet around his victims legs and tying it fast. He then took the pillow covering off and secured his hands.

''Now stay there. 'He said curtly;''If you make a move I'll kill you like a dog you sneaking a spy.''''

At this moment the two generals and the little girls appeared.''

''Oh is that you Staring.''Gasped Jennie;''What are you doing out here and who broke the stature of the Sacred Heart ?'''She added Reproachfully.

''It must have ben that which made the crash.''Said Violet.

''I got a prisoner here general if you would like to se e see him.''Said Starring. It is he who broke the stature.''

''I see not what made the noise and the swearing.''Said Joice;''My but it was a crash and did you get hurt.?''

''Not a bit. I got snaken up though.''

Turning to general Weinstine he said;

''I caught this fellow sneaking in through the window. I don't n know what his intentions were but I got him just the same.''

Weinstine had alight with him and with tthis he looked over the prisoner.

''It's Germainia Vivian our brother.''Gasped Violet while her sisters t r turned pale;''he is a spy: Oh god.''

''Why were you sneaking in that way ?''Asked general Weinstin e furious over being aroused at such an hour;''What was your purpose?''

'' The prisoner did not answer but scowled fiercely at the ..ivian girls.

''Speak up or I&ll shoot you like a dog.''Said Weinsine leveling a revolver:

''You have got to a nswer or die lie like a cur.''

''It is none of your infernal buisnes what I was doing here.''Answered the prisoner in a sacartistic manner;''I wasn't going to harm kids.''

General Weinstine ordered an orderly to bring a squad of soldiers then turning to the prisoner he said;

''You will be burned at the stake and will learn a good good lession my man not to spespeak to any one like you have done.''Said Weinstine fiercely; ''I don't care what your atempt was but for the attempt of spying and probally for murdering and I&m going to wire him of your capture and what occured to you after you got some body also. You seem to be the traitorous son of his excellency general ..ivian caught. You will get your punishment you good for nothing traitor.''

''You are a big liar if you say I&m his son.''Said the prisoner ;''I'm not g Germainia ,ivian.''

General Weinstine did not say anything to this, and after a few minutes passed the soldiers came upon the verad veranda and the prisone was unbound and dragged roughly to his feet and marched off.

''I'm very glad you did this Starring.''Said Aronburg;''He may have in tended to do something else than spying. What window was he trying to get in?''

The win ''The window opening to the roomwhere violet and her sisters are sleeping:''I heard a crash, a strange shuffling noise and a curse uttered, and glancing toard the window saw some one trying to get in. He did not succeed though.''

And starring laughed.

''It is funny he did not see you.''Said Weinstine.

''I was in a dark corner of the veranda.''Said starring;''If he did see me he must have thought that I was sound al asleep and so did not tackle me first.''

''how did you overpower him?''Asked Aronburg.

''Very easily.''Said starrying;'' 'I struck him with the fragments of the statue which partly stunned him. The rest was easy. I had him down in a moment though he tried to show fight, and made a lot of noise.''

''Yes I heard the shouting and cursing.''Said Weinstine;''We both did or we would not have been out here so quickly.''

''Well we had better telegraph to general vivian what happened.''Said general Aronburg;' Thank you Starring ever so much. You surely are a guardian of the ivian girls.''

''You are welcome.''Said starring;''Those clandelinians would have t o kill me before they could get at them.''

The generals went inside and Starrin examined an instument which he had picked up by the by the window. A thrill of horror went through him.

''Oh God .''He gasped;''If I had fallen asleep the little girls would have been found dad in themorning. This clandelinian was no spy. He came with intentions of a murder as he had something here that the Omarian Kurd savages use to crush thethroats of their victims.''

All at once he realized the intention of the intruder. He had intended to murder thelittle girls in cold blood. At this moment he was startled by a noise near him and saw the little girls still stunding thereeying him in bewilderment and surprise that he noticed them not. He was so surprised thathe could not speak. But he managed to condceal the dangerous thing he found.How lovely they looked as they stood there in their snowy gowns and long curly golden hair. Their brilliant beuty made his heart leap and he could not help drawing them one by one to his heart and embracing them. When he embraced violet he felt as if he had something very precios precious in his arms and loathed to let her go and he could have almost sworn that he was among the prettiest angels o all. In his awe Starring dropped the strangling instrument and Angeline noticing it picked it up. To her b ithed thestrape of a color of peculiar rubber and she expanding it to the width of a foot ro nf round was about to place it around her neck to see how it fitted when all of a sudden Eva ns snatched it from her.

''For God's sakes Angeline.''He gasped horror stricken;''Do you want to get killed? That thing wou d wouldmangle your neck. It is a strangling implement u ed used by alsndelinians and if this once tightned around your neck you would nve neve get it off and it cannot be cut. This hing is alive and would crush the strongest neck of a prize fighter .''

''It's a good thing I snatched it from you or you would have died of torture. '

''But where did you get the thing, and what are you going to do with it?''Asked Joice.

''Use it as evidence.''Said Starring;;''I found it by the window wherethe intruder was.''

Starring went into the room with themand under the glareof three lights showed them the dangerous intr intr instrument which worked of it self. It indeed proved to be alive though it shaped like a rubber color for it squirmed and sometimes twisted. To test it he placed it aro nd theneck of a statur statue of a lit le girl and at first though it semed to turn a little smaller he did not break the neck but he had to shatered the whole statue t to pieces to get theinstrument free from it again. Violet and her sisters at once realized t that if it had not been for starring they would have m met a horrible death.

''It is a surprise he did not snap it around your neck when you attack ed him.''Said Jennie;''But perhaps he did not have thecn chance. And I wondw wonder why he wanted to kill us who arehis dearest sisters.?''

''I'll soon find out.''Said starring;''I'll take this before the council as evidence and scare him into confession ly threatening to place it around his neck. Nothing can shock any one as cruelly a s this instrument and I believe the threat will make him con fess.''

General ivian in reading the message of the captuing of his son and of t the mans attempt general ivian returned this answer/;

''If you have hi I would have advised you not to send him to me who has so deeply sinned. I would never look into his face, and I shall---I shal shall strike him down wit with my sabre if yo ever did send him to me when you captured him. He is a traitor no matter what birth he is and it is we ll if the world was rid of him. But you have not Germania vivian for thatgeneral is confronting me no , but only some man who probably resembles me agood deal. But whoever that man is let him tread as speedy lea has punishmat he get quick. Let theprisoner be shot at sunrise.And le shall have one night in which to make peace with his God. His body shall be torn to peives pieces by the dogs and his stripes shal be stripped from his uniform and burned. A hundred thousand dollards are offioered to any one who captures and punishes any man attempting any e eilto the Vivian girls dead or a live. And men are hunting in al directions for such men. He must recieve the deserts of a bloodcurdling murderer.''

General vivian . In southern Angelinia.'''

Starring and the little girls swent to the hearing of the trial and when the prisoner was brought before the general acting as judge/Starring showed him the in strulment and told what it was for. The general examined it carefully and gave a low cry. Then turning sternly on the prisoner he demanaded;

''Tell me sir; what you was going to do with -er-er---er---er this--er what do you k call it, the--the--the strangler?''''''''''''''''''''

The prisoner remained silent.

''TELL ME, OR THIS GOES AROUND YOUR NECK.''And the judge made a move as if to carry out his threat.

''I wanted to kill the Vivian girls.''He answered sullenyl;''I like to se how kids act when they are strangled. I like to see their tongues protrude.''

''Oh is that the reason.''Said the judge sarcastically;''And so you attempted it on your own sisters;''Why did you not dispose of your guardian first if you was so anxious t o see how children acted when shocked.?''

This brought a roar of laughter from all the other generals.

''He's a nut.''Cried one.

''Answer my question.''Thundered the general acting as jug judge.

''I did not see their guardian. I intended to do it first thinking he was in the room with them.''

''And why was you going to dispose of him and how was you going to do it?''

''I intended to dispose their guardian so as to render t them without protection as I inked to carry them a before di doing it t. them.''

''Why did r you not a want to do it right away?''

''Because r wanted to take them to Tamerline after I had disposed off their clothes.''

''What take off their c, clothes? Who gave you orders to do this , and why?''

''Tamerline have me the order as he wished to see themovements of their muscles as they writhed in their torture.''

''Where was g Tamerline going to send them after performing this bloody deed.?''

''In the ravine where the Aronburg child had been slain.''

''You don't say?''

''Yes your excellency.''

''And where is that ravine?''

''At the bast of Mt Calverine.''

Ahem. Are you telling me the truth?''

Yes your excellency.''

''Is that the orgue for the murdered victims?''

''No a hiding l place.''

A ''And why is that used as a hiding place. Does the fool believe that the bodies are save from being discovered?''

''They were safe untill I confessed.''

''What was Tamerline going to do when you had killed the Vivian girls?''

''Clean out their bode bodies, cut them to pieces and lave them in the ravine to rot.''

''Why did you accept to do such a o horrible bloodcurdling crime.?''

''I was forced to do it. I'd die anyway.''

''What is your name?''

''Toney Angelonie. ''

''WHAT?''

T ''Toney Angelina.''

''TONEY ANGE LONIE? YOU ARE LYING.''

''My name i is mone Ane Angelonie.''

''I SAY YOU ARE LYING!''

''I'M NOT.''

''YOU ARE.''

''No your excellency Iamnot. I'mne to brotner of those vivian girls. Their brother is at Mt Manley.''

''I believe you are Toney Angelonie after all.''Said t the general;''You are wanted in many nations for ruthless murders of children. But you will be punished by us. If you was going toplace this instrument around one of their necks when that child died how was you gi going to get it off to putit on the other.''?

''It let's go after the victim expires.''

''Have you any confederates prowling around with you to try to do what you have failed?''

''Yes fifteen hundred and they will get the kids yet I can guarntee by the name of God.''

''How many have you killed in this way?''

''About one hundred and twenty seven.''

''How is it thatyou dod not wish to take them and cut them t to pieces yourself?''

''I'm not allowed or otherwise I would do it.''

''Supposing God's wrath would have decended upon you by making the volcanoe break all of a sudden intoctin and overwhelm you with lava. What do you sup posed would have come ly way of the mountian. And what is the matter with the mountian. Is she all right.''

''She's a volcano.''

''Are you sure and can you prove it?''

''I am d sure and can prove it.''

''Then why does you and Tamerline use this dangerous ravine so near to he base and just where the worse worse torrent ot of rock matter is liable to floe during an eruption?''

''Because no one would know of the deed.''

''But God does and I'm surprised that he let's you and Tamerline go on the way t o you two do. Now as I know your reason for your ate p attempt it makes it all the harde for you. Your attempt has been as bad as a crime, as if you had succe ded in doing it. Those little Vivian girls have not had a happy day since the war began, and you had no pity on them. T It is the law of this countrythat the intended victims of a prisoner cu could get him pardonse if they wished to do so. But though T have the permission myself and though they perhaps pity and forgive you a I cannot let you go as God forbids pardon on any one attempting, or succeeding in he rming the vivian girls and it would be a Sc acrelege to pardon. General Vivian has ordered your execution by sunrise to morrow by being shot, but o o you shall be crucified, and then shot andhung.''And the general said the last words with a growl that frose the words on the lips of othe attent atending officers.''I hate to pronounce such a sentence but us Angelinians always crufi crucify for a Sacregl Sacrelegious attempt, successful or unsuccessful/ without absolute atonement ,and by your manners in answering my questions I know you arecnly in a rage because you failed. NowToney you are safe from such a horrible death by both crucific crucifixionand gun fire t to morrow at sunrise if you promish to atone.''

''I will never atone.''Said thep isoner scowling;''I'm in realty a Concentinin and if I'm condemned to death concentinia will revolt against you.''

''That is a lie.''Shouted an officer who was a concentinian;''He is no concentinain he is a hurd.''

''His sentence is crucifixion.''Thundrd the general;''Away with him.''

''But sir''I have a longer trial.''Asked theprisoner in scorn.''? Striking the general a blow that felled him to the floor;''If not I.ll killyou. You will have to givelonger trials for those who commit sacrelegicus deeds wit whether you like it or not.'

Then theprisoner made a bolt for the window.

Fourteen generals rushed at him with a roar but three were kic knocked down and before he was overpowered he was overpowered and led away he killled another another.

''He is a fiendish man sure enough.''Said Starring to violet and her sisters;

''You heard what he confessed. It was you children he was after but heintended to do away with me first so as to render you without protection so that he could get at you six little girls. He did not see me on theLunk of the veranda and suspecting, thatI was in the same room with you he tied to get in when I nailed him. After dispathing me he was going to carry you faries one by one to Tamerline who would kill you with thestrangler, open your bodies and throw you into the ravije where he said the Aronbug child lay.''

Violet and her sisters were shocked at the words.

''I wish he had not atempted such a thing.''Said violet;''I hope he will atone to avied the dreaded sentience.''

He and the little girls now left the council room. That afternoon he and the little girls were having some fun on a flower strewn meadow pelting each other with flowers playing hide and go seek, and racking each other, when suddenly a squad of brilliantly uniformed glandelinians came upon them. Violet and her sisters were nearest to the watery edge. A snee-kin Starring who spoke of running in to escape the approaching enemy.

''No don't do it.''Said violet looking at the sandy bottom suspicicusly/''I don't like the looks of the sand.''

Starring gave just one look and could almost sanid the same thing. The sand was very fine, finer than ordinary sandand the seven edged away with a feeling of apprehension. They were between two dangers. The quicksands and the enemy. ''I wonder if it really is quicksand;''Said Staring anxiously;''I don't appappear to move.''

''I know.''Said violet;''And it don't move either but is quiet and still. Itir It is very fine sand and I hear a distinct sucking sound.''

''Let's test it anyway.''Said starring; 'We could throw throw something into it into it and if it sinks through then it is quicksand.''

Starring picked up a good sized stone as he spoke and going to the edge he thrrw threw it in. He had seen where the stone lines were before.''

''It is quick sand sure enough.''He said anxiously;''How are we going to get away before they see us.''

At this moment Starring found himself caught in the quicksand having been too near the edge. At this part the sand was more firmer and he could not sink very fast though it held him like a vise. The united efforts of the little girls had him out however and on firmer ground.

''My goodness Starring but we were scared:''Said Violet st to Starring;

''We at first thought that you wwe lost.''

''I'm surely thankful that you were not caught.''Said Starring;''If I were to lose such dear littlefaries like you I could feel like jm jumping into it.''

''Oh don't say that Jack.''Said Violet;''We are not so important as that.''

''Sure you are.''Said Starring;''You are the dearest little angels I have ever seenun.''And forgetting about the enemy he embraced them all once more.''

For a moment he had made them happy and they rewarded him by hugging him in return.''

Oh you Blessed Darlings.''He cried pressing them closeand kissing them; on on the neck as well as on the face. ''For this is return of love you have made a greater friend han ever.''

Then remembering the danger he looked around but to his surprise the troopers were Angelinians Weinstine at the head.Feir uniforms were so dust laden that they seem assumed a gray color at a distance. There was tears in Weinstines eyes but he passed on without a word the troopers following. The little girls continued their games and had lots of fun with Starring al pelting him with flowers untill they were all tired out. With these six little fairesand with all the flowers growing around it seemed to starring asiif he was in heaven, and for a time he forrot about the grim war. He remembered when he first saw them and how beautiful they were then. He was happy indeed that he had them with him and now as he had them all along it was even better. Their beauty to him was da zzling and and as they sat around him he felt so awedthat he did not touch them for fear of thesupernatral....

Indeed the most strange things can happen to even the best and the worst ofus.There is no one in the world who escapes misfortunes, or hwho has any hopes to do so or good and band incidents of any kind.And no matter whether we like it or not, all comes to us in the proper time, and some of the misfortunes neveeleave.It is so also in this case with many of the heroes and heroines in this great Glandico-Abbieannian war of the rebellion.Therefore I'll bring to light one of the probable most astounding experience's of the vivian girls during the whole war.

It happened just a day before the battle of big girl Knool seen in following chapter when the two monsterous opposing armies were already concentrating between Wittens Necherts and the Big Girl Knool road. Suspecting that the enemy was much stronger in force and had better positions than general Vivian Vivianonne ever expected to have and having warned the christian general it was no place for him or his officers to fight a battle in, violet and her sisters decided to go out witha strongly armed platoon of boy andgirl scouts and three Abbieannian soldiers.The generals of course opposed their intentions, declaring that the advanture would be far more dangerous than any they ever had since the great war began, but the seven Abbieannian princesses did not desire to have a disaster come to so well known an Abbieannian army under the two vivian generals and therefore when their mind was once made up nothing could prevent them from going.

They felt sure it wasto be somewhat a ticklish ave af adventure but they had no intentions whatever to run too great a risk, and to cover the move they intended to make they had the platoon of boy and girl scouts, and the three soldiers accompanying them.when they set out that November day, the weather was damp and cold,,, and stormy with wet snow falling heavily at about an inch or so an hour and laying a thic thick deep watery slush.A high raw raw wind of fourty five mile an hour velocity was then blowing, and for the vivian girls it was was indeed a very bad to be going out on such an adventure but duty called and it had to be done no matter what the weather was.And they were used to all sorts of weather, and when clothed properly enough and wearing their thick thick boots they did not mind it at all.

On this occasion to approach the enemy's line in such a heavy snow storm they had to be slow and careful.All of the party were disguished as usual and were on the best and swiftest horses they could secure.One thing that violet and her sisters regretted was that Marco Schoefield Penros and his boy companion called''the rattlesnake was not with them. But they were too far away to be called calledupon just then.

Violet and her sisters had no intentions of entering the enemy's lines nor going any where near it.They intended to go just within view of it as much as the falling shroud of snow allowed from the top of some high foot hill and see what they could from above.They hoped the snow storm would not increase any more or other wise the shroud being thicker would spoil their view entirely.

After an hours slow plowing travel they came within the faint view of gener Manleys army,,, which was already in its various positions.Not far away was a high rise of groundand to the summit of this the party laboriously made its way.From that height while looking below they could see thecountry for many miles around and observe the entire formation of the enormous rebel army already prepared for a diresome conflict.A large section of the Glandelinian army could be seen coming from the distant towns of Little Girl Knool and Chamberlane, and it appeared to be either general Fedderals or Icknells command..

If all on the party were all right(have a fight) nothing wrong would have happened and this would not need to have been written. But one of the three soldiers who accompanied the vivian Girls was a foriegner of probably spanish birth.There was nothing wrong with his Natuonality and he was not against the Angelinian or Abbieannian cause.Far be it. The trouble about him was that he was''YELLOW'' or in other words a coward.He had however been in the Abbieannian army a long time but had only once been in a battle and escaped from duty on the firing line by purposely wounding himself and nothing of it had been inflicted by the enemy.As beautiful as the vivian girls are and as much as he might have loved even the homeliest of children even, he had been very reluctant to accompany them on this expedition because he was terribly afraid.Every bush that moved, the swaying of brah branches and the like seemed to his frightened gaze to be caused by a mill on million Landelinians..Even now as the party viw viewed the scenes, from above,, he was shivering from fright and violet noticing it said;

''Are you cold sir?''?''

His answer was''yes yes your "ajesty'' and she saw to it that an extra blanket was placed around him.Yet he was not as cold as he seemed, and as he viewed the distant lines of the grey, the sights of so many frowning batteries dimly seen in the snow murk, and the appearance of so many Glandelinian soldiers struck him so cold with terror. Finally believing they were yet too far toview the rebel linrs accurately, especially as the snow was increasing in intensity, the vivian girls decided to go about about half a mile nearer,, and therefore the party started down the side of the hill.They reached the base in half an hour and twarded off tward the foe lines, the coward of course straggling behind.Indeed the coward followed reluctantly but had been the last to go and just now being interested over the adventure the others did not notice his strange conduct.This time they were in the low lands, which unknown to the party was scoured continually by the Ga Gargoylian and Scoulder scouting parties which were out trying to watch the movements of the christian ar i armies or to look for the chance of a squabble with a scouting party of christian soldiers.The party of children and the three men had only advanced a very short distance when from somewhere there was the sudden sharp loud reports of rifles and two shots killed the horse that violet was riding.

It threw her headlong into a little ditch as h it fell. Looking tward where the shots come from the foriegner observed bearing down slowly upon the party a whole platoon of strangely uniformed men on swift horses.They wore the long greenish gray uniform coats of the fierce Turmerra Turmerra Turmerannians or Guarians, but had white trousers and large queer hoods over their heads, not peaked topped but straight.

Violet clam bering out of the ditch was helped onto voices horses and for a moment the party did not know whether to make a stand or retreat.suddenly they noticed that one of the three soldiers was missing and then one of the girls observed a flying horse and figure almost out of sight in the snow murk.A number of shots was fired at him but did not take effect.however they realized the foriegner had deserted them in time of peril.Nothing was said about it just now, the sole purpose was to elude the advancing column of Gargoylian troopers and therefore they rode off seperating as widely as possibble possible.There wascno difficulty however in escaping their persuers and the whole party with only the loss of one horse reached the christian camp safe and sound.Thier mission had however failed and a disgraceful incident had to occur too. To be deserted by a soldier whom violet and her sisters had trusted on an adventure had that had no serious perils after all.The first thing the princesses did when they returned and dismissed the rest of the party was to order the generals to issue an order to all the guards and soldiers to arrest a Spainard in purple uniform should he return to the lines, and to also have large scouting parties of Concentinian and Abyssinkilian cavarly men scour all outside grounds for him should he fail to return. Knowing his name, age, height and so on, and having his finger prints and other means of identification they hoped to capture him as soon as possible.

Indeed all the generals were hot headed over the affair and believed it to be the most unusual and disgraceful incident of the whole war.To desert the vivian Girls.Thiswas something far beyond what had ever been expected.It could not hardly be believed.Why in nearly all cases the very appearance of violet and her sisters was enough to inspire every one to accomplish the bravest deeds possible and to greate the greatest of enthusism.And what had they done that they should be deserted!

At first when all the high generals and officers heard s that some soldier deserted the vivian girl Princesses through sheer cowardice they at first thought the vivian Girls were just day dreaming about it, but when the testimony camr from all those who had accompanied the little princesses on the adventure and it was found the man was really missing from the ranks,, thwy were all flabbergasted and angry and every means was immediately taken to have the deserter captured.Violet and her sisters were wild over their experience for to them it seemed to be the worst of all their trials.They shut themselves up alone in their own room and consulted together over the incident.They however knew that once he was captured they themselves could not even save the man from facing the firing squads.But the hours went by and to their grief and dismay he was not found.Then the Gemini was sent after him but they too could find no trace of him.Where he went k no one knew but they are sure h he v never dared to enter the foe lines.Neverthele neverthe ess violet and her sisters decided that after the coming battle was over they themselves would try and trail him and capture him themselves dead or alive.

CHAPTER TWELVE.

UNUSUAL INCIDENTS BEFORE THE BATTLE AT BIG GIRL KNOLL.

By the recent fierce activies of the christian armies up to now as previously stated Penrod much against his will, and also to the surprise of his sisters had been far seperated from them, and though they had missed him, and he them he nevertheless had felt that they were safe from the enemy, and indeed had he seen the brave deeds they had done he would have been surprised and would have admired and loved them much more.On these days however he was nearer to them, than they supposed, and he knew where they were too and was on his way to them. As he came near to the army in which were confronting the army of Manley near Big girl Knoll a soldier rode up to him and with a sad look on his face said-

"Sire I'm sorry to have to shock you but I have very bad news for you.Your darling sisters while out scouting on the enemy this morning has been deserted by a Foriegner, and they escaped it seems only from capture by a miracle. It was a most astonishing thing Sire, and the whole army has already heard of it and can cannot believe its ears."

"Ha,ha,ha,ha"heartily laughed Penrod."Up to your jokes again sh ganford. Come why don't you go over to them and make them laugh.The least thing does, they're so full of mirth."

"I am not fooling nor is it a joke sire"protested the man gravely"Our blessed Lord himself understands it all.A spanish fellow deserted them this morning.They're dreadfully upset about it.Please go to them.You have been so long from them your return could make them happy."

"Penrods brow now darkened.He saw the man was serious. But My God how could it be.

"Listen my friend "said Per Penrod."That seems impossible. Who in the world would desert them the most dearest and most lovely and good little girls on earth.I'm afraid"and he patted the man on the shoulder in a friendly manner "I am afraid you only had a bad dream last night."

"No sire"I didn't.You could even see for yourself.And surely they would not decieve you even for a jest."

Something seemed to cause Penrod to take notice for in reality a strange voice seemed to whisper in his right ear-"It is so Penrod.I'm Violet's possession angel."She and her sisters were deserted by a cowardly foriegner."

"Take me to where they are" said Penrod decidedly."I wish to converse with them alone."

The soldier led the way.Penrod was thinking seriously over the suv ject subject and suspected that something surely was wrong. Anyman who surely could would deserted such children as violet and her sisters surely must be the Son of Satan.Never had this ever happened before.All other sufferings they had undergone, persecutions and everything he had heard of but this was surely the worst yet.Finally after they had gone a short distance Penrod demanded;

"Did they ever catch the deserter!"

"No Curses on the luck they didn't.Every cavarly man is searching for him. It is evident he didn't go to the foe lines for his cowardlyness wouldn't let him.He's at large some where."

"Does any of the chief girlscout leaders and others Know about it!"

"They certainly do.Angelinia Aronburg and also Jennie Turner, nay all the regiments of child scouts are dreadfully upset about it. It was dreadful and violet and her sisters are so broken up about it they refuse to me be seen." Didn't my sisters go out with any child scouts besides the cavarly soldiers!"

"Yes.It was little Jeans Jean saunders command. She'll tell you all about it!"

"What was the deserters name.Do you recall his description!"

"I can describe the man but as his name that I am not acquainted with.He is rather tall, ll lithe, has a small mustachio and wore a pair of eye glasses. His nose is rather large and his face puts me in mind of a rat."

"Well if I get my hands on him"said Pen o Penrod"I'll---I'll---he couldn't finish.

"There was a moments pause and then he said;

"What caused the man to desert."!

"A party of Glandelinian horsemen were racing toward them.As what Jean said Violet was thrown into a ditch when her horse was shot from under her..It was at that moment that the villain deserted them."

Penrod said no more.He continued on, urging his horse a little faster, and wondering why in the world it should be snowing so hard at this critical time. and wondering why in the world it should be snowing so hard at this critical time. It seemed nature was against him and his sisters, and helping the deserter.

Though he was outwardly calm, the story of the desertion hurt him equally as much as it did Violet and her sisters. He couldn't understand how it could have happened. For all things they didn't deserve, they deserved this disaster far the more less. Inwardly he raged. He cursed the luck that brought it that the snowstorm itself probably was causing the men to escape without being found, and in his heart believed the devil was shielding the coward to cause Violet and her sisters---------suddenly he drew his pistol. Halt there" he suddenly called Halt there I say you or I shoot."

His companion Sandford glanced at Penrod aghast and saw his leveling his pistol at a man suddenly standing in the middle of the road way with hands uplifted and who was trembling like a leaf. Penrods face turned white with horror. He recognized the man as the very deserter. No doubt having been lost in the snowstorm he came into the christian lines without seeing where he was going. It goes to show that those that do Violet and her sisters harm have no luck in any way.

"Come here you cringing coward" yelled Penrod. "Sanford bind his hands behind him."

Sandford had obeyed. "Shall I mount him on my horse." ?

"Of course not" snapped Penrod. "He'll walk. Fasten this rope to him oso he cannot cannot make a break."

Sanf Sandford obeyed right willingly.

"I hope sire you're not going to bring them before your poor sisters?"

"Ha I should say not. I insult them that way. Forward march you, and mind don't try anything. I ought to shoot you any way but I need all the bullets I got. Has he any weapons on him sandford."

"No. I searched him. I guess he's too scared to use any weapon."

"Well we'll bring him to camp."

After a twenty miles trip, they finally reached the Vi camp where Violet and her sisters were. In the meantime Angelinia Aronburg and Angeline Richee were within her own h a headquarters tearfully conversing over the terrible blow to violet and her sisters, when one of the sentries said;

"Missie Aronburg Penrod is coming down the company street. He's got Mr sandford with him, and they have a prisoner."

"A prisoner!"

"Yes. And they have him roped to the saddle of the horse. They have made him trot behind the horse all the way, while Penrod watched him."

Angelinia Aronburg and Angeline Richee came outside and disgr disregarding the snow pouring down about them saw him riding up through the snow fog.

Angelinia Aronburg gasped.

"It's that deserter" she cried. "They've got him."

Penrod rode up to Angelinia Aronburgs tent.

"where's Jean Saunders?" he asked.

"She's inside her tent down the road a short ways." said Angelinia Aronburg. Angeline Richee was too dumfounded to even say a word. "She's been weeping all morning since the Vivian Girls were deserted. It's a shame" she finished vehemently with a stamp of her foot and glancing scornfully at the prisoner."

"Well he's captured. Ran across our path." said Penrod.

"Shall we send for Jean?"

"No I will ride down to her tent." where's Jennie Turner my friend?"

"She is with Violet and her sisters trying to comfort them. They've been crying most bitterly."

"Well" said Penrod, "both of you do me a nice favor. Go to their headquarters and do what you can for them. Don't say I'm in camp. I want to surprise them."

"Going to bring the prisoner there?" said Angeline Richee plaintively.

"I should say not" said Penrod vehemently. "I wouldn't dirty the steps of their headquarters with his foul feet. I'll soon show him what it is to drag their hearts into the dust. Hurry along. I'll be there as soon as I see Jean."

They ha t hastily donned their uniforms on and rode for the headquarters of Violet and her sisters while Penrod and sandford continued on their way with the prisoner. He complained of being tired and his feet cold but they didn't pay no attention to him whatever. In f if teen minutes they reached jeans tent. Penrod heard her sobbing inside, and the sentry admitted she was almost heartbroken. The guard didn't question Penrod about the prisoner as he recognized him and scowled awfully at him.

"I'm going into the tent" said Penrod. Bring the skunk with you."

Jean heard these words and was astonished as she had not heard Penrod was in camp. But when she saw him and Sandford enter with the prisoner her face turned white. She stared at the prisoner as if she couldn't hardly believe her eyes and then at Penrod as if she was also domfounded at him oo.

"yes I captured the yellow dog" said Penrod. "He ran across my path as I was coming into this camp. Were you with Violet and her sisters my dearest little angels when this yellow coward deserted them."

"Yes," she sobbed I was. He ran away when they were in peril."

"That's all I wanted to hear. Sit down you." to the prisoner.

The prisoner slowly but reluctantly obeyed.

For a full two minutes Penrod stood at the opening looking out of the door silent but brooding. Then he turned and faced the prisoner.

"What made you desert the Princesses?"

"I----I--- was scared."

"Scared of the Glendelinian cats eh you dirty yellowdog. You are a Foriegner are you not?"

"I---I --am. I'm---

"Need not tell me what you are. How did you get into the army?"

"I got in my enlistment."

"I don't believe you. You must be telling lies. If you are a scardy cat you had no business entering the army. It's a lot of red tape for a foriegner to get into your army and you know that. Do you know who I am?"

"I think ---think you're the highest leader of the Christian boyscouts---and--- and--- "

"I'm more than that" said Penrod very sharply "I'm the brother of the little Princesses you so cowardly deserted. What do you think of that?"

The man was too aghast to say anything. The brother of violet and her sisters, the boy prince who is so dangerous to the enemy. He that boys prisoner. All the cowardly nature showed in him, and he literally shivered in his chair.

"It's too rotton a weather to botner hanging you to day" said Penrod tauntingly "but to morrow you'll do the sunset dance. We hang deserters. You'll get your trial this afternoon but I know there is no hope for you."

"You are a prince please save me oh please do. Please don't let the soldiers hang me." screamed the cowardly man.

"You have deserted my sisters in time of peril and beg me to save you." said Penrod. "Ha never. Sandford see to it he is in the prison tent under heavy guard. See to it he is handcuffed so he cannot escape. We'll see what his fate really will be. I'm going to see and comfort my sisters. Jean please for Heavens sake stop sobbing and come with me to their headquarters. Forget it. He'll be punished. I know it is an awful blow but those rats don't get far."

Poor Jean was brave and tried to dry her tears but it was hard to stop sobbing she felt so bad.

As they were preparing to go Penrod said;

"Listen jen Jean try and cheer up. I appreciate your sorrow over their misfor tune for that shows how you sure love them, but I don't want them to see you crying for it'll only be worse for them and we must cheer them. I'd rather feel as I do than be in that cowards shoes. He's the worse off. I had sandford place him strongly guarded so that no body would have a chance to lynch him which even he deserves. I didn't like the looks of all those around here."

They started tward the headquarters of Violet and her sisters as fast as they could go through the snow murk.

To poor Violet and her sisters it had been the sadd est blow really in their life time. All other terrible adventures they had borne but this they couldn't bear. They had cried and sobbed for a long time despite Jennie turners efforts to calm them down, and when Timothy Groveton tried to get them to come and eat a little breakfast they refused. This evidently was the greatest disaster that had ever come upon them. To be deserted in time of peril, and especially too when they never even asked or would let any one go where they wouldn't dare go themselves. And because of this, all their plans had been discovered. (It was because of this cowardly desertion of violet and her sisters that the battle of Big Girl knool had the ending it had). Jennie was the worst affected and they that is Jennie Turner and Timothy Groveton had put her to bed and tried to get her to sleep but were unsuccessful. Poor violet and her sisters. This disaster hurt them the most. It was a terrible, shocking blow to them that well nigh almost prostrated them. However Jennie Turner was able to summon the girlscout friend of their's who because of her sunny disposition was always called "Bright eyed Mary." When she came she helped Jennie, Turner and by the means she made up she brought some comfort to the Poor Vivian Girls. Mary had only been with them half an hour, and had Jennie Vivian sitting up in bed with an arm around her when some one knocked gently on the door.

Timothy Groveton arose tttttttttt from his chair and went to open the door.

"Prince Penrod" he gasped Why---why----thank God you've come. It's so many days since you were Here last."

"I'm glad I got here" said Penrod. "How are my dear sisters?"

"Oh my dear sire if you only-----"

"I am well acquainted with the fact" said Penrod and Groveton could see his face was white. "In fact---well never mind, lead me to my sisters."

"Gladly Penrod, gladly. You alone can comfort them. Blessed Be God."

He ushered him into the presence of violet and her sisters. Oh how glad they were to see him. At his entrance they all jumped up and tried to hide their tears.

"You all have been crying bitterly," he said as he held Jennie the longest in his arms as she was the saddest.

"Oh Penrod" sobbed Violet. "The most dreadful thing has happened. We--We--"

"I know all about it." said Penrod. "In fact I have the man. I captured him."

"You captured him." Gasped Jennie Turner while his sisters were too astonished to say a word and gaped. "Why---why---"

"Yes he run across my path as I was coming home" said Penrod. "Jean confessed it all. I didn't bring him here because I wouldn't dirt, the place with his because I wouldnit dirty the place with his foul presence."

This surprising news somehow was such an astonishing one that it somehow brought poor violet and her sisters to their former selves. Bright eyed Mary was struck speechless at this declaration, and Timothy Groveton couldn't believe his ears.

"Penrod "said Jennie Turner "You are a wonder worker. When anything unusual happens you are there to catch it in. While your dear sisters were having fun with the enemy during the past battles, and having great interesting experiences you were because of the battles seperated from them. When this sad disaster comes upon them, you retrive it by capturing the culprit. Well I never."

"I believe he is angel possessed too" Giggled Bright eyed Mary. "Only those persons can do those things."

"Well it's certain I didn't go searching for the rat" said Penrod. "Even I was unconscious of the fact untill I met with one of my soldier friends who is always full of jokes and he told me. At first I laughed, as I believed he was only trying to throw a scare into me but when I was fully convinced of the fact I felt ill for a time. I told him to lead me to where my poor dear sisters were, and are, and while on the way I saw a man dart around a tent across the compun, street, run across my path, stop glance at me, and then start running for all he's worth. I drew my pistol and threatened to shoot if he didn't halt. He was then too scared to even run. When he came up to me at my stern command I recognized him as the deserter from the description Sandford gave me. He sure has put his foot into it. I wouldn't want to be in his place. He'll sure dance the sunset jig to morrow night. He begged me to save him seeing I was a Prince, but we nor Father could save him. It is his own fault."

"He ain't worth saving" said Jennie Vivian most bitterly. "He dragged our hearts hearts into the dust" and she started sobbing anew.

"Jennie please don't pleaded Penrod hugging her closer. "The shock will soon all be over. It'll be his turn to recieve a shock at the trial this afternoon. Come though let's cheer up and have a good dinner all of us. It'll help us a whole lot."

However his coming had done a great deal for them, and they felt much better. At first they found it hard to eat but finally they were able to go to it as usual.

"Prisoner before the bar" said the Court Marshall You are accused by the witnesses of deserting in time of peril our fair Princesses here before you. What have you to say for yourself."

"I--I--was scared of the Glandelinians."

"Scared of the Glandelinian soldiery. You are a dirty sneaking coward. Nobody could be any meaner than you. This is an unheard of thing. Do you know the penalty of desertion?"

The prisoner did not answer. He was too scared to say a word.

The witness was called to the stand. It was Jean who chosed to go. She told the story just as it happened. There were other witnesses who also gave his testimony.

"You are a disgrace to your own Nationality" said the judge. "Spanish people usually are the most dare devil people on the face of the earth earth. You come through a pull to join our armies and yet turn out a cowardly deserter of the most beautiful and good little girls in the world. I'll let the jury fix your sentence. Jury you may go to your council room and form the verdict."

The jury was gone half an hour.

Finally they returned to their places and then one of the men rose and said; "He is guilty of death as a deserter."

"We can't waste bullets on him" said another.

Burning at the stake is too good for him." declared a third.

The judge read the verdict.

"At sunset to morrow you shall hang as a deserter. This is the penalty for such deeds. Better make up with your god before that time comes if you wish to save your immortal soul, as you have committed a most grave sin."

And the Court Marshall was over. It had lasted only one half an hour and two or three minue minutes.

The prisoner however had stated that he would appeal to a much higher authority but the judge answered;

"There is no higher authority than this Court Marshall tribunal for at it the Princesses you deserted presided and their will is my will. Therefore you are to pay the penalty for desertion. We cannot have cowards in our midst and any one can tell you that the whole world hates a coward..... "

After the trail violet and her sisters had gone on the return to their headquarters. Indeed no one could imagine how they really felt. There came back to their minds all the brave things they had done in the face of inconcievable peril and what they had suffered, and how often they had escaped a terrible death and a cruel one by a narrow margin, by the closest shave imaginable. If they had willed it, they could have at the very start of the terrible war gone far norty north into Abyssinkile or far southwest into Ttipdddi Tropical Abbieannia, where theycould have been as safe from the enemy as if they were safe in Heaven, but no they choose to suffer because their country suffered, and because in times passed God also suffered. They wondered yet that they had never been betrayed. But fortunately God was to spare them that cross. They might be betrayed but it never happened by any members of their own side, and that sort of treason if done by the enemy they would count tonaught. Fredrick Lowden by posing as Penrod, betrayed them, but then he is an enemy not a member of their own side.

Then it came to their mind how our Dear blessed Lord Himself through an act of momentary cowardice on their part had been deserted by His Apostles and even in a cowardly manner denied by another. They too had often been denied. This therefore made them feel a little comforted and they offered their miseries up for His sake. Of course as severe as the offense of desertion was against them they could have forgiven the deserter, but then there was no one c who could save him from the death penalty, and there was no possibilities of his escaping .but then he was not worth their forgiveness, and he wasn't sorry for his cowardly deed, but all the more scared yet because on the evening of the next day he would face the gibbit for the desertion. If the reader studies the sections of the story right he or she can remember that any one who didharm to the Vivian Girls in any way never had good luck, while those who were good to them, and befriended them couldn't even understand why they had such immense good luck. Even when Penrod was seperated away from them for these six days of battle not through his own fault, they never had then had a stroke of bad misadventure themselves, in fact they had experiences during the battle, the seven of them which they rather had enjoyed as exciting and desirable. The reader can remember that from reading these battles. Penrod himself had had immense good times, and though then the stories didn't mention it he had continued by wireless all sorts of correspondence with his sisters and they with them him, and so that all the duties they had performed had absolutely prevented them from being lonesome for each other, and that only violet and her sisters understood that absense makes the heart grow fonder. He had returned more sooner than he had expected or they either, and what made them admire him the more not only did he surprise them by an unexpected return but capturing the cowardly deserter as well. They could not hardly get over the fact, and believed god had been so angry at the deserter that He had by His Devine will caused the coward to run right into Penrods path. They remembered these words of Our blessed Lord, "No man hath greater love than he Lay down His life for his friend." Or those that saveth their life shall lose it."

The last reference may have meant those who save their own lives through cowardice shall likewise perish miserably. Feeling however a horror of such a fate even for the coward, they had sent a message to their Father at Big Girl Knool stating the case, asking for His council by wireless, but that afternoo n later he had wired the answer that even the High est authorities of the Abbieannian government couldn't do a thing concerning the deserter, and that at first when he recieved the message he believed his little daughters must have dreamed of that during the night, but that when on investigating he found it was the naked truth he was astonished that they should be so sympathic yet as to appeal for the life of such a coward who should desert them in time of peril, when after all the danger itself had never been so great, nor was it possible that they could ever demand of a person to go where they wouldn't go themselves.

"No" he had stated "It can't be done. The fool may be forgiven it is true if he repents of that grave sin of desertion, but that cannot absolve him from the death penalty. I myself though I rule all of Abbieannia and her States cannot have an thing to say on the matter. I'm forced to state that it is His own sorrow. If he is such a coward I cannot understand what made him join the army in the first place. you remember the cowardly Englishman at Pelig the Junction, and you wouldn't so much as intercede for him when there was a possibility of saving him as his offense was not so severe as in this case. You condemned that Englishman yourselves and in fact you were the very firing squad for you were so upset over the disaster to our armies there. No we cannot save him. He must meet the penalty."

Therefore Violet, and her sisters realized that nobody could save the co nd. In fact the reader may understand he didn't even so much as deserve any sympathy fo from them. He had no right to be a coward if even what such little girls had gone through in their past life and will yet go through. This was already November the 20th 20 and it was a rotten day, and such a day as to upset their spirits all the more. Usually violet and her sisters almost loved snow as much as a person may love themselves, but some how or other to da, such weather was absolutely disgusting and they in their hearts desired most ardently and prayed that it would stop. You see their upset condition over the desertion made them this way.

Nobody in the world could never have forgotten the Vivian g irls, and their brave little fighting princely brother, and all their boy and girlscout leaders and followers, and their terrifying adventures, and the fury of the Glandelinians which they faced, and yet between times of their acts of love, mercy and so on, their happy spells caused by the angels possessing them. I often while writing this unusual narrative can fancy I see violet and her sisters in person--as their friends often seen them--either standing in the yard of their h me, army home army headquarters, or at the entrance of their ten , or out scouting anxiously watching the movements of the enemy, or waving their hats to their friends in passing or smiling at some bit of fun which they and Penrod would have in comm on. Though they will and do go through terrible adventures yet, let the reader remember that it will be the same as in the past. It can be believed the devil himself couldn't harm the vivian girls but would flee from them. There is always a saying "Things will take a turn. It did after a long time after the battle of Francis Atlanta.

Despite the fact of the disaster of the desertion another thing which had violet and her sisters very nervous was the threatening situation at B ig Girl knool. There as no denying it, that the situation within every section of the Christian army was bad and serious. even J oice Vivian the eldest of the Vivian Girl Princess's who was only now ten years old with large wondering eyes, and a smile which was often more sad than merry understood that things were not going on propseriously for the help of the christian armies, and also some of the generals were nervous and afraid as the most dangerous of Glandelinian generals were concen trating there, and only the one feared most, Izner Myletze though he was not seen by any of the scouts. Violet and her sisters had been asked by some of the generals to go and so some scouting work but this time they had asked the generals rather sharply;

"What's the matter with your patrols. always it's us. We have spoiled some of you generals by all our own efforts until you get discontented. We're not doing any more scouting work to day and you may lay to that."

"Joice herself said;

"It's a pretty pass that we can't remain restful within the christian lines once in a while. If we do all the scouting business or even let our child scout do it all our patrols will go out of business and we,ll have to do it all. Even during the battles we were asked to do some of it in the most dangerous territory and sometimes we refused and sometimes we didn't. We don't wish to shirk our duties, but we're Princesses, and you s generals should have some of it done for us once in a while. What's the matter with your scouts? Are they getting timid as that porlegner was. Will they run away too if they see the enemy. T eThey should do it too as we did. Let us rest at least for one day. that will Father say if everytody starts coming at us, for this and for that every five minutes of the day. he'll set his foot donw on it and not allow us to do anything, and then you will be sunk. Remember that."

And that was true too. However then poor violet and her sisters troubled more about the situation of the christian armies than most of the highest genera generals did; for they were always reading military letters, studying o studying or forming plans. It was suppose that the generals thought that as they could not dec detect the movements of the enemy or find out their plans, they might just as well fix up their own and make some use of them. It was a pity that the christian army should lie here idle, but violet and her sisters half the time did not care to chance a battle with an invincible foe unless they were sure it was safe to do so. The enemy concentrating here was dangerous and very powerful. The Three Manleys were here, all the dangerous generals they were well acquainted with were here, and to add to it all the fiercest fighting general of all Izner Myletze. Violet and her sisters too did not know what to do. They did not wish to refuse these generals anything, but then it seemed always them or their child scouts. But then too there was this blinding west snowstorm yet snowstorm raging. Then too m many of the older and ne child scouts needed ne uniforms The uniforms were not good in appearance now, they were old , rubby and worn. And nowadays when one can buy new uniforms pretty cheaply these days many things do not seem very attractive so they. Ah well we ought not to abuse them nevertheless for they too have lived their lives, and done their work well.

Violet, and her sisters loved all their boy and girlscouts as much as they loved themselves/

. They had a prov found reverence for their oldest toy, and girlscout leaders and fri nds, and when they were not studying their own lessons or toiling on their dangerous and adventuresome spy or scouting business, or seeing after their own welfare or the w l wellfare of wounded friends and strangers as well or charity work they spent their time in playing games with as many child coulds as possible. violet and her sisters too during more peaceful times when the armies had been far from Glandelinian foes had spent their leasure times patching up worn uniforms of their child scout so comrades. They were quite clever in all sorts of mending, and their father had said that they should have been ta ilors. During one of the raids around the enemy at this sector the raid ers had captured from the enemys lines a strange dilepidated volume of some sort which some had believed was a book of cast off plans but as violet and her sisters had examined it they discovered it was a forlorn Greek dictionary, which they had examined all the more and which they tried to solve because they could not read or understand one single word in it. o Indded Indeed violet and her sisters had never been a Greek scholar, but they understood and could read English pretty well especially in their own little way, but not as good as their own language and they could nevertheless read it as good as any grown up person, and they had never in the least been "f rig tened at long words. It made some tremble to imagine what intellectual beings Violet and her sisters were at their age. Probably many persons could have envied them despite the lives of horrid adventure and suffering they had g one through. But again to what they thought. about things at times. Once when a boyscout thought his life and dutues had been a little hard for him Violet said;

"You have no worries lad. You don't get up every morning at six thirty or five oclock as we do wondering, wondering, whether we'll live to see another day or not. and it is all the same to you whether many of us seem happy or sad. You mustn't be so sell self ish lad. You'll get used to the hardships of boyscout life sooner or later and won't regret it at all. com copy an example from the lives of myself and my sisters and some of our better followers and then the remembe rance of them them won't leave you discontented."

But nevertheless this gloomy snowy day violet and her sisters with the experience of the deserter were really unhappy, for too the armies were worried over the situation, good luck for their generals had been very scarcely scarce and no one came to violet and her sisters requ sting for advice.

Sometimes when Violet and her sisters did not exactly give in to their wishes to go out so often on scouting parties the generals seemed rat er rather injured, especially when they refused, and protested on the matter of what was the matter with their scouting patrols. Why sometimes violet and her sisters had not the time to spare then.. sometimes they had not enough time for their own child scout troopers to go out scouting every minute of the day. But the generals would protest that only they alone have the tarlent to accom plish the things and the scout patrols had not. Therefore sometimes they after all would accomplish it then just to satisfy them. Now they had gone out this morning just to answer a request for general Hansonia and this is the reward they got for it. Deserted by a porlegner.

Even the Stand ard girl and boy scouts didn't have always time to spare at of their own number. But in the days gone by, when officers and generals had begged their commander Lucillie Dickson to go out and do some scouting, little jannie, now a member of them had often stood by and seen her go out with her elder followers and often returne with good information. She thought that very sweet of her, and loved the girlscout leader for it. But you must understand, this was now out of seasons. Many of the neighborly leaders of the Standard scouts hearing of the sad troubles of violet and her sisters had declared that this was not the way to get on in life. some had been nervy enough to tell violet and her sisters so, declareing that they should only direct the armies, and the scout troop and leave the dangerous spying exploits, and scouting out of the list... They thought violet and her sisters rather rash and reckless to do these things.

"They court danger too much." said said to each other. "Of course they have a right to do as they will, but such beautiful little girls to allow themselves to suffer such misfortunes. And what happened this morning. The greatest blow of all. That dirty coward of a deserter. I wish we could linch him."

That was their way of looking at the matter. but they were ignorant of the character and nature of violet, and her sisters, and understood more about their own troubles and toils than they did about violet, and her sisters. Of course they did not critize them. They really loved violet and her sisters more than they loved themselves, and heartily did not want to see them run so often into untimely peril, sorrow and suffering. To day Lucillie their leader was gr ay greatly troubled about the affairs of the christian armies itself, and though she was studying a plan that had been captured, she could not fix her attention on it. she kept looking at poor little Jannie, one of the heroines of the story next to violet and her sisters, who sat by her side on a footstool mending a uniform of one of her boyscout friends. The coat it was even shabbier than a beggars coat, and that was saying a good deal. She continued to look at Jo Jennie, and then glanced at a wounded girlscout who was lying on a couch, gazing intently at the murcy skies outside and the heavy snow falling driving by a fierce fierce blizzard gale. She was very shabby too for it was a long time since any of the boy and girlscouts could obtain any good uniforms. They were all shappy and many of them were rather good and hungry too let me tell you. Maybe Penrod needed to start on a new raid. omething out to happen to get him angry again. Lucillie was coming her beautiful brown hair and then stroked Jannie's brow, a little good girl once a child slaveeee make the most beautiful of all pictures in the whole world. But they're and now, even though everybody loves them. I'm I'm old enough to care for them but I'm afraid I am not. I'm only seven. If one could only become a year or two older in a day or a month or even a year, It seems to be such a long time.

But I am a good shot even at my small age and could help their brother fight for them. And oh Dear God not happy , was that day I discovered Waldo who helped me get free, was no Glendeliniia boy, as he seemed to be but in their brother in disguise. And a Christian spy instead. It seemed too good to be true."

Then she closed her little eyes and smiled happily, for it was pleasant to remember these things and to form to plans and her little head was full of schemes and ideas----all for her friends and not for herself, not even for herself and her thoughts and love were specially for violet, and her sisters. Suddenly she heard the sound of a horse gallop galloping up and then she heard someone give a certain command "halt" and saw someone dismount from his horse, and then glancing up saw a very tall Christian general of very high commission the highest commission of any general she had ever seen before standing for just I just a moment just outside the tent door. Then he went in and stood before her. The color flushed to her face, and her heart beat excitedly for here in truth was a very great christian general. He was uniformed beautifully and wore a very beautiful large scarlet hat with a blue plume.

"Is the good girlscout leader Miss Lucillie Rickden here? "he said kindly to Jannie.

"No she has gone out scouting."

"Is there then any one here to serve me" he continued bending down to her. He had such a majestic way to bend.

"If you please sir," she said respectfully and a little timidly "I will serve you."

"You will serve me a mighty general!" said the tall general smiling somewhat incredulously. "Well little girlscout I've been searching everywhere everywhere for a particular spy who has just shot and wounded one of the Vivian girls seriously I am afraid and escaped this way. I suppose you do not happen to noe no know what a spy is?"

"Oh yes I do" she answered, "Oh yes of course I do. I heard of a spy that crossed the Stream sometime this morning. Jane Lees and other girlscouts taught me all about the doings of spies. Lucillie is one herself or herself. I am sorry she ain't here" she continued looking at him mourn fully "It seems very rude of me to beg you to search for the spy yourself. He didn't get in here I am sure of that. There is a loft in my headquarters tent where if he got in without my seeing he he could have hid." and she pointed to the top most part of the wooden tent. "If I had the ladder I would get up at once. I'm not afraid of him. Only I cannot carry the ladder myself. It is only a good sized man who can carry it, and then I'd have to hold it while somebody mounts it. But I am sure no spy came in this tent."

The tall general---whose name by the way was none other than Emperor Vivian himself stared in amused as o astonishment at this quaint little girlscout captian. He was quite pleased with her manner and appearance though he did not remember ever seeing her before.

"And so young as you are you understand what spies are!" he said. "Well that is just as much as my beautiful little girls understand. Poor little Jennie. And her poor little sisters, so sad to day, and yet violet must have a wounded wrist and Jennie ill from the shock of this morning. And pretty cute little Daisy. She is just about your age too. Jennie is so ill she does not feel or care about running about to day, and mount ladders as you do. She has laid in her bed all this time since morning and she has hardly stopped weeping.. They're going to hang the cowardly deserter to morrow."

"I'm heartily sorry for the poor Vivian Girl Princesses" said Jannie softly and the tears came to her eyes. She had such a sympathatic heart.

"Then you must be sad for them too sir" she said.

"Yes me" answered. "I am very sad to day." And he sighed.

"We're to searching for the spy" Sire" said a man glancing in. "I believe he has escaped us."

"He can't get through the lines" said the Emperor. "Well now Miss Lucillie told me this morning one had captured a book from the enemys lines a very peculiar book" he added. "It's in here, we can do very well without a ladder for I can reach the top shelf with the aid of that footstool."

Jannie waited in breathless anxiety while he examined every book on the shelf. Oh how she hoped it would be there. It might help the christian armies save the city of Big Girl school.

"It isn't here" he said. "I'm disappointed." And he removed a cloth from his sleave and rubbed the dust off his hands. He appeared rather cross too and gave a black look in the direction of the enemys lines. She thought to herself I don't like the Glendeliniens with me. Who li does! Jannie's face fell. She was also disappointed.

"If you please your Excellency" he said pleadingly (one didn't know who he was) "It must be on this shelf or amongst that heap of books on her table. Will you take a seat sir while I search for it."

But the book was no where to be found. They both searched for it diligently and it was really quite funny indeed to see the great Emperor kneeling on the floor of the tent and diving amongst the miscellaneous volumes on the lower shelf.

"It's no use" he said standing up again. "I might have understood I should not find it here. Maybe the spy was here and stole it."

Jannie's sour courage had gradually been failing her, and now overcome with excitement, anxiety and disappointment, she burst into tears, and cried as though her little heart would break.

"Please sir" she sobbed "Forgive me but I did so hope you would find it here as it was something that I am sure would have saved our armies here. No one understands how good it would have been for the poor Princesses. And the situation is very bad, and things don't seem to turn in their favor, they were deserted this morning. And when you came in I was so proud and glad, because Lucillie had left me in charge and you are the first great general we have had come to see me through a snowstorm since I came here to be a scout. And now that precious volume is lost, and it would have done Violet and her sisters a world of good. I can't help crying for them."

"For them!"

"Yes. I love them, and they don't deserve it from the foe either. And yet that deserter,----she couldn't go no further but sobbed anew. She looked such a poor, sad little lass that all his kind pity rose up in his heart. The little girl crying for his daughtetttttt daughters. It sure affected him immensely. It was not at all for herself. He gently seized her hand, and put it into his own great big loving hands, and to told her not to cry her big solemn dark brown eyes away, for sure she should not worry about the loss of the volume, that too it may not be lost, but that Lucillie may have put it away in a secret place where she alone knew where to find it (she did) and that she had not expected his arival this day, and he put a nice bright shining dollar piece ten dollar piece in her hand and told her to keep it for herself and for Lucillie.

She smiled through her tears.

"How good you are" she said, looking up at him. "Only I don't believe I ought to take it."

"I'm positively sure you should recieve it from me" he said kindly. "Do you understand I should be ever so heart broken myself if you did not keep that gold piece. Any just see it. It's a Royal Jubilee sovereign quite new and spruce, and will bring you good luck and God's blessing on you. Now tell me your name little girl scout captian."

"If you please your excellency" she said "My name is Jannie Lillian Francis, but Lucillie and other children all over calls me "Happiness" and others call me "their little lossebud."

"They sure have good taste." said Emperor Vivian. "And who is the last who calls you lose bud."

"If you please your excellency" He is colonel Jonesboro my friend. He said he captured some spies, who had in their possession on such beautiful birds in a cage. He intends to give those birds to the poor Vivian Girl Princesses so they'll be happy again. Those poor little dears have harder times than any of us girlscouts have, and boys too for we usually go out in big columns and the Glendeliniens are afraid of us ain't they. There's the colonel riding past now coming up down the company Street on his horse and a wagon is following him. Won't he just be glad to see a great general visiting me!"

"A great general." laughed Emperor Vivian. "Not a saxon/y general as many of those leading the Glendeliniens eh. Oh I see you have a picture of Violet, and her sisters in the tent. What beautiful appearing little girls they are too. Do they know about the great General Vivian too?"

"General who!" gasped the child glancing amaset at him.

"The great general Vivian!"

Jannie laughed merrily.

"Perhaps they do" she said "But I never heard of him." I've haruly never seen them since the battle of Evangeline St Claire and they have never told me what they know. But I have heard such a lot of Emperor Vivian their Father, that I'd love to see him too. It is said he's the best Christian Gentleman in the world, and sure has some beautiful little girls, and three lovely good Sons."

"Well little lossebud" said the tall general, stooping down and gilding his hand to her "I'm the great and famous General Vivian. I must be going home to the beautiful little Vivian Girl Princesses to my own little girls. I'm the Emperor Vivian, and because of my uniforms they all call me "General Vivian"? I shall tell them about you. Perhaps you would love to come and see them and help them spend part of this long day. Somehow or other I don't believe they would feel at all wearisome and sad when you are with them, and their loving brother Peanut. You would be very loving and kind to them wouldn't you, patient and gentle.?"

"Indeed Your Majesty"said Jannie seamestly "I surely would be so."

"Then tell Miss Lucillie"he said,"That I shall be here again, and see her about it herself. Goodbye Rosebud. And now there must not be any more tears in those beautiful brown eyes of yours!"

And he put up his finger finger, as though in solemn warning and left Jannie staring after him in bewilderment. For she couldn't imagine at all it had been the Great Abbieannian Emperor who had visited her.

"How good and kind and loving of all children he is"she thought."It is a long way to look up to his face he is so tall, but when you once reach there, what a beautiful loving, and good kind face it is. And how sad he looked, when he spoke of his little girls the poor little Princesses..I shall never forget him."

And she sat down on her stool, and renewed the sewing of the boyscouts badly torn uniform coat. But the work did not get on so very fast, for Jannie was now thinking that if every good christian did not have one sort of sadness or anxiety, they had another.

"Perhaps the great emperor does trouble himself too about the condition of the christian army"she thought"But then he must always be sad about his lovely brave little girls." Then she examined the bright ten dollar gold piece which the emperor called a "bright sovereign and remembered how pleased and surprised her girlscout friend Lucillie would be when she came home and heard all the wonderful news she had to tell him, and her little face shone with June sunshine.

And she sang a snatch of melody, something about How Good and Beautiful God and His Blessed Mother was.One always sings of them when one is happy. Suddenly a voice voice not so melodious as hers called out;

"Bless God and His Blessed Mother child if that ain't more lovely singing than most people can ever do.Why were you not a little angel or celestial child singing His praises in Heaven. You would just have a happy time too."

"Oh Timothy Groveton you did startle me"she said laughing."I've such a lot to tell you. June Bee is quite right"For there is always a turn-in the worm."

"Of course Of course there is. Trile"he said cheerily coming in and sitting down beside her." And meantime do you have some of this delicious soup which I brought from across the Company Street from the the Mess Hall.I guess you and Lucillie can use it all up. And as soup is not good without a number of fresh rolls, so please you little angelchild I've brought a number of fresh rolls. A portion of the Christian line is moving forward Rosebud, and so is soup and rolls."

"You are very good indeed Timothy."she said gratefully."Lucillie and I can't find words of gratefulness but I love you too Timp Timothy. You are always being good to me."

"Tut,tut"he answered."You must run over and tell me about Emperor Vivians visit to you.I saw him go in .Oh there's several little girlscout officers going into my tent.I must be off Rosebud."

"That soup and rolls will do her good untill dinner time."he said to himself as he went on his return to his tent."He don't appear particular strong dear little lassie, and I am believing she sure needs good care.Never a day goes by that the sight of that little once upon a time child slave don't do me a world of good. Bless her Heart and God too."

Lucillie Hickson had not been successful in getting her chief child scout leader friends together. She found they had gone to the headquarters of Violet and her sisters to try and bring them cheer and happiness again and to comfort them in their distress.It seems that some people you understand trouble about their friends and the Vivian Girls more than about themselves, and declared it was a cruel and most hard thing, when Violet and her sisters the most beautiful creatures should have to suffer all this and not deserve it. A million and ten child scouts compalined very bitterly about the number of cowards there must be in the world world and yet there are.Boy and girls outs girlscouts who went to visit the Princessesbrought with them their own best satin uniform coats and silk yellow dresses to give to Violet and her sisters as love and recompense presents. And they let everything else pass by without giving a thought to an anything else, and when they gave things to Violet and her sisters they did not do it with the purpose of expecting any rewards of them.They were very thoughtful for them, and not selfish, and may many of those who came to give their love, sympathy, and beautiful things left before Violet and her sisters could show their thanks and gratitude.

Lucillie would have gone too but she couldn't leave her duties and regretted it bad. But she had two beautiful dolls in her tent, and the two she had sent to Violet and Jennie with her love. However now as it may be Lucillie came home, well, and tired, and though disappointed, glad new friends went to the Vivian Girl Princesses. She was chiefly anxious however about the situation at Big Girl Knoll, and chiefly anxious about Violet and her sisters and all the child scouts, for one really did not care about herself.

"What's to become of the little dears if this continues on"she thought"then with the enemy pestering them, causing them sorrow misery, and suffering, and then this disaster being added, and there's non nothing else yet coming in but probably more disaster.Wish I could see that deserter.I've give him a good piece of my mind, and do the hanging myself."

No wonder that Lucillie's heart was heavy, and her footsteps weary for she returned with out her horse, as she didn't want to make her horse trot through all that deep deep slushy snow again again. As she entered there was no one in her tent.She sank down into her chair by the writing table and taking a handkerchief from her pocket passed it over her burning forehead. Then from a small icebox she drew a canteen of milk and refreshed herself with two good sized glasses full.Jannie herself loved milk better than water and so did Lucillie and always congratulated Our Blessed Lord on the fact that He was so Good as to allow them to have it.

"We girl and boyscouts shall always be quite content"Jannie used to say in prayers to God"If we always can get plenty of milk. Then we can be strong and fight the Glandelinians plenty. Then Lucillie removed from her drawer her power ful field glasses and rubbed them with a new and clean piece of cloth.Having made them clean and clear he re she replaced them in their proper cases.It was always a puzzle to Jannie why she should always use these when she ever went out scouting.Yet Jannie was strict in her own little way.If she was a woman she would have understood.As a girlscout captian however she was strict as a school mistress but good and kind too. Despite the fact she had been a child slave, she now was an officer of the Standard scouts, and only Lucillie was higher than she herself. She was colonel. But now Lucillie did not study my plans. She looked mournfully in the direction of the headquarters of Violet and her sisters, and for the thousandth time in her young life wished they had been able to remain home in their strong palace at Angelinia Agatnia, because then the enemy would not have been able to do any harm to them and caused them all this sorrow and then too, also they would not have suffered the extra Cross of being deserted by a cowardly yellow dog. She had always rather despised Foriegners, especially if they were not catholic ones, but this morning she had heard of a certain Foriegner called John Michael Mccann who had once been captured by Glandelinians, and who told their generals before their very faces that they and their whole Glandelinian Government can go where it's "very warm" and that for a foriegner serving in the Christian lines, he was more dangerous single handed than a hundred strong Abbieannians put together. But yet, he was an exception of good Foriegners.He was an American, a whites State States man, an Irishmann Irishmann to booth and those sort of foriegners are believed to be possessed by the Glandelinians. She quite longed to be the lucky possessor of that sort of a foriegner, just for the sake of Violet and her sisters, and all their followers, not her own.

"Just for the Princesses sake" and Jannie's too"she murmured to herself as she removed her wet boots, and thrust her tired feet into her girlscout slippers.

At that moment Jannie came into the tent.

"What luck Lucillie dear?"she said cheerily.

"None for us"she answered sadly."No one can scout too day.It is snowing too hard, and that is an advantage to the enemy as this blizzard covers all his movements."

"Ah you mustn't say that Lucillie dear"she said picking up the white piece of cloth which had fallen to the ground, and replacing it on the table, as though she were hiding her little sister."You mustn't say that,for I've had a real good visitor, and I've a real sovereign to give you; and here it is Lucillie dear. So don't tell ever tell me that I can't tent a tent well."

"What visitor did you have Jannie dear?"she asked looking at her wondering.ly.

"A very great Christian General.His name is "General Vivian" she answered laughing happily."What do you think of that?"

And then she told her the whole story of the visit of the tall gentleman and she begged that she would allow her to go and see the beautiful beautiful good little Princesses and give them good cheer and happiness."

"Of course you shall go Rosebud"she said lovingly."And well might that great general would wish you to come and visit his little daughters. There could one hope to find a dearer sweeter little girlflower than my little rosebud whom I have adopted as my little sister."

And off they went hand in hand to the rear room to enjoy the soup and rolls Timothy Groveton had brought in to them.About ten minutes after then Jannie went to bring the bowl back to Timothy Groveton Emperor Vivian himself came in to see Lucillie.

"Your little adopted sister Jannie pleased me mightily a little over half an hour ago"he said kindly talking her hand gently"and now I have quite a great fancy for her.I have heard very often of her, and now she had been rescued by Gertrude Angelina, after my son Penrod brought her from the foe lines. She speaks beautifully. You have indeed taught her well.Now I should love more than anything else for both of you to come and see my darling little saintly angel possessed daughters, whom I am positively sure more than anything else will be as loving and kind toward her as they are to themselves. One of my little girls just now is ill from the shock of the desertion. And she cannot hardly read today as her eyes are weakened by so much crying. And she and her sisters care so much for all good Abbiennian children, and they have such hearty sympathy for child slaves, that I'm sure they'll get very fond of your little Rosebud.. And little Jannie could read to Jennie, and be her companion for as much as to day as she or you can spare.I'm sure your little adopted sister would be proud to be the companion of such good dainty little Princesses.. And though I understand you would love to have her go, you too would also love to come, wouldn't you!"

"You are very good Sire"said Lucillie gently but shyly in the presence of so dignified a man."Of course I would love to come."

"Just for as much time as you love to if for every day for a week"Continued the emperor."And here is the little Rosebud"he added as Jannie came into the tent.You "You see I have'nt forgotten you have I!"

And Lucy Lucillie was quite touched to see how kindly he greeted Jannie, stooping down and grasping her hand and conversing to her so freely and gently. As for Jannie herself it seemed to her the most natural thing in the world to see her tall friend again, and hear his loving kind voice and she chattered away to him, as if she had known him all her life...

"I have just been over paying a visit to Timothy Groveton"she confieded to him."I wonder what you would think of him.He sent over to violet and her sisters a beautiful batch of excellent Roses to your beautiful daughters.Now I believe he is a beauty himself."

"Indeed"the Emperor"said smiling to her."And do you understand as much about flowers as you do about being captian of a child scout troop.?"

"She laughed.

"Oh"she answered."I only understand what Timothy Groveton tells me. And then one can't help learning a little when one sees all sorts of flowers as I did, can one? And I saw the birds which are going to be given to your dear daughters. But sometimes I believe it is very cruel to shut birds up in those tiny cages. But Timothy Groveton had made himself great big cages out of wood just to please me the sympathic hearts of violet and her sisters.Isn't that nice of him.? He laughed at me when I asked him but he never refuses me. Oh I remember he was a little cross once, when he heard the Glandelinians had captured Violet and her sisters.He said the news hurt him as dreadfully as if he had had a dreadful toothache, and one must be very kind when he feels their sorrow as bad as if he had a toothache doesn't he. ?"

"He is a very good loving kind hearted boy and I know him well"said the emperor."I had an experience once, when I went to do a little scouting. I donned a Glandelinian uniform which once belonged to general Manley.I met Timothy Groveton, and he must have had a "toothache"against Glandelinian soldiers that day, and I couldn't get him to listen to reason when he arrested me on the charge of Impersonating emperor Vivian in disguise.He's only a boyscout but I should not care to have that experience again.It was only my daughters who saved me from the fate of one who who would be caught when impersonating me.I had a terrible time of it too.He is dangerous to Glandelinian soldiery believe me."

"As any one could be cross with you Sire"she said eagerly."I am sure I couldn't if I tried all the day long."

"That's all right"he said laughing,"but it wasn't the boys fault. He didn't recognize me in that disguise and b believing I was a Glandelinian impersonating myself, he was very angry.Had I really been one and not the man I am I wouldn't be standing here talking to you now. I hope you will always remember that it is very dangerous for glandelinians impersonating me or any one of you too if he or she is caught whether it be a man, woman or child. Good gracious. I've been threading on your doll, and I've smashed its left arm.What will you say and do to me now!"

He stooped down and lifted up a goodly sized doll, who probably would have groaned groaned if she could for it is not a particulley thing pleasant thing for any one to have a mangled arm.Because of her grief for the pitiful condition of violet and her sisters Jannie was certainly rather heartless this morning for she giggled and seemed immensely amused, and even Lucillie smiled to t see the tall emperor holding the wounded doll in his hand, and looking the picture of repentance and misery.

"What will you say to me now?"he asked again."Won't you feel angry with me now!"

"No"sh she laughed"it is the fault of the doll herself for sprawling about on the ground. And surely it doesn't matter much whether she has one or two arms, she doesn't fight for our cause anyway."She retrived the doll from the emperor and put it softly on the table, but although she laughed and smiled, she really had a sudden new sorrow for she imagined the doll was one of the Vivian Girls with a mangled and crushed arm. But she was not going to let him see that, for he had been so good and kind to her, and she was grateful to him.He stopped a few minutes longer t arranging things with Lucillie that she toshould come to His headquarters, and see his little Princesses and then he asked about the army's situation, and was absolutely worried to hear things were so bad.

"But we must all cheer up, the war is in its babyhood I yet"he said encouragingly."By the way about that strange book I've been searching for. I heard you captured it early this morning before the snowstorm came on.I could not find it here when I searched."

"Oh I've hid it in a secret place"said Lucillie."It was not safe to leave it lay around.I'll get it for you now."

And Emperor Vivians face brightened up with hope and happiness when she handed it to him."

"Thank you my dear girl.he murmured ."Do you now Lucillie I have come to you when even though I am an Emperor I and my sisters and daugh daughters need help.you have given me back strength and hope. God Bless you." Then the great Emperor turned to Jannie, pointed to the doll mournfully, and said; "And you really forgive me little one, for having squashed that poor little doll's arm!""

"Yes indeed"she answered most eagerly,

"Ah"said he as he was leaving the tent to go out into the snowstorm again"I expect my little daughters will slightly scold me when they hear what mischief I have been doing."

"Don't tell them"said Jannie"and I won't tell them ither."Let it be a secret secret among ourselves."

But he only shook his head.

"It is of no use.she replied solemnly."My little girls are angel possessed and guesses all my secrets. Goodbye my little rosebud rosebud.My aidedecamp will come for you in a half hour just before dinner."

and he hailed the man who still held his horse, and rode to his own headquarters thinking to himself what a lucky chance it was that took him to Lucillies tent.

"That little angel child shall please my little violet, and her dear sisters sisters"he said to himself."She is quaint and gentle, and if ever there was a little lady, she is one. She acts as if she was a little Abbiennian.Her uniform is poor and shabby from use, and our armies are not able to apply new ones as were in such a position that the enemy cut us off from the towns where new ones could be secured. But nevertheless she is quite neat and clean. And that beautiful military heart shaped hats she wears is spotless. And what like a little sister she seems to be too poor Lucillie. How pleased she was to see her smile and appear happy when I asked her to come too.Fancy me now hunting about for a wretched old second hand Glandelinian plan book, she captured from the venemy she captured from the enemy this morning, and finding instead a dear little rosebud. Who would have thought it."

Jannie meanwhile put her stool near Lucillies chair near the table, pulled out her sewing, and began to work diligently on the boys uniform coat which which she had not had a chance to finish.

"Only Think Lucillie"she said"I shall be able to cause Violet and her sisters to be happy again.I always thought children had to wait before they could be of any use to all their friends whom they loved."

"Why Jannie"she said lovingly "Why Jannie you have been of some good use to every one of us since you became a girlscout. You have loved me, and everybody else.violet and her sisters now more about you than you believe. "

"Is that really being useful!"she demanded opening her brown eyes wide."Why I never yet had had a thrilling adventure with the fierce Glandelinian soldiery. and Iam not afraid of them either."

"Of course it."answered Lucillie."it is everything."

Then getting Lucillie's permission she ran over to Timothy Grovetons own tent, just to tell him about the tall Emperor's second visit, and to have another look atthe beautiful birds that he was going to send over to the Princesses.

""And so you're going over to the Grand Emperor Vivians headquarters"said the boyscout general who was mixing seed for the four birds."I don't suppose then you'll want to come and see the boyscout general when you've got them new beautiful Saintly friends of yours."!

"What a horrid thing to say Timothy."answered Jannie reproachfully, but seeing that there was a smile on his face, she added;

"There I knew you did not mean it.What a treat you are Timothy. Do you know my small Emperor Vivien friend is coming to see you one day when you are feeling good.you will recieve him kindly won't you.. you won't arrest him again won Will you?"

"Not him no.How did you hear I did."laughed the boy.

"He told me himself."

"Well I couldn't help it that time"said the boy."He was dressed as a foe general, and I got scared, as I thought a spy was getting into our lines disguised as Emperor Vivian.Therefore I arrested him. But we all had a good laugh when I found out who he really was.But he said I did my duty nevertheless. and showed I could arrest any one I didn't trust. when I didn't know who he was. And I will be delighted to treat him kindly."Any time he loves to come I shall be ready to do anything for him as we now each other well.So now you understand. And what I say I mean.Don't I little browneyed little angel.?"

"Yes Timothy"she answered."But you are spilling a lot of that bird seed.May I not help you."?

"You will be spoiling that beautiful bird."laughed the boyscout putting a few hemp seed into Jannie's little hand.

"See here, Jannie Rosebud"he suddenly said when she had finished feeding one of the birds"what I say I mean don,t I.? and this is what I say now.You always looke like a little dear to me and all the rest, but I wish you to appear beautiful and neat this early noon, for my honor you understand, and for your own self too. Mildred Manning gave me a new uniform which belonged to her but which was too small for her to wear, and which will fit you.Bless God I was just surprised when she told me about it yesterday. and I just thought you need that uniform so I thought I would get it as it is something fine for my little Rosebud. You need a new uniform bless your loving little heart. and too I have seen a tiny uniform cape you must have.Tut.tut.Not a word.I'll get John Scanlon to guard my tent for a few minutes, and you and I will just go and see Mildred Manning and get the uniform uniform and the sweet pretty thing.Emperor Vivians headquarters indeed. that that is where you are going to, well I would love to see you dressed well then as becoming your style and comission. When we can press the enemy out of this territory we'll all have new uniforms. and what do you see to a wee little Rosebud in your military hat, Jannie dear, just to make it spruce and gay.?"

Jannie clapped her hands in delight;;for as all of us even when we are the most Good persons we nevertheless are all fond of a little bit of finery and she was too....2.2.2.

"Only Timothy Dear"she said."You ought to save your money for yourself and not need to buy me a winter cape, for you sadly want a new uniform coat yourself."

"A new uniform coat!"he said laughing."Why Rosebud dear what are you dreaming of.? That uniform coat of mine I have on is not the one. I wear on other occasions. come along. How that blizzard wind does howl and screech to day.A parrot couldn't do it any louder.. but come.I hope youare dressed warm enough.It's getting terribly cold out and as see how the snow now blows into drifts it ain't wet any more."

The boyscout who was assigned to guard the tent was called for that particular duty, and then timothy seizing Jannie's hand plunged through the wild blinding November blizzard a few yards down the Company Street,

They were admitted by a girlscout and were ushered into the room where Mildred usually was in but they found she was out but Susan Parrot her girlscout friend was there sitting by a table. She greeted Timothy Groveton very respectfully and little jannie she hugged to her hearts content as Timothy told of why he had come.

She had a boyscout orderly bring the coat . It fitted Jannie well, and when the boy told of buying the cape Susan said;

"Mildred told me she has one that she didn't need and wanted to give it to you also.This is the article.What do you think of that Jannie. dear."

"Oh its beautiful Susan dear"she said admiringly"Only it's much too good for me."

"Tut,tut"replied Timothy."Nothing is too good for good little girls."

And he had it put on her then and there, that he might see how she looked in it."It appears first rate."he said smiling proudly.

And then from a flower vase Susan too from amongst a bunch of roses a few little rose buds, and gave her a pair of gray cotton gloves, and armed with these wonderful things they went back to Timothy's own tent after again a Good loving greeting from Susan.

"Don't say anything to Lucillie"he said as he stooped down and kissed her very gently"But retain those fineries on you, and see if she notices."

Jannie thanked him many times, for his beautiful presents , and went home to Lucillie finding Lucillie in excellent spirits, for she had had recieved good news that Emperor Hanson Viviens army and Concentinian Aronburgs were just arriving to reinforce them.

"It certainly does seem as if the worm will turn."she said smiling brightly at last."And it will be all through Jannie and Big Child(nood will be saved.I am sure of that." (But if she had dreamed of the battle to come she would have been horrified)

Little Jennie Vivian lay in the bed in her beautiful headquarters sitting room, with her saddened sisters gathered around her, waiting for her fathers return from his visit to Lucillie Hickson.Penrod was in his own room doing some thing which only he alone had cared to do.Despite the shock she had recieved the fair haired little girl appeared pain weary. Violet herself was not so severely wounded as the reader may imagine for she only had a slight bandage around her wrist and she appeared as if it had not happened to her at all. she did not then have on her uniform but wore a pretty purple colored velvet frock with a yellowish sash wound it, and some soft yellow lace at the neck. From the appearance of her bare arms and hands she appeared to be a little girl who despite her size might have the strength of a full grown man. he too had a little gold ring with a real pea pearl in it on the third finger on her right hand.She usually wore these things more from mere habit than for the love of jewlelry.She and two of her sisters had been doing despite their distress some fancy crotchet work for uniforms of christian generals, but violet herself was somewhat tired, for she had let it fall to the floor, and a handsome persian cat was playing with the ball. Violet did not pay any attention and too they were sitting on both sides of Jennie's bed, and a number of the girlscout and boyscout officers were there too being precious company to them and doing what they could to bring them comfort for it seemed it would be a long time before they could recover from this sort of distress.Just to see what one of them would say the boyscout leader Henry Lonnie had said that if they didn't believe it fair that such a scoundrel even then should have to hang, it was anyway no matter how any one would look at it or protest to pass a sudden strict order that the man would not need to hang for the desertion, and could face a life imprisonment instead.But violet had retorted;

"Is that so.He's lucky we don't do the hanging ourselves.We would have a perfect right to.Can Cancel the hanging degree.I should say not.The Glandelinian s don't care what they do to us. If I had some of those Glandelinians who so often almost hanged us to death, we'd hang them ourselves.We're not such softies for such dirty cowardly fools as that. They got themselves into it.It ain't our fault.We'll not change any sentence or grant no reprieve.It would be a sin for us to do so, and we wouldn't change it if it wasn't a chan sin.Let the cowards die like a coward.What do we care."

"You're right"Violet"said Angeline."We don't stand for any cowards dragging our hearts down to the dust after all we did and went through in the past.There's no excuse for being cowards.Sin makes them cowards or they wouldn't be cowards."

Jennie had several times desired to get up, but her sisters and Penrod wouldn't hear of it, though she said she felt better and had even eaten with good appetite everything brought in to her, and was now muc munching on a good sized sweet apple. however as they did not believe she should remain in the bed Penrod was called and he had very gently lifted her on to the sofa by the window, and there she was left to stay all the rest of the day long.

Jennie herself to her sisters was a odd little Princess, she had many com panions for to her and her sisters everybody wished to be kind, and she loved everybody too more than she loved herself. She hated sin terribly, but too she loved best to have her Father or mother or even Penrod with her and of course so did her sisters, and was quite happy for the whole day if he had found time to spend an hour with them, and yet the war often kept him away for months. Wherever they would and did have their headquarters the whole house was despite the war kept most beautiful and every time their room was full of wonderful treasures which even glandelinian spies and the like never stole because they didn't dare to. The walls in every headquarters they had here or there, were hung with beautiful Catholic Religious pictures, their own patriotic parents photographs, and yet their own they retained in a safe.. And there were all sorts of beautiful books and engravings on the table, either in their sitting, room, or bed room, and lovely vases with fresh fresh flowers in them, and plants here and there, and everywhere. At least Jennie herself had much to look at as she lay on the sofa, and either Emperor Vivien Penrod, or even their friends seldom came home, or the latter seldom came on a loving visit without bringing violet,and her sisters something to please them, a sweet flower, or herbs perhaps a few little scented bags apiece or a new puzzle, they were fond of beautiful puzzles, and always made them out, and sometimes a new picture would be brought in mysteriously, and Penrod who brought it would pretend to know nothing at all about it, which to tell you the truth he had spent ever so long in choosing it.

No matter how good any person was to Violet and her sisters nothing could spoil them, and any person even a dreary stranger or even some one less fortunate than themselves could have something that's in their beaut iful room just for the request. Emperor Vivian and also his Brother Hanson however wished above all things that his darling daughters didn't need to go through all the dangerous adventures and suffering that they had underwent in the past but as he wished he couldn't prevent them, no more than they could prevent him leading leading armies against the enemy.. It was sad to even imagine that they had everything they could possibly wish for except better times, though fortunately they had otherwise the best of health and were strong little girls for their age, and could handle a sabre, or a rifle as good as any man could. They were very anxious to see the little girl scout of whom her their father had spoken of, though they believed they did now her and had seen her several times and had conversed with her. Jannie had once taken good care of poor Angeline when she had recieved a wound which took oh so long to recover from. However they were not fearful lest Lucillie should not allow "Rosebud to come to see them, for their Father would not permit a refusal anyhow and neither would they on any conditions if necessary as their own word was law. And so you can imagine how pleased they were and especially Jannie, when Their Father came home and told them that he had arranged for his son Penrod to go and fetch her just a little before ten oclock, it being now only nine.

"You always say that you and your dear sisters Jennie, are best pleased when I and your friends bring you pretty flowers"said the Emperor as he put a beautiful orchid into a little vase on the table by the sofa.and I'm sure you will love to have the little girl"Called Rosebud----a little human flower. Jannie is her name and I believe you now her too. And now indeed what do you imagine I have been doing this morning---I have broken a doll which that child had which she intended to give to one of you..So I don't understand what to do about the matter."

"Never mind"said Jennie sweetly."I've got one here which I never did use and its a beauty.Though we love dolls too we do not have much time to play with them. And I will give it to her when she comes in place of the injured one.It's a nice one isn't it Violet, dear..!!!.."

"A beauty."she answered examining it admiringly."How pleased little Jannie our little "Rosebud will be.Only it has not got a very nice hat on it.I believe I can make it a new one before she comes"glancing at the clock.

She therefore started the wor dilligently, and within ten minutes turned out a most wonderful beauty for the dolls head, and when ,Penrod who came in saw it he declared solemnly that the doll put him in mind of violet herself.

"You always say that"she said pretending reproach."As if I and my dear sisters deserve all the good things."

"Well there's lots of good things you need that you never get to my own imaging"said Penrod."As soon as you have one bad luck going away there comes another."

"How about you"said Catherine.

"I get too much good luck."he answered bitterly.

"No you don't said Daisy looking at him lovingly."Our sorrows and suffering makes you suffer too."

"Why shouldn't it:?I and you are one."

Penrod started about ten minutes after nine to go to Lucillie's headquarters. Between you and me he loved to have this little child scout once a former slave and whom he befriended come to the house, and wondered why she had never come herself oftener for often he had asked her to but she had always been too bashful, too afraid because of their dignified appearance.J He often had said;"Everybody are all equal in our eyes especially all Christians. Why are you afraid.Come some time and see us, and enjoy our company.They'll be little angels to you.but she never did because she was really a little afraid of violet and her sisters, for their beauty and ways enchanted her.

"That little "Rosebud" of a Jannie has such odd ideas"he said to himself as he rode down the Company Street in the face of the fierce blizzard."My sisters could go on very nicely with her, and if the little tyke would only come, and come often she would get used to my sisters.Deary me what an odd timid child she is.Not afraid of the enemy soldiery no.But of my sisters, she's so shy.and don't want to be praised.I called her a Darling brave little girl for handing me a plan she captured one day and she blushed red and ran away to her tent. Well she'll get used to it for I'll see to it she'll stay untill the battle which is coming is over."

Just to test her, and especially for not coming when she had been requested to Penrod had quite determined to be very stern, and patronizing, and pretend to be haughty haughty to the little girl, but not to mean it. but just pretend for a test, though in his heart he was a little offended that she had so long stayed away, just because she was so awesome in the presence of his sisters

, and he wished also to impress Jannie with a proper sense of her own importance to let her understand she was just as important in the eyes of himself and his sisters as any one else. He was dressed in a long purple winter overcoat, wore a wonderful purple winter hat with a terrifying plume on the top. His face though handsome in appearance was stern for real because of the misfortune of his sisters, though for anybody good he had a soft young heart beneath his heavy overcoat. and snow mantle thrown over.

He stopped before Miss Little Miss Hickseen's tent and looked in..At this moment it seemed as if no one was there except little Jannie, dressed un in a new uniform coat, a beautiful new heart shaped hat, with five tiny red real rosebuds in it, and a neat heavy little cross over scarlet cape. It was getting rather cold now, and because he had faced such a terrific blizzard Gale Penrod was somewhat out of breath. At first Jannie was immensely shy at observing the entrance of the boyscout whom she thought was a Glandelinian and was in reality the Abbieannian Prince, but she overcame her embrassment, and fetching a chair placed it before the warm camp stove andbade Penrod sit down and warm himself, which he did with evident satisfaction.

"Much obliged little Rosebud""he said holding his hands before the stove and at the sight of her forgetting all about his resolution to pretene tobe stern and haughty and patronizing because she didn't come to see him or his sisters of ten enough.

"I suppose you were surprised the day, you saw the boy who you thought was Geldelob turn out to be a Prince!"he asked with his usual grin.

"Yes Prince if you please."said Jannie."I can't help it.I never saw you after that within the christian lines."

"Well I'm a great christian boy spy and can do many things"he said.I "I see you have made yourself very neat neat and tidy"said Penrod again examing examining her with evident approval.

"She is always neat and tidy and a very good little girl."said a boyish voice."And worthy of a good Prince and his darling beautiful sisters."

Penrod turned his face to the tent door, and saw Timothy Groveton standing at the very entrance.

"Is this one of your best boyscout friends?"he asked"If he is, you have made a good choice."

"In one way yes."enswered Jannie going up to the boyscout general and putting her hand in his."This is my friend Timothy Groveton."

"Please to see you once again Prince Penrod"said Groveton bowing mosy most courteously, and removing his hat."So you are going to march our little "Girlscout Rosebud off with you into a little Heaven. Ah well Prince I'm sure she'll mas life happy for them again.Good bye Rosey.I just came in to see how you appear in your brand new uniform coat, and my word they do look nice and becoming. I'm just as proud as I am of a many other good little girlscouts.Blest God what a pretty picture she does make."

And he went away grinning with pleasure after as saluting the Prince. Then Jannie came nearer to Penrod and said earnestly;

"Everybody is so good and kind to me especially dear Timothy Groveton. Do you believe Prince that as wicked as Glandelinia is there may be eveb then any number of good and ind people in that nation?"

"God only can tell you that."replied Penrod staring curiously at the odd little girl, whose manner was full of trust and confidence.

"Do you know Prince Timothy Groveton is only cross when Glandelinians do harm to little children and the Princesses.Do you ever get cross when the Glandelinians do those things, Prince?"

"Yes I guess everybody does"said the boy Prince.

"I'm glad of that"answered Jannie smiling"For it is dreadful to hear of the poor Princesses suffering sorrow, sad adventures, and pain.Please Prince does the little Prince ess Violet suffer much pain from her wound.?"

"No.",come we must go to her and her sisters.I am warm and rested now."

"you still appear to be cold and tired."said Jannie in her own little blessed motherly way."Supposing I get some good hot milk ready.It would do you good.Then we can go." It was only a short time and both were slowly swallowing a glass of the hot white fluid.. Penrod was pleased with Jannie's thoughtfulness.

"Why I declare you are quite a little mother."he said kindly., drawing the child near to him and hugging and kissing her to her surprise and embrassment."We must be great friends mustn't we dearie?"

"If you please Prince"answered Jannie"I have loved you for you have saved me from those horrid Glandelinians when I was a slave. And I should love to be more than only a friend to you. And I love your sisters.But oh they're so pretty I feel it awfully unworthy for me to be with them at times."

"And you shall be a great friend of us."replied Penrod rising from the chair."You'll get over it bye and bye and don't then be afraid of them, you must get used to them."

"If you are really going Prince"said Jannie-"I must just call Lucillie and tell her.And I am sure she would wish to say good bye to us."

Penrod nodded pleasantly, and Jannie ran into the rear room of the tent, and returned in a minute followed by Lucillie, who seemed rather nervious at being visited by a great Prince.She kept quite close to Jannie, as though claiming her protection and care. She looked at him affectionately and proudly however as she had heard of the famous protector of the Vivian Girls, and Jannie watched anxiously to see whether Penrod was much impressed by the dear dear presence of her girlscout friend and companion.

"This is Colonel Lucillie Ricksen"she said smiling triumphantly.

A whole world of love love and gentleness, was contained in those few words of hers. And when Lucillie began to converse with Penrod, first about the blizzard weather, and then about Jannie herself, Jannie in her heart thought he appeared quite the best little boy; every inch a good prince.He had gentle courteous manners, which are more becoming even than fine uniforms even though his uniform was not so good in appearance either.

"Lucillie dear"said Jannie as they were parting or starting"You'll take care of my regiment and of your own dear self won't you. And I shall be back to give you you your supper, Lucillie."

"Good bye Jannie dear"she answered."I will follow you in a minute too as he said I should come too. Andsay something good and kind to Violet and her wi sisters and comfort them in their distress."

When they had gone------and their departure was witnessed by Groveton who stood at the entrance of his tent waving his hat frantically---when they had gone, Lucillie pulled out her handkerchief and removed from her face several curious little tears which were having a race down her cheeks.

"what should I do if we she were to leave me together altogether."she thought to herself."I donôt believe I should see any brightness in the sunshine or any blue in the heavens.But of course I would have to make the sacrifice. Perhaps some would almost imagine Lucillie slightly silly but you must remember that Jannie was all in all to her, and that she had learned to see in her a friend and companion, yes almost as her little mother. She found her old dolls in a corner of the tent floor.She lifted them up very tenderly and examined the one with the crushed arm.He did not understand much about mending dolls but he dressed the arm as well as he she could, and no doubt the doll would have shown its gratidue gratidue had it had a tonhue tongue in its mouth.

She then put them on her own stool which she placed near her army cot, and taking up a good sized book became deeply engrossed in it. Meanwhile Jannie and the Prince were riding slowly in the face of the blizzard wind tward the headquarters of Violet and her sisters.In good weather they could have been there and on the return six times over, but because of the fierce wind and snow was very deep.That wonderful camp cap and that wonderful cap which he wore with the violet plume.But at last they arrived, and Jannie stood gazing in awe at the great big solemn house within such a vast encampment of tents tents and barracks.

"I suppose Prince"she said timidly"Your Father the Emperor must have a very large family of christian generals living here to have such a large house?"

Penrod laughed."Bless the Dearest Lord, no"he answered."He's only got the dear little Princesses and me."

"Oh If you please Prince""said Jannie timidly, as they rang the bell and waited to be admitted"If you please Prince, I'm rather frightened.It's seldom I have been to such a grand place.Our's isn't so grand is it?"

"Not quite"replied Penrod smiling, and giving the child an encouraging nod. "But don't you be frightened, for I and they are your best friends you know..And let me tell you deary that it is something to have me and my sisters as your friends."

The orderly opened the door.Penrod bade Jannie follow her and they mounted up some two flights of handsome stairs which led to the second floor.The landing was covered with beautiful rich velvet carpet. The whole place seemed to Jannie as if it was some building in Heaven.There were huge vases with bulrushes in them and shining brass ornaments(captured from the enemy during raids) on brackets, and curious curious rifles and swords and costly plates of many different colors and shapes fastened on to the wall? Jannie was quite bewildered at everything, for she had been accustomed only to the sight of the interior of huge tens and more so to the shabby hut which child slaves slept in in the Glandelinian camp,s

"here we are at last"said Penrod h cheerily pointing to a door."That's my sisters boudior.you rap at the door and go in bravely by yourself.There will be no one but Violet and her sisters, and they're expecting to see you.Tell I'll be in later.I've some business to transact with my father right away.Then I'll be in too."

Jannie's heart beat very fast, as she knocked timidly at the door. It was so timidly done that it hardly didn't throw any sound and Penrod seeing her bashfulness grinned. He strode up to the door, gently grasped her hand and laughing said;

"Do it this way"and he surely made a good sound.

A voice cried;

"Come in Penrod.That's your knock."

Then Jannie slowly opened the door just wide hot enough for her to slip through, and still holding on to the handle she made a little curtsey and said

"If you please Princesses I have come."

The sofa on which Jannie herself lay on was placed that she could see any one coming into the room.Expecting it was Penrod at first by the sound of the rap they showed evident surprise when Jannie stepped in, but nevertheless their faces brightened up at the sight of Jannie's dear quaint little figure.Jannie held out her hand in kindly welcome, but seeing Jannie was shy and timid, for their beauty and appearance had that a the same awesome effect upon her as often before joice got up from her chair and going to the door drew Jannie close to the couch.

"I and my dear sisters are more pleased to have you come"posebud darling" Jennie said smiling as brightly as her distress would allow.

Joice put a chair for Jannie by Jennie's side and said;

"Sit down Jannie dear and don't be afraid of us.We're not spirits.You will sit down, and remove your hata hat and cape."

There was something so lovely and friendly in joice, and the others that Jannie lost much of her nervioisness.

"I'm so glad to see you dear Princesses"she said earnestly."Ever since the good till yesterday your papa told me about you, I've been thinking oh such a lot about you.I'm oh so sorry you were so cruelly deserted.."

"That is very sweet of you indde indeed"said Violet herself gently sitting on the roomy part of Jennie's couch."Move your chair a little closer to me and jennie, will you?"

Jannie drew it nearer to the sofa, and Jennie and Violet took her hands and held her prisoner.

"I'm feeling much better now"Jennie said brightly."Do you now the doctors promised that in a day or two again I shall recover from the shoc and be as strong again as I ever was----like you are.But it seems too good to be true."

"Oh but it will be true."cried Jannie eagerly."One must always go on hoping.That is what I say to Lucillie when she is sad and anxious.It makes all the best difference for us if one always has hope and Faith doesn't it."

"It surely does"said Hettie.

"Prayer does the best of everything though Jannie dear"said Violet."Remember that and nothing will go wrong.Papa tells us you have read a good many books and that for your age you are very wise, so we believe we could use you as one of our aide de camps.That's a very high rank, do you now it."?

"Jannie laughed.

"I'm sure I couldn't be one I'm too small"she said"And I don't believe I'm so wise myself.Lucillie is the one who understands a whole lot. She does know a lot more than I thought. My friends say she is a good scout too.Oh you could love her I am sure. And then there's Timothy Groveton.He is also clever about books and too there he is a boy who knows a lot about birds too.He has all the names on the tip of his tongue. And he has captured from some Glandelinians some most wonderful birds.He's going to send them to you this afternoon as soon as the blizzard lets up."

"Beautiful birds for us in a cage."exclaimed Violet and her sisters together.

"Why we never had such things in our lives.That's too good to be true."

"It is though"said Jannie."I asked him to give them to you.One of the birds is a most wonderful parrot and the bird always says;

"The time will come when the worm worm will turn."

"I should love to hear the parrot say that."cried Violet looking at her sisters."I hope he means---"

"The worm will turn for us."said Daisy."But we have to bide our time."

"The bird says it often"laughed Jannie."Groveton says we can't hear it too often."And then Jannie told Violet, and her sisters all about the beautiful bird Timothy Groveton was preparing to send them, not forgetting the little piping bullfinch.Now and again she stopped, but Violet, Jennie or others of the Vivian Girls always said;

"Do go on Jannie Rosebud, if you're not tired, for I don't don't think we are tired of listening.."

Then one show or other they got on the subject of dolls, and Jannie gave Violet and her sisters an account of her own dolls, but not mentining the [illegible] Vivian would fatally injured one of them.

"Are all of your little dolls in good health?"asked Violet herself slyly.

"Oh pretty good I believe"answered Jannie cheerfully"considering the sudden snow storm you know. That seems to try everyone.Perhaps who came to fetch me was very cold when he came into my tent.I had him set bit by the warm stove."

"Jannie Rose dear"said Violet suddenly.....,, ;;"I know one of your dolls cannot be really in very good health at least it had a crushed arm.I and my sisters sisters always find out papas secrets.Now here is a doll which my sisters voted that you should have, and which I and they want you to have.I made a hat for it just before you came."And as she said this she removed from beneath the coverlets a most gorgeously dressed and large and most handsome doll that Jannie had ever seen in a full life time....

"For me!"cried Jannie aghast.Indeed in her wildest dreams she had never imagined to herself such a doll as this, did not even believe that one exists.

"Yes for you "answered Violet, and she and her sisters were delighted to see her surprise and enjoyment for they always wished to see somebody happy.

"May I kiss you and your brave sisters"?Asked Jannie her little face flushed with excitement and gratitude.It was not the doll she cared so much about as of violet and her sisters and their loving kindness.

"Yes please kiss me and my sisters and especially poor Jennie." Said Violet. And indeed jannie at the suggestion of violet and her other sisters bent over and kissed Jennie first very tenderly and then the others.

"I could love you ever so much more if would let le me."she whispered.

"Do love us for we love you."answered Violet whose pretty face shown with a bright smile. And this was the of beginning of far better friendship than before.

"What are you going to use for a name to that doll!"asked violet,"I always hear that you use odd names for every one of your dolls.don't you!"

"I believe I shall call her Princess Violet"laughed Jannie"Or Princess Jennie.which do you prefer."

"Better not name the doll that"smiled Jennie.

"Why!"

"Because itill have the same bad luc as I have"I'd choose the name of the one who do not suffer as we do."

"That would be Joice Vivian then"replied Jannie"Although I read in a paper the other day that violet is the worst sufferer.But Lucillie explained to me that any one of you poor dears have an equal share, and once poor Jennie became confused, and didn't understand what she was doing.I was very puzzled at the time, but I believe I understand now.Lucillie says a great many bad things have occured to you and your sisters, that one of you, I forgot which lost your eyes twice and couldn't see a thing."

"It was me"said Jennie demurely."But I didn't lose my eyes.I couldn't see. The Glandelinians were the cause of that.I don't understand why I had recieved those attacks of blindness, but I believe I was blind twice if not three times. But God in His Mercy had returned to me the wonderful gift of sight. And what would anybody recieve in exchange for their eyes.I myself would rather be able to see, and so would my dear sisters, what I am writing and reading than to be the possess or of all the gold and silver the whole world possesses.There is no most precious thing in the world with which I or my sisters would be tempted to barter the ability to see the words in print before you.When there that day had came the sudden danger of me losing my eye sight through what the enemy did to me, and when I was told that I had but ten hours in which to see ,that I was to be blind by then, then I did begin to comprehend what a treasure were were my eyes. I took last hungry glances at the things I have never noticed before.I even glanced quavidly out of my window at the majestic Mic-Mollo ter Hollester Main moving down to the Angelinian Sea.I glanced across the river at the low far reaching mountains that broke and scattered the sunrise all over the eastern horizon each morning..I glanced up at night at the eternal stars,that moved across the blue heavens of the heavens as if they were silent caravans.Then when I went to sleep hoping the doctors prediction would not come true I awoke the following morning, and woke up in the dark--the gloom of blindness, and then I sure was crying and realized what a priceless thing it is to have seeing eyes.I don't remember how long the blindness continued but I feared Autumn would come in vain for me to tint the trees, and dye the woods and fields.Spring would never approach again with her color box to paint red roses and pure white lilies and shy little violets. And all the year around the birds and beasts who had never changed a spot or a stripe since the day they were first created created and left the "Garden of Eden would pass unnoticed before my eyes.I thought never again would I be able to see the beauty of my sisters smiling faces never again would I gaze into the lovely depths of my mothers or fathers eyes. And even then that too would not be the end of my misery, when I was again at Holy Mass and the priest raised aloft the Chaste White Host which is the Sacred Body of Christ and the shining chalice which Contains His precious Pri Precious Bl Blood and although I heard the sound of the elevation bell my eyes stared unseeingly at the sight every Catholic loves so well.Oh thank god I'm only supposing this now, but it did happen.Thank God now that I can see see, and the doctors said my eyes were all the stronger now because of those mishaps. I hardly didn,t worry about myself even then, despite the affliction but my poor sisters nothing could comfort them.It was they who cured me by their prayers, and by having masses said for me.When I first heard my verdict the very thought of losing my sight forced me to my knees. It causes me to remember of what Our Blessed Lord said to His decicples many many years ago"Blessed are the eyes that see the things you see-"--yes indeed"Blessed are the eyes that see-"Jannie dear if you have ever read of it it must have been a most supreme moment in the life of the poor blind man at Jericho, whom St Mark tells us about in i his tenth chapter, when Our Lord shattered the spell of his awful black existance. What a day in the life of any blind person to have Christ come into their lives and give them sight. What a blessing for him.Bartimeus for that was this blind mans name very sure it is believed had been born blind, that probably he had never seen the beautiful golden sunshine or the green fields or the faces of men, women and children whom he loved.Probably he had never seen his dear mothers face. No wonder he cried out so desperately despite the wicked sneering Pharisees who threatened him and commanded him to keep quiet"Jesus Son of David have mercy on me.I said those same words a thousand times a day I believe when I was blind."Have mercy upon me.Lord that I may see."And Christ as was his way, neared him and healed him.The poor man Bartimeus saw.He saw Him whom a second before he did not see. And the first sight that blessed his newly given vision was the adorable face of Christ.Indeed Jannie what a beautiful picture to open ones eyes upon for the first time"one hesitated and glanced lovlingly at the pi picture of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.Then she continued"If we could listen to Bartimeus tell the story we might hear him say indeed that it was almost so worth being blind to be cured thus.So much for the blind man of Jericho.As for ourselves--it is more wonderful and generous on God's part to give sight to a grown man after years of bett bitter blindness than to give this great gift from the moment of his birth.If you or I were that poor out of towards fortunate man bartimeus we certainly would be breathless with gratitude gratitude for recieving sight even at so late a date as the middle of life. We little good girls were never as him for not one of us were born blind even though I was blind twice, and insane once..Is it right for us as many people are to be less grateful than he who have possessed our precious sight ever since the day when our dear mother first looked down upon our little faces and was glad to see that the color of our eyes matched the color of her own.God gave Bartimeus eyes for a few years,He gave us ours for the whole length of our blessed holy lives.Therefore are we not greater debtors to dear God than this blind man of Jericho.We certainly are and appreciate it and love him even when we are afflicted for He too was afflicted on the Cross and he Deserved it must less than we do.We have seen almost everything else but we fail to see that one thing, that one great fact--Why we should go far west into Acbiannia, and leave our nation which Loves God and is Blind to all sinful and Hellish things, but has its sight for God only to the peril of Glandelinia.If we did the world would brand us as cowards..Yet not to see the gift makes us fail to see the Giver whom many do not show appreciation for their wonderful eyes.From what I and my sisters have heard of and know of Jannie it is a sad striking thing how blind so many millions of people are throughout the world and are to the great fact that they can see. This is too bad.It only causes them to believe their eyesight is for granted and therefore has this very sad resultthey never bow their heads and Bless God for the marvelous gifts of eyes.Blind people realize much better than all those who have eyes how great a thing is the power of sight.Unfortunately enough, and painfully they realized of what they are deprived, while many millions who can see, do not only realize what they possess but sinfully against Him.Hundreds of years ago, the Palmist of Israel said of the a pagan gods" "They have eyes and see not".This observation might as well be used as a description of that class of people we have been considering people who never stop to realize what a precious thing it is to be able to see God's Heavens above and the earth all around through a pair of eyes. They have eyes"but they see not" they do not see that they are debtors of god that they owe Him a warm grattitude thankfulness and this itself is indeed a blindness--a failure to see that God has been very good to them, and they very than less to Him.Indeed I believe more blind men have lain prostrate and lifted sightless eyes to heaven to pray because of their affliction, than men who could see have lain to pray because of their good fortune..That and would not be men ought to be more thankful than that. Even the deserter had good eyes and ran away and used them to get away and leave us in peril. And yet though we cannot save him from the gallows we do heartily forgive him though everybody believes we're foolish saying he doesn't deserve no forgiveness from anybody."

Jannie wishing to soon cause Jennie to forget her former affliction started the conversation on books plans and maps, and Jannie was quite distressed that though the Princesses had some very good books, yet they did not wear beautiful paper covers to protect the main covers from wearing out.

"Will you let me cover them?"she said with motherly anxiety."you should see how clever I am at covering books. But at home with Lucillie I cut out the overcoats to hide the shabbiness of some of our oldest books here I should make them to protect the beautiful binding."

"You shall cover some of them now dear"said Violet laughing."Here is some of the yellow brown paper Princess Joice came in, and here is a pair of scissors, and Joice will get you the three books that need a cover. And thus the early afternoon spe away sped away, and Penrod arived with some tempting cake and ice cream, and found the sight little girls in happy and eager conversation.

"You don't appear very much frien frightened now Jannie dear."he said kindly.

"No Sire"answered Jannie with a bright sweet frank smile"I'm not at all frightened now.Only I hope I have not tired your dear little sick sister Jennie?"

"Indeed she has not"cried Jennie."Ist I've been so happy and so have my sisters, Penrod and the time has passed on too soon.I don't often say that do I Penrod dear?"she asked somewhat sadly.

"No dearest sister."answered Penrod.But you are going to begin to say it, that I,m sure of.Ah here's the dearest Father on all the earth."

"I'm so glad you'll see papa before we go for our supper"said Catherine, turning to Jannie."Papa dear Jannie has made us very happy and brought our dear sister Jennie back to her happiness again."

"Ah I felt sure she would."said the Emperor, sitting down on Jennie's sofa, and holding out his hand to Jannie, who smiled with delight to see him for he was a great Hero to her."Thank you Jannie dear and May God Bless you for making my dear little girls more happy than usual.Now in a few minutes you are going to eat supper with us.You are to remain with us for quite a while.I shall always feel awfully anxious when my dearest daughters go out on their scouting tours and does not come back to camp and sometimes are captured, for it is dangerous to do those things you understand, and therefore I wish you sometime to accompany them on their journeys for you can decide what to do very quickly as you are well experienced with these Glane Glandelinians,"

"Were you ever afraid of the Glandelinians Jannie?"said Jennie.

Jannie gave a vigorous toss of her head "No."

"Very well little rose bud"she said appreciatively"you shall come with us sometime next week. We're not going to do any scouting untill then.The Generals many of them are getting spoiled and demand of us to do that, and this and so on untill we began to refuse.By the way how is George Crosue the wounded boyscout.Is his poor arm to be cut off?"

"The doctors cannot tell me yet"Said Jannie"but I do hope it isn't as bad as that.."

"what a good thing it is"said Emperor Vivian solemnly"That you are going to be the aidedecamp of my dear daughters and Lucillie too who will be always with you with us."

"Then Jannie seeing her beautiful doll said;

"I don't see where I deserve to have such a beautiful present.I cannotimagine what Lucillie will say.She will be surprised."

"Oh papa"cried violet"Timothy Groveton is going to bring us some beautiful birds which he has in his tent which was rescued from some Glandelinians.I nearly forgot to tell you about them."Jannie said she could bring them here to morrow afternoon, or better still we'll send Angelinia Aronburg to fetch it."

"Oh that's too good to be true"said Jannie, tears of delight glistening in her eyes.

"It is very kind of you Jannie to have Timothy do this for us..and I shall be so proud to tell our dear Uncle."Her little hands were clasped together tightly her face beamed with happiness."Everybody is good to us"Said Jennie ear nestly."You can't imagine how good they are.Timothy puts me in mind of dear Penrod."

"There is more than one Penrod "laughed the Prince and catching hold of both her hands, whirled her round and round, untill she called out to him to stop.

Jannie herself had made many new friends, and seen many beautiful things, but her heart was full tiful to violet,and her sisters and Penrod too.

Their house may be grand"she said to herself as Penrod let her reseat herself by Jennie"but it's not like the Princesses..There may be many beautiful ornaments about but I don't care for them so much as violet and her sisters. They're the angels of heaven come down upon the earth and when the birds come for them I shall be so happy.They're better than those stuffed birds under the glass case."She noticed Violet was looking at her so intently.

"Though through the angels who possess me"laughed violet "I have the gift of an unnatural mind.I knew everything you thought of. You imagine to yourself that I and my sisters are worth more than anything in this room.But why Jannie, you yourself are worth to us more than anything that is ornamental in this room.Iam so glad to have you here.We have almost forgotten our distresss caused by our desertion."

While waiting for the supper time Jannie happened to glance outside of the window with the purpose to see if the great snowstorm was still raging. and saw close by soldiers of every rank going backwards and forwards to the barracks just across the street.

"Ain't you just proud of yourself Jannie dear, my sweet little birdie"said Penrod as he sat down beside her on the sofa with Jennie and violet...."Ain't you just proud of helping by beloved sisters...!"

"No"said jannie.

"There nezt now.I should be.""said Penrod.

"But pride is a sinnprotested Jannie,."God alone should have pride.Pride spoils all good people who do not understand how to use it."

"What I love about you Jannie dear, the little Rosebud of my sisters is that you don't forsake your old friends..That's saying a good deal you understand and also the right sort of pride is no sin.That sort of pride means when we have something good happenening to us, and we get nigh hatted and appear as if we are better than somebody else.We don't do things that way. When you don't alter to your old friends than that causes people to love to too, and again that is saying a good deal you know in this queerish world of suffering and woe..."

"You don't mean to say that people do forget their old friends?"asked Jannie much shocked.

"Penrod nodded his head violently."I mean what I say"he said gravely. But that doesn't happen in our country but it does song among other nations.

But there now angel child don't pay any attention to me.There is time enough to think about these things when we happen to be prisoners among the enemy."

"We can't never be prisoners"laughed Jannie."Of course there is one little bit of thing that I do not like about your dear sisters.But I guess they couldn't even dare to have that altered.They wouldn't be the brave little girls if they did, but I don't like it about their so often going out on such dangerous adventures."

"We don't care about it so much ourselves"put in Angeline."but if we don't do it Glandelinia in the future will give us the last laugh.That is something in this cause we don't wish to have."

"Ah"Penrod added"I guess it was their dangerous adventures you were finding fault with.You are always finding fault with their adventures."

"Indeed Prince Penrod----"

"just call me Penrod"interrupted the Prince."I'm plain Penrod to my best of friends."

"Indeed Penrod"she laughed fondling his rough young hand, "I' m very fond of you and your dearest sisters.Penrod dear I wish you would give a look in to poor Lucillie this late afternoon after supper will you.I don't understand why she didn't come but I believe it is true she cannot leave her post.The snow storm prevents the enemy from doing anything now doesn't it.?"

Penrod smiled at the little girl standing before him.

"Quite right Jannie"he answered."Retain to your duties as if you were a great big soldier."

"It is very pleasant business to be a girlscout"she continued."I feel perfectly at home here now, and Princess Violet, and her sisters, ought to soon be getting stronger and brighter every day from now on.Jennie says it is all through me, but I don't see now that can be for I sure am not a doctor. I thought only god, and Doctors could alone cause people to get well."

"Ain't you a doctor?"demanded Penrod"well Jennie I don't know who is a doctor if you ain't one.Don't you doctor up those sick girlscouts and boyscouts and didn't you take good care of Jane Lesse when she was wounded almost unto death and bring her to recovery?Why I or my sisters are just feeling in the blues don't I come to you for good reliable physics, and you give it to us?Ain't good kind words, loving smiles and goodness great physic.Are they or are they not."!

"I'm sure I cannot tell."laughed Jannie."and that reminds me Penrod dear that the girlscout who lives with Lucillie the one who is wounded does not feel very well."

"Too many of our girlscouts and boys two are getting hurt these days Rosebud too many of the m"said Penrod appearing to be very stern."I wish I could avenge the disaster."

"Do you believe Penrod"asked Jannie timidly"That you could find time to come and see the poor girlscout yourself.Lucillie would be so grateful to you I'm sure."

Penrod scratched his head thoughtfully.

"No I do not believe I could not just now."he answered"Not unless my sisters accompany me,for danger threatens them so much now I,m so scared to leave them alone that sometimes I even shiver.But if they accompany me I won't mind making an exception Jannie Rosebud.Only it's the Glandelinian spies that I'm afraid of, and therefore cannot dare leave my sisters behind for a minute.The Glandelinians are really afraid of me and never come when I,m around.But if I go away for just one minute and the agents find it out---why I&m frightened why I'm frightened of them.That's the plain truth Jannie."

"I thought you was a brave boy"said Jannie pouting.

"I didn't say I wasn't."

"You said you're afraid of the Glandelinians."

Penrod laughed."You don't understand what I said."I&m afraid to leave my sisters behind and just now as so many are away there is no bouyguard.If I go with you I,ll want them to come and I&m afraid they'll refuse as they don't feel well to day since they were deserted."

"They can go with you and I'll take good care of Jennie"said Jannie smiling. "And you now Lucillie is really a good little girl and very nice.It's wonderful how nice people are when you come to know them."

"Are everyone that way though?"asked Penrod doubtfully."We can't always tell who are friends and enemies even here.Well as long as they are our own people I'll dare say you are right Rosebud.Anyhow if my sisters are willing to come with me I'll come to have a look at the girlscout after supper.But they must accompany me for protection. I certainly won't leave the house if they won'T. Name your time and see if I'm not ready.Now off to your supper.And keep your mind easy about the poor wounded girlscout,for I,ll pop in to see her after supper, and I believe my sisters will be glad to accompany me."

Then Jannie was shown the way to the washroom where she and Violet and her sisters went to wash their faces and hands before every time.Penrod retired into his room muttering to himself these mysterious words;

"won't that dear little Jannie just be surprised, when she finds out that she's going to be-----"

He suddenly stopped and stared as if he didn't believe his eyes.He had passed Violet's writing room and saw a gray coated man in their rummaging through drawers and searching through a wardrobe.He very cooling sat himself on a stool and watched the man do his work of raiding with sviuen calmness as if it was something very interesting to watch.Then the man suddenly turned to go to the trun beside the bed and suddenly saw Penrod sitting on a stool grinning and with a pistol in his hand.He looked right into its muzzle.

"Glad to meet you sir"said Penrod."Go on with your work.It was very interesting to see you raiding my sisters room.See if you can find something important."

"The man was goint to make for the window in a hurry.

"No you don't old donkey, just go on with your bit of raiding.There's plenty of evidence against you right now. Here stop I say or I,ll fill you full of holes.Do you hear."!

Penrod saw that the man had a pistol in his holster and he grabbed for it and threw it out into the hall.The pistol in hitting the floor was discharged with a loud report.

"They'll be here now"laughed Penrod."go on with your rais."They'll enjoy it."

"Why you little skunk I was just looking for a piece of paper to write a letter to my mother"said the man."And char you if you believe you have a right to interfere you' e forgotten youre a gentleman and if I had my rifle I&d crack your little skull for you that I will.Do you here you meddling brat."

"I'm a brat to you and nobody else"said Penrod."Say no more.Continue on with your raid.I want to see you mase up the room a little more.Then I'll make you straighten everything out as you found it.A letter to your mother.Ha,hat a lie.You're a spy raiding my headquarters."

Jannie and violet and her sisters had heard the pistol report, but juice who had happened to glance out the door at the time saw the pistol hit the floor.In another minute they were standing at their room door, and heard the sarcastic remarks Penrod man to the man.At their appearance he would have rushed for the window but Penrod halted""Halt! I say.If you try to escape I'll fire. And I can shoot too."

Violet and her sisters stepped into the room.The man now stood perfectly mute.violet and her sisters took it all in, and they were amazed.But not one little word did they say while Penrod at the point of the pistol not knowing they were in the room in his excitement made the man put everything back the way he had found it.

"All right"said Penrod when it was finished."Now follow me.And mind you don't try any escapeade.I'm a good shooter and I feel like practicing now.So get going."

Penrod was surprised to see that his sisters had seen everything, but then they themselves took a hand in it, and the prisoner should found himself confined in the spy's prisoner quarters. Then Penrod himself went into his room to have a few minutes conversation with Timothy Groveton who had come in and brought the beautiful birds himself.

"I'm glad, more glad than anything to see you Timothy."Penrod said smiling and pointing to a chair.

"Thank you I am sure" nasered Timothy and the lad had an immense respect and the greatest admiration for the quiet brown haired scholaly boyscout general.

""As so many of the child scouts are out despite the storm I was feeling a wee bit lonely sire"timothy continued"and as I had these beautiful birds I thought I might as well come over and bring them to your sisters.The Company Streets seem queer with out your sisters outside don't it sir.I hope they're not seriously ill from their experience."

"Yes it seems so."answered Penrod his face appearing grave as he thought of Jennie who alone had remained on the couch."I'm glad when Jennie has a little change for the shock has been too much for her and she is not at all well, and her face is white.They should all have a long rest from their experiences Timothy for it must be dull dangerous dutuite duties to go through what they do."

"Well they don't seem to find it so."said timothy earnestly."As to little Jannie she's loved by the Princesses pretty well.Jennie herself has never been so happy as when she has been sitting in the midst of her darling sisters reading, or doing her bit of stitching.Why to speak plainly I should be sometimes an inch or two jeaous of you because I'm not her brother too."

Penrod smiled and said gently;

"I'm quite certain you need not be jealous, for my sisters also love you very dearly timothy, and indeed they sure ought to for you are our kind and most faithful friend.I do not say much about it but you must believe that for all you have done for them and me that I am grateful to you am not."

He leaned forward and held out his hand, which Timothy grasped heartily..

"ThankYou sire"said the boy rubbing his coat sleeves acroses his eyes,,,"Thank you for those words.I'm just as proud as a rooster to hear you a Prince call me your friend.Blessed be God how I've sent my scouts to cover them every time they went out. And I often got scared too, very scared, and often every day said to myself that they'r getting a bit more beautiful every day. But they don't seem to grow any and stay the same and sometimes they appear so strange Prince.I&m sometimes not believing they're really humans at all.There's no one in our encampments like our Princesses sire.They're a blessing to us indeed.I wonder what is the matter with them!"

"You'd be surprised if I'd tell you."answered Penrod lovingly."I believe for sure that they are God's most Gracious smiles."

At that moment a very learned appearing man in also Prin cely garb, with a angelic face, came into the room.His appearance for a moment almost frightened timotay Groveton out of his seven senses.He was so bashful and awed that he would have flea away had not by some movement Penrod was not by the door and it was closed.

"Don't be afraid"said Penrod.This is my own loving brother.It's not a angel.And why are you afraid of them.They surely won't hurt you if one appeared. "

Timothy Groveton however had just wanted to hand in the bird cages and then go, for he declared vehemently that he wasn't worthy to present himself in the precious of such sweet angels as Penrods sisters.He was so bashful about it, that Penrod, had to go into their washroom where they were finishing their cleaning and confide laughingly timothy Grovetons fear of them because they were so pretty.

"Oh we'll look after him Penrod dear"Hettie answered encouragingly."If he's afraid to come to us we'll go to him. You tell him from us that there is nothing at all to be afraid of and that I'm sure we'll be very good to him and as kind as our angels will permit.Maybe he's so shy because never before had he ever seen us without our disguises; and even then he couldn't hide our beauty.Give him encouragement. Jennie is good to us too for she recieved her medicine without a minutes hesitation, and she seems to bright and cheerful that we believe she'll be stronger."

"You and your dear sisters have changed wonderfully these last few weeks, even in spite of your shock"Penrod said affectionately, though he raged inwardly at the thought of the deserter."Why there's a color of your faces, and now you appear happier.Jennie herself will soon getting about and running on her feet faster than I can.It's all because every body tries to do you good, and its because of your little love that closes her dear little heart.She'll be a great comfort to Jennie. She has a wonderful way about her sisters dear, almost as if she were one of you herself. There's not a soul in the whole army that doesn't love her. Even some of the more humane Glandelinian prisoners smile pleasantly at her when they see her passing and one of them gave her once a nice shining gold piece, and that's saying a great deal, because many of the Glandelinian prisoners are awfully crosses, and disagreeable."

"I'm so glad everybody loves little Jannie" said Violet eagerly drying her hair with her towl towel. "I can't tell you how I and my sisters love her Penrod dear. I don't know what we should do if she didn't come to us to day. She has always such a lot to tell me about her girlscout friend Lucille, and about her friend Timothy Groveton. I'm quite anxious to see them both, and so are my sisters. I'm sorry not to have seen Lucille but she he busy and cannot leave her post. But she will come I'm sure and then I shall tell her how I and my sisters love the former little girl slave whom we now call Rose Bud."

"Timothy Groveton is a real good little gentleman" said Daisy. "I know good boys when I see them. But mostly when they're Foriegners----well they're a different sort, desert you and run away and leave us at the mercy of our persuers,"

"Timothy Groveton must be very nice for "Rosebud to love him" said Angeline staunchily." And we'll invite him to our supper table when he comes won't we? And you'll find him a cup of coffee won't you. He loves milk but he'll need coffee hot to brace him up in such a day. The blizzard is even worse now." She looked pleadingly for she was very anxious to see that everything would be very pleasant for Jannie's great boyscout friend. Penrod understood the look and laughed.

"Bless your heart sisters dear" he said affectionatly. "I love the boy too for I now him well, he's here already, and I am going to encourage him not to be afraid of you for our sakes, and for Jennie's sake too. He shall have hot milk or even coffee he if he prefers so don't you worry your little selves. I'll just go and bring him in, and then when the camm call to supper comes he'll be invited beside me and Jannie."

"Thank you brother dear" Catherine answered gratefully."

After some almost vehement coaxing Penrod finally had Timothy Groveton standing where Violet and her sisters were sitting in the same room again with Jennie, still holding the two bird cages and forgetting in his awe and bashfulness that he even held them..... Too he quite forgot to remove his uniform hat when he stood before them and became very confused and nervous.

"I'm pleased to s ee you little celestial girls." said the boy.

"I am glad to see you too" said Violet benignly.

"Same to you little angels" answered Timothy Groveton in a melancholy tone of voice.

"It's a cold stormy afternoon Groveton dear isn't it." added Joice kindly.

""It is terrible weather and getting sort of cold." he said puffing rather violently, and then taking out his handkerchief and wiping his face as if he was very warm.....

"You will find my dearest sisters very pleasant company when you get used to them" said Penrod in a most friendly manner. "and I dare say you'll be glad of a good hot supper with us dear Timothy Groveton."

"Right you are, maam ma'am" he answered in his excitement. And when Penrod passed on his way to his room Groveton stooping down whispered to Jannie;

"I say little Rosebud, this polite business is harder work than for us scouts to go cleaning the whole Glandelinian encampment out in a raid. How did I bear myself to the little Princesses."?

"Very nicely indeed dear Timothy Groveton" she said. "I am sure I'm quite proud of you."

"They don't appear near so frightening without those haughty heart shaped hats they wear and their weapons and uniforms." he remarked as he finally set the bird cages down removed his hat and put it under his arm.

"Didn't I tell you they are very kind" answered Jannie. "Oh but I do wonder what you will think of the dear little Princesses Timothy when you get used to them. If you don't love them I'll never speak to you again."

Violet and her sisters were smiling their brightest, even Jennie, and shook hands with Jannie'n friend.

"I and my sisters are glad to see you" said Jennie smiling at him most sweetly." But don't be so shy of us. We're nothing so important or so high hatted at at that. Put yourself together my dear friend and make yourself at home here."

"And here's a chair" said joice bring up her own chair.

"I'm pleased to make your acquaintance" he said cheerily, declining the chair for he had quite recovered his composure now." Oh dear Princess you need the chair yourself. I'll sit on the couch nearest your sick sister if you don't mind.

I've heard a lot about you and your sisters from many persons and I make bold to to say though this is the first time I've seen you I now you quite familiar like."

"And I am sure I and my sisters also know all about you Timothy" laughed violet,...

"For Angelinia Aronburg, and many of my leaders are and have been sailing such nice things about you, and I and my sisters are just longing to come and see your division of child scout you yourself have organized and recruited. Jannie Rosebud has given me a lovely description of all the beautiful birds you have captured from Manleys headquarters, and which you found he stole from one of the bird fanciers the Glandelinians killed. I know which ones I should choose to buy if you'll seel sell them to us."

"And which might that be?" asked Timothy Groveton.

"Why of course the parrot and others" said Hettie.

"Oh but I have brought the birds already but I do not charge for them. Said Timothy Groveton. The parrot is a cute bird at that and she understands a thing or two."

Jannie seeing that the boyscout, and the Princesses were getting on well together went out of the room to fetch her work, and then Timothy Groveton nudged violet and said confidingly;

"You'll soon be hearing that parrot say some wonderful words. When I heard her last evening I should have burst with joy, because I have gone through a heap of trouble schooling her. And all she did was to roll her little eyes, and put her head on one side like this (Timothy demonstrated the motion) untill I felt that aggravated I could have wrung her obstinate neck but in the evening she said it right off plainer than any human being, as nice as you or I might say it."

"And what was it she said?" asked violet and her sisters together. "Did she say----"

"There will be a turning of the worm for the Princesses bye and bye" Squark urrar "There will be a turning of the worm. There will be a turning of the Worm Ur-r-r-r-r-r-r-ra-a-a-k They've suffered enough. There'll be a turning of the worm. U-r-r-r-r-r-r-r-k-k-r-r-r-r-r-r" The parrot had startled them almost of out of their wits, for they had not thought he had brought the parrot. Then they clapped their hands with delight, and of course longed to give this piece of news to Penrod.

"Won't Startled Penrod laugh" Violet said smiling at Timothy. "That parrot is so loud that he startled us,-----"

"Urrah-h-h-h-y They won't come off badly then. Things will take a turn. Manley is a ponkey ur-r-r-r-r-r-k His face is like a hot bo water bottle ur-r-r-r-k There will be a turning of the worm--ur----ah Tings is toining on the woim Say Manley is a Monkey. Stop His hot water bottle face from falling off Ur-r-r-k

The hot water bottle description got them a-screaming but the polly now wouldn't stop, and would have had them screeching if Timothy Groveton hadn't succeeded in getting him to stop by pushing a cracker into the cage.

"This is the best fun we've had in a life time screamed violet with the tears of laughter running down her face. "I wish Penrod had heard that. He made a funny remark too. Did you learn that to the polly Timothy."

"My gosh no. I did not. I didn't even know he picked that up. Somebody must have done it. You now I left the birds last night to the care of Radcliffe as he is in camp. And he bru brought me this new red military nec tie and told me I was to wear it to day. A pretty thing ain't it. Not the same style as the sashes you wear wear but wonderfully sweet of its sort. I believe he learned the polly that or at least must have said that about Manley in front of the Polly without thinking. But it's the craziest thing I ever heard."

"Very pretty I" said Joice glancing at her while she wiped her eyes still giggling.

"Oh bless your hearts. The boyscout has good taste" he replied. And Jannie is a clever little party. She has more learning about the enemy in her finger nail than you or me have got in our whole bodies. But that is neither here or there, what I look to is her goodness that's all;---"

"Manleys face is like horseradish and his nose is just as hot ur-r-r-r-r-k" "I'm sure that parrot has learned some of the craziest words" again screamed violet and then jennie said earnestly putting her little delicate appearing hand on his arm. "We all love little Jannie for she is as a little mother to me, and we have loved her more and more every day."

Timothy Groveton listened delightedly while she spoke of Jannie nodding his head approvingly, and smiling very proudly... And then when she had finished, and he saw tears of sadness in her eyes, he took her little hand and put it very gently and respectfully to his lips....2.2.2.

"I'm just blessed and so is Our Blessed Lord if little Jannie or anyone else within our whole Christian nation could keep from loving you dear little angel Princesses of God" he said kindly. "And I'm proud to see you and your sisters and especially without your disguises for you sure do look the part. And when little Jennie gets better, and is able to run about again, and comes to my headquarters,

...n won't I just give you a welcome---just me."

"Thank you"said Violet.

"The same from all of us"added Joice"and on Timothy Groveton what about the situation at Big Girl School.I and my sisters have been quite anxious about it haven't we Jennie dear?"she added as Jannie herself came into the room carrying her work in one hand and some yellow and brown paper in another for she was going to cover some more books for violet,and her sisters..

"Yes indeed"we have been quite anxious"said Violet."But our dear brother Penrod laughs at our fears, and declares we don't give the Glandelinians enough of the "Sure cure"treatment.But he always says oh that to tease me I believe."

"None of your poking fun at me "said Penrod with a laugh as he came in."I don't want want to brag about myself but you don't now about the Glendelinians as Ioce spent I'ce spent nearly two years among them in my frequent spying efforts.That's my line of business.There's no more fierce people on the face of the earth.Oh here my dear timothy is the birds."I'd like to have a peep at these birds..Ah he exclaimed as he glanced at the birds"what a beauty they are. And of the Bullfinch.Did you ever see the beauty of such a breast, and the wee bright black eyes and the sly little head.The finest bullfinch in the whole wide world for my darling sisters. And can't he just sing as loud as am any trumpet.I'm proud of you timothy that you gave these birds to my darling sisters-sisters for, declre he is a downright credit to you and to me too.I'm very grateful;

"Tell general Manley he's nothing but horseraddish and his no nose is as hot" squawked a loud voice down on the floor beside him taking him completely by surprise.

"Ur-r-r-r-r-rk Manley sips soup with socks in them, ur-r-r-r-r-K.Manley is an old double eyes pie face like a hot water bottle ur---r-r-rk

"None of your sass my boy"said Penrod shaking his fist at the polly while violet and her sisters(except Jennie laughed good heartiedly.Where did you learn those words.?"

"The worm will turn.The worm will turn." came again from the the parrot."Manley can go sit on a tack.Ur-r-r-r-r-rk"

"I am very glad we have the parrot"said violet still laughing laughing."He'll be quite a companion for us I with his funny words. My canary too always sings when Jennie my dearest sister comes into the room."

"Of course he does"answered Penrod."She is the sunshine to everybody here.He's a very smart bird.But not like the parrot bless me not like the parrot..He's a comic show."

Jannie was busy cutting out a yellow paper cover for one of the volums, and did not see timothy Groveton smiling mysteriously at each other.She was very happy that they had made friends together for of course it was a great responsibility for her to introduce her friend to such good people, who did not know his great ways and his good mind heart. And it would have been very disappointing to her if violet and her sisters had not taken kindly toward him. As for him he was really in good capitol spirits, and now seemed quite at ease in the grand room.

"This is a beautiful and most tidy room to be sure."he said"and what beautiful fine religious pictures especially of the Sacred Heart, and of the Echo Home of our dear Lord, and of the Sorrows of the Blessed Mother.They remind me rather of some my dear old mother had as belonged to her own mother, very sweet pretty things. And so when you are tired some of you dears lie here for a while and look at them Princesses.?"

"Yes but we don't have the chance to do that very often ain't that true Penrod dear?"said Catherine turning love lovingly toward her little sister.

"Yes indeed very little chance we have sister dear"she answered."It will be a happy day for us indeed when this cruel war is a thing of the past."

At least it would have been a happy there everybody that evening could be happy but at the beginning of it Jennie who had come to the table ate only a little then after a grace after meals excused herself and went to the couch to lie down. She didn't feel well.It was the after effects of the shock of the desertion/ Emperor Vivian joined the supper and was graciousness itself to timothy Groveton .Penrod himself had partaken of the bulk of the roast beef and a portion of Abbiennian Dainty roll, and all were in elegant spirits, when the door opened and little Jannie came in who had sat by Jennie.

"I'm sorry to disturb the supper"she said(for she had finished eating first) but can I speak to Prince Penrod for a minute.?"

Penrod followed the little girl out of the dinning room wondering what on earth the little girl could have to say to him and why she looked so pale and sick like.

"At your service little rosebud."he said as they stood together at the landing.

"Well it's just this Penrod dear"said Jannie almost pleadingly."Poor Jennie is sick.She had fainted away on her couch.I call in some girlscouts to help me and we brought her up, and got her into bed, and when she opened her eyes she mured murmured."My darling sisters, where are my darling sisters?So I left her in charge of Jane Melfort who just now came in, and hurried in here.I'm afraid Jennie is going to be very ill.She looks as pale as death.It's the effects of the shock I believe."Now shall I tell the Princesses or will you.....???????""

"I'll tell them"said Penrod feeling suddenly sick himself at the news. news.

"My dear sisters are as brave as lions, they'll keep quiet you'll see."

He went with a le melancholy step into the dining room, and himself tried his hardest to remain calm.

"Dear sisters"he said tenderly--very tenderly"Jennie is not feeling particularly well, and wants you to come into her room and stay by her, just to look after them you now sisters dear.I'll pray that she will be alright to morrow.It's the shock of the desertion."

Their faces turned pale, their lips quivered sharply, and their loving hearts were full of sadness and fear to find out that Jennie was worse, and that they were not by her side.

"Why does she get the worst of things for"demanded violet bitterly."It ain't right."

"Now, now"said Penrod soothingly"don't feel so."I suppose she is a little different than you are dears, and feels things worse. You are all good and she appreciates it so keep up a brave heart and all will come out all right.I'll send for the doctor."

Clingingclosely to gether violet and her sisters smiled sadly at Penrod, and passed silently out of the dining room, through the long corridor and tward their own sitting room.

"My dear sister is ill and we ain't there by her side"was all Joice said to herself but there was a whole world of sorrow in those few words and she continued- "The way to the room seems twelve times longer than usual,"and they had nearly arived i at the door.

"Courage sisters please, God will be good to her"said Penrod cheerily though his heart was heavy and apprehensive"Just a few yards more, and we'll be with Jennie.I wondered why she left the supper table so hastily."

And in two or three seconds, the little girls were kneeling by their sisters side, kissing her dear hands and her dear pretty face.

"Jennie darling"Violet whispered"We have come and won't leave you untill you get well again..."

Jennie indeed was very ill.Emperor Vivians own doctor came to see her, and looked very grave.He was afraid she would even die before the night set in. He claimed claimed that from the shock of her experience that morning she had taken a bad chill , and she had to gihht against the grief of being deserted, which would not leave her because it doubled her mysery of from thinking of how when Our blessed Lord Himself was deserted from or by His apostles.The latter more than any other had made her ill. The doctor thought to himself "I can pull her through but it'll be a tremendous job.

"Who is going to nurse her?"asked the Doctor of Penrod.

"If you please sir"answered violet"I am going to nurse her, and my sisters are going to always be by her side.But if you do not believe I understand enough sir, we shall be quite content so long as we are with her in the room all the time just to be near her if she wants me or my sisters.But we understand much about nursing, and we can take good care of her, and our dear brother Penrod will help me."

"I believe you and your sisters more than anybody else could take care of her." said the doctor kindly. "Get her into a good sleep if you can and get the fever down.Well, but we shall see to morrow whether you can manage alone.At least you need company in your distress."

"It was a sadly anxious time for Violet,and her sisters, but what startled them was the grief of poor Jannie, and yet if the goodness and indness of friends can be any consolation in the hour of trouble and sorrow, then indeed violet and her sisters must have had that consolation.For Angelinia Aronburg and Angeline Richee arived, and Jennie Turner too bringing loving messages from many other girl and boyscout e leaders, expressing the sorrow of the whole army and many good delicacies for Jennie and them, and dear little souls as these three girlscout leaders were, they wouldn't hear of going home to their camps that night, but kept watch with Jennie in their sickroom and looked after Jennie's sisters, and saw to it they had some nectar and food, and spoke kind cheering words to them.

"Don't you fear dearest Princesses, that any of us are going to forget you now you want help"Jennie Turner said to the poor girls."And do you think we could get a single wink of sleep if tttttt you were sitting up alone with your poor dear little sister.?No here's our place, and here we're going to be, and if Penrod had refused us, we would have come all the same.But he was only too glad to have us come, in fact he sent hastily for us, and Mary Glorinia too will be here shortly, bless his kind heart."

She had no sooner said this, when there was a rapping at the door.Penrod arose to open it, and there stood Timothy Groveton laden with a large bunch of magnificent and beautiful roses, and other beautiful flowers, which he had brought all the way from his own tent, and begged Penrod to recieve them for violet and

and her sister sisters. 198

"I have never been ill myself"he said"But I have often heard as how persons when they are ill love a whole sight of beautiful flowers in their rooms, so I thought I might as well sacrifice these beautiful bocays to give to them and have the place appear as cheerful as possible.I've already donated a sum to have Masses said for her Recovery.But beg ing your pardon for troubling you Prince Penrod, but I should feel very grateful if you'd pop them into Violet's hands."he's about as pretty as Jennie herself.I care not to go in myself for I cannot bear to see their sad faces.It cuts my heart like a knife."

"Do you now you are a very kind loving boy Groveton dear"said Penrod accepting the flowers."I believe you are a most kind person in the world."

"Why now dear Prince"he answered"I do believe you are poking fun at me, like little Jannie does sometimes.Poor dear little Vivian Girls.Poor little dear things. Ain't they got brave loving hearts Prince?How I pine for them in their trouble. And there's very little we can do now.Since the news came that Jennie is ill, and he is responsible for it by his desertion of your dear sisters, the prisoner is guarded more strongly now so to be sure he don't escape. But there now Prince dear begi begging your pardon for bothering you, I am sure,?"

"It's no bother at all"smiled Penrod."But why don't you come in?"

"I can't stand it to see them when they're in distress."said Timothy."But I wish I could do something nevertheless.I'd be no good in a sick room, and I just now that your dear sisters would be very pleased if I would do them many particular favors. All of my followers think a great deal of your sisters too. And unless we are all good Violet, and her sisters are mighty particular about their friends too."

Penrod was touched by his forlorn condition:

"Look you"he said kindly"I'll send down somebody to watch your tent, and you must go up n and sit quietly for an hour with my sisters and little Rosebud, and the 'll tell you how pleased they were with the beautiful flowers."

And he was true to his word for he immediately gave orders for the boyscouts tent to be well guarded, and Timothy Groveton crept upstairs, taking with him some of the lovely dolls belonging to Violet, and her sisters, which he found in the doll house where they had put them neat ly away.

"They're only dolls"he said to himself"But they're a part of the family hou household, and maybe they'll gladden the poor Princesses.How terrible it is that the deserter could cause all this.But he ll pay for it to morrow evening."

Before he entered the door he rapted on it gently.It was little Jannie who slowly opened it, but when she saw it was him, she gladly admitted to him. Indeed he gladdened the poor Vivian Girl Princesses still more, as she sat quietly bes between Violet and Catherine holding one each by the hand.

"You and your dear sisters are better doctors than even the professionals"Timothy said encouragingly, as he watched Joice give Jennie some medicine."I'll bet you little brave angels will cure your poor sister quickly. Indeed if it is true the angels do possess her, they're only allowing this to try your faith in them, and surely they wont let this go too far. And why to be sure you're cleverer than twenty of the best doctors in the world.You and your dear sisters are the doctors for her."

But Violet and her sisters sadly shook their heads, and Violet whispered in return,

"Timothy dear, they say she is very ill, and of course she's so heart broken too and is more sensitive than we are.I wish I was in her place."

"They sure love their little sister even though they ain't got much to give"thought Timothy as he glanced at their sad little faces.

And so the weary sad night passed away, and twice during the night Jennie was better and sometimes worse and at times cried bitterly too.The girlscout chief t iens stayed all the time, and the doctor also called often losing his nights sleep in his grave anxiety over Jennie, and Penrod too stayed in there.

Even Lucillie Rickesen and Jane Lees and others were there. But this however was only a spell Jennie had from her shock. At the usual time Penrod spoke spoke of breakfast, and managed to get his sisters to come and eat. Too Jennie despite her sensitive nature and her prettiness was not a fragile delicate little flower as any one might suppose, and she was full of grief too only for our Lords and sisters sake, and felt herself quite lost that morning if she didn't at least try to have some breakfast too. It would build up her strength and therefore she said as Penrod came from his table to have a temporary glance into the room to see how she was; "Penrod dear will you take me to the dining room.I will try to eat too for I do believe I could."

It was the first time since the day before she had ever proposed to do this.The doctor had told Penrod, repeatedly that if she could and would go through the effort she would recover from the shock and prostration and become all the stronger, for she always did have confidence in her strength, and that continued confidence would bring more strength.Penrod was over joyed at her request.

"You are my brave little sister"he said, holding her to him with one arm and fold fond fondling her golden hair."Of course I will bring you in and I hope you will eata good morning meal. And what is best of all Jennie dear your coming to brea fast will cheer your dear sisters, and also Rosebud and then they'll have hope and comfort ad and comfort in seeing that you are better.We will go quietly by ourselves and we won't even tell Angelinia Aronburg who is sleeping now with the rest our secret, so that they will be just as surprised as your dear sisters.Hurrah little jennie, you will be happy and healthy once more, and cheer up your dear sisters.I'm so glad Father didn't know you were ill."

"I---I---I--beg your pardon Prince Penrod said a soldier suddenly interrupting them, there are two men, apparently foriegners wish to have an interview with you outside."

"Penrod laid Jennie gently on the Couch.

"I have no time to interview them out there now"said Penrod."Send them in here." "the soldier went off to obey.Suddenly Penrod heard a small distinct voice say in his right ear"Ism Jennie's angel. on't do as the foriegners wish.It'll be a sin." Penrod nodded his head understandingly but didn't expect the shock to come."

Penrod motioned the fellows to a chair as they entered and they came down right to the point.They presented first their creentials and thr then laid a papaer paper on the table.

"We represent sort of lawyers for the man who is to die this evening for deserting the Vivian Girl Princesses"said the first man. "We came to request you to sign this made up reprive for the mans sentence."

"What's that"said Penrod hardly believing his eye sight, and forgetting even that Jennie was in the room, and raising his voice unintentionally so loud that his father, and all the rest in the dining room heard him plainly.

"We ha came to ask for a reprive."

"Wttttttttttte "You came to me"said Penrod sarcastically.Why is it you didn't come to my sisters for the reprieve."

"Because he deserted them, and therefore they won't do it."

"Oh so, I see"said Penrod nodding understandingly(Jennie taking it all in)"Well I suppose you believe too I'm made of soft soap or something.Maybe Ism a Jelly fish, or one of those beautiful "Sob Sisters" we've heard about, who sob when ttttttttttttt wicked person is being punished."

"But just listen to reason will you please Prince.He's not an Abbieannien , but a foriegner, and surely it couldn't be just for you to allow a man therefore of his nationalty to go to death on a gallows do you."?

"God be praised he is not an Abbieannian"said Penrod hotly.He was not conscious that his sisters having overheard everything were standing by the open dining room door.

"but reason just the same Prince."

"I am reasoning"said Penrod."I do not sign reprieves. He is a coward a dirty yellow coward and do you imagine for one instant that I'd go back on my own Anchestiral orders and let deserters escape a fate that they deserve. I have been compelled to stand for many trials that my dear sisters went through and I won't stand for their desertion disaster.Good days sir."

"But listen Prince to hang is terrible;!"

"I,m not worrying about that"said Penrod."Good day."

"But please for Heavens sake listen to reason"said the other man."You could at least plead to your sisters for a reprieve. And anyhow you're the head here and could change a law at will."

"I'll change no laws"said Penrod angrily."He dies on the gallows this evening at Sunset.Get out or I'll have you boty h thrown out."

"But it's murder"said the man.

"It is not murder.It is just.Get out I say.I won't have another word."

They They could see it was no use to argue with Penrod.He stuck to his purpose like a leech. The deserter absolutely was out of hope for even a delay in the death sentence and escape was utterly impossible.Well then they thought as they went out;In f "In fact he does deserve his sentence.Our request was only for a human reason.Poor Fool.He could have gained their highest esteem if he had not been a coward.We have done our best so all is lost for him."

Before Penrod turned the little girls c softly closed the door and went to their places at the table.Penrod then lifted Jennie up in his strong arms. He first seen to it that Jennie was dressed, and then carried her tenderly into the dinning room looking again very happy, for he loved Jennie and his little sisters with all the love of his kind heart, and it seemed to him that the future was going to be very bright for her , her sisters ans for him. There was nothing to cloud his happiness now, and he had wonderful schemes in his mind for his chief child scout leaders and for Jannie too, just as soon as Jennie should have recovered her health which he could see was to be pretty soon.He chatted cheerily to Jennie as he carried h carried her toward the dining room/

"Tell me if I hold you too tightly.."he said;

"You don't never hold me too tight at all"she said smiling happily for she was recovering rapidly."And what a lovely morning it is papa dear, and despite the blizzard yesterday so warm again and the snow is well melting fast.It's those forest fires that do this.Yesterday the blizzard ,to da the temperature is ninty. Aint I strange.Does it not seem strange that any one else should be ill on such a beautiful warm November day."

She was not at all nervous. he really was hungry and her one thought was to get in to where her sisters and little "rosebud was.

"Here we are." aid said Penrod giving her a loving hug. "This is our fancy dining room. Now little angel of Heaven shall I carry you in or are you going to step in yourself?"

"I am going to step in myself" she said trembling with eagerness. nd with the help of his strong arm or hand-de hand she walked into the dining room/ but she had been observed by a certain personage on the other side of the hall, He flew across (except without the help of wings) and arived into the dining room to get her chair ready for her her.

"Well now" he said excitedly "This is just good of you it is. who would have thought as how the good little Vivian Princess would have recovered and come here so soon. god bless her little heart.."

Without any ceremony he recieved a large cushion for from one of the boyscouts who had followed him, and arranged it nicely for Jennie, and seizing the biggest stool he could see placed her little feet upon it, all the time murmuring;

"This is just good of you it is. in't I just happy too that's all."

"This is jue t good of you it is u-r-r-r Ain't just happy that is all u-r-r-r I'm the worm that tuen tums u-r-r-r-r-r-r"

The individual suddenly glanced up. It was Jack Evans.

"Well I'll be, he laughed while Jennie's sisters joined in heartily. "so it's you Mr polly eh. ocking me eh?" Then he remembered the existance of Jennie's sisters and good little Penrod, who had stood watching his thoughtful and kindly attentions.

"Begging your pardon dear little angels, and my friend Prince Penrod" he said politely "But was so happy and excited to see the little ces celestial child getting better so soon, that I8m I'm blessed if didn't forget your presence------"

"I beg your pardon sir" interrupted an officer stopping in and saluting "but we have captured somebody out in the outskirts of our lines and he was going somewhere with a goodly number of chilsolav ves all chained to him. do you believe you would have time to see who he is. I believe you are sir well acquainted with him."

"I m always interrupted when I'm attending to my dear charges "said Evans almost angrily."

"It is alright Evans dear" said violet. "please be seated colonel and make yourself at home. Evans you ought to go and see who the man is. Mayne its that poor boob of a Deldom, whom we have plenty of accounts to seetle settle for."

Evans went out, and saw the soldiers bringing in a tall man. Evans waited untill the man was close enough. At the sight of the man, Evans couldn't have been more surprised surprised even if the building would have dropped into a deep big hole in the ground.

"Jennie's worst enemy Augustinia St Claire" he gasped "Well I'll be--"

He stood for a moment without saying another word. Then;

"Please be seated you boys with your prisoner and make yourself at home, while I go tell Jennie that some body is waiting here to see her. Especially I believe she'll be glad to see him. he's a bit easier to day for she has hada good night. after all."

"I am glad of that" said one of the soldiers, while at the mention of the name Jennie- the prisoner sort of cowered.

Evans came in, and to the surprise of violet and her sisters he had a peculiar grim sort of a grin on his face.

"It's a visitor for you Jennie dear, though your dear sisters would love to see him too" he said sort of sarcastically. "Come and see."

Jennie and her sisters, and even Penrod did indeed wonder who the visitor was and therefore had to leave off eating or finishing their morning meal, and followed Evans downstairs. Jennie gave one little cry of surprise, and delight when she saw sitting there Walter Starring, and Fred Nance handcuffed to the prisoner, and heard heard Starring say;

"I8ve captured this man darling little angels. do you know him?"

"she knelt down by Starrings side and whispered;

"I do I do remember him well and her remembrance of her experience when she was in the hands of this evil man caused her to burst into tears resting her little pale face on Starrings lap. This good turn in events was all too much for her. but she felt Starrings loving kiss on her forehead, and she smiled through her tears.

"It's you now who is the h good g hero to us" she said. "I8m only a silly----" she saw Penrods warning look and stopped herself and finished "I cannot help crying it seems so sudden. But oh dear Walter I'm happy you've come and Fred too, and with this cruel man."

"do you remember "Rosebud" asked Evans for he called Jennie that himself "how you said that it would be a very happyday day, when Augustinia St Claire would be captured."

Her sisters faces whitened when they heard, this for they had no idea it had been he, who was the prisoner.

"nd so it is" said Jennie looking bitterly at the prisoner "and God has been oh so so good to me for I,m so much better-----"

"I m glad to meet you Mr Augstinia St Claire" put in Penrod suddenly with a most profound low. "but though I have never seen what itbis accused of you did to my sister Jennie, we need no introduction. I've known you well for nearly two years sir. This is a blessed day indeed that you are here. I'm pleased very much to meet you. I have many accounts to settle with you."

"Adeldeob" he gasped the prisoner in astonishment and fear.

"No not Adeldeob here, but elsewhere I am" said Penrod with a sneer. "I see you know me well too. I'm Prince Penrod vivian here, and Adeldeob within the enemys lines. It was you, sir who coaxed James Deldon to steal into the enemys lines under Izner Myletze and steal her away and sell to whom you thought was Manley, even after Myletz wrote out her freedom papers. You are wanted on both sides."

"Sell who. I didn't sell Jennie Vivian."

"You did too" retorted Penrod hotly. "I saw the whole work, and I got a friend of mine to rescue her but you schemed it so well that you stole her from Manley and brought her to your plantation and almost murdered her. flash my sister with a whip across the face eh. nd pick her when she lies on the ground. And another thing you did. It was Deldon who through you stole little Jannie too from Myletzes army and sold her to Gingigore whom you thought was Manley. I am clever believe , e me. I saw and followed everything you did. I saw you at the Dellnell Tell mell penetentairy, and it was you who stuck that stick of dynimite in violets coat pocket and caused her to be charged with attempting a dynimite trick. If I had had the chance at that time I would have had you thrown into the fire that you made yourself to burn the little girls and all witvin the building. I know every thing I do. I happen to know more of Mr Augustinia St Claire than anybody else who who ever did enter the enemys lines for any thing whatever. He is not even a soldier. He is one of those cruel contempible beings known as a child slave r trader and I r ought to eve refuse him such a thing as his very life. No one needs to introduce him to me. I ought to even charge him with being a Glandelinian spy as he is pretty well with the affairs of many of our highest commissioned christian generals, for even his affairs of many of our highest commissioned christian generals, for even his teleg raphic and ours are on the same two party line, and we have often caught him listening in. I saw you once order two Glandelinian soldiers to sneak up behind my sister Jennie when she was redressing herself on the shore of a stream where she had been in swimming with the purpose of having her slain. He is not satisfied with just brutally treating children, but he must have his followers coming within the christian lines with the attempt to murder them. I have many witnesses against him too. I have been watching him ever since those days was within the Glandelinian camps disguised as a Glandelinian boyscout, nd have seen all that he did. Many of our best generals have been trying to improve many things for my own darling sisters but scoundrels like you gum up the works. And another thing mr Augustinia St Claire there's got to be are-adjustment between our side and your confounded side. I refuse to allow my sisters to e tormented by your sort any longer. I tell you my friends what we shall be able to do with him. We will make him do a whole lot of work, hard work at that, force him to put in the same hours at the same sort of toil that he and his followers exact from the child slaves, and spend the nights in an old shed for a home. Now what do you say to that mr prisoner."

"why--I----I can recall that I ever had in my possession any one of your sisters, let alone one called Jennie." but as he lied his face reddened.

"You are like some more record breaking liars I know" said Penrod slapping him on the face, "when your sort gets into a very tight place you have a very poor memory, but a mighty good forgetory. I saw you do it to her and therefore I brought Evans on the scene as soon as I could----"

"Now Prince please just let me get in a word--do you really believe that your own countrys cause would be improved by allowing the Vivian Girl Princesses go spying on the Glandelinian generals as they do, and then to get away with it without suffering anything.?"

"Certainly not?"

"Well then Prince Penrod, why all this fuss this agitation?"

"B-cause mr Augustinia St Claire, there was no way for them to escape their cruel treatments when they were prisoners in your hands and the hands of others.

But you are trying to coax me into something which you may believe comes in your favor. I don't stand on any such a prosposition. They have a right to spy on the Glandelinian generals, and the Glandelinian generals should be the ones to suffer too not they. They deserve it, and my sisters don't. I'm determined to make every place safe for my sisters and I'll do it. It has been a blessing of God that you were captured. You have even cheated many buyers on child slaves too and have him brought to trial soon. Have the child slaves rescued from him brought in."

havi have been hiding from an army of creditors too. Take him away boys. We'll While this event had happened Violet and her sisters had stood by watching and then there was a heavy thread on the stairs, and Emperor Vivian came up the steps having gone down to fetch something he had forgotten.

"Jennie is feeling much better"said violet."Dear me papa I didn't know you had a companion."

"I have brought her up for my visitor would like to speak to you.I've been telling her how kind you have been to everybody and among yourselves and how good you are."

The woman was their loving Aunt Amma. The good woman no sooner saw her dear little neices, then she put her arms around violet and jennie , and then her sisters and also Penrod and called them by a string of endearing names.

"My pretty little lambs, little angels of Heaven, didn't I say you'de be here yet running about like little saints despite the enemy!"she exclaimed."My hearts ease, my little sweethearts, my little pet angels.Deary me to think you are so happy and safe for all you have gone through.Thank God indeed.2"

"Everything will soon turn against the Glandelinian nation won't it "said Jannie smiling at Violet, and her sisters."

"Oh Aunty dear"laughed violet happily"Our friend Timothy Groveton has given us a number of beautiful birds, and one of them is a Polly and he says the funniest words about Manley .He alw also says the "Worm will turn" but he sure has all night even when Jennie was ill called out such funny words about certainly Glandelinian generals that as foarsome and sad as we were, we couldn't keep from laughing sometimes. To try and quiet him I threw a white cloth over his head to cause him to go to sleep and in stead of stopping his prating he only said"Manley is a White feather.Manley is a white feather, and wouldn't stop saying it untill I rel removed the clothe, and Jennie herself though she was ill, I saw hid her face in her arms and thought she was crying.but she was laughing wildly and couldn't help herself.I guess that is what cured her.See Aunty there is the Polly.He'll even mock you too."

"Manleys ears are to big for him ur-r-r-r-r" started the parrot. "Manleys ears are to big for him.There's his tail u-r-r-r-r-k."

"Yes I seevthat's true"said Jannie smiling happily glad to see violet and her sisters laughing so heartily."I believe he learned that within the Glandelinian camps before he was captured in a raid;"

And all their friends were indeed glad to see violet, and her sisters really smile again, for they had not smiled a great deal lately.....

They all renewed their breakfast in a most hearty manner.Jennie was getting more like herself again and was proud of her dear friend Jannie whi who sat beside her.sometimes Violet passed something to her and sometimes Joice.Evans took a wonderful interest in waiting upon them, and once while he was waiting upon them they told him that he should sit down and join them but he said he was sorry to decline but that he had eaten breakfast much earlier than this and had he known he could have come he would not have done so.but they believed he did not really eat enough((he didn't) and finally persauded him to sit down with them which he finally did.

"I'm moving my army forward tward Big Girl knool by the hundreds of thousands and artillery barr batteries by the score"he confided to Emperor Vivian."See if I don don't take one of them swell houses used by Manley had his headquarters before this month is gone."

"I wish you would"said Violet smiling at him...

"Wait a bit"he answered gravely"Don't you be in a hurry.You and your sisters could capture that place easier than I could.You violet got away with Manleys important uniform coat and sword one day even while he was persueing you."

"Why dear Evans"she replied"You understand quite well that it was nothing to do that for as little as I am I'm a swifter runner than he is."

"Ur-r-r-r-rk.Manley runs like a turtle.Ur-r-r-r-r-r-He's a big porpoise.Ur---r-r-rk came from the parrot.

"That parrot will be the death of us yet"screamed Jennie."I wonder where Timothy got it."I never had such a good laugh in my whole life time."

"Ur-r-rr-Manley 's got a nose like an egg.Ur-r-r-k"

Violet and her sisters almost chocked. But the parrot said nothing more and finally finally they calmed down and Evans then said;

"Little Jannie should once in a while come over and see me too."

"why my good general"she replied"You know quite well I'm waiting untill the dear princesses feels they can go out.They don't want to untill Jennie is better."

"Good bless you, and bless your little heart,I know that"he answered...."you my little Rosebud musn't come without the little Darlings of the nation.why they made us acquainted, and we couldn't be happy without their dear little selves. Ah Ithe many hours I and the dearest little girls on earth spent together, and even when she was ill what times even then I and poor little Angeline had. She really and honest to goodness had a mortal wound in her lung, and yet our dear Blessed Lord couldn;t refuse her to us and her dear sisters and she's still here with us hale happy and strong as any healthy one can be.Who could refuse her to her sisters I wonder!Oh she has a wonderful way about her she has."

"do you think Evans lear"said Jennie, that I really suffered the most in the hands of the enemy."

"You certainly did"piped violet."We can furnish plenty of proof for that.And we'll find redress for that too when we can."

"Well Jennie "said her father, "I believe when the proper time comes you'll be my happiest little daughter.It will be a new sort of life for you too"and jolly nicer too, than all this trouble, sorrow and unusually sad adventures which you and they so often have to go through."

"Jolly nicer"laughed Violet and her sisters together, who were becoming quite merry.The doctor who came after the morning meal found that Jennie had been or was very much better, and said;

"She recieved a severe shock from the fact that she and you little girls had been so disgracefully deserted and at one time I was afraid she would not recover.but you never lost heart my little dears"he said kindly.

"No sir"answered Violet simply, looking up at him and smiling gravely."When one loves intensely, sir, it is only only natural to hope and pray, isn't it?nd nd And then you understand sir, when we also have been sad and anxious about the situation at the Big Girl knool city,I have always told my sisters and others that they must never lose hope, and one must practice what one pre preaches, musn't one.?"

"That is true enough little Princess"he replied"At least you and your sisters have done so.Well I'm not going to tell you to take extra care of your sister, or of each other, nowcthat she is out of danger, for you and your dear sisters are always thinking of each others comfort, and I can trust you to each other thoroughly.You are famous little nurses."

"Thank you kind sir"Jennie herself answered, grateful for his good kind words..Indeed her heart was full of gratitttt gratitude.

As Jennie still lay on the couch resting, violet and her sister sisters and even Penrod sat or stood beside her, talking to her in their own li little motherly way, some of the little girls stiching on something, others watching her as she tried to sleep, and all wondering what they should have felt like if there had been no hope for her recovery.every one of her golden hairs was precious to them.

"She needed our care every time and even before she was ill."they thought to themselves"but now that she is ill she's she will need it doubly, and oh won't we love her, and look after her."

"Dear little blessed hearts, they had always done that.sometimes violet would glance up from her work, and see Jennie's sweet eyes fixed upon her lovingly.....

Then Penrod said;

"Jennie, you and your dear sisters are indeed one of Gods own gracious smiles. You are l his little angels in human form for real I'm afraid at times.I am always wondering about you, and always grateful to Him that hHe gave you to me."

Then ad after looking around he asked;

"you are so often working on something.I would lovevto see you play sometimes. where are your Doll s.I miss them and especially the one called St Elizabeth.They were always in your doll houses.Though I'm a boy I always loved to have them near me because you were so fond of them sisters dear."

Violet got up and removed them from a drawer and put them into a tidy position ."We have been so busy with our adventuring agains the enemy that we have not had any thoughts to spare for the dolls"she said to Penrod."Then either one of us, is either ill or wounded, and when those we love are ill we then cannot always be bothered to even think about dolls. Penrod dear will to hold this one of St Elizabeth?"

He recieved it graciously, and as he held it he asked of joice;

"Any more news about the situation at Big Girlknool Joice dear.?"

"Several good reports."she answered."The christian armies are concentrating very strongly now.some of the lone scouts came yesterday and told us that a portion of general Hansonia's army was concentrating on Greek Dicto Dictionary Run. I was very sorry to hear that as I heard it might be a trap for him and told him he had better move off from there before it is too late.It would be such a dangerous position you understand.General Clyde Quimbie wanted to concentrate near Kittens Richerts but I didn't believe it wise to do so? He insisted but I and my sisters wouldn;t let him do it, and showed our aurthority right there.The general seemed rather cross, and said we were over cautious little Princesses."

"Very dear little girls"murmured Penrod smiling at her and her sisters in his strange proud way.He then said to himself that it was indeed worth while to be back in this portion of the christian army again for the sake of being loved as violet and her sisters loved. him. Penrod watched Hettie sewing his uniform coat which had a rip in the sleeve.

"Poor battered old uniform"he said sympathically."Ah sisters dear, what a glorious set of uniforms we had when s we first set out a month ago.I am always thinking about them..Do you now sisters dear,I've dreamed over so many times that the terrible war was over, and that we were home in our palace at Marcucian City. Was that not a golden dream!"

"Yes dearest brother"Violet answered brightly, happy indeed too to see that Jenie that Jennie was ever so much better."But I wish brother dear that is was not only such a thing as a dream.I wish that everything was serene and peaceful, and that we we were all happy again at home.Then we would be proud of God sure then.I wish we could could increase our love for Him but it seems our love is as great as love can ever be.I wish often that we even here could see Him face to face Penrod dear, and that He could live with us always in our Palace.But His will be done.And for the sake of our holy cause I wish we could recruit a whole lot of more child scouts , and in forming it into a division give it a name in honor of our dearest brother.Wouldn't you be proud of it then.I would gather into it too every dear child slave you love Penrod dear, and I believe I know the names of a great nam many of your favorite girl and boyscouts, don't I."

Penrod smiled....

"Yes dear sister"he replied"You and your dear sisters know all about the child scout regiments."Why sometimes you can tell me correctly the number of our new regiment of child scouts when ever you never saw the number, can't you?"

"Of course"answered Hettie"It's easy enough to make that out, and it saves us the trouble of going out searching for the numbers doesn't it? and I'm proud to put on a new number or remember in some way or other, when I take out your register book and scold you for having left your prayer book in to be squashed."

He laughed quite merrily at the very thought of Hettie scolding him.If she or her sisters did, he never remembered it. A few hours after breakfast, Penrod and Violet and her sisters decided to go on a promised visit to Evans and take little Jannie with her. General Jack Evans was in a high state of excitement, and wanted them to ride to his headquarters in in state, but Jennie had preferred to walk it, and so her sisters decided to do the same, and they all therefore took their stroll together each ones arm around the others waist. the day before had been a cold northwest blizzard, to day the wind was blowing high from the southeast, and it was as warm now as a summer day and the deep snow melted so fast and formed such deep slushy water, that Violet and her sisters had not been thought less enough to forget b putting on their boots.

"You're not frightened of this strange change in the weather, dear Jannie?" asked Jennie herself...

"Of course I'm not frightened with you Princesses dear."answered Jannie dear."I'm not afraid of the Glandelinians, but oh those forest fires,.I hate to see them, they give me the ce creeps as if I was in the Hadania Regions."

General Evans was sitting on his horse near the front gates of his headquarters not expecting his little friends to come so soon after his return to his his place and he sure welcomed them happily.

"Thank God I am able to see dear Jennie so well again"he said rubbing his hands. "I have been even busy cleaning out my headquarters rooms for you.Bless your little Angel possessed hearts it's as spruce as any drawing room."

He led the way, and dismounting at the entrance had his horse led to its stable and led them in.

"There's my large and long couch angels dear.Sit you down.Make yourselves at home for I'm blessed if I ain't particular glad to see Jennie herself sitting so cosy and well again, and oh how you must love each other..There's my parrot which you little dears gave me over a month ago which your raiders captured last only do you believe he'll ever screech anything pleasant for us?Oh no.He's the same as one of those poodle dogs one wishes to perform but nothing will coax him, though he'll surely do it when left by himself and no one sees him"

Violet,and her sisters were pleased indeed, with the great bird.Then Violet went to a certain cupboard and removed a small bag, and said to Evans almost giggling;

"If you please Evans dear, our Guardian angel in human form, may your big beautiful bird have some of his famous crackers.

Evans turned to Penrod and laughed.

"There now Prince did I not tell you that she would start after the cracker. Oh she'll be the ruin of me and the parrot.Who would give me Crackers if I was starving,I would love to know. "

"I would give you more than a cracker"said Violet."It would be a good hearty meal."

"And we too"cried hersisters..."

"Hurrah"said Evans."I never will have to feel to come off badly then."

"At that moment the great parrot became rather excited.The parrot a male one had heard a word he recognized------the word ----hurrah and without hesitation he screamed out at the top of his voice;

"Angels are here, angels are here , do you see. Angels are here ."

Indeed the angels possessing Jennie must have been working together for by this time Jennie had recovered entirely from her illness as severe as it was from the shock of being deserted.

"Are you not glad to see my great army again"The general said as he made her comfortable in his own big arm chair, and two of her sisters took their accustomed places places by her side///." nd isn't it like old times dear little angels for you and me to be sitting here, and waiting for news to come in. And darlings, here is a set of new uniforms Emperor Vivian had me select for you at Angelinia Agathia though Heaven knows I had a dreadful time to get through and reach here with them.There is beautiful hats to match.I have bought them for you. And see Angeline, a little acquaintance of yours at Angelinia Agathia, Childie they call her made you a new dress out of her own money she saved up for Christmas. but she so sacrificed it for you.Dear me how pretty you all look in your new hats.I believe you are just made for Heaven, and and Emperor Vivian believes so too.you make this very countrya Heaven with your presence."

Violet, and hersisters had tried the new hats on their little heads, and Evans was staring at them admiringly, when Angelinia Aronburg arived, and was glad to see them so happy with her friend Evans, and she felt very po proud of it and made the Princesses happy by whispering;

"Oh darling Princesses what a sweet little darling you got with you.Is that our little heroine Jannie.!"

And Angelinia Aronburg hugged the little girl and then too Violet,and her sisters with delight, and said blissfully;

"Are you not just lovely to day.Are you not just beautiful"and then Angelinia Aronburg had some wonderful news to give Violet,and her sisters about the christian armies....

"Your papa said to me this morning, when he came to see me, that he wishes you dear little girls, and all of our child scout following to go to some remote safe part of the country for a while on a furlough.It will do you good as he wishes you to stop adventuring against the enemy for a while.He said that for every one of you dears, your health was really failing from overtoil overtoil and that for the sake of your countrys cause you need a rest away from the enemy.We're to go together after we save Big Girl Knool from the enemy. We are all to go to Angelinia Agathia next week or so.He is going to tell you all about it himself. Oh you don't understand how lovely it is Princesses.We will love to lie under the trees and hear the birds singing.They say at Angelinia Agathia there is no cool weather at all.The forest fires far east of there keep it warm.you have never seen the big forest fires have you Jannie.!"

"No not these that I can remember"answered Jannie her own face aglow with excitement at the prospects of going to Angelinia Agathia which she had never seen in her life"I've only saw something like one when I was in Hanleys army as a slave and first new Prince Penrod as Adelie ob.Is it anything as big as that?"

"Something worse"said Angelinia Aronburg smiling" ut we won't go near that. And then Princesses, and possibud and Penrod dear too, the evergreen trees remain green and in winter or summer the clouds are of such lovely shape and the cows are so pretty in the fields.Oh we shall be happy all together."""""

"And won't the color just came back in the cheeks of the little angels"answered Jack Evans smiling at her and her sisters, and looking wistfully at their pale thin little cheeks, and thin because of their sorrows suffering and too much hardships.

"And Evans too is to come and spend his holidays with us, and also our famous boyscout hero Timothy Groveton" ontinued Angelinia Aronburg breathlessly"And of course Jennie Turner, Angeline Riches and all the others."

"Of course"Said Violet gravely"One couldn't wish to go without them at any time. And "and have you told them as yet."

"No"answered Angelinia Aronburg."I did not have the time."But your dear Father will tell them."

"I believe I and my sisters must then."said Jennie eagerly."Now the dear child scouts will again love to hear the birds singing in the trees. And how Angeline Richee will love to hear the Owls."

"Who will love to hear the owls?"asked Jennie Turner popping in suddenly.

"You will.""said Jennie.

"That poor little Princess has gone mas"said Jennie Turner staring hard at her and really believing it for the moment.Then seeing Angelinia Aronburg and Penrod, and the rest,.she exclaimed;

"Hurrah Prince Penrod, a million welcomes y to you and your darling sisters and as many to your Grand Father.My word how we've missed you down here. All the child scouts have been quite forlorn, and we've been more forlorn."

After she had chattered a little to Penrod, she turned to Jennie and said coaxingly;

"what about the Owls you were naming as I came in."Did you have any here?"

"Suppose I'm not going to tell you."said Jennie trying very hard to pretend haughtiness; but s the nest minute she had caught hold of Jennie's hand, and was telling her the wonderful news...

"Look here "Jennie Turner said"Are you making fun of me or is this really true?"

"It is really the plain truth."cried the little Princesses delightedly, and even general Evans joined in too.....

"Well then it sure is a pleasant shock to me"she said pulling out her handkerchief and wiping her eyes"That is all.To imagine of me having a furlough, and not one of those enemy sort, when it always rains shot and shell, but a proper fine furlough with you dear Princesses, and little Jannie here.Yes I'm going to say it is a good news to me.Why I've never been in the silent country since I became a girlscout. I used to hear the owls then but its over four years ago.a"

"She wiped her eyes again.

"Your eyes must be troubling you"said Penrod

"No Prince"she answered gently half timidly"I have no sore eyes, but I've got a heavy lump in my heart with thin ing about my old home in Angelinia Agathia. nd there is nothing li e that Princesses to ma e one just a bit sad.I've never seen my mother for over two years. B gging your pardon I believe I'll just go and tell some of my f riends."

Violet and her sisters followed her to the door, and then Jennie placed her arm around her.

"Dear Jennie Turner"she said"I believe you are one of our best girlscouts, and we love you very much. And so does Penrod.Don't go now.Stay with us for the remainder of the day.We'll excuse you from the duties."

Jennie Turner was brought in therefore and given a seat on the sofa.

"Little girlscout"said Jack Evans as he lifted her up in his arms"You've got a sweet sympathiatic heart of your own so you have.Bless your dear tiny brave self."

Before the plan was fully made for them to go to the city of Angelinia Agathia on a furlough, Emperor Vivian, and His Brothers Wife had a long serious consulatation together in his wonderful headquarters council room. irst he saw to it that no one was in the room for fear of spies.

"I should not care to do it without your advice."said Emperor Vivian"But tell me now dear sister in law, what do you think of the plan.?"

"It is splendid Sire"she answered her kind face beaming with smiles.."Deary me I don't now what any of us should do without little jannie called "Rosebud", and our dear little Princesses, especially little Jennie are always their brightest when that deary child is here.Penrod our dear Newp Nephew did the best thing in the world when he rescued her from those dirty Glandelinians. nd "Rosebud"as they call her, would never like to leave Violetand her sisters now. she used to cry awful at times because violet and her sisters had often been wounded, and wasn't with them. he She was always reproaching herself, and fretting her little tender heart away."

"Well she surely won't do that any more."replied Emperor Vivian"For her friend Lucillie will be quite happy here, being one of my girlscout guardians for them, and helping my daughters collecting information for me, and helping them to rment the enemy generals to her hearts content. she i a scholarly girlscout and I shall be pleased to have her with us.I would not have thought of it if Angelinia Aronburg and Jennie Turner and also Angeline Richee had not suggested it to me."Do you believe Lucillie Ric sen will consent to come?"

"Yes sire"replied The Second Empress."Because begging your pardon Sire little Jannie is awful fond of you, and your daughters and especially Penrod who got her free and of me too sire, if you'll excuse me saying so. ut it will be somewhat hard for her though to part with her friend Miss Angelinia Aronburg.That will be the trouble sire."

"ut she is usually a most constant companion of my daughters too and is invited here and there wherever they be as often as she loves to be. Little Jannie had has do done so much for my little Daughters that I and they cannot do a half enough for her and Angelinia Aronburg is about as good to me as if she were my daughter too.I'm sure I811 be tempted to adopt her some day as she is all alone in the world except vor for general Concentinian Aronburg, and he has been begging me often to adopt her."

"She's one of the best little girlscouts and girl spies we have." said the grand woman enthusiastically, for Angelinia Aronburg had greatly won her good will"And and your daughters will be glad to do anything to make her cosy and comfortable here. You have no idea Sire, how kind often Angelinia Aronburg was, when Angelinia Vivian was so ill before and after the battle of Evangeline St Claire, and she was never tired running errands for you, and seeing to the place and thinking only of you and her and her sisters.And always a cheery word on her lips. nd her love for the Princesses and even for little Jannie is like a bit of poetry Sire."

"I see she has sure made a friend of you"said Emperor Vivian smiling"so that's all right though very unusual for it costs lots of make strangers be liked very much as you're always careful about that and very particular who your friends are good as you are. And do they not say everywhere in Abbieannia that it is the bestthing in the world to win my brothers wifes friendship since she is so hard to be won by strangers. nd yet you have a good kind heart at that."

"Thank you sire" smiling she said smiling with pleasure at his words of praise. Then Emperor Vivian begging her not to tell Violet and her sisters untill he had concluded the arrangement, hurriedoff, and going into the room where Violet and her sisters were, told little Jannie he wished to see her alone. he was S he was stitching on a uniform coat when he called for her. he came in still holding the coat.

"Jannie"he said gently as he seated her on his lap and looked into her face which was blushing"Put the coat down.I was I want to converse with you very seriously about Lucillie Rickson and yourself."

"Yes Sire."she answered gravely, almost timidly.....

Then he told he told her that he wanted her friend Lucillie Rickson to come and be a constant companion of the Vivian Girl Princesses, and that by them and Angelinia Aronburg she and Lucillie would be trained so they could help Violet and her Viole and her sisters have lots of fun at the expense of the enemy and without having any trouble about it either, and that she too would divide her time between her andthe Princesses, who loved her dearly, and that Penrod would take care of themall/"

"Probably you would be sorry to leave that section of the girlscout camps"he said indly"but then Lucillie Rickson has gained good favor in the eyes of the dear daughters of mine, and also from me, and child scout duties is pretty hard sometimes isn't it? And Lucillie too would be far happier in their company, seeing to their safty, examing the codes and other things Violet or her sisters may collect in their spying depredations, and having fun with them to her hearts content..., and helping them in their duties."

"Oh she sure would be happy beyond words to be among those little angels"she cried, as usual always thinking of her, and the Princesses in general."she sure would be happy."

"And you little "Rosebud of our great Company of Child Scouts,would you too be happy?"he demanded anxiously.

"Oh yes,"she answered brightly "but------"

"But what child?"he asked, knowing quite well what she really meant.

"But dear Miss Angelinia Aronburg"she stammered outm looking very distressed."I love her so much and I couldn't bear not to see her again.She saved me from the Glandelinians on the road that day.You see she is one of my best friends, and I love my old friends better than my new ones. he is as a sister to me.You are not angry with me for saying this, are you?"

"Indeed not"Rosebud child"he said placing his arm around her."You have a loyal little heart, and I love you all the more for it.ut you would not have to say goodbye to dear Angelinia Aronburg.In fact she is a very near relation to the darling daughters of mine and is so frequently with them that many believe she is their eldest sister because she's near as pretty as any one of them. hy t she comes to them whenever she loves to, and they're all always most delighted to see her.You understand Jannie we loo upon her as if she was my daughter and she my daughters sister for Heaven only knowe she has certainly done a lot for them a whole lot more than anybody in the whole nation, even more than I had. She is as brave as they too, and you'll never be missing her. Does it seem so very dreadful now Rosebud when I tell you she's their best guardian next to Penrod or Evans and is always with them wherever they go."

"No"she answered smiling at him through her tears.

"And another thing"said Emperor Vivian."If it had not been for Angelinia Aronburg my daughters would not be living to day. And neither would Penrod for she saved him from a Rattlesnake den. Therefore they couldn't bear to let her out of their sight. o you need not worry about it."

"I won't"said Jannie."And indeed Sire, I'm not an ungrateful little girl, for I now you are so very kind, you and your dear sisters, and everybody that I now here, and Penrod, even when I thought he was a "good Glandelinian boyscout by the name of Adeldefob was so good to me in the Glandelinian camps and wouldn't let the overseers touch me.I can't imagine what I've done to recieve such kindness."

"Why Jannie"he said"You have done everything, if not for me then for my dear little daughters.If it had not been for you,I believe my little girl Jennie or Angeline too would still be lying on the sofa day by day, finding the hours drag very wearily. but you often came and made them spin away ia as if the days were riding on a fast ttrain. nd clever little doctor that you are, you saved little Jennie last night from her shock and illness and caused the color to return to her cheeks and brought strength into her body once more. nd therefore God Bless you immensely "Little Rosebud of our army". nd Violet, and her sisters loves you,z and nothing would make them happier,,, than for you and Lucillie to live with us. Angelinia Aronburg mostly does too but she continues to be so busy. o you believe you could leave your old boy and girlscout Regiment Jannie.?"

"I'm sure I could"she answered gently,,,, and then she added to herself"For the sake of violet and her sisters and Lucillie."

So when Lucillie herself came into the Emperors headquarters to see Violet and her sisters and find out how Jennie was getting along,she left Emperor Vivian to tell her of the great plan, understanding that Lucillie would be happy beyond all words to be in charge of violet and her sisters, and to be sure that poor Jennie won't never get ill again.ut she herself ran across the company street to where Angelinia Aronburg stood in conversation withsome of her girl and boyscout officers.

"Well little huam human flower."he said cheerily, placing her arm around the child,"and what can I serve you with this fine morni ng? Here's a pair of of human love birds coo in cooing some good news to me, or did you wish to come and see only me just now. I do appreciate it if you did."

"Of course you would" replied Jannie. "Why the whole regiment is a part of you, and you are a part of the regiment. And do you now dear Miss Aronburg, your hat is on a little crooked and you forgot to comb your hair this moring morning."

"I'll leave that for you to do then" she smiled. But now I've also seen your face and I see you have been crying a wee morsel. What's wrong Jannie. Is Jennie ill again?"

"Nothing" she answered looking to be sure no strangers stopped to listen. "Only I want want to talk to you very seriously, but in private."

"Well let's get into the tent and talk on." she replied sweetly. "I'm your victim."

They both steppped into the tent, and then Jannie told her of Emperor Vivians proposal.

"Well now my dear little Jannie" she said "and why are you not looking, jolly, happy and merry and dancing about like a little angel sprite, to think that you are going to be their constant companion, and that soon you will be trained so good in the girlscout art, that you'll be able to send your old time Glandelinian masters and enemies to Jericho or some other hot place!"

"Oh Miss Angelinia Aronburg" she cried;;"I can't bear to leave you--untill He told me that it wouldn't need to------that is what I was fretting about. I didn't know you were so constantly with the Vivian Girl Princesses.."

"Look here" said Angelinia Aronburg "You need not never fear losing me that way. I'm as const n constantly with those dear little girls as if I was a sister to them though though you never seen me there often. I'm always welcome to them, and I never in my life e was shy in their presence I can tell you. I was with them long before the big war started. And if it had not been for me those poor little angels would have been murdered long ago. And what is there for me to be frightened of in that house or any of their headquarters. Emperor Vivian bless him, Hes my grown nearest cousin. Concen tinian Aronburg is my uncle because he married Uncle Hanson Vivians sister. U I thin a great deal of them all too; and the will all ta e good care of you my dear Rosebud better than any one else can, and being under their protection you'll be under mine too as I'm their most powerful guardian despite my size. So don't you go fretting for me Jannie for you'll never be parting from me. And there what a holiday we are s oon gounf going to have in the country, aren't we.!"

"Yes" she answered smiling brightly/

"'ou'll be with me more often than you were before" continued Angelinia Aronburg. "You will be with me as often as you are with them. Fancy you now having familiar friends in that swell part of the Christian lines. They'll keep you away from the horrid ugly old Glandelinian camps too. And hark/ you Jannie these lasy last few days things had ta en a pretty good turn after all, that who knows if the enemy is forced to retreat from this territory I shall also come with you and the Princesses on the furlough. So it is settled now, Rosebud dear, and don't you fear that you're going to be cut from me because you and Lucillie are going to be with those little human creatures of Heaven. It would be a good joke to me too if you too catch their ailment and that is "Angel possession" They say that is catching and surely you deserve that happy condition. So you run acrosss now and offer my respect and compliments to the great hero of ours Emperor Vivian, and tell him as how I really made out the plan and I'm heartily glad for Lucillies sake and yours too. Kiss me little saint and then run acrosss as hard as you can."

She looked after her, and rubbed her eyes...

"Well, well" she said to herself "I'm blessed if I ever thought things would come out this good for her. But there now, I've got her into that happy mess and let the enemy growl. Jannie will have a chance to do everything for the Princesses and probably capture her own slave masters if any survive, and she won't have no troubles doing it either. She will be cosy and comfortable, and will see as much of me me as of them for I'm always with them/"

Everyone within the whole christian lin s lines and especially amongst the various regiments of child scouts---Timothy Groveton included---was delighted to hear the good news. Evidently violet and her sisters must have kissed each other very often. And then Jannie described to them how she had told dear Angelinia Aronburg, and how unselfish and cheerful she was...."Because you now" she said "he'llbe with us just as often, won't she?"

"Of course she will" cried violet. "he's the same to us as if she was our sister and she's with us so very often that she seldom seems away. Wherever we go she goes."

"The kind good girlscout general" Exclaimed Penrod "Yes she saved me once when the two Professional spies surprised me when unarmed and she knows how I often welcome her, and go to see her every time I have the chance. "

"But" said Jannie a little plaintively "My comrades all will miss me a little won't they."

"Of course they'll miss you ever so much." cried Jennie. But as many as can must come and see us very often. Everybody is welcome to ourdoor as we believe everyone is equal no matter what rank we have."

"Will General Jack Evans miss me very much too?" Jannie asked.

"That dear kind man" exclaimed Joice laughing. "He might as well be our big brother he is so constantly with us, and loves us so well Rosebud dear. "No he need not miss you. He's always with us. He's in the next room with Emperor Vivian now and I believe they're h aring every word we say."

"I', sure he will too" said Jannie earnestly. "And he will come very often I'm certain, for he has promised me, and he always keeps his word. Dear, dear Timothy Groveton.

A little near dinner time her sisters having gone out to see Angelinia Aronburg on the plan, Penrod, and Jennie Vivian sat together in their boudour.

"It isn't any good of me always getting ill Penrod" she said "for it goes so soon thank Heaven. But my sisters believes I suffer more than they. They feel so sad for me and bev believe I should not have to have it at all. Is it true. They say you have the records of what we all suff ered. Which of us got it worst?"

He laid his hand on her head...

"I don,t remember the real thing. He answered. "If you really wish it to be memorized would you mind getting the record book that papa keeps.!"

She went willingly enough and said as she handed it to him (it was a big book)

"Are you sorry that I suffered so much!"

"None of you deserve it even a little bit." he answered sadly.

He glanced over the list of what she and her sisters reallybwent through and said;

"You and Angeline got it equally as bad. and so did poor violet. No Jennie none of you got it worst than the other. Though you did not know it you all got it equal. Didn't you ever glanced through this before.?"

"No Penrod dear" she answered. "We never had the time till now. But then Penrod dear, we shall gain great merit from it by and by. And even despite what the foolish man Augustinein St Claire did to me I'd heartily forgive him if he was sorry and repented. But I can see by his features he is beyond repentance and therefore I have a horror of that man, though I can feel it he,ll never be able todo me any more harm. And too what I am so happy about is that if we can be bee better with our training you give me we will not need to have no worry or anxiety in case duty within the Glandelinian army pulls you from us for a time. You have made yourself the best christian spy of the whole world, you have been able to fool the enemy just as long as you please without ever being detected, they don't even now now who Adeldefob is and believes he,s still a Glandelinian boyscout, and sometimes when you do your spying again why we'll come over there and surprise you with a visit and help you too. you have ta en such loving care of violet too when she tried to capture Gerald starring in little Girl knool and sometimes she believes you're angel possessed too though you do not sense it."

She had risen up and was standing at the back of his chair, her hands clasped around his neck and her little head resting against his cheek..

"Dear little angel" he murmured, t"there's no one li e my little Jennie, nor her sisters in the whole world truly. When I went to say how much I love you and them, I cannot find words half gentle enough, except when I call you one of God's brightest smiles, and one of his sweetest fairest flowers. You, Angeline and violet are the prettiest of them all, and oh the rest love you three. Why Why flowers are not as beautiful as you and your sisters are. And you and your sisters would ma e any home happy for their dear brothers, and parents. God blessed our good Nation when he caused you and your sisters to come into existence."

The rest of the day went merrily by at the great house within the christian lines. Jennie's strength increased together with her love and the love of her sisters for their little friend and compani n companion called "Rosebud, and Emperor Vivian blessed the day, when Jannie was first rescued by Penrod and "Gertrude Angeline" from the Glandelinian army, and who was to become so dear to the dearest Princesses and their father. Timothy Groveton to day also found pleasure and delight in doing lots of things to for violet and her sisters, and violet and her sisters loved to see every one of the boy and girlscouts happy, "and Jannie herself felt she could never be grateful enough to the great Emperor for all his kindness to Jannie and Lucillie. And she was happy too, for all the rest of the day Angelinia Aronburg remained in the place with violet, and her sisters and ate a good supper with them.

In other ways to put it right, without the Vivian Girls knowing it attempts had been made by other sympathizing foriegners to save the life or lessen the danger of losing it for the man who had dese t deserted the Vivian Girls in teir their time of danger. But nothing could be done. ut the man too was a foolish one too. A priest was admitted to see him and if possible give him the last Sacraments but he refused the priest. He was no Catholic and hated priests and catholics and therefore nothing could be done. The incident of the morning before had been a most astounding thing to the whole army. To desert the Vivian Girl Princesses no doubt the man seemed to many a most incredible thing and yet it happened. No doubt the man being a coward as he was dreaded more than anything the approach of the hour when he would be standing on the scaffold with the rope around his neck. Anyone may easily know that a coward always meets his sad fate. It seemed strange that any one could really have deserted the Vivian girls, when inmost cases other soldiers soldiers with them even foriegners had done brave deeds even with the purpose to show off, and rash deeds. too. It might have possible possible that had they had any say in it, the Princesses might have stayed or stopped his execution, which may have been a folli foolish thing to do too, for even Our Lord precidted that a coward would perish, for He said "Those that seeketh their lives shall lose it, and no man hath greater love than he who lays down his life for his friend. But it was evident that at Delight's Junction Junction they themselves had been the firing squad that executed the cowardly Englishmen, and therefore why should they be so "crazy"as to save this dirty coward who had deserted them, and when after all with the number they had at their back, no one had been in any danger but the Glandelinians themselves for fifty paid th their lives for their assault upon the little girls, who while they lost no one on their own side.

The man sure showed evidence when the time came and he was led onto the scaffold. scaffold. The ceremony as it wascalled was soon over, and the world was rid of that one coward at least. He was buried in a big wooden box and put in what is called the potters field.

The days of great sorrow and horror however were fast approaching. Violet and her sisters were more nervous than usual on these days, and then too general Weinstien had approached with his christian army was and was concentrating near Jennie Wren Town Stream which runs into the larger river called Avonburg Run. Childie Creek was also being occupied by christian armies, and a great division of troops was concentrating tward Seven Hills, and Kittens Hecherts. It was evident that an enormous battle was threatening, for never before in the history of this tremendous war did such big armies ever mobolize and concentrate against each other.The Glandelinian devil general Richardosn Tamerline was massing in the territory of Chamberlane with the purpose to oppose any movement made by general Weinstien, and other armies were coming up.

The situation which was dreaded before was growing to a menance and Violet and her sisters once had proposed to general Weinstien that they believed it would be better for him if he should draw off from the dangerous territory, but he didn't believe there was any chances of withdrawing now believing it more dangerous to retreat than to stay where he was. Even all the boy and girlscouts and Angelinia Avonburg were grave and thoughtful.These chief og girlscouts stayed with Violet and her sisters constantly, because forfearing what may come off, Penrod was forced to disguise himself as Adeldeob and go bac into the enemys lines to try and discover what the enemy intended to do.knowing Walter starring was their best protector next to himself he had selected him to be their guardian 8 n untill he should return.The parting between Violet and her sisters wq was indeed a very sad one, and they wept bitterly for a time, but he had to go and they couldn,t prevent him.Of course they felt sure beyond any measure that he would be absolutely safe, but nevertheless the parting was a sad one indeed. Even little Jannie cried too and many others but Penrod tried to cheer them all up, saying that they in the end would not regret his purpose.But he warned Violet and her sisters sisters almost sternly saying;

"Sisters if a big battle breaks loose here, for God's sake keep away from it. I don,t like the looks of things here.The worse of it is so many of these dangerous Glandelinian generals are all so strange to me that I myself do not know anything about them, especially this dangerous Tamerline as he's called. He tried to get you once as Starring told me and by means of that devil Angeloni who was executed as a murderer and a spy. So for the Sake of God and mine don't get yourself caught into any battle line under any conditions.If you see any signs of an attack, of course warn your generals but don't get into any of the squabble yourselves.Promise that won,t you dearies."?

"Th We will do the best we can"they sobbed."For we do not care much for battles.Really this time Penrod, we have a confession to make. We're afraid. We're scared.There's something wrong here we don't like.I,m afraid afraid there's going to be a battle that will shock the world.please do you too Penrod keep out of it if you can."

"I'm certainly not going into a battle"said Penrod."you can rest easy on that. When I come bac I hope to bring you something as a present from the enemys lines.But rest easy I'll return.The Glandelinians will never get me, and besides they respect and are afraid of " Adeldeob."That is what I,m going to be now from then on till I see you again.But remember sisters dear stay out of danger. To morrow is november the twenty fifth and I don't like the looks of things myself. So do be careful.We don't want anything to happen to you. And guard Jannie well. he's she's in as great danger as yourselves.There's some firing now.Well I,m off.Good by dears untill I return.I'll write secret codes letters to you while I'm spying.

Good Bye." And the weeping Princesses saw him ride away.

The tac a tack though stem ed at one point now continued furiously and increased steadily at other points threatening to force the christians back. At last the left f Baldwins line was forced and general wedden their co commander stunned by the wind of a passing cannon ba l ball. The faces of his generals were a pale as death but they remained cool and ly their energycoac ted the purple cats to hold the trench for dear life. In a few minutes he general Helingbar ame to Baldwins aid with reinforcements, Baldwins flankers were cut up and throw hrown into confusi n by the new comers and the Glandelinian columns along his front rushed to fragments and routed for miles.

"My but that was a narrow escape for us all.''Said Baldwin;''The first time an army has won despite being surrounded..... Thank God and heaven that none of us generals are lost.''

Weinstine who failed to get any nenews from the little girls saw the move ents of the graycoated columns which went tward the north, while at the same time other divisions were coming tward his eastern division. n fifteen minute he was witnessing the most violent onslaught ever seen and which increased t c terrific violnce. One assault after another came in q ick succession the laughter being something terrific. Along the center of Weinstines eastern division the assault quickly so arose to a maximu m and followed by a mingling repusle. Then the assault came again in quick succession and they were something ter ific, ach a ttended with its ret inue ofminor and formed coloctively of one great assault that continued with relentless fury and which swayed the christian lines very barfully. V FEARFULLY/ The whole assaulting columnes were in frightful connot ion their whole line honeycombed with rents and gaps. 1,000 assaults all day long a, along this point with unabated fury each assault almost causing the christian li line to collaspe, whole brigades being shattered in places where the landelinians had forced their c way through.

By terrific explosions men were blown u hundreds of feet into the air and notwithstanding all their frenzy and desperation and reckless courage the landelinians could not force the christian lines at any pointand were finally forced o withdraw. Along Weinstines main left wing the assault was more desperate the Glandelinians pouring on like human avalanches while the firing along the christian lines roared like millions of cannon. All the officers were alrmed larmed by the awful fury of the enemy's assult, and they soul could see that the nemy as it seemed were coming on with a fury that nothing could stop.

The whole battle ground seemed to burst asunder from the explosions of so many thousands of shells in quick succession, but the christian lines were in awful awful peril as the survivors came on with a crashing roar the columns of graycoats forming one solid wall. The christian leaders noticed a narrow ath which the for failed to fill and into here were placed a hundred guns which soon poured a sheet of fire upon the assailantse , which mowed down hundreds every second, the shell explosions wrenching or blowing to pieces huge rocks weighting twenty three hundred tons. Whole regiments seemed to disolve at every explosion and the Glandelinians saw that success was impossibleif they did not get o that path in time to carry these murderous batteries.

nward and onward amid the deafening roar of the incessant christian fire rushed he awful columnsin gray who reached a seemingly network of positions or trenches and from here awful puffs of smoke clouds emoued forth amid the crash of musketry. own went the graycoats in mulitudes but on pressed the form foremost survivors nly only to m be mowed down also. Despie despite all their n energy and great desperation the Glandelinians could not pass these networks of trenches for here the continuous christian fire was too deadly and there was fair chance of meeting with annihilation. One line of graycoats three miles long and fifteen deep had been almost annihilated by this vertible''HORNETS NEST'' and the main columns were checked, but not driven back their entire line storming with such a heavy return fire that the smoke soon obscured everything.

At the point where the path runs the assault continued the Glandelinians succeeding in ocrssing it and within an hour millions of men were intermingled in a sublime hand to hand struggle. The infantry defending the guns fought like fiends for the possession of the pass the gunners keeping their artillery in action with roar that seemed to make the heavens.

Five times amid horrible slaughter the Glandelinians forced the infantry lines from their position and five times the christians ret ook it amid seemingly un earthly slaughter hand to hand. So fierce was the acti ion that the whole line seemed to disolve in fire. whole lines in gray being shivered to fragments, and from the Angelinian guns, and from every infantry line fearful streams of shells shriapnell canister and storms of musket b volleys poured. As a new line of the assailants poured on there came a series of awful detonations among their columns which was so appalling that it was indescribable and large masses of the Glandelinians collasped by scores but the main line still kept up the assault, each column so sweeping upon the guns one after another. All the time among their lines the deadly shells exploded with a roar like the crashing of th usands of tons of gun cotton the detonations following each other so rapidly that it was indeed a continuous and awful roar, the shell fragments mangling many columns.

It was not long after this when violet and her sisters relieved a surprise. Starring had been made one of their boy generals over the whole troops of boyscouts and at first the little girls did not know what to say, but nevertheless they were glad. Unfortunately they could not see him for several days for he had to help his troop to be in readiness but one day they came upon him unexpectedly as they were inspecting the troops.

'Oh Starring you surprised surprised us.''Said Violet after they had embraved; ''Are you sure you could do it.?''

''Positive.''Said Starring;''I did not ask for theproml promotion either. They begged me to occupy the generalships and I felt in cowardice to refuse so I accepted.''''

''Well I,m glad to see that you are one of our leaders now.''Said Violet;''General Weinstine want's to use us as general scouts.''

''What you little girls to be general scouts. 'Said Starring.''Why you would have to go through the enemys lines to do such things.''

''We were scouts before.''Said voice;''There is nothing to it;''We will take the risk anyhow for our country. But would you like to go along with us to general Weinstines headquarters.''

''Your our main leader.''Said Starring;''So you could giveme the permit.''

''I know but I cannot take you from your duty.''Said Violet;''Something may happen time now now''Said Starring;''Let's go and have the examanatin over with.''

''So off they went, Starring in their midst, and within an hour they was in the scouts headquarters and the little girls saw many stern hawky eyes men standing about in gray uniforms. Who ever they wre the little girls did not know as they were suspicious looking and Starring was about to draw his weapons to protect the little girls when we when one one of them said;,

'''Don't shoot we are Angelinian spies in disguise''Are these general Vivians daughters with you.?''''

''Yes we are in deed said Starring, and how do we knowyou are Angelinian spies. I guess I'll have to arrest you as you may be posing as christians to get the little girls when I am off my guard. Come along.''''

''No boy we are not jesting.''Protesing the speaker who was the commander of the headquarters and throwing the greatcoat off he stood in the full uniform of a christian officer and it was general Aronburg himself.''

''Oh! see!''Said Starring as he put his guns away;''The Vivian girls came to get an examanation so that they could be allowed to go with me.''

''All right.''Said Aronburg;''But why did you little girls wish to have the examanation;''It's only for themen. And you would win anyway I know and you were boy scout spies before. But come get your examination. But your guardian will have to protect you as the scouting work is very hazardious these days.''''

''You bet I will.''Said starring who followed;'' When will the they pass the examanation!!!!!''

''Right away as soon as it's through through.''SaidAronburg;''But they are all right. They will get thepromotion if they fail anyway. ''Then turning to the litle girls he said;

''I hope you little girls are not ticklish. It's a lady surgeon that examines you. And you must not jump.''

''We arnot a bit ticklish.''Said Jessie;''And if he we were we could would take care that he does not tickle us.''

Aronburg cametoa doctors room and finding him stated the cause of their visit saying in conclusion that they are to have the promotion whether they pass or notand as they are scout leaders anyway.

''They wanted the examanation themselves so I let them have it.''

''All right.''Said the doctor;''I know who who they are myself for I have seen them in various boy scout companies. I'm sure they will pass and if they don't I'll let it go at that.''

He calledViolet in first, examanaed her heart beats, tested her lungs and proceeded on other examanations.

''If any child has as beautiful and as well not knoble as boy body as yours I'll eat my hat and shoes.''Starring heard the doctor say;''A perfect angel indeed with such a pure chi,d childish form and such a graceful little neck. But what marred it in the front. Had any body chocked you.''

A few moments Staring heard Violet telling the doctor of the experience she and her sisters went through before and during the war.

''I wonder if he undredded her altogether!''Thought staring;''If he did I'm cried I'll have to report him.''

At this moment the door opened and the doctor stood before him.

''Come in and help in the examanation, as I have only not fifteen minutes time.to.''He said;''With two we can work better and faster.''

In a moment Starring was in the room having choose Jolie first.

''What city were you borne in?''Asked Starring of Violet while the doctor was preparing to test voice.

''I was borne in Pandora , in the country of Allieanria.''Said Violet.

''In what year!''

''In the year of nineteen hundred six.''Answered Violet.

''What month and date!''

' On the twenty fifth of December.''

''Y u are lucky sure enough. 'Said Starring;' 'born on Christmas day.What is your a.e, nine years?''

''Yes I,m nine.' 'Said Violet.''Next Christmas I'll n be 4n.''

''Staring sat down on a chair andeda drawing her to him said;

''Let me see your finger nails. Thy are always examenned and your teeth too.''

Violé produced her hands and looking over them Starring said;

''They are as clan as your little soul and with this to thedoctors surprise he gave her ha a hug. The fiften minutesoon passed the six of them haveing been examenned.

''If they can't pass the exammanation no one else can.' Said the doctor!''Deliver these recomendations to general Zimmermann right away, and se what his is. He decides the whole thing.'

After they bid good bye to the doctor n and reached the outside hall Violet said;

''If i we pass or not it makes no differnece;''We are the most famious scouts of whole Angelinia ever since our first attempt at Jennie Wren mown Angelinia.''

''Oh you sly will pass all right. 'Said starring.

In twenty minutes they reached general Whilliamsburger Zimmermanns head quarters room, and was ushered before the great general who after reading the recomendations beckoned them to followinto a room where all was complete darkness.

They entered without far, haring Zimmerm an say to himself;

''Who was the fool who turned out this light. We can't see a thing in here and could stumble oversomething.''

He managed to turn on a light. Five large tables were in the room and many kinds of guns were hanging on the wall. To gen violet and her sisters the general had a Satanic face, fierce shape, and ugly manner of walking but he was a good man however and they soon learned to like him. And he was t n general who did prove later on thatno glandelinian general ever a ive could lick him in any bale battle he fought as we will soon see. Heunlocked one of the drawers and produced six guns and turning unon them buin buisness like asked;

''You are crackshots I know?''

''Yes your ec excellancy.''Said Violet;''We could to as an ample into the air and shoot it. We do not need theguns though as we are armed.''

''You wil' do then.''Said the general;''You children who ever you are have hater recommendations than any one who ever passed through an examanation. You are always clan, keep yourselves in good healthy cond condition in body and soul and show no yellow streaks, and have not a single bad tooth. But it is strange that you children mere little girls should want such a hazardious job. But as your recom mendations are good,'' make you the heads of the scouting boys in all op rations. What are your names.''?

Violet and he sisters wrote their names down on a sl slip of paper andhe looking at the names said in consternation;

''You children needed no exammanation. You were always leaders of the boy scouts. What did you take the examanation for.''?

' To se if we were real y f t for the service.''

''There was no need of all this trouble.' Said Zim ermann. Y''You little girls are over ua inatend. We have orders to respect you children.''

As it war late Zimmermann took them to his own headquarters gave them a splindid meal and then took them a through some beautiful gad garden letting them pick the choicest f c f. flowers. When the little girls returned to the hart of the lines full of happiness they sudde ly spied baldwin sta ding on a trench with three generals. Th They rushed to the trench in a moment and were greeted war warming by the generals. baldwin embraced thelittle girls and said;

''Your father sent me here with an army to help Weinstine. We are probably going to fight Tamerline soon. And it is our duty to help catch general Bragrard who has turned loose five hundred convicts cut one of one of thails Wil' you litt le girls dare the attapt if the battle don't come.''

''The enemy may be concentratin gnow and it maybe impossible to try it just now but if we see a chance we will do it.''Said Joice

One afterno n when Starring was all along with the little girls he said to Joice;

''Would you mind telling me and your sister how you and your other sisters escaped death during the battle of Arathis Run?''

''No not at All.''Said Joice;''Before the batle had went into the city to locate the still remaining children and warn them to flee as the foe as we feared would be victorio. .he storm of shells caught us somehow the shells crashing everywhere splintering the houses to fragments. When we werefirst looking for that town we had been captured by Glandelinians and then o Jennie Wren mown ly train, but we got away took the Pandora lines for Weeping Willow Run, which to h us out of the way altogether. On the train we reached the town of Bergolia which was in flames). We f got off however and took the Sandon lines going northward to the small e city of Zimmermann but as t n thatcity was also in flames we stayed on and as the day proved to be illustery, heavy winds having set in and which turned into a screaming furri ane hurrin hurricane. Two days we reached Angeline(Calverinia) where we got off only to be caught in nother terrific furi hurricane of battle which done great de l of damage and lasted fourty eight hours with a victory on the christian side fortunately the enemy being sent flying as h we heard later with thelorn of three million. None of us were injured however and undaunted by all we went through we again went on our way but it was another day ormefore we f found the right lines for Agathis. We were about fifty miles away from this great l Holy city being then in the city of Zudora which then was partily in ruins. On a sweltering hot day weset out on the fastest train we could geton the Mc-Hollester lines but werenagain delayed by the enemy who ar wrecked the train and slaughtered all but us who escaped with great difficulty. Taking an ther train from Pandora we reached Marcucial where where we got off where we charged trai s taking the Angelire, Dondinia and Calverine railroad. Learning that the train would not stop at Agathis on account of the enemy threatening that region we rode as fa r s south Chandlerlima, then got off intending to take the Evangeline St Clare railroad to Angelinia Arst in, Calverinia, but learned that no trains were running on this line as the tracks were torn up by the enemy.

We then asked for tickets for the Pandora and Mc-Hollester, but got the same reports about those lines and so we had intended to hike the rest of the way in disguise. On sunday after being captured twice by Madege wvan's Glandelinian hovecouts, Madege Evans bei ng a litt'le Glandelinian girl scout as pretty as a fairy spit sprite, we reached the city of Weinstine where we were again arrested but got away and rode to little Mc-Whirther on a north bound freight train which we fortunately caught. We would have went further but it was aprovison provision train for the enemy, and waked to get off or be taken prisoners again. At Mc-Whirther we hired a handcare on which we went as far asOphelinain the then a train to the Weinstine lnes where we got off. This day was the liveliest time of our lives and the most sweltering heat of the Calverinia summerand fal'.

Four times werewe were pse pursued and suffering from the scourching heart we reached the station of the Maria Treciana lines and learning that no trains were running as all were in the enemy's po ssession we had to wa k wall the rest of the wayfacing perils at every step! When we reached little Peppo we saw that the city was enshrouded in smoke clouds of unusual darkness and looking at the scene we noticed an a pwelling canopy of clouds black as ink and full of convulitions. The northern skieswas covered with clouds of all different colors and strong glows covered the skies in the direct direction of the main city of Calverinia andBeppo.As we noticed this we were not taken unawares as we were aquainted with the signs of burning cities and towns. We reached Agathis in time to witness the destuction goingon. Explosions were everywhere, tearing up houses by score. We managed to breast some wall's of seething surging flames untill we got to a place which afforded us shelter fro the ravages of the explosions. The noise of the exploding she shells made war sometihng awful! We cannot describe it. It was worse than the shelling in which we experienced during the battle of Maximillian. We escaped them by cause of be one and when we were imprisoned by a wreckage on top of a cellar we were in we learned from a fellow prisoner that theunfortunate inhabitants were dead long ago and that some of the christian armies were gonenorthward. When the fury of the bombardment had passed and the enemy had left going northward we were rescued from our shelterand brought back to Aronburgs army. We had ben taken across a sea of burning mangled wreckage and Aronburg failed through means of wire being down to notify us of our safty untill we first met you kids.''

It was just near the last o November when Violet and her sisters and Starring found many of the christian generals in excitement, and going to general Weinstine who was talking in excitement to generals Zimmermann and Aronburg and Galette they asked what the trouble was.

''''General Aronburgs whole army is in action with general Heinesburg's Glandelirians and is in great danger.''Said Weinstine;''Accouting party came and told me.AndI cannot get word to him as all our communications are cut off.I would like you little girls to go and see what is up and wire me at the next station.''

''It wil' be better if Starring and a company of his boys o go along.''Said Angeline;' He may be of some hen help.''

''Oh yes.''Said Weinstine;' I have ordered him to go along.''

''All right.' 'Said Starring;''I'll gladly accompany them''

''Yes . ''Said Weinstine;''I can fully trust thelittle girls with you as I know you have no cold feet and do not show the u yellow streak.' and am no coward.''

It was like heaven to starring to be allowed to have the vivian girls with him alone for then he had them specially in his care and he was going to see to it th t in their errand succeeded. He thanked general Weinstine as best as he knew how, saying that i he would protect them with his life if need be. No one could imagine how he felt over this privilege. To have the dear litle thinks all' to himself on the trip. Indeed it cannot bedescit described how he felt. He felt again as if he was in the presence of celestial children in disguise as humans. Many times on their way he almost du doubted that they were real earthly children, because he had the opinion that children in human flesh could not have such du ralling batuy.

Beauty. They were cheered by thousands of Angelinians as they made their way eastward to where the sound of heavy firing went on steadily and incessant ly.....

Starbr asked one of the lieutenants first time it would take to reach Aronburgs lines.

''You will have more than an hour to making the trip.''Said the sol soldier;''This is the main road to his lines. Are those little girls your sisters?''

''''I wish they were.''Said Starring gravely;''They are the six pretty celestial daughters of his excellency general Robert Vivian and I am one of their boy guardians. Jack Evens is another and there is one at that though I have never seen the boy.''

''Oh I see .''Saidthe soldier in surprise;''I thought they were your sisters. You will have to be careful in making the trip outside the lines as you may be recognized by the Glandelinians and be murdered. It is best for you though to take a number of hand cars for it is quicker than horse riding.''

''I will do so.''Said starring;''But he added ;''I would like to see the Glandelinians that would succeed incapturing us.''

''Maybe so .''Said thesoldier;''They may befeated and then you may beworsted as it is sometimes the t no one can tell how many may come upon us.''

''I know .''Said Starring;''I have instructions to se our little charges softly through all danger and they will be too,if I have to clean ot the Glandelinians single handed.''

After bidding the soldier good bye they continued on their way ward ten oclkoc o-clock in the morning having started outat eight with eight reached the vicinity of general Aronburgs lines. Here a spectacle was before them. The n enemy had been repulsed ten times already but had now returned to the assault with redoubled fury. Aronburg held successfully however and again crushed the assaulting waves to pieces.

The little girls reported the facts to Weinstine and then came back. On the next morning Tamerline launched a heavy onslaughts upon Zimmermanns lines but met a sta ging blow. His left avenging from the south got mangled by terrible gin gun fire and was obliged to withdraw Zimmermann pressing on and or carrying the enemys trenxhes after all days fighting of the most ferocious ch charg character. The next day general Weinstine made an advance that turned into a general battle. General Weinstines eastern divisions cut out to pieces by a tremendous tremendous cavalry and infantry onslaught under general Hoyne and was driven into confusion the smoke of the battle behind the retreating chr christian lines looking like that of the whi white pall from the advance guard of a great forest fire.

With all his available forfces Aronburg am came to the rescue throwing his own columns upon the advancing Orarian Gardes. Despite the arival of thesw forces Hoyne kept up the attack resistlently striking blow after blow. The slaughter of the Glandelirian masses was something terrible but Hoyne was bound to force the new barrier and made ten desparate assaults in which thre hundred fell every time making a total of 3,300,000 altogether in the ten assa assaults. In the last Hoyne fell mortally wounded.

Though Hoynes Glandelinians crushed and mangled Abandoned the assault, general Galendars Glandelinianmade a successive ed ancing his forces in lines twenty miles in extent but as they came on after the christians rallied behind the seconf second line of works they gradually disappeared before the christian fire, bu when the smoke liftes many horrible fragments were seen to be left coming on in a frenzy of maddened fury. One of the lines got blown up in mines but the seerde columns formed into one in all shape of a long wedge t The assault was terific and though the Glandelinians could not break through his second lines the western columns overwhelmed Aronburgs right grand division and came into contact with a part of Zimmermanns army and the collision being t oo much the assailants gac gave way.At this point the terrific christian fire threatening to destroy everything in its path had been exce dingly violent exespecially on the line of artillery . All along the christian front Aronburgs lines swelled up so as to arrest t he course of the desperate assailants and old them in check. Violet and her sisters were were at the scene of action.

and reported to Weinstine of Aronburgs danger of being overwhelmed by the on pouring streams of Glandelinians. They quickly drove off. The Glandelinians came on like irresistible walls of water and many times their advance columns fairly disappeared in a chaos as of lurating exp/ explosives. The air was full of flying bullets while shells exploded with terrific detonations, tearing up rocks throwing down trees, and causing the greatest death destruction. As the little girls went on they could hear frok from sounds that the battle was increasing and wheeling around to take a look they were all almost rendered unconscious by a shock recieved when a shell exploded near them. At the same time their breath seemed suddenly to leave their bodies and the they craved for air. As luck would have it the little girls recovered just in time to escape a surging column of graycoats.

CHAPTER 13

THE BATTLE OF JENNIE WREN TOWN9 (CALVERINIA)
WEINSTINE STRIKES TAMERLINE A SERIES OF THE HARDEST BLOWS AND WHAT COME'S OF IT.

Violet was the first to see the surge of graycoats within a thousand yards of her and she gave a shrill cry of alarm as she and her sisters dashed on.

''The enemy have broken Aronburgs lines and are moving for Weinstines rear.''

''The fury of the battle has increased also.''Said Joice;''We must hurry to warn Weinstine of the danger.''

Just as she spoke a shell wailed through the treet ops with an unearthly sound while from the concussion of the heavy firing the ground literlly trembled. As they reached a rocky region, a shell landed on a ledge of rocks in front of them, which tore it to pieces from top to bottom hot one. At the same time a score of trees was blown to pieces by a high explosive shell and by the glare of the explosion the little girls were almost blinded. As they stood there bewildered they saw huge masses of graycoats coming ward them ,and climbing a tree they saw there was no means of getting to Weinstine as graycouts were everywhere intermingled with the hard pressed purple coats whose whole line seemed aflame. Far to their right the little girls heard a distant roar resembling the motion of ten thousand cannon and looking in that direction they saw immense columns in gray advancing in awful fury their lines ablaze for miles. They could easily hear the awful hissing of shells in that direction and their explosions mingled with the drum-drum fire of their cannons.

At the same time they saw that the eastern wing of this great columnof Glandelinians gaining iron ground unchecked and pouring across the railroad tracks in great masses. This column was making terrible headway and was coming swiftly ward the main army where there already was bursting forth a heavy cannonading of one thousand big howitzers.A stream of darting tongues of flame extending along Zimmermanns Zimmermann lines made a roar that caused the ground to quake and as the little girls watched the firing increased in redoubled violence, the little girls being startled by a continous continious earsplitting roar t o tremendous explosion s which seemed to shake the very tree tops. They looked eagerly in that direction and saw the nearest columns in gray go into fragments. More columns in gray shot forward to only a th usand feet of the christian line which undulated into sheets of f am e flame and smoke. As they watched they saw masses after masses of graycoats many ten s of thousands innumber rush the earthworks and swarm over only to plech headlong amid the fiery inferno. It was indeed awful.

''Therefore there must be like a living sea of slaughter.'' Said violet;''The christian line over there may be forced however and then there will be trouble.''

It was a grand and awful sight to the little girls. For hours and hours the battle in the distance raged furiously , all the while growing stronger and stronger.

The Glandelinians swarmed in shattered waves upon the purple lines which was gouged and cut in many [illegible] by the flame of the slaughter only to closed by fresh columns. Still the assault continued with fresh fury cloud after cloud of smoke spreading from the christian cannon which showered canister and storms of shells upon the frenzied assailants. For a long time this kept on butthe columns in gray was seen to be retiring, to the joy of Violt and her sisters and starring who was with them.

Suddenly violet noticed a strange force of graycoats at a con siderable disance from the direction of Aronburgs active lines. She knew they were not the Glandelinians who attacked Zimmermann for they were retiring smashed to pieces, and this strange column was coming from the southeast?

Waving among the columns were falgs and standards of many colors and which seemed to be in constant motion. Calling the attention of the rest, she pointed out the strange column to them, and asked Starring personally what he thought they were up to.

''It looks as if some great army of Glandelinian Gargolies were advancing upon Baldwins lines.''He said;;''And I believe they will sti strike him a blow too.''

''You are right .''Cried Joice excitedly.

IIN ''IN that direction lies the tow town of williesn and as Baldwin is con centrating there great streams of graycoats are rushing from a certain point to make a flank attackmade by the approach of battle coming so near them the poor fright ened inhabitants are forced to seek shelter among Baldwins lines.''Said starring.

''Good god what an awful fate awaits them if Baldwin's lines are forced.''Gasped Jennie her eyes dilated in horror and terror.

Violet and her sisters indeed feared that Aronburgs lines were still a raging seething caldron of bloody carnage and no doubt knowing Aronburg to be surrounded Tamerline had sent a large force of Orarian Gargolies to flank Baldwin out of his position. Violet and her sisters watching the moving columns neither of them uttering a sound b gasped in horror still more.

~~167~~ 206 211

More and more kept coming a seemingly endless stream of greycoats, the red blue and yellow and other color of banners making a pretty sight. Suddenly there came strange muffled sounds, which increased gradually until it became a blasting roar and the little girls saw immense columns in wedge formation pierced toward Baldwins lines on two sides while scores of thousands of them fell into a mixup of tangled bodies seemingly at once. One of the immenser columns torn to fragments as the little girls saw, recaded their main line in sh small pieces.

"Baldwin was prepared for their coming."Said Starring;"

"See how his men mows the greycoats down.It is terrible but has to be done."

AMID A TREMENDOUS SEA OF SLAUGHTER BALDWIN G HOLDS THE ASSAILANTS AT BAY UNTILL REINFORCEM . THE ROUT AND CUTTING UP OD THE MAIN GLANDELINIAN WAVES AS AULTING HIM."

The fighting along Baldwins lines was indeed terrific and the whole leine over twenty miles long seemed to disolve itself in fire. And before long in front of his smoking conflargration like trenches piles of dead and wounded were exposed and all along the line the ground was covered with dead and w ounded Glandelinians. The scene of octi action indeed covered a large extent and the terrific assault came from both sides north and south the Glandelinians being strong enough in force to mass themseves themselves untill their surging lines became to thirty to fourty deep.

At so some points great swarms of glandelinians thick seeming y as a surge of snowflakes swept clean over the works only to fadeaway in the smoke and even none of them came back having met annihilatio n. At this same time tb the main central attack shifted to the north in a sea sea of battle fire, then as heavy storm of shells tore their lines to pieces, the attack suddenly shifted to the northeast, and came against the christian likes with more ter ific fury . All of Baldwins generals felt uneasy but there was no general alarm though the glandelinians dashed far upon the line of charge their columns being borne in among the guns amid the mighty inferno only to be overwhelmed smshed to atoms and the survivors hurled back.

Despite this the attack continued and gradually gre in force as more of the for added to those already assaulting and before one colock it was in full sway and more fourious and gradually grew to redoubled violance. The series upon series of the many thousands of frightful detonations from the cannons and storm of shells seemed to split the earth, as the main assaulting columns came out and advanced straight ahead the firing seeming like a million da cannon the shells fairly tearing whole lines to pieces. One of the main columns was split in twain but the rest rushed on like a terrific avalanche of human beings. Louder and louder the firing grew. Amid terrific explosivions from high explosives two divisions of greycoats were rnt asunder but column after columns came on one after another, only to collapse into fragments like a childs house of cards.

The slaughter was awful but it still continuedthe onslaught from the main columns sweping many brigades of Angelinians from their positions now and shattered into fragments also and Angelinian forces which formed seemingly unassailable barriers were swept away wholedivisions literally going to pieces.

Though many main columns of the glandelinianosthemselves were torn to fragments the other main columns added to the destruction. The great waves of glandelinians were hurled again and again upon the east north and south of his lines causing terrible destructions the irresistible attack overwhelming whole lines of christians at every sweept sweep. The carnage was more he heartrending. With all their strength and will powerthe Angelinians clung to their trenches tearing hundreds of gaps in the enemys lines. Along the christian lines half a mile away the gray lines became frenzied in their assault and the Angelinians there were in danger of complete annihilation . The assault increased in fury and if it had not been for their sto stubbornness the Angelinians would surely have ben swept from their works and upon the assailants upon their rear. The assault increased still more in fury and hundreds upon hundreds of th usands fell.

"I wonder what that line of men is doing over there."Said one of the generals as the firing came in a worst gust;" They are shaping themselves like the funnel cloud of some great terrified tornado."

"That is right exclaimed another leader;" They are Christians all right and they are headed for Baldwins main center."

"This is awful ."Said the first speaker;"W another."

"Our lines are liable to be swept from our trenches and thrown upon the awful sea of glandelinians behind."Said still another as everything seemed to dissolve into a curtian of smoke once more. The assault burst with all its fury now and the attack ing line again again and again broke spray le before the deadly christian fire which made an indescribable roar while thousands of shells exploded among the gray coats simultaneously killing thousands.

This great battle of Big Girlne Knool was generally called Cutricana raging along general Vivianannas lines already mentioned in former chapter ended in the evening of the first day with the latter's crushing defeat of the Glandelinians called Christianians both sides los ing over eighteen million.Yet at Cuturialinia the christians being in overwhelming numbers had crushed general Hansonia Aronburgs immense Glandelinian army 10,678,999 strong killing and wounding nine million of them in two hours amid a damnating inferno of hells horror and drove the survivors tward general Vivians advancing lines, and soon tn the converging roads had been filled with dust clouds from Glandelinian troops advancing swiftly to the rescue, while the thousands of blood soaked banners of the Glandelinians and christians jeered and sung to battled for, prayed for, rose and fell while seven of the gray lines each nine million strong each swung upward, amid the annihilating christian fire, halted and threw themselves in succession against the whole christian line amid that storm of unearthly horror and bloods oceans dana damantion of war only to melt away as if snowbanks before the furnace. Three hundred high general leaders of the Glandelinians we were dead, their main commander was wounded, and general Manley who had dared to run an unheard of risk deliberately weakened his main conteral wings to race his men around to crush general Vivianannas flank, and this made a scene of horror that no man or the best writer could describe. It was generally called the battle of Seven Hills, Sact Sacremento, and Kittens Rieshart, or the third battle of Jennie Turner and Madge Evans but it generally recieved the name of Big Girlknool.

CHAPT ~~TWENTY-ONE~~. Chapter 14.

A

ALL GLANDELINIA AND ANGELINIA TO SEVEN HILLS.
BIG GIRLKNOOL OR CHAMBERLANE.....

The first day of the battle had ended as a crushing christian victory and one whole army of general Manleys had been put out of commisi commission by the christian resistance.But Manley had three other greater armies and he decided to stand his ground at no matter what thecost and prevent general Vivians headlong advance on Mc-Whirther. The next day after the first lull during the night word came to general Hanson from general Vivian that he intended to try and take the Sacremento hills the main position of general Manleys armies, and were a thousand Mt Calverines seemed to be in eruption so fierce was the dreadful duel of a a million cannon. This range hill of hills was a branch of the s Seven hills, and where the battle had previously raged with general Vivianannas who had been severely wounded.....

What a flare this was to the Glandelinian chancellories..What a head line.An attack on Manleys strongest position first. But general Hanson seeing the formidable position of the enemy in such a thunderous action did not approve of cutting away from his own base, and giving the Glandelinian an opportunity to strike him in the ear rear. But general Hanson was a soldier, and so after a short debatement he decided to renew the bloody battle which had ended so grandly along general Vivianannas lines despite the fall of that great christian general.....

If general Hanson had been a man who had flashing back eyes, or who would have waved his sabre, sw swoar or yell, and had not under taken what he was about to take every one of the Angelinian generals would have said that he was not a dare devil reckless man.But general Hanson was a quiet, considerate , serene, sage like soldier who always rode quiet horses, and this seemed a natural oblivious pieceof military tatics for him indeed. Hanson had in mind general federals temporal success in breaking his lines at the begginning of the battle and he thought"You never can tell" And again"We might pull it off.God is with us to the end."

But that Glandelinian general Hansonia federal was dead. He had f fallen while Manley was urging his men into the overwhelming rush that came near being his undoing.Now it was september the 21th and after some hasty preparations general Hanson began to advance or side step away from the great Stanck Hills, as if on a retreat, but was really advancing to make a tremendous onslaught on the Sacremento Hills.

But this movement was made in secret so to keep Manley in ignorance of the plan of general Vivians until he could get his armies well started. Little did Hanson dream that on this very battle ground the horrors of the battle of Glorinia would also rage at November 11th. Hanson was advancing with his entire division consisting of fourty ninth corps, and each one was a trifle more than double the size of a single Glandelinian division and it did seem obvident that the enemy would not be able to hold the Sacramento hills against such overwhelming numbers..... Large cavarly forces under Ridpath were mobile and watchful, and acting under the orders of general Hanson guarded the passes of the Collyer and stanck ridges, which formed the wall of the valley protecting Hansons flank.

The battle toughened army marched onward despite meeting fierce opposition then Richardson Halsted and Parsons of the christians surshed forward like a cyclone in a huff because the enemy wouldnot let them have their own right of way. General Phelan Russel and Neldon Greatheart took up thier own commands, and made great headwya in the advance and it was aparent that the enemy was faling back at all points. General Vivian was far seeing, and as patient as he could be. First to the last he was the real general of the Angelinians, feeling the pulse of the people and watching over the army and trusting to its courage, and praying for a good winning commander.....

General Vivian kept between Manley and Seven Hills his own batteries opening an occasional severe artillery duel. General Hanson crossed the Finland valley under heavy fire into a land of rich pasturage and granieries, and child slave firms.

Greathearts corps was lading and threatened the town of Sacramento but the small force of Glandelinians there in need of ammunition for their rifles and guns retreated abandoning the town. As their ammunition as yetdid not come from Manley, and should they exhuast what little they had in a great struggle, and let their lines of supplies be cut off, then they must surrender.....

Hanson pressed on facing tward the advancing columns at times under general Antonio, hoping to strike the first blow at sniders. The cavarly forces of both christian armies ever on the scout kept each other in touch with the others movments.....

As it seemed for the first time in the war all of the two nations the largest in the world seemed to be coming to Sacramento hills and all carried a goodly supply of bullets and ammunition to make the gathering probably the first hottest convention ever held in the great Glandco-Angelinia war For a big army approaching another standing army by a single rear may be beaten in detail by having its front shattered before its rear can get into action. But their cp corps were ab abreast already, and ready to form battle lines in short order. At nine thirty general Horten of the Glandelinians saw a large force of purple and redcoats with hundreds of thousands of gleaming bayonets waving over the wheat fields in a great cloud of dust, it being the aadvance guard of Owens attacking ninth corps. General Clarance Horten became alarmed at this sight of the approach of overwhelming numbers o of Abyssinkilians and had his full cavarly force near ad as he spread his infantry lines out, with his one hundred thousand guns waiting in the rear. seemingly as futile as a set of spread fingers to hold back the current of amighty river.

In about an hour general Consos divisions were facing a long undulating wall of rifle blasts, and the battle was on again. From Sickles Hill, general Putter cup saw a little stretch of woods between Stanckleton and Sacramento roads. He saw that he must get possession of that tactical point before the advancing Angelinians would arive, and make it the center of their line. Near those woods were a score of child slave mills, the children here have having been withdrawn by the enemy and the places used as fortifications. General Chambersburg ordered up his own brigades and ordered them into the woods.

"Go in there and at ick." He shouted.

And off they dashed. Long lines of the foe led by Cornsos Pickenlls and Cornsos advanced swiftly tward the woods on one side. General Consos saw great columns of purple rushing in at the other side like a mighty army of wildmen and moving in perfect walls and yelling like fiends. Consos was bound to check the progress of the Angelinians if possible and ordered his lines into instant action. But the Glandelinians had been a little careless in their haste to reach the woods. They had thought that the only opposition to them would have been the green guardsmen of the Calverinian rebels of Costolloros divisions who were help helping the Angelinians as they have contempt for all such amateurs. But they had struck general Hanson Vivians fine army.....

A musketry and cannon fire of almost preternatural fury broke out along Consos lines, and odious and horrifying became the scene. However the Angelinian columns rushed through the woods and tward the gray lines with tremendous ferocity, and struck the Enemy a terrible blow. Chambersburgs artillery now broke into action letting loose their hell of destruction but the Angelinians being in overwhelming numbers could not be checked. Consos men consisting of three million three hundred thousand ,en men were bunched and buckled by the pressure and violence of the christian onslaught, and the center was carried, the Glandelinians being caught in the flank. Consos line was shattered frightfully, and shot to pieces, and the Angelinia troops seeing their chance charged like a wild mob od of demons and got the biggest lot of prisoners that they had ever secured yet during the whole war.. The remainder of Consos men fell back swiftly, though the very mouth of hell seemed to have opened along his lines. It was reported that Consos was killed but the reports could not as yet be confirmed.

There wasno doubt that the remainder of Consos men were boi boiling mad to be beaten this way but they could not stand before the irrestiblepressure of the christian attack.

"Gond Confound those blue hatted Angelinian pri pirates." Growled general Consos.

Chambersburg was in the woods on his horse, the main supreme commander of the whole Glandelinian cause even over Manley then operationg the armies of Glandelinia, and he was sending and recieving messages, and dashed back and forth to view the seething inferno of the great battle that was increasing in force and inconceivable violence. He saw the great multitudes of Angelinians advancing with the fury of a hurricane and the region was a sea of smoke from musketry. At this moment general Hortens Glandelinians arived but the Angelinians were advancing with such fury, and attacking so wildly that Horton was comep e m compelled to send for aid as nothing could stop the headlong advance of the christians just now and thirteen under generals had fallen dead and wounded.

The road roar of musketry was being redoubled seeming to rend the heavens. General Chambersburg turned his head to right and left every moment in eagle glances. He saw a rush of purple coats here, a rush there, a greater roar of musketry broke, out, cannons thundered like a world of hells going into ruin and while he was watching his weaving and straining lines, and viewing the conflargration of musketry fire and smoke he fell from his horse mangled by a shell explosions, and shot through the head at the same time.

One of the highest of all Glandelinian generals and the best leadeing army general of all Glandelinia dead, and the kings favorite at that. But no one of those Glandelinian soldiers in grim resistance there under the billowing smoke of battle knew this. General Fritzo Patrick Katzenjammer took general Chambersburg's place believing it the duty of a soldier not to avoid his enemy. What an inheritance general Chambersburg had left. The last of his reserves had gone to the support of that blazing , gasping stubborn, line. Here under the cover of a little knoll also more fierce fighting was going on the din being all at once heard for fity miles. The Glandelinians here kept up a terrible musketry fire, the Angelinians still advancing like an avalanch, dashing furiously upon the whole line defending the knoll, soon driving the gray coats out and continueing to press upon them with the greatest fury, taking many more prisoners.

General Brandons Glandelinians took defense behind a long stone wall, the purple coats here making ten desperate assaults in quick succession.

At the first assault the gray lines became confused be but general Horten stemmed the panic and rallied them. Every time the Angelinians came in close quarters the Glandelinians broke into confusion and as the Angelinians poured over the walls Hortens five million five hundred thousand men ret reated despite Hortens desperate attempt to rally them. Then he fell mortally wounded.....

The Angelinians still yelling like fiends followed with the utmost precipitation and horrible scenes of the battle field was revealed which exceeded all description.

Hardly nothing could be heard exp except the shrieks of the fallen. And sighs and groans of the wounded. Thousands had already been killed, and the wounded we were brought from the fields in multitudes. Hedious indeed was the scene exposed. No one could hardly take a step without treading on the dead wounded and dying. Along the whole stone wa, ll which extended for five miles, scores of broken gun carriages lay, and many horses, besides many thousands of cannoneers who were crushed under them.

A thousand of the wounded Angolinians lay close to the great stone wall.Some had broken backs, crushed arms and thighs.The greater number of dead had broken necks, mangled bodies, or crushed skulls, and vast holes in their bodies, and their intestines protruding. Thousands of the dead Angolinians who had fallen riddled by bullets, lay buried on top of one another.The sight was fearful but there was one yet more terrible, that of the largest portion of Frit zpatricks army lying dead or dying behind their works.Their loss was 9,500,000. General Bruces Glandelinians though formed in a strong line of battle, had been caught in bad gro h ground, and being under irrestible pressure, this whole division of Glandelinians was forced to fall back also. At Sparrings Railroad Crossings Reynolds Glandelinian columns met general Kindernines purple columns of Angolinians and the dead and wo n wounded along the right of way lay like grass cut by a lawn mow.

Unaccountable and fearful as was this vortex of killing, was the fury of the Angolinians who continued their desperate headlong assault, the battle now raging with indescribable fury. General John Berthel Hellers Angolinians columns aided by the others under general Kindernine joined in the great assault, and pressed upon general Bruces Glandelinians with the most awful ferocity and savageness.

Kindernine was spreading and extending his advancing linesin in a most threatening manner, and the battle was now assuming a general away. Fifteen color bearers had h already fallen and when general Bruce from desperation grasped it and swung it t o the breeze he fell amid the storm of carnage being severely wounded. A private took it but fell mortally wounded, but still having it in his grasped he faced the patiol Nationals of Angelini ans and defied them to come on.

In the meantime Convention and Gary Costellio arrived to Fritz patricks aid, and in a great struggle close togother fifteen Glandelinian regiments were left in fragments, they had all their field officers down, and ten companies, and three divisions had been shot to pieces, and general Godfreys division was decimated.

The whole field along this line and even Fairys valley was envlo involved in the most fearful carnage. The Angolinians under Kindernine now were being held x slighty s slightly at bay but no orthelens could not be driven back.The whole line of fields and woods were almost hidd en by wreaths of smoke from the most indescribable dreadful firing that had been going on all this while on both sides.

General Fritzpatrick saw now five immense divisions of general Gerardys Abyssinkilian corps approaching to crush in his right.As he had over five hundred thousand more cannon at hand he opened these upon Gerdys divisions but as most of the horrible inferno of shells which could have annihilated all troops that charged in the face of so many guns went soo too far to the rear of the charging columns the advance of these christian troops could not be checked, and he was compelled to send general James Evans to face general gerady whose massive lines was considered over seven deep and ten miles long, and advancing as if the whole world of saints could not stop them, and now as these came up to the aid it seemed as if the whole world was on a wild maddening re rampage.

General Evans was killed, his whole army was cut to pieces as the wild surge of Angolinians closed with a million demon like yell , and the left and right of the Glandelinian wave gave way in confusion, but the center strove furiously with desperation to maintain their lines, but several divisions of the center under general Schloeder Schedule, received a heavy infilade from the hard pressing Abyssinkilians under Parobar, and crushed to fragments they wavered. On rushed Gerdys Abyssinkilians and Angolinians, though they went down in hundreds of masses as the enemys long line o of machine guns opened upon them. Hansons main columns it could now be ascertained by the Glandelinians from the general fury of this attack was certainly advancing to mean buisness, and it was positive that he was delivering his blow with such a shock that general Evans badly shot up lines could not hold, especially when completely leaderless.

The formation of the battle line was broadening to the shape of an immense fan. Fritzpatricks main front line had disappeared completely into a long horrible windrow of dead and dying for the distance of three miles, and the scene of firing was so dreadful that it looked as if a forest fire was on instead of a battle. It indeed was turning out to ve again one of the bloodiest battles of the war.

Outside of what V they had done or gone through at the early stages of the wildly raging battle Violet and her sisters had retained their promise to Penrod and didn,t go near the battle lines at all.but it seems nevertheless they were not safe anywhere. They went at the advice of Emperor Vivian himself himself to their own headquarters and Heaven only nows that they had a narrow escape from destruction right there, and little Jannie too with them. They had no sooner settled in their own room, when their head headquarters beautiful as it was , a was no more. and with them in it. Thirty three officers mostly colonels and captians, and a hundred men and thirty four child scouts within the building were crused to death and fourty three others others were instantly killed, when a ten thousand pound high explosive shell hit the building apparently from the Glandelinian positions and tore away a great section of the building, causing the powerful roof to be to rn torn from its supports and go crashing down through the three flors floors of the four story structure. Sixty other persons were injured in the limi plummet like Ol_pluge l plunge of the broken roof, the explosion of the shell tearing a hole through the building just inside the Company Street Wall .The crash also Imperialed the lives of other christian soldiers in the various rooms of the military telegraphic offices of thev the structure.Three christian generals were said to have been in the building and these too were among the missing, and all the Home guards of the army and fire officials and military police considered it possible that their bodies were in the wreckage. The crowds believed they had glimpsed two bodies amid the debris on the floor of the third story, where the explosion actually occured.They were unable to reach these victims however because of the dha y conditions of the floors and the walls.what caused the great est fear of all was that it was proved that Violet and her sisters with others were in the building at the time of the crash, and that no nowhere could they be found and it was believed too they were in the debris and probably dead.

Some bodies of the dead were removed from the lower ruins, but as fire added to the horror the others evidently could not be recovered.There was desperate attempts made to reach the bodies of violet and her sisters, but so rapid was the progress of the flames that it was evident that they couldnot be reached.

Only three of the dead were identified.They were Captian Henneth Johns of Company L, who had been on the second floor operating a telegraph with the purpose to get into connection with a signal station.George Healy also a Captian who was there as a body guard for violet,and her sisters.The other was George Cohenia a colonel, who also was a telegrapher.Their bodies were removed from the debris of the first floor soon after the crash, which occured in the morning. Many others were reported missing,and though for three hours desperate attempts were made to find the Vivian Girls their "bodies could not be found.

Scenes of terror and confusion and horror filled the building when the crash occured and afterwards.The shell exploded with a clap of thunder heard ten miles. Soldiers and child scouts within the building fled screaming to the stairwayd and down corridors to fire escapes and so forth as the plunging mass of steel smashed girders beams and ceilings as though they were matchwood and the remainder of the building was filled thick with powder smoke and flying splinters. Broken big water pipes and mains in the building poured out so much water that it ran through the building as a flood and added to the terror and panic. The lives of the remainder however were saved, when the explosion was heard and shook the building, and when the first rumbling and snapping of the main roof supports before they gave way allowed most of those within the building a few seconds to get clear.Then following the explosion came a deafening series of roars as the heavy caving roof smashed down floor after floor, shattering the main supports of the building, and shaking it like an earthquake. Hardly had the reverbrations of the dreadful crash of explosion and ruin died away, when the survivors and witnesses turned in alarms, and in a few minutes military police squads, some twenty pieces of army Fire apparatus, and ten ambluances were on the scene.The streets around the ruined building swarmed with frantic tear eyed child scouts frenzied at the belief that Violet and her sisers were no more.Police lines were formed to keep back the others out of the danger zone, as firemen made their way into the burning debris to put the fire out.Inside the building the military firemen admit the roar of distant battle under Chief John Scanley of the Xecon Second battalion ignored danger as they climbed over the tons of debris searching for the probable remains of the beautiful Vivian Girl Princesses first and knowing that at any moment a shifting of the mass might also sent them plunging down to their own deaths.They continued searching for violet and her sisters untill orders were issued by general Turner and Fire Commissioner Handon both of whom appeared at the scene to continue on untill the walls could be shored up to permit work in safty.

Meanwhile tales of heroism shown by some survivors of the terrific crash were being told.Three girlscouts privates who were on the second floor owed their lives in the quick thinking of Timothy Groveton. When the first warning came he yelled at everybody to escape and then turned to the telegraph office.One of the girlscouts was hysterical with fright not knowing which way to run. Timothy seized her and dragged her to the fireescape. At the same time he stopped the effot efforts of five girlscouts to rush out into the caving hall. had they done this they would have been directly under the path of the crashing tons of debris. George Zimmermon was another of the b y boyscout heroes, for despite the danger of falling walls, he brought out to safty many children scout.

"When I heard the crash, while on the first floor I saw the panic stricken child scouts and led them safty through the open door "

Stories afterwards of the terror and confusion that spread through the headquarters of the Vivian Girls, when a good portion of the building caved in before the force of the explosion causing such a dreadful death list were related sometime after by the survivors of the disaster. One of the soldiers who was inu n injured told a vivid story.

"There were about twenty soldiers with me in the room where I was busy" He said. "After the first crash came we all heard a funny rumbling noise that got louder. Also water poured down upon us in a heavy shower and then the ceiling started to bulge with the weight of the water. Many of the child scouts screamed. Every one stampeded to the exits pushing and shouting, while glass was spilling in a steady stream past the windows. Then our windows went with a crash, as everything began to cave in. but we all got out of that section of the building, although some of the girlscouts fell down and were hurt."

A boyscout by the name of Henry Richardson, his brother George, and his sister Jane had a narrow escape when the roof and its accompanying mass of debris plowed down only a few feet from where they were standing.

"First we felt a very slight vibration" he said "and then such a crash, that my sister brother and I thought there was a convulsion of the earth. We didn't have time to do anything to save ourselves. The wind from the debris as it hurled down threw us all against the wall but nevertheless we were not injured, and we got out by the fireescape."

It was indeed a very unusal case of how Violet and her sisters with Jannie escaped not only death, but even injury in the crash. They were literally carried down with the falling mass of wreckage, but through some freak fear of the movement of the debris they were, the sight of them thrown off clear of the whole mass before they were buried under it. They were thrown so violently however that for a few minutes they were so dazed that they didn't understand what had happened, and when they were finally found safe and sound, what a rejoicing went up. Of course they were horrified at the death rate caused by the disaster, and yet neither they nor no one could tell where the shell really came from, and if it came from the enemy how could it come from such a distance. It was true however that the enemy has long range cannons, but nevertheless it was hard to tell if one of them did it or not. But this gave evidence to the Vivian Girls that they surely were not safe even within the very christian lines, and therefore were more fearsome than ever, and wished that under no conditions had they let Fenrod go. They however seen to it that the injured were removed from the wreckage and directed the work themselves now, and then decided to leave the horrid scene especially when the rescuers begged them to for their own sakes. but now they had no headquarters, and neither did their father. and such a magnificent structure destroyed. There was suspicions however also that there was a probability of the house having been bombed by some Glandelinian Radicals with the purpose of deer destroying the Vivian Girl Princesses so as to satisfy Manley for surely no long range gun could have hit so far. but nevertheless the explosion occured on the top of the building and if a bomb had been placed how could the rascals get up there to place it without being seen. However some witnesses who claimed to have seen the explosion were questioned, and one of them said, that before the blast occured, they had heard a sort of distant "Boom" as if it was far away, and then about ten seconds later came the explosion. The other witnesses told the same story, and therefore it was evident a Glandelinian artillery man had shot off the gun which had done this damage. Evidently Evidently it was a long range gun and planted immediately in the proper place with the evident purpose to destroy the building and caused cause the destruction of violet and her sisters and eve y every one in the building. Emperor Vivian was away at some part of the fighting line and did not yet hear of the disaster. There was no chances of him being able to hear of it either for he was too bust bust with the efforts of pushing the assault against the enemy as hard as possible. possible for by the sound at this time the battle was very violent. Because of the awful scare they had recieved and of the disaster to their headquarters violet and her sisters decided to do something to the enemy and show him where to get off at. They of course did not intend to go near the battle but if they could find some means to spy and discover what the enemy meant to do to stty and stop Jhansons assault upon the Glandelinian general Fitz Fritzepatrick.

After the excitement had died out(pout) and violet and her sisters had recovered from their scare and depression and sadness over the loss of their fine headquarters, some one rode up to violet who was nursing a skinned knee and said;

"Jack Saunders is a little late this morning isn't he violet.?"

"Yes dear Angeline turns he should have been here more than half an hour ago, and he would too if he had ridden his own horse instead of another. I hope he didn't go too near that awful battle down there. It sounds terrible now and I'm a little afraid."

"You sure think a lot of your boy and girlscouts, don't you dear Princess, and your dear sisters." and a good looking boyscout came to the doorway of a small tent, and peered up the broad Company Street which ran in front of the tent(providing it had feet to run with) violet and her sisters stood by the side of the road looking none the worse for their experience in the smashed up headquarters building, and yet too despite it their uniform clothing was no in not in the least torn nor even dirty. Jennie stood in front of them, and her small robust frame and childish athletic built made her appear stronger than any boy her size, or probably equally as strong as a grown man.

"Yes Francis Pickford" Jennie herself answered with a half sad smile "I do think a lot of every one of them and so does my sisters, and you are all worth it too. What is it you and all your followers and others didn't do for us."

"Yes I guess we all are if we have to admit it but sometimes you have done a lot more for us. but my goodness you and your sisters despite your sizes sure can ride horses and big ones too as if you were Cowboys. The way you and your sisters sometimes clatter past my house causes me to fear you'll sure have an accident. Sometimes I im so nervous I can't look at you and your sisters as you pass."

"Our horses are pretty sure footed, even in the worst mountain trains of our war torn country." answered Joice with a laugh, that showed her white even teeth which showed that she sure keep them in good condition. But I and my sisters are worried at the battle raging near Big Girlknool. I hope it don't get dangerous here for us."

"Big Girlknool" repeated the boy scout mis musingly. "What an odd name to the town. I often wonder how your people came to call it that."

"I cannot tell that" explained Hettie, as she gave another glance upo up the Company Street over which the rays of the rising sun were shining, and then leading the way strode up to the pr porch where she and her sisters sat down... watching the men at the continued rescued work amidst the distant ruin of their headquarters.

"The city they say was started first by a lot of people and that at first the population had no children, but grown upsand most women. Therefore I believed that is why the city recieved its name."

Francis however since they had come up close to him was somewhat abashed and overawed, and embrassed for he couldn't hardly stand their beauty when he was not accustomed to it, and something in their manners too made him feel as if celestial beings were there, and yet nevertheless he was loathe to leave.

"I don't understand why Jack is so late" said Daisy. "but if you are very busy Francis dear" she added "you don't need to wait for us. I now you usually cook for us but we are used to getting our own meals so you needn't worry since our home has been demolished. We'll get along all right. We don't feel as if we care to eat this early, and also we're scared about that awful battle. but we'll get along alright."

"Oh I know you little Princesses will. For seven little celestial children and who are angel possessed you ought to be able to but I hate to leave here since you're around" and they smiled at him as he said this, and he sure blushed. "but he finished with" ut for seven brave little girls you really get along very well indeed. but you should eat something. It'll brace you up. You sure even don't seem half as excited or as scared as I thought you would be since the crash."

"We're used to such disasters" admitted Catherine. "sometimes we were even trapped in burning houses and yet we were saved. You are a good cook though if we say so and therefore if you desire to go ahead. We'll eat. but I wish Jac would come."

"Yes I believe I am something of a cook myself" admitted the lad. "But I can't name any boyscout or even cook who can quite equal your own cooking yet, and there is no saying that I even can. However you and your sisters baked a very good batch of buscuits yesterday afternoon for all of us, and everybody was pleased when they recieved them."

"I had lots of them left over but they're in the ruins now" said Daisy. "I wish Jack would come though. He seems unusually late and he never was late before. We sent for him and yet he doesn't come." and once more violet and her sisters arose and went out to peer up the Company Street in the direction of the roaring battle. They listened intently but their sharp senses caught no sound of clattering hoofs, nor sight of any boy coming down the road on a ho horse a good view of which could be had in front of the army house that stood on a bend in the road. All the sound that could be heard was the battle.

"Well I guess I'll be getting the breafast started for you little celestialsn celestial children and your friend Jenn Jannie" the boy resumed, and as he went inside violet threw her poncho over her shoulders, for it seemed as if rain or some bad weather was threatening. "I'll soon have everything all dished up" the good boyscout went on. "I'll get the pancakes ready too for I now you love them more than anything for breafast."

"Oh we'll get along with anything to make thank you very much, Violet called after him as he went inside. Francis's tent however was a quarter of a mile away and

His sister was a girlscout belonging to the girlscout signal corps, and he had a smaller sister, so it was quite convienent for this boyscout chef to come over to Violet and her sisters twice a week or so or oftener on occassions, and make some fancy good healthy meals for the Princesses, and have his girlscouts do some of the housework in their headquarters. Francis would do the the mopping and dw sweeping while the girls would make the beds, and do the dusting, and he would do as muchcooking as he had time for, and then go back to his own tent.

Jack Saunders mother of course was dead, and his and his little girl companion and a loving one at that, Jean Saunders had managed to do meny things for violet, and her sisters also,.. Jack had become a good messenger for violet and her sisters carrying messages between different sections of the camps. On this occassion they had intended to send him on a message to their father telling him their head quarters had been demolished by a mysterious explosion but that they themselves and Jannie and others though in the building tat the time were safe. The battle was reging in the high hilly region of one of the Middle Western Sections of Calverinia and the trails were so wide and running or winding, and for that matter because of enemy patrol scouts and the battle itself so unsafe that it was out of the question just now to use a messen messenger between Little and Big Gird Knoll just now. From paintow stream however there was a long broad road going east where any body c anybody could hope to take any message he was supposed to either deliver as it was brought in by Jack. And from golden Crossing going tward he battle lines he the same arrangement was made. Golden Crossing was a crossroad on the shores of the Angelinia Stream a small enough stream in ordinary times but which was wild on and dangerous during heavy rains or freshets. So during the battle the pony express as the message line was called was the only regular means of communication between Golden Crossing and the enbattled christian lines. It was now of great importance too for often valuable messages went back and forth the route being short er and quicker than by a roundabout line... When Francis was inside preparing h the morning meal, violet and her sisters went into another portion of the cottage as this was the place they choosed for their headquarters. They told Jannie to remain outside and a watch if Jack should come. The building really was cottage though who formerly owned it no one could tell

Jack saunders had this early day been unusally interested in the battle, but he had found some of the flag waving wor too dangerous for his following during the battle and had withdrawn them to a safer place.

"It certainly is a shame to have this fine breakfast be eaten only by us and Jack not here."said Hettie as she lifted the cover from a pot full of hot pancakes and glanced at the pile of beautiful brown buscuits in the warming oven." And this fine Maple Syrup."

"I can't understand what causes him to be so late"declared Catherine. "Of course the message from the christian generals he may be doing duty for might not have e g been ready for him to bring and deliver. Messages have been pretty heavy of late since this danger threatened and is almost more than any one can handle, though U I suppose Jane Melfort gives him a hand now and then"and as she said this she glanced at the photograph on the mantle of an attractive little girlscout officer, who seemed to smile at her, and her sisters. Catherine glanced cautiously around the room and than raised a hand to her lips and threw a kiss from the tips of her fingers at the picture. Jane Melfort was an instruction officer of the girlscouts and she and the Vivian Girl Princesses; were the best of friends also.

"Well if Jack doesn't come pretty soon, and my sisters are going to eat"Decided Jennie. "He won't mind I'm sure. but I would love to find out what is detaining him. I hope he hasn't had any accident or got wounded or something. His pony is sure footed I know, but I'd feel better if he had ridden one of mine or my sisters horses."

Violet, and her sisters w were plainly nervous--that is as nervous as any healthy little girl could be. They all went outside again, and walked a little way back down the Company Street over which Jack would come. But the roadway though not deser ted showed no sign of his coming. This section of the encampments though devoi of devoid of soldiers now was in a rather lonely location, there being no town or other habitation in sight...2.2.2. There were other scattered houses not far away within the encampment, and a number outside of the encampment, but because of the winding nature of the Company Street, and the ruggedness of the enbattled hills, they could not be seen from where violet and her sisters stood with jannie. As violet and her sisters were about to turn back again and again enter the cottage with the determination to eat their su Breakfast, they heard something which caused them to start.

"Here he comes at last"Jannie herself exclaimed.

"But it's strange for he's sealing his horse so slowly."declared violet.

"That's queer"said Jennie. "Something must have happened."

Speed was one of the 1rm prime requisites of the christian boy and girlscout ex press military messengers. The boy and girlscouts who carrying messages during battles and who rode the route even under fire over plains and hill roads used the most fastest horses or ponies possible. Their life when in the con rush during a battle was a continual rush for the pessages must go through all p obstacles as the messages must reach the general it is to be delivered to as swiftly an possible possible and on the fastest horses. And also knowing the value of speed, violet and her sisters wondered when they heard the approach of a horse at a slow walking pace. And Jack too was supposed to arive at this section of the christian camp in time to see them and deliver a message to Emperor Vivian with the purpose to inform him of the ruin of his headquarters but to tell him they were safe and not injured, and the hour he had promised to come had passed some time since. Of course however the message had not needed to be an urgent one as it was nothing o of a military matter, but nevertheless this meant a delay and if Emperor Vivian got word of the disaster before they sent him a message he may be so worried about them that he may do things which would cause him to lose the battle.

"Something must have surely happened"said violet to her sisters her face white with fear.

"Let's go and meet him"said Hettie."

They called for their horses which Lucille brought and leaping to the saddle of their fast ponies and patting their animals lovingly on the neck, they set off. The boyscout was quite a way off yet but they understood that their fast horses would shorten the distance rapidly. Though the sound of the approaching footsteps of the horse of the boyscout rider could be plainly heard by violet and her sisters des pite the distant noise of battle so clear and resonant was the mountain air, they realized that the boyscout captian had nearly a mile to travel. They went swiftly, for their own horses were fresh and eager. In a few minutes the brave girls with even little Jannie in the lead turned at a spot where the company street followed a great enlarged section of the encampments, and in front of them almost collasping in the saddle was a boyscout. He seemed to sit on his horse only by a great effort, and on his face was a drawn look of pain...

"Why Jack dear."cried Joice. "What's the matter. Has anything happened? Did the Glandelinians attack you or something. Or did they hold up some of our wagon trains?"

"No the wagon trains are all right, and everything else too in provisions"was the answer, broken by exclamanations of pain. "But I'm all in Princess. I'm afraid I'm going to be quite ill, and so are nearly all the boy and girlscouts too at the same time. It was all I could do to ride the last few miles, but I wouldn't give in.."

"All the boy and girlscouts ill at the same time!"gasped violet. "Why--why---"

"Yes it is true"gasped the boy.

Violet, and her sisters and Jannie had surrounded him at once.

"Get on my horse"Jennie urged. "I'll exchange. He's easier for you to ride. Let me and Jannie help you. What's the trouble that you and all are sick at once. That sounds suspicious. Have you poisoned at breakfast? If so how did it happen?"

"I cannot tell what happened dear Princesses. But surely you don't expect me to exchange horses. I can continue on with you until we get to some place my own headquarters."

"No you're to come to my cabin."said violet.

"Your cabin."said the boy surprised out of his wits. "You mean your glorious headquarters don't you!"

"No "said Hettie. "It was blown up by an bomb or something. Here violet dear you take his rifle and sabre so it won't encumber him. We We'll continue on tward home. Bring it to his own place and come back as soon as you can, and Violet dear, better bring our own family doctor with you"she faltered."

For a moment Violet, and her sisters did not know what to do. They looked at Jacks white face who was evidently quite ill and suffering much pain. The news of The news that nearly all the child scouts too were sitnae strangely ill probably withthe same ailment caused them much fright and worry. Then They glanced at something he had in a bag hanging down a little from the saddle on front of the boyscout..

"Take this bag too, Violet my dear"Jennie exclaimed with an effort as she was terribly distressed over this. "Take it and see where it goes. If its a message see that it reaches its destination. But be careful and don't meet alone with the Glandelinian spies or lone scouts. We're late now ith with what we wished to do, but poor Jack couldn't get here any sooner. Get that message, it is one see, get it through to its destination and then stop and bring a doctor on the return if hel He'll come right away."

"But I hate to leave you dear sisters this way"protested violet. "If something happens to me you'll be ill again."

"You must violet dear. We have to sacrifice for our country."

"But if something happens to me you'll get ill again. You are so sad now you known over us being deserted.."

"That can't be helped. That message must go through on time to reach the general it is for. And I certainly don't want him to miss it. If you don't want to do it I'll go then and you don't want that either. We'll manage to get Jack into our cottage headquarters. Once there we can get him into a chair, and try and give him something that may cause him to feel better. Joice can send some one to investigate why Jack and so many are so suddenly ill."

"What do you believe is the matter!"Jack"Demanded Catherine who appeared to be really scared over his strange illness.

"It seems to be acute indigestion though I don't remember eating anything that didn't agree with me.Every child scout except our higher leaders have it too.but ride on Princesses. And don't worry or cry."

"Violetplease go for our sakes with the message"pleaded Daisy."I feel that your trip will be safe, and nothing will happen to cause us extra worry."Well We"ll pray hard for your safe return.I'll get him to the cottage allright, and be there when you get back."

"All right sisters I'll do it.But I sure do hate to leave you this way when something may happen to you.I'm still afraid since our headquarters was demolished. and , believe it was done on purpose."

"It's better than having the message delayed. Ride on Violet dear please.Explain to Jack Evans if you see him how it is.I believe he's the one who is to take the message. And don't forgot the doctor."

"Yes he does"violet said giving the envelope a glance."I'll tell him and maybe he'll send us help."

Violet suddenly transferred to her own saddle the bag of messages.The bo[illegible] boyscout captian seemed easier now, though there was still that look of pain in or on his face.

"On Mable"called violet to her fast pony."We have got to make quick time."

The intelligent and beautiful brown animal whinnied as if he understood.Then with a fond and anxious look at her sisters and Jannie, violet wheeled about and about ondset off down the Company Street at a swift gallop,Her sisters going on more slowly with Jack, for every motion of his horse gave him pain. violet was soon out of sight around a bend of the Company Street. She flashed past her own headquarters, and thought with satisfaction that there was hot coffee on the range or hot milk which ever he would choose, so that her sisters could make him a hot drink. violet paused long a enough at Mary glorinia's tent to tell h r what was the matter for she had not gone down to the battle line, and to inform her she was taking the message to general Evans near the firing line.

"The poor boy and so many others ill. "exclaimed Mary appearing much frightened.

"They must have been poisoned.I'll go right over there Princess, and look after him.Get a doctor as soon as you can.."

"I wish you would Mary dear.It would be awfully good of you."

"Of course I'll go.My aidedecamp can watch things here"and she hurried into her tent to get ready for her short trip to the headquarters of violet,and her sisters. violet galloped on trusting to the sure footness of her swift pony to avoi avoid the dangers of the rough mountain trail. And too she had to be careful as she understood by the sound of so many cannons now thundering that there would soon be a vibration of the ground and that would make it more dan dangerous. And Mable justified the confidence reposed in her.

"Hello Jack dear, when we have been wondering what detained you---why goodness me it's violet"exclaimed general Evans the grizze grizzled christian general as the little Princess galloped up to the safest approach toward the battle line.

"Sorry to be late Evans dear, but Jack who supposed to deliver the message has taken sick."Cried violet, as she flung the bag to Evans."Every child scout almost are ill too."

"Everybody ill eh."said Evans turning white and appearing to have a suspicious look in his face.Well I guess I'll be able to cover up the lost time.Our side is advancing everywhere all along the line successfully so far and we need not worry.Have have not much danger signs as yet.Better hurry home though little Princess before Glandelinian snipers see you.There's been a lot of sniping here since the battle started."

Evans then shouted to his men who were waiting;

"Forward to the front.Double time.Good bye Princess.Hope to see you again for I believe I,ll come through."

After saluting violet did not linger, but wheeling her horse and muttering a prayer for the generals safty, set off for the military doctors camp office hoping she would find the physicial physician in. She was fortunate in this respect, and Doctor Henry prepared to come at once. violet had no time to wait for him however but hastened back to the cottage headquarters without metting any unusual adventure so far, though almost overhead a big shell burst with an awful crash. But she was used to such dangers of shell fire and as long as they didn't explode explode too close she did not pay any attention.

"The doctor will be here right away vioViolet reported."Now tell ,e and my sisters sisters how it all happened Jack dear.We all were quit cworried worried about you."

"Indeed we were when you didn't come to us on time as you always do."said joice sadly.

"I can't tell just how it reallly did happen."said the boy"but after I ate my morning meal with all the rest I was suddenly seized with a sharp pain especially soon after leaving to come in answer to your call.I'd have turned back then sending sending you a message telling you I and thousands of others were becoming ill all at once, and having some one else to come to you in my place, but I understood I had important news messages with me, and it had to come through if I died for it.So I continued on hoping it was only a little Stomach trouble and that I would get better.but I grew worse, and I had to slow up.I thought I'd never get here. ut But I did.but everybody seems to have the same trouble."And he shut his lips grimly.

Christian boy and girlscouts have to be made of stern stuff and when a battle is ranging and they carry messages to and fro they have to retain their mata routes in rain or shine, danger or not, calm or storm, and in bad weather of all sorts and often when it rains torrents, and often too when its torture to sit toolong on a fast galloping horse.

"You had better get your crew fast Princesses."Advised Francis Pickfordsoberly.

"I don't feel like eating now."Jennie objected.

"I feel the same"said joice.

Her remaining sisters said the same.

"Yes you had better"said Jannie herself."If the battle dear[illegible] ring sees gets worse t r there is no telling what you may have to do during the rest of the day, and it is possible that any one of us may have to ride to bring messages to and fro, though I hope I,ll be able.The battle is growing terrible as I can tell by the noise . But let us eat and retain our strength."

This indeed was good advice from the little girlscout, and Jennie and her sisters and violet too realised it.So they sat down to the meal which Francis had pre pared.They had scarcely finished when Doctor Henry came in and spent some time min istering to Jack. The boyscout captian felt much relieved after he had been given some quieting medicine, and as Doctor Henry was about to leave the boyscout asked;

"Shall I be able to carry messages to morrow if the battle continues?"

The physician sadly shook his head.

"No indeed"he exclaimed soberly."I'm sorry to have to tell you that you have been mysteriously posioned and are seriously ill from the effects, and youlle lucky if you even live. If you do even then I'm afraid you're going to be laid up for four or five weeks if not longer .Also my dear boy you have gone through too much hardships and perils for[illegible] at your age, and have been neglecting your self too long, and also you have been worrying badly haven't you?"

"Well yes, I have indeed."admitted the boyscout captian sobetly.

"Oh Jack dear.Worrying?Cried Violet."Is it about that old battle that is raging to day.?"

"Not exactly.It's about you and your sisters.you are always in danger. nd that ex plosion that demolished your headquarters.I can't get that off my mind."

"Why every one knows that we always come out unscathed."Exclaimed joice."Why it seems ---that---everyone is worrying about us. But Jack dear are we so important to you.."?

"You sure are.Everybody worries about you."

"Why Jack dear, hat that wouldn't be your fault if anything happened to one of us "said Jennie moved deeply in spite of herself.

"Of course not."chimed in Hettie.

"Well I can't help thinking that something might happen to you some day that would be just terrible."Went on the boyscout captian.I g can't get that fearful thought away from me, and therefore I can't help worrying about the dangers you and your sisters always face."

"Well we are not in any danger now, and surely you need not let a thing like that annoy you surely"said Angeline Vivian bending over him with her sweetest smile, though there was tears in her eyes."That's what has helped the posion to make you more ill than you would have been otherwise. You Jack dear stop worrying, we won't do anything rash or foolish, we're not even going near the battle field, we don't even want to see it,.You must take a good rest.The doctor will be in to see you again this afternoon."

"But what about the message carrying, Doctor, some one will have to carry the messages to the generals and I am the only one who could have done it.Thousands of others are also greviously ill all of a sudden and there's no one to take my place."

"You can't thats plain"exclaimed the Physician with decision."That's certain."

"I will take his place, and my sisters can take turns"Cried Jennie."I'm a Princess and so are my sisters, so who has a better right than we."

"Well I'd like to see you do it Princesses dear for I'd be sure the messages would be safe with you and the speedy horses you ride."said The doctor himself."But I don't now whether your dear father the Emperor will consent.It is too dangerous a thing to do and Glandelinian spies and scouts and patrols may interfere with you."

"I or my sisters couldn't ride any better than if we were twenty one than we can now."Interrupted Angeline hotly."And believe me we'll do it and nobody can gainsay us when we decided upon a thing and Father would approve it.We have our dignity and when it comes to the proper time we'll use it.Jennie and we,ll go forth as in Jack's place and nobody is to tell us not to.What generals need the messages?" she added turning to Jack.

"none of em yet"said the boy."But you'll have to watch every movement of the enemy if you're going to carry messages and surely that will be dangerous."

"Is the christian battle line all right over there?"Joice demanded as she pointed, and tried to make her voice sound indifferent."

"The battle is pretty shocking over there but we're advancing" answered the boyscout captian."General Matildia's christian line is shagging a little, but Jenerva's line is holding in its advance and is a big help but the battle is simply frightful. and I would advise you and your sisters for God's sake please keep away. General Hansonia Hansonia is in command in this sector and he is handling all the divisions alone now as so many officers have fallen.Well Princess Princesses it is the only thing to do.you see general plain Night Linger, and explain things.The only thing I am afraid of is that he may take the dangerous situation as an excuse to not wish to have you do it..There are several soldiers who could ride with messages in my place.but if you wish to do itwhy do the best you can but see that you are heavily armed and carry your sabres and lances with you.Penrod has learned you a lot and therefore therefore you may be able to take care of yourselves."

General plain nightlinger was the presiding general along this portion of the fiercest battlefield ever seen, as well as general manager general of several christian batteries, and general cavarly divisions.He controlled the position between golden Crossing, and Rainbow ill where the enemy was resisting most obstinately, and it was he who had taken the"place of general Bailey who was critically wounded.

The ma battle was a dreadful matter along this section, and some activity had commenced some time before with the mortally wounding of general Tyler Harrington of the ninth concentinian Corps.general Tyler had been an influential christian general , and also during the fiercest of the fray an important letter had been sent to him by one of the signal station agents. This letter was carried by Colonel Childie and in some way the contents of it became acquainted to interests opposed to the christian line attacking so desperately in this section, and therefore though it was delivered, the enemy generals seemed to understand what was in that note, and therefore put up such a hot and tenacious resistance, that in this way a portion of the main christian line was badly shattered, and the general fell mortally wounded.

While there were at this time no open counter assaults from the Glandelinians, there had been hints recieved from some of the christian generals, that some ruse might be accomplushed as to open up by artillery fire a portion of the christian line, and be enabled to mae make a charge that would destroy the christian attack..Of course general Baily had scented something of this sort to o happen, yet he had no idea how the concontents of the letter had become known, and therefore fearing a disaster send his own troops forward and prevented the quadrupled horror just in time but just as he was driving his troops to a "home Run" success he was hit in the leg by a shell fragment and probably will lose that leg.so wild and bloody was the savage conflict that Jack Saunders had been worrying more than usual about the safty of violet,and her sisters, and this with a general run down condition and then with 10,000 other child scouts being mysteriously posioned, and the hardships of his calling had made him seriously ill...

Mary glorinia offered to stay all night and help watch over the boyscout captian and had sent for his special friend Jean Saunders but the news was brought that she was more seriously ill than he was.The boyscout was a little better now but far from being able to i ride any horse. It was feared by Violet and her sisters that some secret agents of the enemy had been in the mess Halls and had disabled the child scouts with the purpose to prevent them from doing any signal duties during the battle, and this if it was to be true and was done by the enemy made them feel very bitter and defiant indeed.so as she planned Jennie saddled her own horse, and went into the near battle section to meet any turn of events that might occure and see if she couldn couldn't discover something and sent a message of warning to any general that could be reach by it.There was now a military pony message express line connecting between general Blain Nightlinger and Hansonia. Hanson vivians battle line was further off but she sure could hear the noise badly and was worried herself.Yet to her relief when she rode up to general plain nightlinger though then dangerously close to the battle, to her relief he made no objection to the Princess taking Jacks place though he was surprised that she didn't hire soldiers to do it.

"I can't oppose you if I wished to because you'll do it anyway, and I can't say just how long our success will last."went onthe general as he sized up the situation through his field glasses"but for your safty we,ll see to it being a temporary arrangement arrangement on anyhow.but when the danger becomes too great for Heavens sake then stop and save yourself.you have always done this sort of wor before and got hurt you know. you Princess Jennie are hated by the enemy more than any one and have to be be careful.you have ridden this route before, you say."

"Yes twice, when Father himself at the battle of Rundull was laid up with slight injuries."

"Well do the best you can.I see you are armed as a brigand and carry your handy weapons the sabre and the lance which no glandelinian can outdoe you with. and another matter.I have a valuable message--but never mind the trip you would have to accomplish to take it would be through the battle zone and that is extremely dangerous and whether you are a Princess or a lower person I wouldn't let you go no matter what you would do to me.you're safey depends on the safty of our nation.but never mind I'll converse about those letters later.I,ll have to move my troops forward now to support the other assaulting lines.But for Heavens sake whatever you do be careful.There's go's a terrible roar of cannon over yonder.I'll have to advance.Good by and be careful." and he turned away and rode off to order his divisions to advance. Jennie wondered what he had been about to say, but as shells burst close to where she was she rode away to be out of range.

"If there are any valuable letters to be carried"mused the Vivian Girl heroine, "I hope none of them get lost or that the contents be known.good gosh there's goes a high explosive shell about a hundi hundred feet from me." The convussion threw her from her horse, and only a ledge of stones protected her and her horse from being hit by the flying fragments, while soldiers the same distance away as she had been were mowed down by the shell fragments like grass. After the confusion was over she was given some letters by a general, and then told wewhere to go with it she set off down a wooded road tward Golden Crossing.The trip would cost her about five minutes, and if other messages were ready she would return for it and would be able to make many trips in about eight or nine hours. Of course she realized that there was grave danger attending messenger and so forth and during such battles as these great cannon broadsides or explosions though distant caused bad concussions and accidents happened therefore. There had been captures and holdups too by Glandelinian scoul patrols but not since Jack had done any message carrying. And if too the messenger was not on time, the messn messenger was held responsible for the results.On her way past the cottage headquarters, Jennie stopped to see how the boyscout captian was, and also to report that she was going on a message hoi journey for general Blain Night Linger at least temporarily.Jennie from the boy better.Mary Glorinia said she thought it would be best if he could be moved to her own tent and violet and her sisers and even Jack himself agreed to this and Mary said;

"I can watch over him better then, and my assistants can help me. and And then then too Jennie and your dear sisters, if you're delayd by anything unusual in the duty as courier and have to be away long you,ll feel easier by sensing that he is being well cared for."

"Yes it will be best"Jennie agreed." and so as she rode swiftly off preparations were made to transfer transfer the boyscout to the other place.

"nowJane we,ll show them what we can do when we carry the messages."exclaimed exclaimed Jennie as her faithful pony started off along the mountain trail tward her destination. Nothing of of moment occured on that ride.Jennie felt so brave at this moment that she might be called upon to defend the message from Glandelinian soldiers chasing her. he was armed as if she had turned brigand, for she had four pistols a double cartridge belt, a long powerful lance, and a long reliable sabre, beside her dangerous carbine, and she dwelt on the thought too of what a heroine again she might prove herself to be.for a time too while riding, that strange happiness she usually feels coming on which comes upon children Angel possessed bec began to come upon her and that also made her have a feeling added that convinced her she could have fought like an angel if she had been assaulted. some glandelinian spies or a agents seen her pass and understood who she was but there were only three of them, and though they had followed at some distance they were deathly scared to try and capture her for they knew three of them would have no show little girl though she was. Therefore evetything was very prosiac and she even began to feel the strange happiness coming stronger. and her pony did not even slip or fall but came through on schedule time or rather a little ahead of it., for Jennie felt more confident and enthusiastic and urged her horse on. she had ridden up to general Schloeder and delivered the message, and was waiting for his answer, having dismounted and stood behind a tree to avoid shots if any came when a boyscout suddenly rode up to where she was standing and lightly touched her on the shoulder.

"Oh it's you timothy Groveton dear"Exclaimed Jennie in sudden surprise."why is this."hat are you doing down here.where's Angelinia Aronburg?"

"She's busy in general Hanson Vivians army.But are you not glad to see me Jennie dear."!

"Oh yes of course but not in such a dangerous locafion"she answered.

"I don't care to see you in such a dangerous location either"he said as she seemed obliged to glance down very closely at some military message envelopes she was sorting which she had prepared herself for some destination.

"General Hansonias left grand division will be an hour late in advancing"she said."A messenger rode in to me to say that one of the divisions was badly cut up in a charge and they had to recover another from a bad piece of ground where it was being torn up by shell fire.so you'll have to go back to a safer spot. Timothy dear."

"That's good if you will."he exclaimed.

"What !Good that two christian divisions have been cut up by the enemy!"

"No,no.I don't mean that.I mean it's good for us both to get out of here.but er- say--what's that big official looking envelope addressed to you from Angelinia Agathia too, and without a stamp either."And Timothy placing his loving arm around her her looked over the little girls shoulder..

"Oh they're military official letters and when they're delivered to a general they don't requite stamps."

"What in the world are you delivering messages to and fro in such a dangerous location?"Timothy demanded looking scared. for her safty.

"Why didn't I tell you?"Jennie asked with a happy teasing laugh. "I'm going to be courier from now u on and so are my sisters.We're to be on turns.That is my official appointment taken upon ourselves by ourselves.Are you not going to congrat ulate me ,imothy dear?"and she looked q archly at the boyscout and smiled.

"Say Jennie dear what in the world is this, a joke or something?"as ed Jack as he leaned up against the tree.

"A joke! The idea.How dare you?"and the Princess appeared to be very indignant indeed."A joke..I guess not.I have no time for such nonsense.Look at that Timothy Groveton, "and she flourished in front of him an important looking document whereon her sisters name ,violetcould be discerned in very large and well neatly written letters. "Hum.o you really are going as courier when you could have many men do it for you." remarked Groveton."Is Jack Saunders------"

"Oh I don't believe it is anything serious."was the sudden answer."But they say nearly all the other child scouts have the same illness too.But I and my sisters are going to take turns at this courier work and---"

"Taking turns."cried Timothy Groveton in surprise and alarm."I hope you and your sisters are not thining thinling of going on too dangerous message carrying . I don't like the look of this battle here."

"Oh no indeed, We're not tired of living yet."Jennie answered."We li e to serve our country and show the enemy they can't prevent us even by each either.If we do need to die we,ll do it in Our Blessed Lords own time though they say angel possess ed children don't die, and I believe it too.but some of us must do what poor Jackcan t do, and that gives us a chance to do something, at which we can finally ma e the enemy more scared of us than they are now, and violet realized too that Angelinia Angelinia Aronburg is too busy and too far away from us now because of the battle to look after such courier wor properly.so as Jack is wounded or ill I determined to act as courier and my sisters will do so at times to relieve me or each other. And surely we need not fear as we are well acquainted with the duty."Jennie went on looking her sweetest at him"for often when a general was in trouble and need a courier I and my sisters often did it for them.Tim pooney does the heavy duty of course.so its So with others to help us I felt that I and my sisters might just as well during this battle be the full fledged courier"The little girl went on. "As soon as Violet had arranged with her sisters to care for the boyscout captian who is ill I and my sisters decided to apply for this duty of General Wienstien or Blain Nightlinger."

"Apply for the job from the generals?" cried Timothy Timothy Groveton."I thought you had aurthority to;"

"Well I or my sisters have, they are under me in commission it is true, and I or my sisters have our say equal to our Father, but we don't do anything against the advice of the generals.They know the dangers more than we do..Well I applied to general Blain Night Linger.He said it was all right to do anything as long as I followed my brothers good advice and stayed away from the battle zone. and that is what I8m intending to do, not even to get near enough to see it. so I received the appointment."she laughed in conclusion."So after This dear Timothy Groveton of the courier line also you'll also get courier messages from me too and deliver it to me, and I don't believe you would care to refuse that either."

"Refuse it. no greater pleasure than to do it I'm sure."timothy Groveton answered with a low bow, and he also laughed."When did all this happen?"he demanded. "This morning when Jack Saunders became ill."

"Is your appointment temporary or for good."?

"I never had any temporary appointment"Jennie said."I do it when IIchoose and I could cancel it if I choose.But I'm going to see it through."It's a shame though so many child scouts became ill on a day when such a battle is reging."

"Maybe they got ill just to get out of the duty"said timothy just for fun not understanding in reality ih inhis heart though why they should be ill.Jennie saw his intention in that however and said"No they did not. If Jack's illsness was the same as all have then they were slightly posilioned."

"Posioned"said timothy frowning and not hardly believing his ears."Posioned.How in the world;o--"

"They must have been because their illsna illness is the same and all happened at the same time.Then the two just now having time found much to converse about on that startling subject. Timothy was heartily sorry and greatly apprehensive to hear of the illness of so many child scouts.timothy Groveton however was one of the highest commissioned of the boyscout a boyscouts, whose father had been slain at the battle of Cedemine.thatthe he was left alone with his little sister also Jennie by name, a very littl v little girl, who became a girlscout too for so many sympathized with her that they helped and secured for her the place as Standard girl scout of Aronburgs main army. he managed to raise herself up from the success id in the dutues she performed in this way, and from the brave deeds too she as was alable to perform.Jennie vivian herself explained first that her sisters sent investigators to find out how so many of the child scouts had been posioned, and that the courier duties during the battle would take up much of her time and that of her sisters, so she,and her sisters planned to carry messe messages to and fro as long as the battle raged, so that they could act officially as long as Jack and so many child scouts were laid up.."

"Of course my sisters will help me and so will little Jannie timothy."Jennie said"For it isn't easy for us little girls to have to do this duty.It is really dangerous but we are not afraid."

"And I'll help you too."cti Crie Cried timothy Groveton.

"I believed you would, and knew you would timothy dear."Jennie exclaimed clapping her hands."but now we must converse on military business.Let me have your own slips to sign and here is a strange message letter that you had better put in an inside poc et where landelinian patrols won't find it and you can accompany me as if you were my guardian angel."and being so strangely happy now she laughed merrily at her joke...

There was co nsiderable routen duties attattadt attatched to the courier duties and to the various courier routes and dangers too(not a jew) and it was evident timothy andc Jennie were to be busy over tnis.The message carrying was to have its exciting moments yet.

"Will you ride with me to general Hansonia's headquarters or will you wish to go on alone?"asked Jennie.

"I guess to guard you from harm I'll ride with you"Timothy said."We can go as far as Yellow Road.I stopped there on my way here to see how the battle is progressing ,and general Harry Ward said he was going to ride in to Rainbow hill at an early time and try to start a rear guard action against the enemy.I can have him give a message to us if need be saying that the situation here is favorable for any assault he may plan. and he can also tell my sister that I'll go on courier duty for you and whatever of your sisters go s on her turn, and be in early to see g her to morrow morning."

"That would be a good idea"d said Jennie."I guess you would rather ride with me because you has hate to part with me"she said slyly with a sly glance at him."All you boys do.Well I'll try to make you comfortable Timothy but you should not blush that way.I'm only fidding."

"It's your own doing nevertheless"he managed to say."Who wouldn't love to be comapny of you and your sisters.But you can do as you please as far as the regulat ions permit.But I wish Penrod would be here.He's a good protector, and I would not went to see anything happen to you or your sisters while he's away."

The prog ress of the christian divisions in their assaults so far was more su successful than had at first been repo ted, and they went swiftly tward where they might meet with general Hansonia.In such cases when a courier trip had to be accomplished during a batt e it seemed sometimes hazardous, but in fact the Vivian Girls could accompa accomplished it far safer and easier than a man could even though the trails they may have to go over was rather dangerous during a battle, though on occass ions when there were plenty of christian scout patrols and some import ant messages or letters had to be carried from one general to another, Violet and her sisters always made the trips in success.Jennie had never failed in anything of this sort nor did her sisters. sometimes they had gone through some peril however which they had never cared to face again.

"on't you believe on this occassion it will be quite dangerous to try and reach general Hansonia"demanded timothy as he listened in apprehension to the roar of the distant battle.

"If there is any need I'll face any peril if I have to get the message through no matter how scared I might be"she answered, though I would regret facing it just the same..ut " I do not wish to throw my life away carelessly.We won't die being angel possessed, but that ain't no sign we can't be killed. We could be slain easily enough. but I always watch out for myself , and since Penrod taught me and my sisters a thing or two though we can't outdoe him yet, we sure can outdoe any landelinian cavarly man with a lance or sabre.so we're safe on that score."

As he rode along with her Timothy was greatly worried about so many of the child scouts being made ill by posioned morning meals, and hoped that no one would die. As they rode on they came upon some officers who when questioned said that there was no danger for any one even though they were ill and that many of them were getting better.

"But none of them can go on any duty whatever."said the officer."The doctors are investigating the posioned food and say it was poldine."omebody somebody doped the food this morning."

"And I don't intend to l t them."Exclaimed Timothy Groveton."I and the dear Princess here, and her sisters and jannie will do the courier duty for a while."

"That wouldbe a very good id a idea."said The officer."violet,and her sisters will surely do their level best to make you very comfortable Timothy."

"Oh they won't have to try very hard."The boy laugned.Jennie blushed and smiled, and then also looked wise.

"How many of the child scouts are ill"said Timothy.

"About Fifteen thousand eight hundred.They're all seriously but not dangerously ill.The Doctors of the Regiments who examined them com confirmed what thay had at first said--that many of the child scouts including poor Jack too would be ill for a very long time, and when this had been known their chief officers who fortunately and and strangely had escuped because they didn't have time to eat any breakfast had at once made arrangements to have new riders to carry messages between various christian generals and other officers. Angelinia Aronburg though so far distanced agreed too this but most une p unexpectedly some opposition developed among the members of the christian generals.It appeared that one of the generals opposed it because they believed that it was too dangerous, and wanted the signal stations to do the duties.There were several others too who opposed it on the same cause, and there was quite a argument over it.But as Angelinia Aronburg nor Jennie Turner would not cancel anything without the consent of violet and her sisters, and as she had the most highest commision next to them and as Jennie Turner was also able to make the appointment at l ase least for the time being it came to others to perform it. but there was bitter feeling over the situation, and bitter fear and dread and horror on the part of many Christian generals who wanted the job only done by signal men on signal stations for the dutues d uties to be carried on by s child scouts as couriers at such a time was full of unseen and horrible dangers, and there surely was no honor to it ei either.

"you want to watch yourself you and your sisters and timothy too"He went on rather soberly."Watch yourselves for this is a dangerous time to do courier duties for thee for there is no telling what tricks and schemes those Glandelinian scout patrols may be up to."

"Tricks and schemes Colonel!what do you mean!"asked Jennie in wonder.

"Well they may try to do something to interfere with your plans or lay you low from ambush.Or to cause disaster to the christian lines they may do things to try and delay you with the message or even by some scheme have you lose a valuable message or a package or something. They might think or hope if you failed to deliver deliver promptly, you would lose the chance of saving our armies armies, and they would have the chance to see their own armies win the battle. So be careful.Hold on to it for your generals will need the victory if our country is to be saved this time for sure. and this battle is going to cost the christian armies a big pile of men."

"Don't you worry about that old Colonel"exclaimed Jennie."I and my sisters will watch out, and those Glandelinians won't catch me or them napping."

They then left the officers followed by the fond looks of the colonel..

"They are all good soldiers"murmured Timothy Groveton."good soldiers.But they fear we can't take good care of ourselves Jennie dear."

They heard now a new sound of battle but as Timothy Groveton wastold by Jennie that several important movements of the christian army are expected, they decided to ride to general Hansonia with the messages they wished to deliver, even if it was dangerous to go that route.

"There's half if not a whole chance for the Christians to be winning to day"Timothy said"and we understand the trail as if we were gazing at our own names.We can go a good swift ride of it.They first had wished to see the lay of the land and as they went up ona on a slight rise of ground to see if they could view the battle from there saftly there rode up a certain man who though in a purple uniform violet and her sisters for some reason had not liked or trusted very well..

"Going to general Hansonia's!"he inquired causually.

"That's our own affair"said Jennie rather severely."If we do anything you want carried."!

"No"was the surly answer."and if I had I would not trust any little girlscout with it.It's a mans job to ride courrier express at such a time as this, and I'm surprised that they let you have the place."

"I'm Princess Jennie, and I ll ride on any line I please she retorted."and if that's the way you feel about it I wouldn't accept any of your stuff as I don't trust you either"and she was filled with indignation."but I've made good so far and I expect to continue on whether you like or ir not.."

"Huh",Maybe you will, and maybe you won't Princess,"was the snarling retort in answer.

"Halt who are you anyway"said Jennie drawing her pistol and leveling it at him. "Anybody who speaks to me like that for all the good we have done makes himself suspicious and very too.I don't like you and neither do my sisters.Forward March.I'll have you investigated"for she couldn't help being very suspicious when anybody spoke that way to her, for that was more the manner of a Glandelinian.

No Christian soldier of any sort had ever made answers to her that way.

The man was cowed in an instant but he was as agile and as quick as a cat. Before she suspected what he was going to do, he had drawn his sabre, and slashed at the hand holding the pistol, and so fierce was the blow that the pistol went sailing through the air, and before she could draw another he turned his horse, and raced away at breakneck speed down the road and was lost to sight before they could follow. Somehow or other too though it was morning it was quite dark probably caused by the smoke of the far distant forest fires, and therefore they decided to deliver the message before it was too late.Jennie had several important military messages, one of which was securely sealed indicating that it contained valuable information and which had been given to her by the colonel.Timothy went to recover her pistol, and while he was gone, Jennie stowed it away in an inside pocket and pinned it together.Then Timothy came on the return with hr her pistol.They went on, and the first part of the trail leading out from the territory was not especially bad, and they both ambled along it as fast as the horses could go. After two minutes of riding they came upon a rather frail wooden bridge underneath of which was a rushing mountain stream. As both Jennie and Timothy Groveton neared the middle of the bridge, and rode al alongside jennie Jennie felt a board suduenly give way under the pony.Timothy saw it, and in an instant he had ridden ahead of her horse, grabbing it by the reins and clapped his heels to the side of his own and slapped him sharply on the flank.Pulling at the reins he caused Jennie's horse to spring forward, and only just intime, for in another second her horse would have stepped through a hole in the bridge where several boards had fallen off into the stream below. and had the pony fallen poor Jennie would probably have been thrown over the bridge railing into the raging torrent below.

"Whoa.Steady old boy.Easy now"said Timothy as hebrought his and her own horse s to a stop, and then leaped from the saddle, and held the reins lightly to retr restrain Joan.The poor Pony snorted,, whinnied and after prancing about a few moments, stood still and Jennie was helped to dismount.

"That's better now eh Jennie."Commented Timothy.

"What happened ."Demanded Jennie."Did the boards come loose as my horse touched them!"

"I'm going to see."said Timothy."

"There was as Timothy suspected something wrong and as he glanced over the part of the bridge they had traversed he discovered a place where three boards had fallen out.A pretty wide gap was left---a gap wide enough too to have allowed a horse and rider to fall through with disasterous results to animal and rider.

"Welll wonder Jennie dear"went on Timothy his white somewhat white"did we do that ourselves, or did it just happen of itself, or was it done on purpose purpose purpose!"

At that instant there had come to Jennie the colonels warning.

"I'll bet it was done on purpose for something seems to tell me so"said Jennie.

"I feel it was that man I was going o to make a prisoner."

"Well if it is someone trying to frustrate us getting to General Hansonia it's a most mean schene scheme they had played in trying to stop us."mused Timothy aloud."I wouldn't so much as mind for myself, for I escaped the gap for I guess I could have swam out all right.But it's you Jennie who might have been thrown and been so badly banged up that you would never have recovered"and he patted her pony which now had gotten over its fright.

"I'm almost afraid now to proceed."sobbed Jennie.

"I'll ta take the message then and you could ride on home."proposed Timothy.

"You are badly shaken up by this experience."

"No I won't give up now " Jennie said wiping her eyes with a handkerchief. "I never would give up in common danger but if this was done on purpose this was treachery and that's more to be feared. But I'll go on."

"I guess I can get a couple of logs or some big branches in the woods and place them tightly in the holes"said Timothy."Then we can go on, and even warn othere coming to cross the bridge."

Instinctively they both looked to see if the mail and messages were safe.Yes they were on the saddle front.None of them had slipped off of her horse when she had no narrowly escape disaster herself.Then with a sudden motion Jennie's hand went to the breast pocket of her coat, where she had placed the small sealed military package.Her face turned white for to her consternation she felt nothing there at all.

"Whew."whisp whistled Timothy in great sympathy and apprehension."Great Scott Jennie dear,I hope you have not lost that."

"I'm afraid I did"she almost sobbed."Confound this old bridge.I could give it a kick."

It was very possible indeed that she might have easily done so for she remembered pictih pitching forward on her ponys neck as she leaned over to sabe herself 2h when Timothy grasped the reins of her horse.The pin seemed to have slipped open from the force of her movement and the parcel could have easily slipped from her pocket.

In a veritible frenzy of alarm over her Loss Timothy, helped her searched search through her other pockets. believing she might, by some chance have thrust the valuable parcel into one other than the first she had selected as being the most secure. But it was not to be found.

"Just my confounded luck." she sobbed aloud.. "It's lost. This will end Hansonias hope to continue his advance and we'll lose Big Girl Knool to the enemy. I wish I hand that snake that pried those boards loose."

Her steed whinned and Timothy appeared very sobrer, believing perhaps tht that poor Jennie might have been distressed beyond endurance.

"Well it's gone, Timothy ,gone" Jennie said, sadly enough. "And it wasn't my fault either. I couldn't know those plans in the bridge were loose. It's lucky Timothy dear you seen them giving way in time, and not only gave me the alar, but pulled my horse horses forward before his hind feet plunged through or we might be lying somewhere with broken legs if not worse."

"It's too bad" said timothy regretfully and bitterly. "but try begging the help of God and the Angels who possess you. Surely they'll come to your help."

He glanced back to the place where the accident had occured. or nearly occured. He could see a large black spot on the otherwise level floor of the bridge, the boards of which were white from the bleaching of the sun, and the dust of the mountain trail.

"There's where you and your horse nearly went through.", used Timothy. "I believe Jennie dear you're luck has not deserted you."

"Why how do you know" she asked.

"I believe I see on the very edge of the black opening, a small light object. Come Jennie let's see."

"Thank God, and His Blessed Mother if that can be it." She murmured clasping her hands. Cautiously both started toward it, in fear lest the vibrations of their steps jar the sealed package into the stream, for that was the sealed envelope Timothy felt sure. And as the two started forward their horses followed so well were they trained.

"No stay back Hen and Joan" Timothy exclaimed."

The ponies whinning, obeyed. Jennie noticed that one of the small bags was hanging loose, as if about to fall, but she reasoned she could fasten that securely while Timothy learned whether or not the white object was the parcel missing from her pocket. While she toiled at the saddle strap, cautiously he advanced, and there lying on the very verge of the openings made by the missing boards was the parcel which Timothy was sure, contained great information for the general.

"Well isn't this lucky indeed thanks be to god Jennie dear" he cried as he lifted it up, and handed it to her, and she trust it into the bottom of her inside waist pocket and sealed it wibn with a pin."

"It won't get out again I'm be sure of that" she said with a smile. "It is the answer to our prayers Timothy dear. just pure luc too caused by the angels.."

It was the work of only a few minute to drag from the woods close by some big brah branches to fill in the holes left by the three missing boards. Of course the branches did not make the bridge secure, but they could easily be seen, and would warn any chance passerby of the danger. There was a chance that some one might come after the two brave children passed. Timothy Groveton himself tried to ascertain by careful examination how the boards had come to give way under the hoofs of Jennie's steed. But there was no clew that he could discover. Too the bridge was not a carefully made one, and it would have been an easy matter for any one to loosen a couple of the boards that the least motion would send them into the stream below.

"But who would want to do a thing like that even to us." Timothy Reasoned.

"Glandelinians are treacherous enough to do that." said Jennie. "I might have been killed and so would have been my horse. Well alls well that ends well I guess. Now we better be going."

The bridge was as secure as Timothy and Jennie could make it in their haste, and having made sure that nothing was missing from the bag, and fastening them more securely, both mounted their horses again, and set off at a lively pace for a while both were worried lest Jennie's pony might have strained a shoulder or a tendon but her horse appeared to be none the worse for the adventure. They both rode on and covered about half the distance toward Hansonia's army when they heard on the trail ahead of them the sounds of other hoofbeats and countless numbers too. At first they thought it might be the echoe of their own, but a moment of listening told them it was a column of strong cavarly on the road.

"I wonder whether it's our own side or of the enemy" Timothy asked himself.

He and Jennie saw a few minutes later. It was Colonel Jacob Tantrell with a column of Concentinian cavarly.

"Be careful of the bridge" Jennie called as she and Timothy passed the column."

couple of boards gave way with me a while ago."

"Oh---s---they did. boards gave way!" Colonel Tantrell stammered.

"Yes" Timothy himself said. "Jennie nearly had a bad fall. "He said nothing about her dropping the parcel.

"Th I cannot understand that" the colonel said. "The bridge don't appear very strong Princess I'll admit, but it's not so weak that it'll give under your horse.

It can't be possible. This sounds suspicious."

"Somebody ought to fix that bridge." said one of the men.

"some one did" said Timothy.

"Eh, What's that!" demanded the colonel.

"Timothy dear said some one did. He means some one fixed it for me I believe."

"I believe so too" said the Colonel. "Those boards never came loose by themselves."

"We stuc a couple of branches in the holes" said Jennie. Everyone of you be careful look out when you ride over."

"O---I---I---will. thanks." The colonel exclaimed speaking that way because he was scared of what a narrow escape she had had. Then Timothy and Jennie rode on, and the cavarly column passed them, the colonel giving Jennie an apprehensive but sympathici symp sympnatic look rather shaken by the adventure, and a bit anxious Jennie and Timothy finally reached within sight of Hansonias army in battle in the distance. They halted there, and Timothy Groveton decided to signal instead of approaching there as it was too dangerous, wondering all the while how Jack was by now.

"But I guess he must be all right or they'd have sent Jennie some word." reasoned Timothy. They managed to attract a signal station and finally a number of cava cavarly men rode toward them hot foot. They soon arived and Jennie followed them toward where general Hansonia was directing the christian advance against the resisting Glandelinian armies.

"I'm glad to get ride rid of that." she said to the general. "It looks as if it is worth something" and she pointed to the many seals.

"That so it does indeed" the general replied. "Guess I'll see what it contains. Want any return message."?

"Not unless you have one." said Jennie. "That sealed parcel is given to me by Joice. she wanted it delivered safely." Then she gave warning about the missing boards of the bridge so that no cavarly would have an accident. However she said nothing of her suspicions that the boards had intentionally been loosened, for it would do no good and she said nothing about the illness of so many child scouts either.

"I'll just be as watchful as an owl" she reasoned to herself "and maybe I can find out a few things. It might be that some one who wants to frustrate me is trying to cause me a disaster. Those Glandelinians would axt actually want to harm me and my horse and get my parcels. But they didn't succeed."

As he looked sideways at her Timothy was wondering and thinking how much more beautiful little Jennie would be if she was dressed in a beautiful set of white clothes a wreath of flowers around her head, on and was sitting on a nice white horse.

"I know what you are thinking of" she suddenly said.

"you do. what in the-----"

"Oh I do. You wish that I wore a wreathe of flowers on my head and was on a white horse dressed all in white clothing. Well some day Timothy dear I'll do that and see how you'll feel," and she laughed gaily at his face for it showed his blank amazement and astonishment/

"Those angels told you that" he stammered.

"No they didn't." she laughed. "I can sense that. Many believe I and my sisters through our happy condition can read minds. Maybe it is so. I read yours just then."

For their next fewctrips nothing of moment occured. Jennie and Timothy delivered some more messages without anything happening to them, and there were only light short messages to carry. They heard Jack and many of the child scouts had improved slightly, but the doctor attending the boyscout captian predicted that it would be at least two months before any of them could be on their horses again. Jennie was just going back to her sisters glancing at her wrist watch and believing it was time for one of them to take her turn when general Hindemine came riding up with his infantry in the advance, and he had several envelopes in his hand. Each one Each one was sealed with purple wax.

"Going to make the trip straight through to general Vivianias right now Princess!" he asked, for he knew Jennie well, though better acquainted with her father the Emperor..

"No not exactly but if you wish any messages carried I'll deliver them." was the answer. "Is there anything I can do for you."?

"Well this is in your regular line" The general said "But I have some very important letters here for Hanson Vivian himself, and I'd rather give them to you or your sisters personally than trust them to a man courier. I'd wish you to hand them over to general Vivianias and he'll telegraph them to Hanson your uncle and---and--"

At that moment a christian general came running up. He waved his hand to general Hindemine as he checked his ho horse.

It was general Jacob Baldwin.

"For Heavens sake don't send those letters." he exclaimed and he seemed quite excited. "For the Love of God hold them. Don't let Jennie take them."

General Hindemine paused in the act of handing the sealed ducoments to the pretty Vivian Girl Princess, and turned suddenly to glance at the christian general who had called to him. Jennie and Timothy did too....2.2.2.222222

Jennie recognized him as their one time best friend Jacob Baldwin who had done so much for her and her sisters and who she and they had done a lot for him. He was not hardly seen by them these days because he was kept so active against the enemy, and he had done considerable duties elsewhere and here and there for them, and their father.

"What's that sir you said?" Inquired General Hindemine greatly astonished.

"I said I don't sent those letters to General Vivianla by Jennie."

Jennie suddenly felt a sinking of the heart, and also felt the hot blood come into her cheeks. So her there seemed to be but one meaning in the warning. Maybe General Balw Baldwin having never seen her for so long, had either lost his friendship for her or she was being distrusted by him. To have a friend who had been so loyal to you turn suddenly against you after all you did for him was heart rending. She suddenly felt too that secret Glandelinians in disguise might have caused her to be under suspicion or was it because of false reports being spread by Glandelinian spies who wanted to hinder her purpose to carry messages. Something of what was passing through Jennie's mind seemed to communicate itself to general Baldwin who suddenly rode her up to her smiled in the most friendly manner and taking her hand in his held it in a loving grasp as he said;

"Don't so worry my dear little girl. It isn't that I'm afraid you wouldn't carry the message safely through, but it is true you couldn't do it, in that direction and neither could , or any other courier. It is that I have heard something that is very suspicious, and very dangerous for you to attempt it that causes it to be advisible to pospone the sending of these messages now. Hold them" he continued to General Hindemine "Until Until we can investigate a bit."

"Oh that's different" said general Hindemine. "I at first thought from the way to whotst spoke that you didn't want Jennie to take them."

"Well We Well for her safty I don't, that is I don't want her to do anything or go anywhere anywhere in that direction just yet untill we're sure the coast is clear. Perhaps we won't be able to send them for hours after you have heard what I have to say." he went on to his superior. "But when we do send them you shall take them Jennie," He said with a smile of confluence "but for God's sake don't go alone. Have your sisters accompany them you and the boy armed as you are."

Jennie felt better on hearing this.

"Is there anything I can do for you?" she asked of the two generals/

"Not this trip dearest Princess I guess," was the answer from general Hindemine. "I may have something for you about an hour from now. Not these letters, as that direction as Baldwin says is too dangerous for you to go, but some more notes I want general Henry Turmer to recieve. The battle is not going to his favor and he needs a little warning. I'll see you or your sister who ever takes your turn on the next trip."

"All right your Excellency. Then I'll be gettinh along as I do not want to waste time." And having secured her lance to the lance holder down a little beneath the saddle Jennie leaped into the saddle, and followed by Timothy was off at a gallop.

"A most darling little girl." Murmured General Hindemine to Baldwin, as they started their divisions on the advance.

"Yes indeed" said general Baldwin.

"I was afraid" continued Hindemine "you were going to hurt her feelings by saying you couldn't trust the letters with her." That would have caused your bad luck for they discharge those who don't trust them."

"Oh no I wasn't indeed. I guess you can trust her as much as you could trust an angel can't you."

"I should say so. I don't see why she or her sisters selected to do this dangerous sort of duty though. She is really doing Jacks work you see for the boy with many other child scouts has been laid up by severe illness caused by posioned breakfast food. Jennie started first and had been toiling hard to make good on this courier route, but I wish she had not done so for I hate worse than posion to see anything happen to her for there are many secret Glandelinian spies whom we cannot detect who would do anything to frustrate her so Manley could win this battle. But what is up Baldwin--why didn't you want me to give her these letters to Vivianla--after our agreement of only a few minutes ago.....something wrong../"!!!O"

"I'll tell you. A number of Glandelinian scouts on that route have got wind of what's going on, and are laying in mabush believing she'll come that way. If she did they'd shoot her dead right then and there." "you mean about the new order that I was to go give to Hinemine and they believe she'll have the letters."!

"Hush" the other cautioned him. "No use in giving out secrets out here too close to the army. not that I don't trust the soldiers, but we never can tell if there are spies among them or not. come a little further to this open ground, and I'll tell you all about it. Perhaps it may be well to take violet, and her sisters into your confie confidence a little later. You can decided on that after I've told you h just what came to me."

"Well it all seems a bit mysterious." Commented general Hindemine "But maybe you understanding what you are saying nevertheless."

And as Jennie and Timothy rode off on their usual trip, the two generals were soon at a secret spot, and deeply engaged in important conversation..

Jennie had made several stops that morning before getting on the more lonesome part of the trail tward the fighting lines, where she could give Joan free reins to ~~to make has made~~ as good time as possible. In some places however this would only be a trot to make as good time as possible. In some places this would only be a slow trot for the road was treacherous and difficult and in other places ~~no~~ along a comparatively level slope or a downgrade, the horse could go to it and cover up for lost time.

As Jennie and Jim made a turn in the road, they saw riding ahead of them but tward them two men on horseback. Jennie and Jim managed to suddenly disappear out of sight for though they wore the christian uniform the two did not like the looks of the two men. Another man was following behind at a gallop, and they turned in their saddles at the sound of his steeds hoofbeats, and glancing from their hiding place Jennie and Jim recognized one of the men who had been insolent to jennie and then when she gave it back retreated. The other man was a stranger to the children. They watched and as the third men came up the two held up their hands as a signal to halt. Jennie and Jim was not a little apprehensive at first of fearing to be seen by them, and heard the one Jennie threatened to arrest demand of the third man;

"You got a message for me!"

"No sir they were too crafty sir." answered the third man. "They're suspicious of us sir."

"Well I have been expecting a certain letter, and it ought to have been innmy in my possession already. Go back and keep your eyes open for it. young fellow and if you obtain it don't lose it whatever you do" was the necessary caution. "It's a valuable letter and I don't want it to get into the hands of these Christian couriers."

"I'm not in the habit of losing things" The third man answered with great dignity.

Then they parted and the two came up and halted for a moment near the hiding place of the two brave children. Then Jennie heard the stranger re say to the second man whom she recignized;

"They surely ought to be there now! ought they not sir!"

"Yes indeed." was the reply. "I sent them post haste and they ought to be there now . but I'm not so sure they'll get what they want under any conditions. They are the bravest little girls on earth and they may even be so devil daring as to refuse to answer their questions under any conditions..."

"Well they now n know how to make them" responded the stranger.

Then they rode on swiftly and went out of sight in the opposite direction.

"Heavens Jennie dear" mused Jim, as he heard this. "I wonder who it is they are going to try and force answer questions!"

"They mentioned bravest little girls in the world" put in jennie. "I wonder-"

It suddenly flashed into both their minds but Jim was the first to come out with it.

"Could it be your sisters! My God. They're in that cabin with Jack and probably all alone. If some one should try to find out something about our and their work and we capture them they'll be threatened under the charge of being spies."

Jennie's face went white and she hardly knew what to think or say. But there came in both their hearts a sudden strong desire to be near the Vivian Girls-to be ready in case they called for aid.

"Come on Jennie. For the cabin" he cried. "We've got to hustle and get to the cabin as soon as we can."

They urged their horses forward, and they soon thundered over the bridge where once they had nearly met with a disasterous accident. They thought of the loosened boards, and again they wondered who had torn them loose--if it had been done by design. On and on swiftly they rode over the trail untill they swung into the familiar company street. They were ahead of time for one of the Vivian girls to take Jennie's place and there was hardly nobody in the company street for all of the soldiers were at the battle front. The road about the cabin was thick with dry dust and the feet of the two ponies ridden by the brave children made scarcely a sound as they came up. Jennie leaped to the ground and Timothy Followed and they heard through the open windows of the place voices loud in angry conversation. One of the voices was harsh and was that of a man and said;

"Well now little human butterflies you had better tell us what we want to find out. You see we have you six tied to the chairs you're on, and we could fasten the cabin door, and burn you and your sick friend when we fire the cabin. They say you're angel possessed, but our being able to tie you up don't seem to show it. If rescue comes to you in an untimely fashion then we'll believe it and not dare torment you in the future. We'll find out what we wish to find out anyhow, and the more trouble you, or your missing sister gives us the more trouble we'll give you. We're bound to see this battle won by our side by hook or crook and we will. If any one of you don't- --"

"There's no use asking me or any of my sisters" broke in the voice of Angeline Vivian herself. "You're not going to get that information no matter what you do to us, and the sooner you understand that the better. We are angel possessed, but that is no sign we can work miracles or otherwise you couldn't have tied us up like that. But you're cowards to have attacked us behind our backs like you did."

"Say little gutter snipe" Ex claimed the third voice--that of a man "If you don't tell us, we'll;;---"

"What will you do" cried Tim in a loud voice, as he sprang into the place through the window and Jennie came in through the door. "I thought we were too early in returning, but I guess we're just in time" he grimly added, as he swung around and faced two men who stood in front of Violet and her sisters who were fastened to chairs by ropes. He had both his pistols drawn, and Jennie had hers also in one hand and her sabre in the other.

Whether Jennie's sisters, or the two strange men were the more surprised could not be told. Both Jennie's sisters, and their annoyers started at the sudden appearance of the young boyscout captian and Jennie. Then looks of anger, annoyance and also fear came over the faces of the two soldiers, while Jennie's sisters appeared relieved. relieved.

"What's the trouble and why are the good little girls tied up that way?" demanded Timothy, and with seemingly careless motion he threw open his coat. In his belt was a long jabbing blade which was the most handiest weapon the boy or girls a girlscouts carried. "There's Jannie.?"

"I'm tied up too" she cried from the rear of the room.

"Trouble? There's no trouble, I just made a mistake and thought these were the glandelinian boyscout disguised as the Vivian Girls." said one of the men in surely tones.

"Well then" grinned Tim "It sure is a good make up because I never new duplicates could appear so celestially beautiful. Jen... Jennie dear I'll hold them with my pistol. Undoe the ropes with your sabre. If they try anything I'll shoot for they lie."

"Who are you anyhow to come butting in?" demanded one of the men.

"Oh Jennie and Tim" Exclaimed Daisy "These men want----"

"I,m the chief boyscout leader of this encampment" interrupted Tim, with a nod at Daisy, as if to beg her pardon for not letting her finish. "I just came in to return Jennie safely here from her mission duty which time is nearly up. But I thought I heard some trouble here, especially in here, and as her sisters are all tied up I believed you're spies, and so I just jumped in,-- just in time perhaps too." he added significantly.

"If you're looking for trouble boyscout." began one of the men "I guess we can give you plenty."

"I&m not looking for trouble" said Tim hotly. "It is you that are in it."

"That's enough" the other man said to his companion. "come on out. These two brats got the drop on us. don't you know when to quit. They're dangerous. h child scouts are extremely dangerous don't you know that."

"Halt" cried Tim". You're not going out untill I find out what you are and what you wanted. If you go out I.ll lay you low with a hail of shots."

"Oh Tim and Jennie dear they were so mean and annoying." cried Violet "They came sneaking in here when our backs was turned when we unconsciously left our weapons on jacks bed believing there was no danger and surprised us behind our backs. We couldn't couldn't fight them for they held us and after tying us to the chairs they questioned us and insisted on knowing the times when this and that christian division goes to the battle front, who carries dispatches and so forth. I and my sisters told them we were not supposed to tell strangers that untless there was a particular reason why they should know, and they could show they were christian officers. They threatened to fasten the door and windows and set the cabin on fire if we wouldn't tell."

"That proves they're spies" said jennie with flashing eyes as she severed the bonds that held the last of her sisters. "Now see here you fellows "she went on. "I nor my sisters don't know who to you are nor what your game is, but you're under arrest as spies. As we're presenting ourselves here, and as we're the Abbieannian Princesses this is government property, and I've got the aurthority to condemn you immediately to face a firing squad and my sisters could be the firing squad and Timothy too. But we'll be a little merciful to you despite what you done to them and allow you to have a fair trail. Now forward march to the Company Street. And if you believe I or Tim ain't big enough to handle you too, my sisters can they are now regaining their w weapons where they left them, and I'll have help. go forward march."

Seeing themselves covered by two determined children the men obeyed.

"So we ain't angel possessed" laughed Hettie. "Well rescue came for us."

"What do you think of that you spies?" demanded Joice.

"you brats win" answered one of the men.

Just at this moment a party of cavarly soldiers rode up lead by Tim Rooney.

"Oh Tim" called Jennie as she saw the doughty red headed officer rice up "Take charge of these prisoners will you. They tied my sisters up on chairs inside the cabin and tried to force them to give information. They're spies."

"Why sure I will Princess" was the answer, "I didn't know you were here so soon. Is your time as dispatch carryier up"?

"Well my time isn't up yet" said Jennie smiling. "But We came back in time though." Violet and her sisters watched as the colonel and his men led the two prisoners away. Then they went back into the cabin, and as they did so Jennie herself demanded;

"Now sisters dear what was it all about."

For a moment the brave little girls seemed on the verge of tears, and Tim found himself himself earnestly hoping that they would not have hysterics. But they bravely conquered their inclination.

"Oh Jennie and Timothy. I'm glad you have come." "Violet exclaimed as she held out both her hands, which her sister clasped warmly.

"I guess this is no place for me just now." muttered Francis with a sly wink as he just stepped in and saw what was going on.

"Oh yes Francis stay." Jennie and her sisters begged in a f chorus. "We'll We will tell you about it too. You will want to know in case some more men like them come."

"if they do" Exclaimed Timothy showing his trusty pistol "I'll--

"Oh I hope you won't have to resort to that" pleased Jennie. "Just let the soldiers deal with them Tim dear."

"Well if I can't manage them myself, Ill. call for help "promised the boyscout. "But now tell me about it. who were they won't whom we made prisoners?"

"I don't d Known Jimmy dear. They are strangers around here and apparently being spies were pretending to serve in the christian troops. We were sitting beside Jack who was lying asleep, while Jannie herself was getting some of our military reports into shape, and she was just going to check up my letters when they came in. You may have been surprised if you saw us tied up when only two men were in here. Well covering us with machine gun revolvers they made Jennie tie us up and then one of them tied her up. I foolishly had left the private door open, as we did not expect any one coming in as no one hardly was here. Francis Pickford was away for a few minutes, but believing it all safe as the battle is so far away from here we didn't mind being left alone, as we didn't have much to do but attend jacks. Well after we had been tied tied up these two men still pointing their guns at us started demanding all sorts of questions. I or my sisters don't mind giving information to strangers if we're sure they're reallly christians, and if it is the sort of information we can safely let out of our own selves, but they tried tied us up and wanted to now too much too. Whe Why they even asked about you Tim, Angelinia Ironburg, and how many of the child scouts were ill from the pos polio poison and how how many were not."

"They did? why they didn't seem to know me just now when I and Jennie came in."

"Perhaps they didn't by sight but they knew your name and rank and they demanded of me and my sisters how often you and Jennie made the trips, to whom you delivered despatches, where you stopped, how long it took, and they even wanted to find out what sort of horses you and my sister Jennie rode. I simply refused to tell them and then they began to threaten to set us and the cabin on fire. I and my sisters were beginning to get frightened, for we seemed at the mercy of these cruel fiends. but we believing God could protect us through to the end made up our minds that we would not give in to them. nd then well--you and Jennie or Jennie came alongo--and I guess we were never so glad to see you then Tim as we were when you came in. You came so strangely and suddenly we thought it was Penrod. ut of course with your coming they had no chance to do any harm to us. How did it happen that you Jennie dear came here ahead of time and how was it Tim was with you?"

"Oh we just hurried that is all" Jennie answered. "I met Tim when I delivered a message to general Hansonia, and he proposed to protect us when we make the trips." She did not want to tell her sisters what she had overhead overheard on the road. It might caugh cause them to be nervous, and they might also believe there was some plot to either rob them of their station or carry them off.

"and there is something in the wind or I'm mistaken" mused Tim though what it is I cannot guess. When I make the trip with any of the other girls I'm going to me be on the watch harder than ever. The plot is beginning to gather about us, as they say in stories" and he made a mental mental picture of the two men and wondered 2o wondered if they would really be shot as spies.

A soldier rode up a little later, and violet herself recieved a number of letters for transmission for general Clyde Quimble. As it was her u turn now to go and as she hoped to get there on time, she resolved to make an immediate trip, though she would not arive at the other sector untill after ten oclock.

"Oh Tim do you believe it will be safe?" Jennie asked.

"What safe?" he said with a smile. "The letters.?"

"No violet, and you."

"I don't say anything about myself but why shouldn't she be safe. I've even ridden these roads and trails even dark despite glandelinian patrols being around."

"I understand. But there are so many of those men---"

"nonsense I'm not afraid."

Nevertheless Tim was a little nervois as he galloped with violet along the mountain path, not for himself but for his little fair companion who seemed to him equally as pretty and jolly as Jennie. For herself are he started at every noise, for while there had been no encounters with Glandelinian scout patrols as yet still there were so many of them that such innicen ici innocidents were often occuring.Of course the two strangers who had annoyed Violet,and her sisters were under confinement as spies, and yet Tim did not believe any of the Glandelinian scout patrols were were desperate enough to hold him and Violet up and make them prisoners or kill them just for dispatch carrying. besides while Violet had some letters of importance for general Clyde Quimbie, there was not enough of information to make it an enducement for detainment. However before going off violet had read the two letters to memorize them in case she lost them or was held up so she could tell the general anyway what they contained.When she finally conversed of the danger to Tim he said;

"Yes the scout patrol would chance the danger for what you have with you Violet. The best we can do is to avoid these scout patrols.We two can easily fo wo st four or five coming at us, but if a score do we're out of luck." But they reached general Quimbie Quimbie softly and delivered the letters.The general understood who violet was, and said;

"General Hindemine wishes to see your sister Jennie but if you had already taken your turn at this work you'll do.He has some messages he wishes you to carry for him."

"Where is he?"demanded Tim.

"He is over yonder.See those officers over there watching the progress of the battle.Where he's among them you'll find in the center of the group."

Violet and Tim hurried over and as they reached the spot they were approached by general Hindemine who had a number of red sealed letters in his hand.

"This time I'm going to let Violet take them Tim.she said."My friend Baldwin believes it's all right to forward them to their destination now."

"Are they as important as ever?"asked Tim Tim with a smile smile.

"Yes and more so Tim.I'll just give you a hint"the general said in a low voice which he didn't want anybody else to hear."Baldwin and I have just discovered a secret movement of a great column of the enemy, and if things go right according to these letters it may mean a big thing for us, to smash that Glandelinian column into dust."

"A secret movement of a Glandelinian column?"questioned both children together and Violet's face almost turned white.

"Yes, their movement is located to the southeast, and a courier brought us the news though he died from a shell wound he recieved after he came up to us with some very important news.He gave the location where the enemy was going to hit in drifin driving this general counter assault, but the latter lost the proper direc tion of the movement to be made, and other couriers could never find means to get to the territory as the danger was too great.. But about ten minutes ago general Childie discovered the plans of the enemy in movements through his fieldglasses and sent a warning to me, suggesting that I and Baldwin move to the aid of Vivianla before it is too late.The enemy plan hitting him on the right rear.I went into the action with general Wayde Turner, and we've found it tough business to try and hold the enemy at bay and in that location the conflict is too severe for our health and the enemy is driving at us with sledge hammer blows.It a terrible battle too and it's raging not far from here.But there are certain legal forms to com ply with before we actually begin work with our main divisions, and baldwins batteries, and these letters refer to that matter.The reason Baldwin didn't want to send them the other time a few hours ago is because on the route to travel travel the enemy heard of the letters to be delivered and laid at different spots in ambush in order to obtain them and if they did succeed we could fear a counter move on the part of some Glandelinian generals who are trying to locate the strength of my positions, and get those positions away from us.But now matters are straightened out, those roads are in possession of many of our own picket troops, and I'm going to send these letters off by you Violet, seeing you have replaced your dear sister Jennie. I'll expect an immediate answer, and when they come;;

General Hindemine paused suddenly for a sound came from behind a tree where on horse he and the two children had halted during their conversation. Hindemine suddenly urged the horse forward to the tree, the two children following .They saw a man in purple uniform riding rapidly away, along the other part of the field.

"Was he listening to what you were saying?"asked Tim of the general

"It rather appears so."was the answer."I thought I heard something moving about behind that tree as I was talking to you, and I wanted to make sure."

"Well you sure did all right"replied violet, grimly.

"Do you know who he is?"demanded Tim.

"No but I-----I------"

"Say wait a minute"suddenly exclaimed Tim.He had but a glimpse of the rear of the man on horseback, but nevertheless there seemed to be something familiar about the manner in whichwhich the man rode off. Violet no doubt did not know him but he felt sure he did for like a flash it came to Tim....2.2.2

"I believe I do know him------at least I've seen him before."he hurriedly said to general Hindemine."I and Violet are going to find out for sure."

In a flash both the brave children had rapidly followed alongside the road on the soft grass. They did this in order to get ahead of the retreating man for had they remained on the road the footfalls of their horses and the raising od dust and the raising of dust would have given the alarm. As it was however they were able to get ahead of the escaped ropper, and obtain a view of his face. And Tim was not mistaken in this surmise.It was the man whom Jennie had threatened to arrest but who had struck the pistol out of her hand with his sabre and then got away.The fellow seemed startled on confronting our heroine and hero.

"So you,re here now, eh?"Demanded Tim."Halt you're under arrest."

"Under arrest.Is that any of your business what I'm doing here."was the challenge.

"Ain't a Christian dog the same as you."

"No you're not, and neither are we.You were caught listening to private talk, and a few hours ago you insulted Jennie.you listened to private ta talk."

"Who was listening demanded the fellow."

"You were were. And you hit at Jennie"Tim exclaimed."We have a good excuse you boob to place you under arrest."

"If you say she is Jennie (pointing to Violet) she's changed a lot"declared the man.

"That's not jennie."

"Who is she?"

"None of your business."

At that moment general Hindemine came riding up.The spy turned sharply but neither appeared to recognize the other.

"This chap is the same one I thought he was."explained Tim."It was he who insulted Jennie and then struck at her when she attempted to apprehend him for the insult. If you wish we could have him arrested on a charge of trying to be a spy.We might bring some charge against him."

The man seemed disconcerted at this.

"Spy charge?what spy charge!"he blustered.

"You'll find out sooner enough."Tim replied.

But the fellow made a sudden dash and was off down the road at a gallop.Three rifles came as one report and his horse ran into the road trying him off but he speedily arose to his feet, and to their surprise leaped to the back of another horse which no one had happened to see before.But he was not so quick that Violet herself fired a shot and he fell from his horse shot through the arm.

Violet could always escape from the enemy but no one ever escaped from her.

"Well he did not succeed in getting away thanks to you violet."said Tim as the wounded man was carried away by two soldiers."You didn't seem to fire either."

"It's a trick Penrod learned me."she smiled.

"Perhaps it's just as well he didn't get away."answered the general"you sure can hold him on the charge of assault upon Jennie, and if he is really a spy he'll be worse off yet."

"Yes that's so.But what about his listening to what you sir were telling us about the secret movement of the Glandelinian armies."

"Oh Bless you that doesn't worry me."said the general with a laugh."I'll defy any number of Glandelinian spies even the devils themselves to find out my intentions without capturing the proper directions, and I don't intend to tell you those Tim and Violet---at least not yet.I really did not let out any information of any account, and what that Glandelinian spy overheard if he heard ant anything, won't do him any good even if he did manage to communicate it or to any of his confederates. I'm not worry, but of course I don't care to have strangers sneak up and listen to what I have to say.But no great harm has been done."

"I'm glad of it, heartily. And perhaps it's just as well anyhow that we did capture the man.He insulted Jennie, and if he was at large he may yet have had a chance to make it unpleasant for Jennie."

"Th tThat's right Tim.Well you captured the spy, so we won't worry about him.

"Now Princess Vivian you can take those letters, and I need not need to tell you to be careful of them because I know you."

"I sure will be careful with them."Violet promised earnestly."If I ain't it will be my sorrow."

"And before you go just mention them to your brave dear sisters in your cabin" went on the general."Have them use a little care."

"I'll tell them."promished violet.

"Another matter"went on the general, and this time he lowered his voice to a whisper as if afraid of being overheard."These letters are not quite so important as the answers are to be from general Vivianla."

"What do you mean?"asked Violet."I ma mean that we expect a decided answer as to how the christian assaults are progressing and what he decides to do after these letters reach those for whom they are intended."answered the general."The replies will be very important, and I would not want them to fall into the possession of the glandelinian patrol scouts who are trying to cut down our rate of advance.

General Vivianla sent me a dispe pes despatch telling me the resistance of the enemy is very severe and the battle is terrible. So if you'll just mention to your brave sisters to bear in mind when any letters as these come for me the're to recieve them from a courier on a swift horse and that they're important for the sake of our cause, and if you'll remember that yourself too Tim I and the Princesses Princesses will be much obliged to you and will rewardyou handsomely."

"I will surely watch as good as an owl."promised Tim."They'll be sealed of course."

"Oh sure.But I don't imagine anything will happen to them.For no one can know exactly when they will come.That is up to what your Uncle Hanson Vivian will send in answer to general Vivianla.Only be on the watch for them, as your sisters violet are to recieve them first by a courier."

"We certainly will"declared Violet."Now if you will give me those I'll put them in a safe place."

General Hindemine handed over the two long yellow envelopes, and she put them in her inside pocket, and then used a safty pin to close the opening.

"Safty first"she exclaimed with her customary giggle, and oh how pretty she looked as she giggled.

"That's right "assented the general and he thought to himself"How can soldiers of even the enemy be even so cruel to her and her sisters."

As Tim and Violet rode on off on their ponies, which were very famous befau because of their speed and the regularity of which they had so often made so many famous trips, and also escapades from the Glandelinian persuers, violet and Tim thought of the three spies already captured, two who had annoyed them in their cabin, and then the caput capture of this fugitive.

"I just wonder who those three strangers in our own uniform are, and whatt their game is"violet herself reflected."After all maybe it would have been a good thing if we would have caught them sooner.I guess my sisters would have been game enough to order them to face a firing squad for trying to make us give information at the threat of burning us. But we do not be able to yet find out on what charge we could have had them shot.We can't do it unless we can prove that they are spies,.." she thought something else and then continued to herself"Anyhow we have them prisoners, the three of them, so perhaps it's all for the best.When we do this sort of duty it isn't adventure if we don't meet with some sort of interference and if it was too easy to do then we wouldn't care for it either.I'm not afraid of no Glandelinian no matter what he would do.But I'll sure be on the watch for either thair Confederates or these Glandelinian scout patrols. And I'll have to be on the lookout for the replies to these letters.Well it's all in the game"she reflected. "My sisters have always gone through the same sort of adventure and even worse and we have never yet backed down or shirked. If we did we'd be cowards.We have got to retain our reputation if we're to see Our Dear Blessed Lords enemy worsted and brought to his senses.If Glandelinia after this war cannot become a better nation she'll have to be a cast adrift from our own States and then she'll be in a hole.It would be be fine too if I and my sisters could find some way of discovering who poisoned so many of our child scouts and made them ill.But I suppose that is too much to expect."

Thus reflecting J Violet and Tim rode on.Then Tim thought to himself;

"I wonder how this adventure will turn out. I hope by the Help of God and the Angels Angels that possess her that Violet will come through this adventure safe.But I feel suspicious."And he examined his pistols. Though Violet and her sisters by God's will have the gift of reading your mind she didn't this time of Tims, as she was too well well occupied with her own thoughts to pay any attention to him.Had she done so she would have been more watchful.Naturally however after the little experiences of the morning having recieved the sealed letters, and having caused the arrest of a third suspicious man, and having seen the capture of the two men who had acted so roughtly and tied them to chairs, with a threat to set them afire, both Violet and Tim were a little apprehensive as they rode swiftly along the trail tward General Vivian's army.There were several places very favorable for to meet Glandelian scout patrols had any been on this hilly road, but as had been said the route was too well guarded by christian troopers to be fearsome of this.

"Though Glandelinian scout patrols may hold us up more easily than they could a bigger number of couriers"reflected Tim. Consequently Violet and the boy approached all suspicious places with more than their usual caution, though too they were quite shaken by the awful noise of the distant battles. But as they covered a mile or so and nothing happened they became easier in mind.

"I guess no Glandelinian sc out patrols are going to have a tryfor us after all Violet dear""he said to his faithful Princess friend. The plun pluc y little girl only smiled in answer.

"It would not do the Glandelinian scout patrols much good to make us stand and deliver"mused the young boyscout captian to himself."For the general said these letters were not of much importance not to any prime anyhow.Still I wouldn't like to see them be taken away from Violet or that she would lose them, and allow the dam enemy to put it over on her.I'd hate to see that worse than anything.I don't want to see her fall in anything now, and if I can help it she won't either."

This time Violet read his mind but said nothing for she understood that for her welfare Tim feared that the three strangers who had been captured might have many Confederates helping them or have scout patrols to watch every trail and road.But nothing of this sort happened, and in due time in passing tward general Vivians an Vivianla's lines they arived at the cabin and was greeted first by Jennie and then by her sisters.Tim and Violet gave the message to Jennie about general Hindemines letters, but told nothing to her about the capture of the third man.

"It would only be worrying them"Violet reflected,"and my darling sisters have worries enough without my adding to them.Having divine given the information desired to her sisters by general Hindemine, they continued on their way.As they started off however Joice hailed Violet to come back for a moment. She returned and Joice made some inquiries about two strangers who had left suddenly as they had rode up. "Left suddenly"said violet."Why we never saw anybody..Why did you see anybody here?"

"yes "said Joice but we did not now much about them except that they had ridden in a little after you and Tim left, and had eaten a hasty meal while sitting on a log across the company street, and watching our place meanwhile.We observed that they remained well to themselves, and conversed in low tones."

"As long as you didn't see anything of them on the road"said Joice."I guess you and Tim need not worry. you got General Hindemines letters alright?"

"Oh yes."

"Well now the next thing will be the replies"said Violet.Watch out for them.We'll return in a few minutes."

And Joice said she would.

"and how is Jack."Violet asked.

"We are discouraged at the progress he is making"declared Joice."Have you time tocome in and see him."

Violet went in.

"I don't seem to get at all better Violet dear"he complained.

"Well my dear boy it sure does take time"Violet observed."Pray hard for your recovery."

"I understand.But it seems as if I ought to get stronger but I feel a little worse.I want to be back on duty."

"Oh don't worry about that Jack dear.I mean that I'm on the job now.I may not be doing as well as you having had not much experience on this line of courier duty, but I'm taking the letters back and forth to various generals and have had a good time of it. and haven't met any interference of mishaps yet."

"Then you have not lost anything yet Violet, and nothing has been captured from you?"

"No Jack dear not a thing."

"And the contents of no important letters have leaked out?"

"Not yet.But I suspi suspect what you are thinking of Jack. I even know as I can read it in your eyes.It's about the danger of such missions."

"Yes Violet it is.I wish I could do it and save you and your sisters the trouble of facing these dangers."

"Don't worry Jack dear.I now my sisters do not fear the Glandelinians, and some way we may be able to prove it."

"I hope so violet dear but I've about given up when I see the risk you're taken" was the weary answer.

Violet had carefully retained from Jack, her sisters and Jannie all thevlittle worries that had occured since the change between her and Jennie had been made. She said nothing about the capture of the three strangers, and the boy had been asleep at the time the place had been in possession of the two strangers.

"What's the use of worrying Jack"reflected violet to herself as she rode off with Tim.He has troubles of his own.And my poor sisters. They musn't hear of it untill it is necessary."

They delivered the two letters a little ahead of time and vivianla who said his troops was still progressing declared that her sisters would recieve the letters of response and that he wanted violet to bring them to Hindemine.

Then while Violet and Tim were with her sisters and waiting for the coming of the letters, a messenger rode in to say that general Vivian was progressing wonderfully but that the answers expected would be slightly delayed because of a slight accident.

"put general Vivianla wants you to wait."The courier told Violet"as there are some important letters to go to General Hindemine, and be forwarded from there on."

"All right I'll wait"giggled violet....

"It will mean a dangerous ride this time."suggested Hettie nervously.

"I understand that but it can't be helped.It's part of the game.Why should I be afraid with Tim."

"I wish Penrod was back.2" sighed Jennie."He's all the world to us."

"When did he say he was coming back?"

"He didn't say."said violet."But he said he would be gone, a very long time and wanted us to stay away from the battle fields if possible."

They had only waited five minutes when a man dressed in yellow came riding up.

"He rode up and stopped at the door calling for Princess Violet;
"she came out.
"These are the letters"he said hastily."For Heavens sake Princess try and get there on time.Be careful of the enemy scout patrols" and he handed to her two large red envelopes addressed to general Hindemine, and one to general Baldwin, and sealed with purple wax, and as she recieved them a strange feeling came over her.
"Here are those answers"she thought."These must be the important papers about the secret movements of the Glandelinian columns.nd I've got to carry them through now into a dangerous territory.Wish they hadn't come just at this time, but there's no help for it.I've got to take them through.May God and the angels protect me now."
She paused for a moment, with the important letters in her hand.
"What are those ?"asked Jennie herself.
"It's those letters "said violet.
"Are you really going to chance it"she said.
"Yes I'll have to now."
Tims has wished that she had made up her mind not to tell her sisters of the value and importance of the letters for fear that they would worry so exceedingly if they understood what their sister was carrying along the trail at this time. but fortunately she didn't.nd Tim had another plan.He realized that the enemy might secretly somehow or other know about the arival of the documents and may have every road and trail closely guarded.
"I'm afraid for her now"reflected Tim "They may try to get them away from her."
"No they won't if I can help it."iggled violet"You see we can read what your thoughts are.Good thing you thought that.Now I've read somewhere that the best way to throw off suspicion is to cause something important not to look important.That is what I am going to do."
she turned to Jennie who was standing close.
"Jennie dear"she said"get me a couple of newspapers will you dear."
Then to Tims surprise Violet fidditthefolded the red sealed letters up in one of the newspapers that Jennie brought to her, and put the package into her inside pocket, and put a pu pouch on her horses saddle and filled it with old envelopes so in case she was held up the enemy would take that and not search her.
"There she said "smiling sweetly at Tim."That I hope now won't cause you any worry for my safty.That doesn't appear as if it is anything of value.If I am held up the Glandelinian vandals will only carry away the pouch.I believe that is a pretty good scheme myself."
"I hope by God's help it works."said Tim soberly.
"You boyscouts are funny"said violet."You always worry about me and my sisters. If it is your own welfare then it's nothing.hy should we not chance this when so many soldiers are going to their deaths in this awful battle.If we cannot go near the battle we got to perform some duty.It is our countrys cause, and I and my dear sisters are responsible.Forget our perils im.We went through many and escaped and we'll do so now.your fears of my dangers are foolish.I bet if it comes to the point that we're surprised you'll be allowing yourself to be captured so I would I could get away.I can see that in your eyes."
Tim said nothing but turned red in the face.
Five minutes later they were on their way tward general Hindemines observation post.It was quite dar because of so much smoke in the sky from the far distant eastern Calverinian forest fires , but violet laughed and sang as she parted from her sisters and im more heavily armed followed her.He pretended that his own heart was light, though to tell thevtruth to tell the truth he was a bit apprehensive.
"Maybe those Glandelinian scout patrols don't know that the letters have arived and if they do, I hope violets trick will fool them"he decided to himself.
It was near a large bridge tward which the two were riding when they heard a sudden command;
"Halt"
"Go on violet I'll cover you, for God's sake go on."yelled im.You can bring me help.Go on please.pon't get captured for God's sake don't"
She hated to desert him however and would have remained but he shouted;
"Your own life and country's cause is more important than me.For god's sake get will the getting is good.I'll manage to escape somehow.----"then Tim found himself suddenly attacked as some one ride up alongside of him, and dealt him a blow on the head.F or a moment poor im was so overcome by dizziness, and a strong ill feeling, that he could do nothing whatever..Everything seemed black before his eyes, a blackness not of night but that of a fainting fit. The young boyscout l a leader reeled in his saddle, but by a most desperate effort he managed to retain his seat, while with equal desperation and by a prayer too he fought back the growing faintness that was overcoming him.
"Dear God help me I mustn't give in.I mustn't give in."he told himself fiercely, over and over again."I mustn't faint or give way.I won't, and I won't.I've got to help Violet protect those valuable letters, give her time to escape.God please if Thy will help me."

Then somehow it may have been an answer to the prayer, Tims head cleared. and to suddenly felt he was able to hold himself back from that terrible black void. He then straightened up in the saddle, and his vision was again normal.In the darkness of the smoky sky, through which the sun shone as if it were a blood red ball. he could see a dozen men, standing around him.These dozen were not mounted, though off to one side of the road, Tim could see as many dark forms which he could make out to be horses. Then he saw as he turned to the right in his saddle, a man behind him on a big horse.This man held a pistol butt in his hand, and Tim guessed it was this soldier who had hit him so hard on the head.All of the men wore gray uniforms and from what one of them carried, as a sort of standard he could tell he had ran into a Glandelinian scout patrol. However at his cry Violet had dashed away as fast as her horse would go She however had no intention of leaving him entirely but to go so far as only to avoid capture and then to watch what they would do at a safe distance and if they did not carry the lad away to come to his rescue later.If they carried him away she would follow and trail them even into the enemys lines to save him. But she was not to escape so easily without a little excitement however.
she too ran into a Glandelinian patrol further down the road..But she was not caught napping and besides she was armed with all the available weapons a cavarly man carries.A glandelinian cavarly man made a dash for her with sabre drawn but she drew forth her huge cavarly lance, and as the two clashed she jabbed the lance into the horses neck causing him to plunge upward. However the enemy had almost got the draw too, and she felt the swish of his long sabre as it nearly swept off her hat and cut off a good size piece of her violet ribbon.But the mans horse was mortally wounded, and fell throwing his rider headlong. As she dashed on two more Glandelinians made for, her but as her own horse reared upward, sh she disarmed the first with her lance, and pierced the other one through his stomach causing him to fall from his horse. The confusion of the conflict causedthe other Glandelinians to hesitate and before they could close in onher she had lanced two others, and got through the gap galloping down till she reached a reached a ravine and there went down pellmell and disappeared into the gla of its depths.
In the meantime Tim at first couldn't understand what had happened.
"What in the world t does this mean!"faltered the boy, though he could pretty well guess.
"Well you should understand what it means seeing us."was the answer shot back at him."We are a scout patrol and we want to find out why you wanted to go through here."
He tried to distinguish the men but could not.it was the mounta mounted man who had answered him and he was an officer probably a captian.
"An ambush eh!"demanded Tim his tone faltering in spite of his efforts to steady his voice.That this should come to him and Violet in spite of his watchfulness was was indeed a very bitter thing indeed.nd being detained by Glandelinian soldiery of all time, when Violet had been with him with the valuable letters expected by general Hindemine were in her possession too.He prayed fervently that she had succeeded in escaping.Tim gritted his teeth in anger.Then his hand suddenly moved tward his holster where he carried his weapons.
"No you don't boyscout"was the sudden and most feri fierce exclumantion of the man on the horse beside him, and with a sudden motion he caught hold of Tims hand and roughly pulled it away.
"Get his guns."the man directed."I'll hold him."
P one of the dismounted Glandelinian soldiers came up, and while the man on the big horse held im in a cruel grip, another of the soldiers brought out the revolvers which all boyscouts carry for protection.But it had afforded little of that in this instance.The young rider tried in vain to pierce through the situation,but fortunately he could ascertain the idt identy of those who were holding him up, for it was not so dark that he couldn't see their faces. They were Scoodlier Glandelinians.
"What do you want of me?"
"It's all right young feller"dema said one of the men."You'll soon find out?"
"What's the game anyway!"Tim demanded as the big man let go of hioc his wrist.
The fellow however retained one hand to the bridge bridle of the pony so that there was no chance for im to make a sudden spurt to escape/
"The game is we wanted what we thought you had with you."said one of the men.
"And you might as well have admitted that we were going to get it, if you had not caused that little girl with you to escape.She had it with her but she'll get caught as there's another patrol bigger than ours down the road a piece.You may be a pretty smart lad or at lenat believe you are, but I guess we've got you right now."
"No sir you've got me all wrong."im answered bitterly."And while you fellows were about it why didn't you bring a few more fellows along to help you capture two children.A dozen soldiers seem hardly enough to hold up one boyscout.Are you not afraid if she happens to come back to fight she'll do something to you."?

Tim spoke lightly--but also sarcastically.He was fighting for time for he really did realize that even if she did encounter a patrol down the road she being prepared could fight her way through.He also was trying to think of some good plan of escape for himself too. He even thought perhaps some christian scout patrol might come along to whom he could secretly signal to for help But just then there was as small a chance of that as there was of his being able to get away by his own efforts.

"I suppose you could have scared up about fourty more comrades."he went on."There are more scout patrols then yourselves.Or may you have another force back on the road, and another ahead here.

"Say young boyscout none of your fresh speech to us now."cried one of the soldiers fiercely."I won't stand it.You let our made that girl get away, and she had the letters.Our Country 's cause is as good as yours any day and we're going to win this battle, savy."

"Oh let's get it over with."declared another.

At these words a chill of fear such as he had not experienced before, seemed to flash over Timothy.Did the Glandelinian soldiery mean to harm him--put him to death perhaps as Glandelinians do in murdering child slaves and other children because he caused his companion to escape!Hevtried to be brave, but again came that faint feeling, and his head cruelly ached where the man had hit him with the butt of the pistol.

"Yes let's finish and get a move on."agreed the man on the horse."Here one of you take these pistols and his cartridge belt, and another hand me the ropes.I'll have him tied up in a jiffy."

Tim breathed more easily.He was only to be bound then, as the Glandelinian soldiers unusally did bind prisoners whom they aptured.

"Where did that little go to and who was she?"demanded one of the men as he obeyed.

"It don't do you no good to ask me and I'll bet you wouldn't dare touch her."

Tim cried inanswer."ou just leave that little girl alone."

So vehement was he, and so much energy did he put in his voice, that for the moment, the man was startled and drew back.

"What's the idea"He demanded."she was one of the Vivian Girls for I saw her."

"Well she is, and is protected by her brother Penrod."went on Tim trying to follow up the impression he had made."You are interfereing with him, and I don't need to tell you what sort of a danger that is.You won't have to deal with me, or other boyscouts, you will have to answer to him, and his troopers would be on your trail is less than two hours.If you did know where she went don't you care to touch that little girl."

For a moment the men did seem empressed by Tims sharp warning which was true too. Then the man on the horse laughed, and said;

"Oh quit your blabbing.Do you think we'd waste our time chasing after that girl now, whether we're afraid of that Penrod or not.We have not the time. We'll tie you up for we can't stay here too long."

"Say he has a pretty lively tongue."Observed the man who had stood at the rear of Tims horse."He gave me a start for a second or two.But it is true.If we meddle with that little girl the whole of Glandelinia won't save us from the anger of her dare devil brother."

"Forget it.We're not chasing after her. Yank his uniform coat off and come on."

Tim felt that it would be useless to protest further.Besides there was a growing feeling of illness and pain.The man removed his cartridge belt and also coat and laid them across the saddle of one of the dozen horses.

"Now then get off boyscout."ordered the man on the big horse.Get off and don't delay about it.We're in a hurry and we're done fooling.We won't even bring you along as we have no time for that, so you can thank us for it.but we'll tie you up nevertheless."

"What--- what--what are you going to do?"altered Tim.He was beginning to be afraid of what was to come.

"We are going to tie you up so terribly tight, that you won't get loose in a jiffy" was the answer he recie d recieved."You say or maybe we suspect that that little girl who escaped will bring a number of soldiers on our trail.Well maybe she won't be able to catch us if you can't get loose to give the alarm.We cannot brother marching you our prisoner though we should, so we're only going to tie you up."

"That won't prevent the alarm from being given"Tim said."When Violet gets to camp she'll bring down a searching party, and they'll find me."

"That's right sir"Tim heard one of the unmounted men say in a low voice."He's right about that.We ought to bring him alon along."

"Oh what of it!"impatiently demanded the man on the horse."Of course this thing is bound to be found out sooner or later for that girl escaped even the second patrol for I saw the fight. he's a plucky girl at that for she single handed arrested them. I hate christian children but when they're brave then I draw the line on f doing them unnecessary harm.If we bring this boy to camp the soldiers there will murder him.Nothing doing .We'll let him his liberty but we can gain time by tying him up with ropes.Now come on lad be lively.Get off or Iell pull you off, and I won't be gentle or easy about it either."

Tim felt it best to obey since as they were, nevertheless these Glandelinians though Scoundliers were not so bad, as he thought, they were more humane, so therefore he leaped from the saddle, and then with a sharp slap on the flank of the horse he cried to his pony;

"Go on Jack home."

The intelligent animal sprang forward, and before any of the men could catch him had darted off down the wide road in the direction of the christian section of the territory.

"Hey,hey get him."One of the men cried sharply.

"What's the use the horse's gone, and he's one of the fastest horses of the child scouts of the christians, we'd never catch him."said the mounted man."It was a sharp clever scheme, lad, but it won't do you any good.Tie him up."

Tim was handled roughly by the Glandelinians, and was soon so tightly bound that he felt he could never get loose without help. He had a mental picture of the shapes of the men, and the tone of their voices, so he might know them again if he ever saw or heard them.

"Lay him over there on one side of the road."Ordered the soldier who was the leader."Some one may be along before noon, and release you."he said to Tim, who did not answer."If they don't we'll send an anonymous message, telling where you can be found.We don't want to hurt you, neither did we of the girl I either, but we had to have that stuff she had, and this was the only way to get it but you enabled her to escape."the soldier went on.however nevertheless I do not begrudge you and admire bbbb

We may be able to capturing t capture those Glandelinians yet.But it may then be too late"Tim reflected."But what good will it do if they are captured for they didn't capture those letters for Violet succeeded in escaping thanks be to God. They did not succeed in getting the information they wanted.If they had it would have been too bad.But if violet really was captured and her plan only worked and those fellows don't open those bundles of papers or only seized the pocu p uch the letters may be safe yet.It was her best chance and I seen to it that she got it.I'm never happier when she outwits these Glandelinians. If I could only could get loose.I'm feeling badly numb already in my legs."

Again Tim struggle and squirmed but the ropes would not give an inch. Suddenly as the young boyscout leader was trying to work loose his bonds, he felt a sharp pain in his left hand, which was under him,behind his back, pressing on the earth..

"Oosh Heavenly ie days. Something sure cut me then and badly too."Tim exclaimed. "It must be some blade one of the men dropped.If I only could get at that thing and saw on a rope."

Carefully and slowly he felt along the ground no as not to cut himself again.His fingers touched something sharp, and he discovered it was a piece of glass.He believed it would be just as good as aknife though he believed he would probably u cut himself some more in trying to use it.But he was determined to get loose before his blood circulation was stopped, and therefore he managed to work himself down untill he had a firm grip on the big piece of glass under him---a grip that did not cut....

"ow I must figure this out and be careful."he mused.

"He realized that he was not able to hold the piece of glass in his fingers and saw away at the ropes around his wrists, for he could not bend his fingers either way far enough. He figured that if he could only succeed in getting the piece of glass somewhere between his feet, he might be able to bend them backwards far enough by lying on his face, so that he could saw the ropes in that way.He tried, but soon had to give it up.He also endeavored to do this by lying lying on his side but it was of no use..he only cut him self several times.Then in a flash it came to him.

"If I can only try and bury th v the glass in the ground to hold it."he said to himself. "If I could leave a sharp jagged edge sticking a little out I ought to be able to saw accross the bonds on my ropes around my wrist and cut through.I'll try a that and then rub the cords up and down against the glass.I'll do it."

"It was very hard and difficult work, and enough to try a persons patience, but nevertheless by lyingon his side, Tim managed after a fashion... The most difficult thing about it was that he had to do all this without being able to see what he was doing.Even daylight would not have helped him, for he could not see behind his back. However by using the glass as q sort of shovel, Tim managed to dig a hole in the oith. He then put the long piece of blue bottle glass in this upright, and tightly packed dirt all around it. His fingers came in contact with a small stone, and he therefore used this to tamp the soil(boil) and gravel around the glass knife, to hold it more firmly upright..While doing this he cut himself several times, but that did not stop him and he continued on with it, untill finally he was ready to make the attempt..2..2It was more than an hour after he first began his operations, and h he w was weary for he had to work in a crumped and most uncom uncomf ortable position. He rested a few minutes, and then started to saw te rope around his wrists up and down on the sharp piece of glass stuck upright in the ground.

Finally he felt the bonfs loosening slightly.Some of the rope strands wew cut were cut through.but it had to be done slowly and most carefully because t much because too much pressure would have overturned the queer knife.Tim understood he must be vert patient. He cut hi c his wrists more than once but the gashes were slight, and he thought the bleeding would soon stop.Again and ag i again on the jagged edge of the glass did he rub the cords but finally to his dismay it turned o ver. He groaned g oand for surely now he would hav to have to replace it and it would be another waste of timeBut just then he heard the sounds of an approaching horse. Was it an enemy or a friend.H He stretched his head to glance in that direction.It was Violet.

"I'm very sorry Tim that I didn't come back soone"she said."but to escape I raced too far.But I'll free you in a jiffy."

She dismounted from her horse and seizing her long knife she had his hands free in less than a minute.Tims heart beat high with hope now.He wanted to rise but Violet warned him to wait a few minutes to let the slackened circulation of blood take up its work..Too it was for her the work of an instant for violet to sever the ropes about his legs.But when Tim tried to stand up he nearly toppled over so wea was he, and so numb were his legs. They had gone to sleep from the luck of circulation in the blood..

"Lay down for a while"said violet."Until your circulation returns.I'll give your legs a good rubbing and that'll restore circulation soon."And she did as she said and therefore in a little while he was all right,; and could slowly and walk about."

"ow violet dear, the question is what's the best thing to do."

"Make for camp as quick as te can and give the alarm"violet answered.

"We surely have got to give th the alarm if my horse hasn't gotten there and given it already"said Tim Tim.How did you manage to escape Violet dear.":?

"I changed and fought my way through.It was easy for me to do so thanks to my dear Pa and his training"she answered with her customary sweet smile.

She wanted him to mount her horse and ride, but he refused under any conditions, declaring that she should ride, and that it would be better for him to walk. So down the lonely road they started.It was quite different for him to be travel ing on it this way than usually on his swift pony.But it was something to be free, and he believed he could get the numbness and stiffness out of hisleges by going on foot a ways, and then both he and violet could ride the same horse. He was free, and free sooner than the Glandelinians had any thought that he would be and thanks to god and violet.

"If we had our horses the two of us we could be able to catch up to them and trace which way they go.""said Tim.

"Ief If we do we better be careful as not to be seen."she answered.

"I'm surprised they didn't bring me to their camp."

"They couldn't said violet."They'd have to go through our own battle lines first and that is why they left you.I felt sure they would."

They both walked on for nearly an hour, when they heart heard the trot of a large number of horses some distance aheadof them.Both halted and listened intently.

"I wonder if those Glandelinian soldiers are coming again to make sure I'm still tied up, or if it's our friends?"said Tim.

"We cannot tell for sure "said violet."Not knowing who they are we cannot take a chance.We'llhide ourselves and the horses in the wood near by untill we see who thry are ."

Both these brave children were acquainted with every inch of the road.Near the spot where they were, was a large hole in the side of a wooded hill, which appeared to have been some sort of tunnel through the mountain.

"That's the place for us."Said violet.

A few strides brought them to it, and leading their horse they stepped in stepped in to await in concealment the passage of the onvoming horsemen. Some thing soft and yeilding came in contact with Tims foot.He started believing he mys must have stepped on some sleeping beast.But there was no outcry which would have followed in that case.

"It can't be dead leaves or violet's foot mused"mused the lad."I would have known by her cry.It didn't feel that way. hat----"

He to violets surprise stooped down and felt on the ground with his hands. He felt something soft, and as she said"what's you looking for imf" a thrill ran through him.

"P o military mail pouches, and a cartridge belt and a long rifle"he exclaimed to her in a hoarse whisper.

"Mail Pouches" Said violet also looking down.

"Yes. some of the Glandelinians may have robbed somebody before.Then they hid them here and I've found them.What luck."

Tim was so overjoyed at his queer and unexpected discovery, that for a moment he forgot all about the approaching horsemen from whom he and Violet had hidden themselves.Then there came a thought to him.

"Perhaps the pouches are plumpy empty Violet."

"I suppose so"she said."And if they are then the Glandelinians have removed all the letters and just threw the empty pouches in here."

"Yes"said Tim "and if it is so then I din't make a very good discovery after all..."

Once more he felt of the pouches in the darkness of the tunnel. He could tell that they were well filled filled,--almost the same as when they might have have been before the Glandelinians robbed the messengers of them.

"I don't believe they have opened them Violet dear."he exclaimed.

"I believe they must have been scared of something"said Violet,"and thrown them in here thin ing to come back for them when they had the chance."

"I have an ideashe said suddenly "I bet those must be the Glandelinians coming now."They're coming back to et get the pocu pouches and here we are. What shall we do.We c u couldn't hold the tunnel against them, and the others too my weapons and cartridge belt from me."

"What shall we do then?"cried Violet half nervously.

"There is only one answer to the question"said Tim"We must hide the mail and express matter we found in some other place."

He paused to listen.The galloppling no hoofbeats were nearer now, but it would still be some time before the riders would be opposite the old mountain tunnel. The wind wound in and out at this point, and while sounds came up plainly through the rarefied mountain air, and the distent battle roared as if it was a world of thunderstorms, bodies themselves could not travel so swiftly.

"That shall we do?"again demanded Violet clasping her hands."If we're found here we'll have to fight for our lives.."

"We have five minutes in which to do som t something."reasoned Tim."Let's get."

He caught up the mail pouches, one in either hand, though his cut fingers and wrist which she had bound c hurt him cruelly. But he gritted his teeth and continued and continued on, Violet following leading her horse. Both knew the ground well.

In the rear of the hill was a slope that extended to a deep patch of woods. Tim and violet would hide themselves and the mail in there. They both were too excited to notice wiether or not the locks on the bags had been tampered with. In fact they had no time to even glance at the bags indeed had no time for extended investigation. They Or rather Tim just placed the bags under his arms, and ran with them Violet following just as fast and leading the horse. That is they made as good time as possible under the circumstances. The ground was rough, and Tim himself was weak, and violet had trouble leading her horse forward as she ran. Tim himself Tim himself had suffered much that night. They both found a good hiding place down in between two big logs, and there he stuffed the mail bags covering them over with dried leaves. violet sat on the log behind a wide tree after hiding the horse.

Then Tim hurried back to the tunnel to get the express stuff. Fortunately that was light this trip, and he could easily carry the few small parcels that he found there. So Tim had no trouble in carrying the bags of express matter to their new hiding place. This done he and violet had only to watch to see who the horsemen really were. Tim worked quickly and when he had at last taken the last of the recovered stuff to the place between the two logs, he sat down beside Vio& Violet in such a position that both had a view of the road. It was getting lighter now for the heavens was thinning of the fire murk. There was a faint glow of the fire in the east and it was to said to be eight hundred miles away from Big Girlknool.

"Well I certainly put in a night of it." Tim thought. "If the little angel didn't come back I'd been tied up yet. And I may be in for more excitement if these are the Glendelinian robbers coming on the return. They may search dilligently for their stolen goods, and start a search all over the territory if they find it missing. but I don't believe they'll find us."

"Maybe they won't "said violet in a whisper.

"Won't what?" he asked.

"Won't find us "she giggled.

"Why, what the-----"

He was interrupted by the sound of the hoof beats coming very near. Tim and violet peered from their hiding place. They could hear voices now, but the sound was uncertain, though it did sound as if they were from children and not men. It would not do to call out. They must see who it was that were coming. Maybe they could be Glandelinian boy or girlscouts. Suddenly several girls rode into view. Tim himself counted their heads as they were outlined against the faintly glowing heavens of the east (not yeast) There were seven of them, just then and appeared appeared to be officers. More were coming. Unless these were Glandelinian child-scouts these must be members of a searching party looking for Tim and violet. Yet Tim or violet would take no chances. Glandelinian child scouts are fiercer than Glendelinian soldiery. And dreadfully treacherous. They must be certain.

"Hello Timothy Groveton. Princess Violet. Princess Violet. Princess Violet. Where are you!"

This was the cry that echoed on the dying distant glow. Now there was no doubt of it. Tim and violet, leaped to their feet.

"Here we are. "he cried "Be with you in a second. Send some one up to help me carry carry down the mail."

"Mail! where did you get mail."

"Somebody stole it. We found it. "he exclaimed. He was wildly excited but he managed managed to calm himself long enough to to light a match which he carried, and ignite a large piece of bark for he wanted to indicate the position to the rescuers. They saw the flare and someone cried it was a goilscout!

"All right Princess violet and Tim. Be with you in a minute. Are you all right?"

"It was the voice of Mildred Maxwell.

"Yes I'm allright and violet is safe too. We were held up by Glandelinians but I helped her to escape. "Tim explained. "I don't know who took these but I have mail and express stuff with me that was in a tunnel-- that is I hope I have it all. "he added.

"How did you escape "if violet went off at your request?"

"She came back and rescued me."

Another moment and he and violet, were surrounded by their friends. There were Mildred Maxwell, Jane Melfort, a number of boyscouts and ten girls and some cavalry escort and a dozen others.

"Are you all right Violet and Tim?" Mildred repeated. "Your sisters insisted that I come out and search for you."

"Yes we're all right now "said violet" but poor Tim has cut his hands and wrists badly trying to cut the bonds on a piece of glass. But does my sisters know what happened.?"

"Yes. Tims horse came galloping up to the cabin house, all lathered up, with you and Tim missing. Violet, your sisters knew right away what had happened.

They were too upset over it to do anything themselves, but Jannie notified notified me. So I gathered a a searching party at once. But what happened to you and and Violet?"

Tim told everything, down to his unexpected finiding of this mail, and their hiding from the fear their approach was the approach of the enemy.

"And so you got these and poor Princess violet fought her way through a column of the enemy and escaped. "Exclaimed Mildred. "God be praised."

"Yes, and I delivered the two letters to Hin demine, and came back here at full speed and found him tied up "said violet. "I cut his bonds loose."

"Well I call that good luc "said one of the other child scouts. Of course you did a heroic thing Tim to stay behind and get captured so Violet could escape. And you did a good thing too in finding these mail bags and pouches. It's sure good to get it all back."

"And did my pony go as far as the cabin of the Princesses?" demanded Tim with surprise. The horse meant much to him indeed.

"He's all right "said a boyscout. "Joice had Jannie care for him. He's a bit jaded that's all. Smart little horse that. If ever you want to sell him Tim;;"

"You need not to ask Henry "said Tim "for I don't. "But what about Violets sisters, Miss Mildred Maxwell. Are they worrying much."?

"Well some of course Tim. Jennie was almost prostrated. But I gave them some quieting medicine, and they'll soon hear the good news, and they'll be so proud of you Tim for what you did to Violet, that they'll tell PePenrod and you'll get a good high commission And Jack himself is much better now and is improving fast."

"We would not need to tell our dear good brother Penrod "laughed Violet. "We could of course, but we could give Tim the reward ourselves "and she smiled so sweetly at him that he blushed like a rose. The boy and girlscout leaders questioned Tim at length about the appearance of the Glandelinian soldiers who had made him prisoner, but he could not give a very clear clear description, though he said two of them wore beards, especially the man on a big horse."

"They're scout patrols no doubt "said Mildred "We can try and get a squadron of cavarly after them as soon as we get into camp camp. "declared another boy. "We'll show them they can't hold up one of our best boyscout officers and get away with it."

"They didn't get away with it--that's the joke "said violet. "Tim made me go and save myself risking capture himself. Those Glandellinians too probably feared pursuit or might have gotten an alarm so they only tied Tim and left him on the side of the road. Some other Glandelinian raiders no doubt dumed this stuff We found in the old tunnel and rode away intending to come back later. Only Tim got ahead of them. It was he who found the pouches. He was at first standing right on them."

"That is I hope I did. "Interposed the boyscout leader. "Maybe they have looted the bags, though they feel as full as when I brought them out from the tunnel."

"Well we can soon tell. "replied Mildred Maxwell. "It's getting light enough to see. The locks I see have been forced anyhow. so it is justified for us to open the pouches under these circumstances." Tim violet, and their rescuers gathered around while Mildred opened the bags. They were filled with letters papers and small parcels showing that the mail had not been removed.

"What were the Glandellinians after who held you and violet up."?

"There were two important letters for general Hindemine and Baldwin. "said Tim soberly. "It was the matter he was expecting I believe. I sayed behind to fool the enemy as Violet had them, and allowed her to get away. However she played a good scheme in case she would have been overhauled" Tim went on. At least she fixed up a scheme, and it sure did work. he put the stuff inside a roll of newspapers believing they wouldn't search there. But she escaped anyway."

"It was a good plan "said Mildred. "I get your idea. "But in this set of mail everything is not here. And some burn bundle of newspapers have been opened. Maybe these Glandellinians thought they would find something to eat inside."

Times and violets hearts fell at these words. If the glandelinians had stolen anything very important from the mail bags it must have been because they expected to find something hidden in them. And the only thing that were in the bags were parcels of valuable letters.

"They evidently opened the bags, searched through the contents, and after replacing the mail hid the pouches in the tunnel. "said Mildred, as she glanced through the mail matter.

"There' an envelope that is supposed to enclose very good and important mail matter, but it's been opened. "violet cried as she saw in the fast coming light, what had happened.

"Yes Yes it's been opened Mildred agreed. Her voice seemed strangely calm and collected.

"Are the important letters gone?" faltered Tim.

"Well surely they don't seem to be here. "went on the girlscout leader, while the others looked on somewhat at a loss what to make of the little scene. "No

There's nothing here in the envelope Tim and Violet.
For a moment there was silence in the group. Violet took the envelope and looked at the address.
"Well they're gone." Violet herself said.
Tim wondered at the peculiar manner in which the Princess spoke.
"I'm awfully sorry this happened Violet dear" said Tim brotherly. "I figured the thieves would pass that over as if of no importance. But we found the mail pouches too late. But why should they rob the mail. This isn't government mail and they couldn't therefore get any government information. I'm awfully sorry if this upsets our plans."
Tim thought of the suspicions of disaster that may come upon any sector of the christian lines. How it seemed who ever had had these mails had failed in a trust. It was no excuse to say it could not be helped. The valuable letter was gone and that alone mattered now. Tim saw that whoever the courier was who carried that was in danger of being disgraced.
"I'm awfully sorry Violet. Don't feel too badly about it." he said again.
"Oh you needn't be." Exclaimed Violet, and she was actually laughing. "You need not, be no body need be. I'm not sorry myself. I thought this scheme would work and it did."
"Needn't be! What--what---what do you mean?" gasped Tim
"Why I mean that those Glandelinians have chad their trouble for their pains. That letter I slipped in this mail bag this morning, for I recognize the bag now. That letter was only a dummy set, I sent it through the mail to throw these Glandelinian scout patrols off the scent. They contained information of absolutely no value and I wrote it in English. I thought the courier carrying this mail might be held up by glandelinian scout patrols Tim, though I could not tell when it would occur. So I slipped that dummy letter into the bag. It was the useless ducument written in English which the Glandelinian vandals captured. It's a joke on those Glandelinians all right." and again Violet laughed.
Tim groveton did not know what to do or say. He just stood there in the queer queer brownish light gazing at Violet as if he thought she had gone coocoo, and also hoping to be sure she understood the words of the Ordinary Princess. Finally he faltered.
"Do you really mean it Violet dear!"
"Mean it. Of course I do." was the decided answer. "It sure is a joke on those rebel soldiers. They have had all their trouble for their pains. They have gone off with a dummy set of letters plans and other false military information all written in English, that will take them a number of weeks to make out and digest. And they'll And they'll waste a lot of time trying to discover the movements of general Hansones troops, only it may be probably they go about twenty or so miles from the scene of battle I have tricked them so cleverly. Oh they sure will be fooled all right."
Tim experienced a sudden revulsion of feeling, which caused him to sway, and he seemed about to fall. Mildred Maxwell and Jane Melfort caught him. Mary glorinia was with them.
"Hold on this won't do." The girlscout nurse "Exclaimed."
"We must get him home. Why's he is hurt." She cried that is Jane did, as she saw the blood on the boys hands.
"It's just some cuts--from the glass I tried to saw the ropes on" the lad murmured murmured. Already his strength was coming back to him. He was so glad the Glandelinians had not obtained very valuable letters. It sure was a clever ruse on the part of Violet. He never understood however, had never heard how shrewd she or her sisters were. There was a stream not far from the place where Tim had recovered the mail bags, and he was given some water from this. His cuts were also washed and attended to by "Bright eyed Mary" who at this moment was not so jolly at Tims condition. Then on a spare horse that had been brought along Tim rode on the return with Violet and the child scouts to where Violet and her sisters had the cabin. There was considerable excitement in the camp when the calvacade calvada calvacade returned, and violet's sisters were the first ones out to greet them.
"Thank Our Blessed Lord you found him again Violet dear" said Joice. "Already preparations are under way for an organization of a squadron to hunt those g Glandelinians if necessary to scour the country. But violet found you. Oh we were of oh so worried about you Tim."
"You should have worried more for poor Violet than me" said Tim. "She was in danger too."
"Yes but she got away." Said Joice. "She caught your horse with her own and coming here, and sent me to deliver the letters to Hindemine while she then returned for you. She told us all about it, and went sent Mildred Maxwell and the squadron to rescue you. But Thanks be to God you have been found again and you in the bargain found the mail stolen by some other Glandelinian party. Did the Glandelinians get the decoy letters violet made out."?
"Yes they did." laughed violet. "So the only thing to do for our cavarly is to set out and if not capturing anybody at least clear the region near here of the Glandelinian scout patrols so our way will be clear for our operations."

"There is little chance that they would be apprehended" said Tim. "They had a start of several hours, and the way I seized them up those Glandelinians sure had very good horses, better even than ours."
"Besides too" said Mildred Maxwell "They will be sure to head for their own lines and report our own duties here. And those Glandelinians who had secured the decoy letters have no doubt headed for their generals. It will cause them therefore to go out of this neighborhood" she finished with a giggle. giggle.
"And for a good while I hope." said Jane Melfort."
"Oh yes but it'll only take them a few hours to find out they have been fooled" Mildred Maxwell said. "But then they may come back again and put a scheme over on us."
"If they do we will capture them." declared Jane Melfort. "Cracking her horse whip. As hudbean expected, the poss of soldiers that went out after the scout patrols of the enemy could get little trace of the Glandelinian soldiery. Even the others had disappeared after having cast aside the rifled mail pouches and other military mail. It developed however that a few pieces of military registered mail and some military express stuff had been captured in addition to the bogus letters. The stolen stuuf stuff was jewlery, and that there was not much chance that it would be recovered. so therefore to those to whom it had been sent for would have to stand the loss. But nevertheless when it was considered that nearly all the valuable mail had come through safe or rather had been recovered by Tim, and that through Tims sudden presence of mind Jennie had or Violet had escaped and delib delivered the two letters safely to general Hindemine every one declared it was an unusualy lucky outcome indeed, and that Tim was as great a boyscout as ever lived, and would sure make Penrod proud of him when he returned. Tims cuts did not ammount to much, and he wanted to ride with Angeline the next hour as she took Violet's place, but the doctor, Mary glorinia, and violet and her sisters would not let him. So a Substitute was provided furnishing his own horse for him said his own horse was too tired to be used without some rest. The beautiful pony had made the trip alone over the road, and it was his appearance at the cabin with Violet, and Violets hasty information that had led to the alarm. A good rest and the knowledge that nothing serious had happened, did much however to restore Tim, but nevertheless Violet, and her remaining sisters wanted Tim to remain with them to guard them from being suprised by glandelinian soldiery, for they sure worried exceedingly when Penrod was not with them. Tims cuts had been well bandaged so that he could use his hands to fire upon glandelinian attackers if any came.
"Maybe some of my boy and girlscouts will be able d sooner or later to trace some of those Glandelinians who held me up" he said as he sat on a couch near Violet and her sisters. "I feel sure I would recognize any of them for I saw their faces, and the man on the saddle had a big brown beard. His hair was of the same color, and though a glandelinian he was an unusually handsome man. I am going to be on the watch for him."
The excitement of the or caused by the Glandelinians holding up Tim and Violet, and the raging war of the battle did not however die away. In communities where battles are raging there is so much going on that interests cannot be shifted to any other events. Those who had gone after the Glandelinians could find no trace of them, all traces seemed to disapear after Tims escape or rescue by violet and of the discovery of the bags in the big tunnel. A number of men armed with hand grenades and tear gas bombs were commanded to be in hinding hiding at that place and to do so as long as the battle rages ready to give the alarm if the glandelinians returned to recover the pouches when they had hidden, but Jennie and her sisters declared that the Glandelinians were too wise to come again. Jack himself had said that he felt much better now now but nevertheless was improving too slowly to suit his desires, though of course he was far from well and would not be able to do any boyscout duties for a month as the doctor said. Of course violet and her si her sisters had to hear the whole story of the hold up by the glandelinians from Tim himself, for you must understand violet herself too was not with Tim when it occured though she had been able to see all proceedings even at the distance she went through her field glasses. Violet and her sisters not only really felt sorry and sympathized with him, and admired his bravery in showing such consideration for violet, but said they would pray that it would never happen to him again.
"It it was just terrible" Jennie herself exclaimed in her impulsive but girlish fusion. "I just can't bear to fancy you lying out there all alone in that dense smoky atmosphere atmosphere and tied up with ropes. Heaven be praised that Violet was able to rescue you."
"Well it was not what any person mat may call a good exp experience" But it was worth it as long as Violet got away." tim admitted.

"And to imagine your cutting yourself on that glass"Joice herself said, as she and her sisters looked dismally at his hands one of which Hettie was holding gently.

"Oh it might have been worse.If it had not been for your brave sister Violet, I might have lain there all day and all night for I failed in my effort, and in that case I probably would not have found the stolen mail bags,, for if I if I had not been freed untill the rescuers came I'd never have gone down the road with Violet."

"Perhaps it was all for the best."catherine admitted."

"I hope"said Daisy soberly and tearfully that nothing like that does happen again."

"Same here"said Tim."but I was glad Violet escaped."She had the letters and I didn't.What if I had had the letters."

"They would never have got the letters from me alive"said violet decidedly, and Tim saw she had fire in her eyes when she said that.

"How could you have prevented them from being captured.?"He demanded.

"I'd fight to the death."

"But surely with angels possessing you wouldn't need to go that far."said Tim."They'd protect you mirculously if it is necessary.They know your welfare more than you do."

"Who's going on the next trip for the courier work?"asked Tim.

"I might do it."declared Daisy.

"But Daisy you're so young I'm afraid;---"began Tim--

"Daisy laughed good heartily."

"You don't now us well enough"she said "Eh sisters,"

"Yes indeed"said violet."She's young but oh mamma I'd just love to see a Glandelinian patrol"tackle"her.Several did before, and on one occassion she brought every one into camp her prisoners. I'd laugh to see her capture the bunch that held you up tim Tim."

"For more than t two months eve y day during our time at Vivian Hickey Daisy rode over a trail alone back and forth every day three or four times daily and sometimes into the night carrying militaty mail to generals and officers, and captured those who interfered with her instead of being stopped. once"said violet. he is much smaller than any of us but Heavens the enemy knows her, and is afraid of her.Wait untill we all get used to Penrods drills and I'll bet were're never again disturbed by the Glandelinians. Then they'll be afraid of us, and stay away.you now Tim when ever we're persued thirty or fourty o Glandelinians are the least that comes after us. Twice our own number or even more wouldn't dare try it."

"Who is the best of every one of you Princesses in maping yourselves dreaded by the enemy.

"We were just telling you about her"said Jennie with her pretty smile."I don't believe you paid any attention at all except looking at me all the time."

"Oh yes I was"said Tim."But I asked that but for the reason that I've often heard ~~"that you are like a little wild tigress when you are aroused."~~ heard that you are like a little wild tigress when you are aroused."

"We are all that way, but look out for Daisy"said Jennie."

"I don't need to fear that"he said."I'll never let her catch me in a gray and uniform bowfor I hate the color.Nothing more was seen of the spies after I was rescued however, and as we hear of no news concerning the battle and as it is sounding louder I wonder if things are the same."

"It's hard to tell"said Hettie."whether or not those who had captured the bogus letters tri try to locate everything or not it is hard to tell."

" By this occurance "said Gary Catherine you have made yourself Tim dear a great favorite with everybody else in the camp, as well as with ourFather for by telegraph telgraph he heard all and he wrote us that you can be Penrods highest assistant to be in his place when he's absent.Tim then told of the strange incident of the bridge and violet said the aurthor of that remained a mystery, though she had her sisters had her suspicions.

"Things will soon take a turn"said Joice"and it will all be in our favor. Several slight attempts were made on the part of some Glandelinians to drive us out of here but they didn't succeed.Listen to the battle will you."she added I wonder how general Hansons army is getting along."I heard he is progressing magnifice magnificently.I wish we could go and see the battle."

"Better stay away as Penrod warned"said Tim."I hear the battle is being savagely contested, even though Hansons whole Christian line is carrying all before before it.I wish I could see it too but it is too dangerous.Listen to the firing will you."

"It sounds very exciting more lively than any battle than ever before"said Violet."I'm not to not afraid to go anyway, and neither are my sisters, are we girls!"

"" Oh'l't do it please"said Tim."

"Don't worry.Penrods advice is good, and we follow it.We're not tired of life."

The Angolinians and Abyssinkillians pressed pressed upon general Fritzpatricks left flank like an avalanch of demons.Fritzpatricks left was broken broken up, and he did all he could to prevent the Angolinians from penetrating any further, and though he managed to rally some of his badly demorilized columns they could not hold.A regular torrent of minnie balls spread the carnage still more wider. A b hundred thousand more cannons was brought up into place from the main battery of five hundred thousand cannon, and put into action against the Angolinians the guns pouring a vortible tempest of shells, mingled with grape and canister, but most of the volleys passed to thorear, the grape and canister alone ripping and tearing through the purple lines, and causing indescribable havoc.

The whole line of assailants threatening the right flank was now in a tumult ua tumultious uproar of ye, yells, curses, and outcries and now a more fearful sight presented itself, the noise of firing being redoubled beyond description!.Many more companies of Landelinians had been decimated and wiped out, and the survivors being hard pressed on both sides, general fritzs patricks saw that he must fall back or be caught in a vice.

The Glande linians from three directions were exposed to a most terrible scathing fire, and a perfect mass of dead and wounded were now exposed to view. Many organizations of Landelinians retired in order, others in panic. The Angolinians with wild frantic yells came rushing on, and swarmed upon a company of Glandelinians who still held in formation, there was a mixture of purple and grayvoats in pandemoniumbound a panic of Landelinians ensued.

"Give up your rifles you damn free Masons.The jig is up now. Glandelinian Reb surrender.We've got you now.''Was the cries of the Angolinians. A flood of purple engulfed thestraggling grayboats, and took a big toll of prisoners, but general Lowell gannon a Landelinian general seperated from his command, escaped by hiding under a load of burning wood endagering himself to exposure of fire.Bigger columns of Landelinians were advancing to gemral fritzpatricks aid, and now general Icknells division rushed upon a part of Hansons wildly onrushing lines, with incredible fury but was hurled back in disaster losing 3,800,000 in a few hours.

Hansons line however was halted by the fierce counter charge of the Glandelinians under Pemberton pederal, the left fell back to cover, but the rest continued to advance recklessly and opened a dreadful fire that roared like the native cannon itself and mangled whole scores of the Glandelinian columns. These Landelinians numbering 9,800,000 men had thought they held Hanson at bay, but big divisions of Abyssinkilians and the fe fierce Dondobians under Tony Phillipi, and Lucille Johnson, had been rushing instaneoniously with the most incredible violence upon the retreating Landelinians under fritzpatricks army leaders, patrick having been wounded, and came suddenly dashing headlong upon general Icknells left wing with the fury of an irrestible tidal wave, and they would surely have carried all before them on that instant without meeting any resistance at all, had they now faced a vortible wall of roaring cannon from the main batteries of Fritzpatricks army.

General Lucille Jack Gordons christian line met with complete annihilation as the full blast of the cannon fire smote them this time without a single shell and shrapnell missing a column, and general Greens divisions meeting a still more murderous fire from another section of the deadly Glandelinian batteries were melting away in multitudes, and general Lucille Johnston had to order a halt. But this slight check did not do any good for the Glandelinians. The Glandelinian general Icknell was severely wounded in this heaven forsaken damnation of horror, and enormous columns of Dondobians and Abbisnnians under general Joe Ras Warren had arived to the aid of the christians under Johnson, and Icknells lines struck a terrible blow, on two sides,, outflanked, and outnumbered staggered under the impact and seemed to crumble into fragments.Bicknell in trying to retain his command was dangerously wounded a second time, convention and Bob Handon taking command, only to go down mangled and bleeding with thirty other general officers, as hell and all its fury seemed to break loose along the christian lines with tenfold vehemence and thorear of musketry stunned all who hear d it.

Still with the fury of an avalanch the Angolinians continued to advance, and the whole extreme left grand division of general Icknells army wasxswept back, torn to piece, and then compelled to give way al together and was rolled up. Convention strove despite his wounds to rally the confused fragments, and was killed.

General Burns divisions of Angolinians perisce pierced Picknells main line along the extreme right, seven divisions of Picknells army was annihilated,, and the whole of Picknells army was now enveloped in a smoky whirlpool. The hodious yell of the Angolinians was hard heard far and wide and sounded worse than the ''Devil yell ''of the Glandolinians.Then Glandolinian reserves in the nd neighborhood were rushing against the Angolinians, but for ward to the right or left, they faced an inferno of smoke and fire from millions of crushing musketry, and thundering christian cannon which had been hastily brought up to help the christians to continue their advance. General Gardeners battalions on Hansons extreme right, worked their way through a nest of works and gullies, surrounded by thick woods, and where an inferno of rifle blasts ensued, and after hard fighting emerged at the base of Sacremento hill from which fortunately they recived no fire from the enemy. Sacremento hill would be theirs for only twenty min utes climbing.General Hanson thinking that general Pickl Picknells army was crushed, and thinking he was returning Picknells left completely, con centrated all his artillery upon Picknells stubborn lines and the fire of these guns threatened to committ a general massacre of Picknells Glando linian troops.

Hansons officers in advance already imagined that they saw their own guns from Sacremento Hills in filading Manloyscline. There was more than defiance and derision in the yell of the advancing christians under general Mc-Cantler and their yells were deafening and earsplitting. These were led in person by general Maurice Pontellio. The yelling note of the Angolinians was now of victory. On the summit of Sacremento Hill were a large number of orphan asylums and Child slave places but now used as fortifications by the enemy.

T3 The terrified Glandolinian children or boyscouts out on the watch saw the infuriated Angolinian columns coming like a perfect storm wave from the Sacremento plians which was dominated by a towring shell fire now from Manleys guns, and led by ten general of high rank, and the great hill was only occupied by the boyscouts who were to signal the dangers such they approach.

The Angolinians wanted to get possession of this hill before the Glandolinians knew it was unoccupied but were not to unfortunately. General Hairbreadth Harry had ascended to the summit of the hill to look over the extensive field of carnage, the excited boyscouts being revered by the soldier guards who accompained him. The general saw the smoky whirlpool in which general Meldon picknell was being overwhelmed, the cannon fire which was tr touring his lines unmercifully, and then suddenly he saw the flash of millions of bayonets from a big shelled christian force come straight from the location of Pig Girlknogl, straight across the wide Sacremento Plians straight for the hills. This Glandolinian general had read of the fury in the yell of all different kinds of a savages, and even dreams but could not comprehend the frightful yell of these advancing christians, and the tz tactical situation immediately flashed vividly in his mind as if drawn with lightning strokes.General Hairry Hairbreadth Harry saw that there was only one way to prevent picknells army from meeting destruction, and that there was only one way to save the whole Glandolinian army from destruct ion, or having its right hand back untill it was in the same position as Picknells(surrounded) and thay that was to save Sacremento Hill from capture Hairbreadth knew that he had no time to ask consent of Manley, neither time for anything but immediate action or all would be lost. He sprinted down from the crest with the headlong haste of a man going for the fire alarm box when his only house is on fire. Not far away Parrys divisions of Hendons corps were forming for a charge to relieve the pressure on general Picknells left.Warren reached Parry.

''For Santes sake take your troops to defend Sacremento Hills.''Gasped Hairbreadth Harry.The Angolinians are advancing to take it and it is not occupied by any troops.Those orphan asylums and mills on the summit w will make a strong position. If the enemy succeed Manleys whole line wit will be infiladed with three million christian cannon.''

Barry looking that way saw the immediate danger. No matter if Harry did not have the aurthority from Manley. No matter if Parry Barney had been ordered to go elsewhere.He understood the explanation in a flash and acted the next.

''General Vincent get your thirty brigades to charge up the other side of Sacremento Hill.''Screamed Barney.''We must save it from the Angelinians at any costs.''

Vincents brigades were at first advancing to relieve the pressure on Picknells left. But at Barneys frenzie order his column left faced to charge up hill. His fastest runners rushed up the sides of the hi go hill as fast as they could could closely followed by their comrades, and reached the goal just as the Angolinian skirmishers were arriving dangerously close to the summit.At the sight of the Glandolinians a deafening yell of rage and defiance sprang from the Angolinians, and they started to come on faster. There was not the slightest time to lose, for commands neither,, not even for drill formations, or to lie down and fire. It was a case of bayonet plying against bayonet ringing in steel on steel. Most of the soldiers who could swarmed into the buildings and started a heavy firing from every window and crack in the walls, coven from the rooftops. The Angolinians yelling like demons came on, and though the Glandolinians had sufficent numbers to get the crest of a spur that jutted out from the hill, they did not succeed in getting the whole crest as yet as a flood of Angolinians immediately engulfed them and there was a closing of the two lines with a wild tumult of hedious outcries and yells. Gusts of hissing bullets, spat tered against the rocks, and ricchetted between the advancing c ristian forces and the enemy, which were within a stones throw of each other at the left end of the main crest not having close here as yet.

In the meantime the purple line was heavily-reinforced.As heavy reserves swept from from Sacremento plians in front of Pig Girlknool Vincents men all behind the palin pallasades and in the houses, and in the open breastworks of the summit began to fire in general, and soon the crash and uproar that broke out between the two lines of bloody battle on the hill was more frightful than the scene of battle below, the large columns of Angolinians attacking with terrible and supreme ferocity.

The scene became immediately like a hell of fury, the smoke of musketry from the orphan asylums and child slave mills making the buildings appear to be all on fire, while the smoke from the defenders of the breastworks was a long perfect curtian. Vincents center seemed in danger of annihilation, and now the whole crest of the hill was hidden in wreaths of smoke as Angolinians flinging torches set fire to trees and the houses. The Angolinians under general Arenburg was attacking with the greatest incredible fury, and general Vincents Glandolinian brigades were being terribly reduced by their wholesale losses.Yet Vincents nine million survivors held the crest stubbornly for an hour, but it seemed as if they would soon have to give way as the factirces and orphan asylums were in full blaze, setging all the trees on fire, and driving the defenders to better shelter. The advancing columns of Angolinians along general vincents center was rushing up the sides with a fury that was beyond all opposition as it seemed, and along this point the christians pierced the enemys lines and drove the Glandolinians back back in confusion.

Vincent seeing himself overwhelmed sent a frntic appeal for aid.About ten minutes passed, then general Barney answered his call.Six thousand six hundred cannon of heavy calibre and machine guns were dragged up in the mean time, and these soon broke into action at close range seeming about to shake down the very hill from the concussion of the frequent and frantic spasmodic disc harges.

Gathling guns also arived and the assailants received a most tremendous storm of shells and canister which mowed them down in militudes. The carnage now was fearful to behold. But nevertheless the Angolinians still persisted in their attempts to capture the hill and it was a literal tug of hellish war, and the two opposing lines surged back and forth ten times amid a tumult of yells that was enough to awake the dead and heard f far above the din of firing, and it did seem as if there was a continual discharge of about 11,000,000 muskets, and thousands of artillery, the one continious clamor being simply deafening for the distance of thirty miles.

General Lucille johnson fell severely wounded, and was taken prisoner by the enemy. At this moment when this soothin soothing inferno of wars hellish horror seemed to t be at its worse now general Hannon O-Rourks two divisions of Germurrians arived and like the roar of a million cannon broke the simultaneous volley along the christian line as these fresh forces joined in the fray. Tow quarters of these Glandolinians columns dropped into windrows of dead and wounded.At this time vincents line was being bent backwards by the impact of the christian assailants, and all the child slave mills and orphan asylums wr were now infernoes of fire the flames leap ing hundreds of feet into the air. O Rourks Glandolinians or the survivors again rushed upon the christians with the fury of a wild mob of reckless avalanch of savages, and though they lost three quarters of their three millin million men the Glandolinians finally drove the Angolinians at this portion back and even down getting actual possession of the crest most de desired.

Regardless od of danger Clark stood up as he directed the efforts of his men,,.However the Angolinian sharpshooters in the totrees and in all the high rocks were looking for just such targets. It was their business to kill glandolinian officers [illegible] Glandolinian sharpshooters to kill Angolinian officers, and they turned their attention from potting the gunners [illegible] position, in order to kill Clark.... His men were a little dismayed when they saw him fall, and no wonder their ranks were being riddled.....

Vincent rallied them as the fierce Angolinians regat hered their divisions and made another charge with redoubled velocity vehemence and violence. This time the Angolinians redoubled their exertions as they advanced though the roar of the Glandolinian fire was enough to tear the earth to pieces. The assailants went down in many thousands, but the survivors white hot with fofury and feocity, rushed up to the very summit with a fierce and inconceivable desperation, and general Francis hurling his three hundred Glandolinians against Halos charging division of Angolinians was repulsed with the loss of three quarters of his division of men.

The carnage had increased with redoubled fury, the large divisions in purple rushing upon the solid gray line, though their columns soon seemed to dissolve by tens. The battle increased in fury. But the Angolinians now agi again advancing with indescribable fury were forcing their way over the crest though one whole line twenty thousand strong, and which we were three miles long melted gradually away as if shot down in execution. Jennings having led these christian troops, ordered them to fall back, and general joice Hinderson having fallen wounded, these Angolinians gave way in good order and very slowly. Vincent of the enemys side was killed by the Angolinian sharpshooters, who also mortally wounded the Glandolinian general Antone who was commanding the thundering Marian Batteries. General Francis Warren Kerrigan of the Glandolinians leaned over to take Antones last message and fell dead across his body. But now rallying Vincents men were in fierce reaction from their first depression over the loss of their leaders.

The Angolinian assailants reinforced by general Brandon Jameson were again resuming their fierce and stubborn attack with all their fury once more and Vincents lines was also soon swept and torn to pieces by the christian fire, the struggle again raging in full fury.

The Glandolinians however had a position of the greatest advantage. They were protected by great walls of rocks and trees, which the Angolinians had to climb exposing themselves at murderously close range and they went down like grain before the thrashing machine. Th wicked glandolinians seemed to have the confidence that comes with seeing the ribbon on the rope in hells tug of war drawing over to their side. So fierce was the battle for the possession of Sacremento Hill now that both sde sides seemed about to annihilate each other. Whole columns of men on both sides disolved as the great firing increased with redoubled fury, the Angolinian survivors continuing the attack with the ferocity of a whole hell full of deer demons aiding as it were with them and not the enemy. The Angolinians in this attack met a veritible tempest of roaring shells, and hissing canister, the heaviest cannons of the Glandolinians belching broad sides at every discharge. The struggle for the possession of the Sacremento Hills was in full sway.

The main portions of these enormous columns of Angolinians con tinually met a most terrible fire in assaulting Vincents centeral line but inspired by their leaders the Angolinians again redoubled their exertions, and now again threatened to overwhelm Vincents men but as the christian general Kornell fell mortally wounded, the Angolinians again fell back half way down the slope. It seemed that they were beaten.

BUT NOT YET.

The frightful columns of Angolinians under general Walter Jennings himself and Handeline resumed the attack. They knew where the line of least resistance were or was, and they followed this, pressing on between the Sacremento and Chamberlane Hills to make another charge in flank.

"Will they never know when they are licked!" Groaned Harry.

His lines poured a terrific fire down upon the assailants who were now half surrounding the Glandolinian forces. Vincents men strove with all their utmost fury to drive back this new attack. Shells shrapnell, and grapeshot were now hurled upon the flankers, which though committed terrible havoc failed to check them. The firing was so loud that the very heavens seemed to be bursting, and this terrible firing increased, and continued to increas increase as more men went into action. The Angolinians continued the attack , and several of the Glandolinian generals began to signal for help.

The awful screeching mobs of purple coats rushed like a cyclone of human being beings through the vally valley and began to gain the rear of Sacremento Hill which was dominated by the Glandolinian guns. At last general Chamberlane saw the signal for help, and ordered his men forward.

Rushing on with the fury of savages they crushed down upon the Angolinian hords who was being mowed down by the score of thousands, and they now began to give way, but delivering a withering storm of fire that tore the advancing advancing new gray lines asunder and to fragments: But Chamberlanes men added by other divisions coming up behind, made a roaring charge amid the dreadful carnage, capturing many prisoners and it was reported that Jennings and Handeline were among the wounded. Thousands upon thousands of Glandolinians fell riddled by bullets, but the survivors swept the massive columns of christians from the side of the hil hill fairly paving the ground with the dead and wounded purplecoats and also the sides of the hills. On rushed the Glandolinians carrying before them whole divisions, though a brigade of over thirty thousand men had fallen again. The Glandolinian regiments had been annihilated, ten thousand infantry companies were cut to fragments and ten co panies were wiped out. Hundreds of ranks had been list literally mowed down by the scathing fire of the christians. The Angolinians almost without disorder retreated, Chamberlanes men now numbering only three hundred thousand, and soon had been reduced to only ninty thousand, but the remainder managed to clear the valley and with the last of their cartidges drive the attack back to its lair in Sacremento Plians were the Angolinians held against three bayonet charges. Sacramento hill was indeed saved but the Glandolinians in don defending it had been so sadly depleted in their losses that the Glandolinian army was not saved if the Angolinians captured the G'a Chamberlanes part of the Sacremento Ridge, for here the christians were still attacking. With even this part of Sacremento Hill in their possession they would bend the whole of Hanleys line so far that Hanleys army would have to be retreating or suffer destruction. The foolish Glandolinians had had all morning and all the other day before to intrench in this rocky wooded height which there had been such danger of the Angolinians securing for a single and victorious charge, and they had foolishly and recklessly left it unoccupied untill only by means of the most desperate fighting had they already succeeded in driving the christian assailants from a portion of the ridge.

At Nine Thirty II,789,999 men under Caldwell made the fiercest assault of the whole struggle along this part of the battle storm, and upon this point of Sacremento Hill. A long line of the foe at the base of this part of the hill became panic stricken at this furious onrush of the Angolinians, who charged into the woods, and into the brush, and among the boulders. Many of the Glandolinians trod upon the dead and wounded of their own comrades in their haste to get away, trampling all of them underfoot. Volumes of horrible outcries, filled the air, mingled with yells of range pain and despair, and terror. Cannon fire of the greatest intensity and violence broke out from the summit of this part of Sacremento Hill was which was becoming more incessant, filling the air with a most awe inspiring uproar.

Ruffled rourings of musket volleys also broke out, and open spaces were swept by a rain of shells, bullets, and canister, protected spaces for the christians were difficult to ascend. Thousands of saplings and palm trees were cut in two by the hail of minnie balls, trees were peppered to hickory broom fashion by the deadly hurricane storm of bullets and canister and lacerated by the bursting shells, while at close quarters more terrible gusts of canister mas mashed and mangled whole masses of Angolinian soldiers that got in the way. General Burns Angolinians were the first to reach the summit, consisting of one thousand immense regiments, but a thousand gaps were torn in their lines, and their impetious advance was checked. General Burns fell severely wounded, and his columns reduced to mere fragments retreated under a rain of bullets.

General Pages Angelinians advanced up another part of the hill, a rush here, a rush there, from the cover of rocks, and trees slipping in the blood of their fallen comrades, advancing with the fero city and cunning of demons. Then the three hundred and fifteen thoud thousand Glandelinian guns let loose their hell in consert, and out of a vast irredescent cloud of smoke thirty miles long went the storm of murderous shells and canister. Among the christian lines mas massive forces of gray coats swarmed into view, and crashing down were driven back only to storm with a withering fire, but on came the Angelinians though their colum columns were ploughed through and through by the merciless artillery fire which kept up an unceasing uproar.....

As hundreds after hundreds of cassions of the Glandelinians blu blew up, and the air was torn by mighty earthripping explosions, and also one cannon after anotherng another bursting from being overheated the christian yell broke forth in exultation all along the line of the great charge. The Angelinians advanced like a monsyerous tumultious screaming wave, or like a regular multitude rushing to their deaths. The Angelinians reached the summit, and hand to hand over the breastworks that they leaped in a perfect angry surge of leveled muskets and piercing bayonets and pikes. Glandelinin gunners were surrounded, and fought with handpikes, ramrods, pieces of large branches of trees, stones and rocks, rammer staves and even with buckets, and knives. Now the Glandelinian officers here witnessing a sea of pomder smoke begin began to signal for help. Johnson Hancocks was still on the watch and as he could spare Care Cooks brigades of ninth corps, he ordered them on to the help of the hard pressed on Sacremento Hill.
They had not far to go. Just as Chamberlane turned the tide, at the flank of Sacremento Hill, Cooks Bridgaes t turned it at this section of the summit. The Angelinians who went into action for the possession of this ridge with 36,700,000 men had now only (,876,666 remaining.They retreated but the Angelinians did not fall back at every ; point. They had not failed altogether. They had gained a lodge ent on the Castoria section of Sacremento hill where four four hours a worse dram of horror had proceed ed among rocks and trees, and slowly and stubbornly the Glandelinians here had to yeild as reinforcements drawn from Hansons interior line accumulated their force against these Glandelinians in most overwhelming numbers.Hanson had not failed to lick Picknell, but he had failed to capture the general portion of Sacremento Hill. He had to withdraw most of the forces and await for another chance to try at another point.All thisxsection of the battle had raged around the region of Little and Big Girlknool simultane ously while the first day of the battle had raged only around Lill Little Girlknool. Though there wasnow a lull in the tremendous fighting smoke still enveloped the groaning wounded,, the voiceless dead, and the blackening blood clots in woods, hills and fields or plains. General Vivian himself had I9,II5,000 down with Hansons combined losses to put to it and Manley had about 4I,000,000 down, while the total number wn engaged for the first day and this morning part of the battle on the christian side was about 9I,000,000, and 8I,000,000 for the enemy.

CHAPTER ~~THIRTY-TWO~~ 15

ANOTHER DRAMA OF HORROR.....

General Hanson and Vivian however were not discouraged with their first severe and bloody repulse. He strengthened the christian troops on the part of Sacremento called Catroria Hill and gave orders that it should be held at all hazrads untill further assaults could be made upon Sacregento Ridge. At just about quarter to One nearly-three hundred thousand Glandelinian cannons concentrated on the East rin section of Sacremento Hills and along this whole line of artillery there broke out a most frightful roar, which shook the whole battlefield and rig t right among the Angelinians at this part of the Sacremento Hill p poured a terrific tempest of shells and shrapnell, and streams of solid shot followed by the most heartrending carnage. Torrents of blinding canister was added to the terrific hail of destruction and the Angelinians went down in the most frightful numbers. Hundreds of horses were dreadfully torn, and as most of the captured guns were badly disabled the Angelinians could not answer, and none of their own could come up in time. The rain of shot and shell from the Glandelinian batteries became fearful. The concussion of the artillery fire shook the very hills like an earthquake, and the Angelinians striving in vain to answer were decsiminated in columns. The christian generals were frenzy stricken and trie tried themselves to have some cannon ordered up to the hill, and even to get some of the disabled cannon into action, but the rain of shells, shrapnell and solid shot poured among them fast and furious, and they were forced to retreat for safty.

This was a very unpleasant season or situation for the armies led by th the two Monarchs called generals because of the athhhthey uniforms they were. Heaven wasn't looking for [illegible] as if disaster threatened his brothet brother more than himself. So much too was the vapour and smoke of the distant forest fires that the sun seemed to have forgotten how to shine, and the whole christian line seemed to be fighting a battle of tremendous and disasterous furty to both sides, in an infernal sort of region..
Joice soon heard the sound of footsteps of a horse coming on a swift gallop and was surprised to see Angeline riding up as if she really was scared out of her wits.
"What's the matter Angeline dear"Demanded Violet as she came in all sweaty and covered with dust.
"Powe's Fat ens army"she as ed in return wiping the dust off her face with a rag she dampened in a pail of water."Is he in danger much with all the trouble that Our Uncle had suffered.The enemy had revealed on him and everybody it seems is retreating.We may have to move as the battle may come up this way."
"Up this way.athey said, and everybody rose to their feet. "Is the enemy winning very much with all the successes we have had."!
"Yes The enemys getting pretty victorious Sisters."she said nervously.
"Too out then for the Big Girlknool Brick Road there."said Tim."The Christo ian line there isn't any too strong, and it may go out, with any high pressure of a fierce Glandelinian attack."
"Oh I'm not worrying about that Tim dear.They've strengthened it with rein forcement within the last three hours, and I guess it will hold. Still the attac counter attack of the enemy is extremely severe near the Sacramento Hills and very progressive. Something has reversed the whole situation.There's some talk of general Vivianis army not holding."
"Is that to"Gasped Joice, while her sisters turned white"That will be bad for us.If that happen's we'll have to get out of here. And poor Jack. Well if he doesn't hold we'll be seeing a disaster."
"That's what we will.but it may hold still it stops raging."
"See here"said Violet seriously. "This is too serious to be overlooked."We'll WE will make an expemtion as long as you can ride your horse Tim.You And Angeline go and scout as near to the battle line in that location as you can without getting into danger.If anything happens ride to us like fury and warn us."
"We will"said Tim.
Vivianias army before had been the best for succeeding against the enemy and was in position on the Big Girlknool road now having driven the stubborn enemy that far, and was holding him desperately across the Northeast Section of the Ponto River territory where the battle was a raging hell. Enough soldiers on both sides here had fallen to shock heaven itself. General Richfields divisions branched off from that direction and was already being stormedby a massive column of Glandelinian soldiers with the most frightful fury ever seen in battle before. The two children were on their swift trip tward the vinicity of the Big Girlknool Road, and as they came nearer they could hear the soun sound of unusally heavy firing, and it was about half an hour when they reached the point where general Richfields divisions branched off from the North Bend of the Ponto River. and at the sight that met their eyes Tim exclaimed;
"Say this is certainly a desperate Glandelinian assault.I wonder if the Christian troops at the Dam is holding.It is a frightful battle,"
"It has been raging all the time."said Angeline."ow it seems to be thereverse"
"I,m going to take a run down there."Tim decided.It won't take me tenminutes Angeline dear, and we can easily make that up can't you Angeline."
"I'm afraid to have you leave me alone"she said.
"Are you game to go with me that close."
"I'm not afraid as long as I am not alone"she answered.
"We have time anyway."Tim went on."We will just go ahead and give the scene a scene scem scene a glance over.The enemy seem about to win now."
They both turned off the trail, and was soon approaching the battle line. Before they reached it they could hear the sullen roar of a wilder storm of the battle in the direction of Emperor Vivians lines, and the hills beyond seemed to be in volcanic eruption. And when they had a view of the raging flood of gray against Vivianis army they saw at once the enemys assault had approached the extreme danger point.. Tim and Angeline looked critically at the battle line through their field glasses.Being experienced with battle fields by now Angeline and her sisters knew something about the ways battle lines holds or gives when or when and how, and about the nature and movements of Glandelinian wave assaults..
"I don't believe Vivianias's line of battle will last."Tim argued.
"I don't believe so"either whimpered Angeline."There's too much pressure of the Glandelinian assault upon it.."
Even as she spoke a small portion of the christian line, near its juncture of the main line began to give way, and a large Glandelinian column with exultant yells and cries began to rush forward and form in a way as if they intended to flank the whole christian line.

"That's the start"Cried Tim."The whole line will go in less than half an hour if reinforcements don't come.Angeline you have got to ride down and warn your sisters of the impending danger. I've got to ride elsewhere and warn general Hindemine otherwise he too will be swept away.I've got to ride and warn him and his generals. Listen to the enemy.They sound like a horde of demons."

There was nothing else to do.Angeline raced down the road toward home, while Tim called to his faithful pony and guided him into the trail that led from Richfields embattle divisions toward where general Hindemine also had his lines in action. If Richfields lines suddenly gave way, and the Glandelinian columns cut their way cut their way through, and were suddenly to be victorious through the devastation of these christian divisions, part of Hindemines own line of battle would be wiped out. If he or his generals were warned in time the general could withdraw his divisions to the hills on either side to make a bold and determined defense."

"Come on boy"Called Tim to his pony."It's a ride for the safty of the christian lines all right."

Down the rocky slope toward the direction of general Hindemines army rode Tim praying desperately that Angeline will safely reach her destination, and that he could save Hindemine from disaster.He then thought rapidly.If he could beat the flood of advancing Glandelinian soldiery there would be time to warn the christian generals so that Hindemine could either save himself if or if possible save Richfields division from disaster and recover the lost ground.If that would be so violet and her sisters would not need to leave their position. There were quite a number to Hindemines army.

"I'll arouse the first christian officer of his command that I come to"Tim reflected ,"And then they can warn the others untill the news reaches general Hindemine. "If they too are worsted I don't imagine they'll have time to save their heavy artillery. Too bad if it happens.But general Vivianias army is certainly going to give way-----and how."He tried to listen to see ascertain if he could hear the roar of battle approaching his way that would indicade that general Vivianias army had already already given way, but all he could catch was the confused sound of battle over a very great extent.Tims course was also along a small stream and he hoped to get away from the turbulent noise of the battle, but now there was so much sound that the hills and distant mountains and the valleys seemed to echoe it in all sorts of clamor.

"With violet carrying the messages Hindemine ought to have seen the danger and either prepared for the enemy or gotten out of the territory before this,"reflected Tim"but I suppose he didn't, or maybe this wasn't seen in time for Violet or Angeline to warn him.Well I'll do my best to save him and---Heaven what a crash of thunder over there.What in the world happoned.My Gosh's its a big explosion. I'm spotted by Glandelinian long range artillery men and they'll shelling me.Here's where I get going"as another crash reverberated into his ears and a cloud of debris enveloped him but he wasn't hurt On gallopped the faithful pony faster and faster. Tim wished he could put the letters he was carrying somewhere untill he could conclude his ride for Hindemines safty but it would not be safe to leave it anwhere anywhere. And now a column of Glandelinians on horse was persuing him. Fortunately he was armed with his long trusty lance and also with good pistols, a strong long sabre and he carried two pouches on his saw saddle but they were loaded with grenades.

"Halt you little devil."cried the leader of the Glandelinians who were catching up with him."Halt I say or I'll shoot you down."

Tim was the sort of a boy who would rather let one of his friends the Vivian Girl Princess slap him in the face for no wrong at all rather than be called a devil.He grasped his pockpouch and drew forth a bomb.He flung it right into the midst of the persuers, and he was deafening deafened and shoc by the awful crash. The Glandelinians who survived were thrown into confusion and panic for they had not expected that Tim was a scout as he didn't have his uniform coat on, and wore a civilian trousers. However the survivors came upto him before he could hurl another, and tried to slash him with sabres, but his lance was at the ready, and he managed to spear his way through them with perfect ease.The glandelinians were frightened at his appalling fury. Their captian rode alongside of Tim with savre drawn but couldn't get close enough to him and was unsworded by the boy wounding him in the shoulder with his lance.The captian tried to shoot the lad but the shot missed its aim and struck a tree. The Glandelinians at first called him a devil for insult, now they really believed he either was one or was possessed by one, for though there were twenty of them they couldn't get the best of the boyscout who fought his way through them, inflicting bad wounds to nearly all of them.The rest fled from the savage boyscout in panic, and one would have surrendered but Tim wouldn't accept no surrender giving no quarter, and the soldier considered himself lucky to get away.

Tim didn't persue the frightened Glandelinians but continued desperately on his way.

248.... ....."""

Some of the Glandelinian aimed their rifles at him but their shots went wild. To Tim now since he was delayed it seemed that he would never reach the christian army under Hindemine which had been advancing to reinforce Hansonia, nor see the first sign of it.He hoped to be able to see flashes of rifles. Though he believed that there would be some scrambling if he had to get to them a little too late...

"There will be a chance for me to do something if I can only meet a portion of Hindemines scout patrols"mused Tim."And I hope some of them are out watching for any movements of the enemy."

"The distant battle was a perfect uproar now, and the lad realized that with all this additional uproar of sound, and what pressure of assaults that Vivian Vivianias would recieve from the main Glandelinian armies under Feldegarbe Vivienia's and Hindemines too would be further endangered.There came the crash of another terrific shell explosion, and from the concussion the pony slipped and almost fell as he went around a bad turn, where the trail was covered with stones of various sizes.

"Look out there now lie""Tim cautioned as another terrific crash vibrated in the sky nearly overhead and as Tim pulled up the faithful animal."This is no time to fall."

But the horse recovered himself, and galloped on. Suddenly a long column of christian soldiers on the swift march flashed into view, then another, then a still bigger one.

"It's Hindemines army."exclaimed Tim."The van guard of it.Now for the alam alarm."

He rode up to the foremost group of officers he saw there glad in his heart that he had come in time.

"Get your divisions into position quick for Heavens sake."Tim Cried, "Get up on high rise of ground.Get up and send the alarm to general Hindemine."

There was a moments silence from or among the officers as they looked at each other startled;broken only by the sound of battle.

"Hurry, hurry"Tim Cried desperately.

"What in the world is it.What's the matter boy scout."!

"Vivianias army is giving way.If he does the enemy will sweep upon your line here like a tidal wave.You're in the path of the enemy. Vivianias army may have gone now.There'll be the biggest sort of a battle disaster on these grounds in half an hour if not sooner.Get your armies into a strong position.Take to that hill."

"What's that?"Inquired a high commissioned officer riding forward."By Gosh it's Timothy Groveton.What is the matter Tim?"

"It was Prince James Vivian."

Tim repeated his warning.The great general understood now.He rode swiftly to his officers.

"Come on Tim Handy and you others.Get your commands onto the highest and steepest parts of the hills.We'll cut that victorious Glandelinian army to pieces."He yelled brandishing his sabre."Get the batteries into position.Hustle into what positions you can. Vivienia's army may go out of position but Mr Glandelinia won't pass here.Quick.Now into pos positions."

"Warn general Hindemine if he's near you."Tim cried as he turned to go in another direction."I'm going to ride on down and give the alarm. "I'll signal to Hindemine"the Prince answered."You've probably saved the whole christian army from dire disaster."

On Tim rode going past a few christian officers.The lad came upon other generals watching the battle along Hansonias front and he repeated his warning. Some of the generals he had a difficulty in arousing to the situation, but the news by signal stations soon spread and in a short time a great column of troops were on hills ready for the foe and frowin frowning teeming batteries topped the summits.

Every officer was on the alert and looking through field glasses in the direction of Vivienia's command. As Tim aroused another column of advancing troops he heard far off a sound that is usully heard when a whole army of troops are retreating in confusion.

"There goes Vivienia's"Cried Tim."Now following his retreat the flood of victorious Glandelinians will come."

But Hindemine and all others had been warned in time.They had time however to place their most reliable batteries of cannon into position, and every one awaited the enemy who would follow the retreating army. The noise heard by Tim was the persuing enemy not the recoiling christian troops, for they were fighting bravely as they retreated and emitted no yells or any sound. but the enemy reckoned without his host. The christian army under Vivienia had retreated in an oblique formation, giving room for James Vivian to act.He sneered as he saw the enemys on rush. He waited just for about fifteen minutes, then he fired a pistol into the air. Tim from a safe spot soon saw a dreadful scene.The christian batteries let go with a terrifying crash and the enemy recieved a barrage of shell fire that tore their waves to splintered pieces at that one discharge.Then with an uproar of yells that came as from a thousand tornadoes the christian columns on the slopes swept downward colliding with the enemy and causing the greatest confusion.The enemy resisted for a time desperately but james vivians assault carried everything before it, sweeping away all the Glandelinian columns in its path within half an hours time.There was frightful loss of life among the Glandelinians, and therefore a great disaster averted or prevented to this portion of the christian line thanks to the brave boyscout.

Tim wished he could have stayed and give help to the christian generals but because of the battle raging so fiercely everywhere and for the sake of the good Princesses he had other duties to perform.And anyway the remaining christian armies on higher ground, who had seen the crushing charge made by james vivians divisions came to the relief of the christian counter assailants and made the success of the Prince a record breaker for that individual. Therefore the glandelinian sucess did not last very long for general vivianias division also recieved a large number of slain reinforcements from general Childs and that goodly line of christian troops were finally rallied, and made a counter charge on its own and in that short time of a few hours they did great damage to the Glandelinian columns, and reduced their great numbers to a frightfully small remaining ~~fiet~~ few. The mass of glandelinian columns then gradually recoiled to the cover of their own position, though the heavy christian shell fire made their position also a charnell hell, and it was several hours before the battle in this location went back to its normal fury. and did not rage so insanely as before.

The work of reparing the damage along the remaining Glandelinian front was soon being taken up but there was no chance just then of any of the enemy enemy being able to strike a revengeful blow. Then Tim saw that he had done all he could, he retuced his speedy horse to the roadway for the letters must not be delayed longer than could be helped, and already nearly three hours had been lost.It was almost dinner time when he rode up where violet and her sisters were gathered outside the cabin door watching for the first sign of the coming disaster stated by Angeline who had returned, and wondering why nothing happened and why Tim didn't return.He then gave a detail of the bursted christian army under Viviania telling of how their elder brother James crushed the assailants and carried all before him enabling Viviania to rally and recover his lost ground.He made light of his own part in the affair, but that was to come out later and much honor was to be paid to the lad.But Angeline understood what he had done and the greatest praise came from her and her sisters;

"I'm proud of you Timithy by boy"she said."Wait untill ~~Pentthethead~~ Penrod hears of this.He'll sure love you as we do."

"Your deed saved us from being forced to move off"said violet."Let's go on that rise of ground there and see what is happening.If our fathers army is either totally or temporarily worsted that part of the battle won't come this way rest assured."

They therefore went there which was only a short distance off, and through their glasses saw that relief for other sections of Hindenmines line of battle was was being sent both from the Rainbow Ridge and golden grocig section, showing that the enemy couldn't expect to recover any ground they even had lost; and when violet and her sisters heard of the disaster to Hansons own army they desired to go forth to help him but Tim reminded them of Penrods warning.

"That reverse will only be temporarily"said Tim."One side or the other cannot always win everything at the start.Every general is doing his best to help, and though many generals may have lost heavily out of their divisions and so on still we can hope for the best.Viviania held, and Your dear Brother Prince James cut the enemy all to pieces."

"Yes"said Jennie with her brightest smile"You have provided against that disaster by your brave ride to warn him.You are a great hero, a great contraste to that fool of a coward that deserted us only five or six days ago."

"And who justifully went to his death for it"said Tim with conviction.

"It certainly is a great life of adventure for those who are brave"he thought to himself as he watched the movements of the various christian armies who had smashed general Viviania's assailants."I'm glad the way however is so rough otherwise they would be wanting me to use an automobile or a motoryle. But none of them for me while I have these beautiful holy little angels beside me untill Penrod, another of their guardian angels returns."

Violet was nearest to him and he saw her smiling mischieviously at him.

"What's wrong?"he demanded.

"I know what you were thinking."she said."I suppose if you were really seeing us as angels you would not be more surprised."

"Well"he said decidedly"you ought to be, because if you're possessed by them you and the angels seem to be one."

Jennie overheard this and smiled her answer.

"Well since I was away warning your brother anything big to day Princesses?" he finally said."Anything important.Why what's the matter?"he asked in concern

"Before you seemed so jolly now you Violet dear look worried."Oh I see it's Penrod you are saddening about."

"I and my sisters are worried a little"Tim she said"but not over that"and this time she did not answer his smile.

"What about if it isn't Penrod.I thought you would surely worry about him."

"We don't need to"said joice."He can take of himself."But we sure wish he was here right now.We need him badly."

"What's the trouble then.Jack isn't worse is he? Or you haven't lost any important letters for any of your generals."

"No Timothy dear it isn't that" said Catherine.A military post officer inspector or some sort of a man in very high commission has been here demanding of me and my sisters a whole lots of strange and stirring questions.He declared that he was sent to me by my Father and declared or intimated that we were not doing things right, that we through a blunder has caused the reverse against our Fathers army.We can't figure how we did it if it is so.He appeared to be angry and said our Father was sore too.He declared he is coming back soon to check up my accounts at my fathers orders.

"Did your father send you a note that telling that he sent this man?"

"No."

"Well if it is true I suppose they have to do what they're hired for.But it seems strange for I heard your Father would not send you any one of that sort without first sending you a telegraphic report about it first.Was the man mean or ugly.did he act suspicious."?

"No, but he seemed terril terribly in earnest.And suppose our accounts are not exactly right.I and my sisters may have made little mistakes.Our holiness our holiness don't correct natural mistakes you now.I suppose he'll report me to our Father, and then father will want us to stop being couriers.Oh Tim with such an awful battle raging we couldn't bear that."

"I don't believe that."answered Tim."If any man was sent by your father you'd you would have had word from him first.I'm suspicious.I'll remain here and have a conversation with that inspector.Maybe if he is all right I can help straighten matters out if they're a bit wrong, but if he is something suspicious he's going to get something else. You say he is coming back in an hour.?"

"Yes,and the time too is nearly up."

"There he is now"said joice, pointing"

They had returned home, and Tim glanced out, and a strange suspicious feeling came over him as he saw a large man with a brown beard, attired as a christian official of inspection, on an unusally large and high but magnificent horse riding up to their cabin.

"Is he the military inspector?"demanded Tim and violet looked at him sort of funny for the way Tim spoke.

"Yes Jennie answered looking at Tim the same way and then at violet and her sisters and back to Tim. Then she saw him shut his teeth grimly and a strange look come over his face as he slightly handled his holster.

"Oh Timothy dear you're suspicious.I now from your thought's he a man you are desiring to capture.Oh what shall we do?"asked Jennie while her sisters looked the more surprised.

"Do why you don't have to do anything"The boy answered."Let this fake inspector as you or your sisters questions, and then I'll see what course to take.Lure him into the trap.I'll have him.He's the man of the Glandelinian leader who held me up when I let violet escape."

"Oh but suppose he does find something wrong---not the proper amount of mail on hand, he'll believe we fooled him and may do!!!"

"Say little Princesses of Heaven, don't you worry"he went on."I don't believe this fellow will do much questioning.I'll let him question far enough so I can recognize his face and voice."

"Why Tim what made you talk t that way.?He proves by a letter written by my my father that he is a post military inspector.He told me so."

"Did he show you the letter.?"

"No. Do you know him.Really is he one of those who held you up."And Jennie stared at Tim.

"I rather believe I do know him, and that he is the one, but yet I'm not sure untill he gets into the trap."said Tim"If I'm mistaken then I'll only help you and your sisters straighten up.But if he's what I think he is,"--He paused a moment and then finished"I'll show him no man ever held me up and got away with it."

And again there was a grim shutting of his lips, and a determined look came into his eyes.

"What do you wish to do!"said joice almost bewildered at the boys manner

"I want to hear him talk first"the lad said..Then I can tell better."

The Inspector if such he were, had stopped outside the cabin to light a cigar.

up sat easily on his big horse, and Tim could not help admiring the noble animal.

The man himself was a fine tall physical specimen, but he had a hard cruel face a big shaggy beard, and brave but shifty eyes. He was armed in the fashion of a Christian cavalry dragoon (not dragon) and his horse was covered with a suit of purple cloth, and the saddle was of a red color. There was no one in the immediate vicinity of the building or cabin. Having lighted his cigar, the man again advanced advanced slowly. He did not glance all about as Tim expected he would do, but came straight ahead. He dismounted with easy grace, and tied his horse to a post in front of the log cabin. Then putting out his cigar, and throwing what was left of it away. he strode in. Jim sat down on a chair behind the door outside. Jac Saunders lay in a bed but he was awake and saw the man come in. Tim did not want the inspector to see him until the right moment and winked at Jack as a sign to say nothing yet.

"Well ---er Princesses of Abbieannia" began the man, and his tone was somewhat very insolent, and he spoke like a man who thinks he's master of the world. "I suppose you are ready to allow me to go over your accounts now."

Tim started at the sound of his voice.

"That's the Glandelinian officer, I'm positive of it." he thought. "Now I've got him. Oh Heaven be praised. This is good luck."

Tims eyes gleamed, and he looked dangerous to violet who was watching him. Jennie and the rest of her sisters and even little Jannie hardly understand what to make of the situation. They half expected Tim to do something right away or say something to help them. Still they felt they were only qualified to answer the questions of the supposed officials. But if he really was a true official sent by Emperor Vivian and if anything really was wrong! "Well then Tim will help us out" Jennie thought. She was trembling, and was much upset. It was the first time it it if it was true that her Father had sent an inspector to call at their cabin and that after all he gave him a not note. but the man wouldn't shot it, and declared it was not necessary..

"Now I wish to examine the records of what ever mail or letters you're going to carry to one of the Christian generals going or coming Princesses. I also must check over your own ability, why you're here so far from the battle lines. Have you become afraid of the enemy or something that you're so far away. He wants to find that out too."

"Why yes---that is --oh, I hardly understand where to begin" said the flustered Princess, wishing heartily that Tim would say something. "You see my Father never thought we would do things that made us needed to be inspected before. But ---but ---but why should we submit. you won't show us the permit from our father,"

"Humph." sneered the man. "You alone of your sisters act as though something was wrong at that. Most offices where I go within the military lines don't have such nervous persons in charge and you a Princess of all persons is nervous. If everything is all right you have nothing to fear. Perhaps you had better step outside and let me go over the matter myself. That would be much better and you wouldn't be so nervoud. If everything is all right you won't need nothing to fear, and if there is something wrong well I'll be as easy in my report to your Father as I can. I won't bring it too hard on you. but you see his army is worsted, and he sent a letter to you asking you to send general Turner to his assistance and he got no response from you. just leave the office or cabin to me for a little while."

"I won't "said jennie her voice now determined. "We got no letter from our Father. If we did our response would have been promptly made. You are lying." and as she said this, Jennie flashed over the mans head a look at Tim in the corner behind the door. The young boyscout had arisen, and to her alarm Jennie saw his hand go toward the holster on his belt where she saw he carried a dangerous sixty five calibre revolver--a new one since the Glandelinians had stolen his first one. Jennie wanted to scream as by Tims face it seemed he might shoot the man there.

"just run along little Princesses and let me have the place to myself." the man urged.

"I won't" said Jennie more determinedly. "We're armed and if you try to raid our place we'll place you under arrest immediately. Father never send us a letter. you're here for something you want to get hold of very badly. Get out."

It was time for Tim to act now. His family fairly sprang out from behind the door and confronted the man suddenly.

"Are you sure that you intend to refuse her when she tells you to get out. well I'll help you refuse mighty nicely. You'll not get out at all. It's a wonder you wouldn't run off with them and the whole cabin."

The big man started back aghast. He turned somewhat pale, and then a flood of red surged into his face. He seemed to recover himself with an effort.

"I---i---I do not understand---I do---not know what you mean Kid!"

"I'm no kid no child of a goat, and I mean what I say. You'll not get out here at all. You are refused to go for the Princess, and therefore I'll help you stay here for company. Glad to meet you. I saw you only a short time ago."

"who are you boy!" the man demanded curtly.

"Never mind who I am, but who do you think you are!" and Tim fairly shot out the words.

"Why I'm the Military Inspector for this district, and emperor Vivian sent me here to investigate a letter that he sent to these Princesses." was the answer and again the mans tone was unnerving. "Are you connected with them if I may ask?"

"I am"

"I am. "Said Tim very grimly.

"I suppose then boy you are their brother Schfield Penrod.!"

"I am not, but I would consider it a great honor if I was."

"In what capacity then are you connected with them."

"Guardianship of the Princesses in their dutues during battle untill he returns."

"Where may he be!"

"I don't know, and if I did I would not tell you. But I can tell you one thing.

"I,m the same boyscout that you and your gang of soldiers captured and held up not long ago. I recognized you despite your disguise as a christian inspection officer. Indeed I was sure of you the minute I set eyes on you on that big horse, and when I heard your voice I was doubly sure. I now you and wearing that that uniform for a disguise doesn't help you any at all. You are no more a official military inspector than I am. You're a Glandelinian Kidnapper that's want you are.

The man started to say something but stopped suddenly. As Tim was about to draw His weapon to order the man to submit, the fellow with a sudden leap was out of the place, In another instant he had jumped onto the saddle of his steed tearing loose the rope as he leaned over the saddle. Then with a clatter of hoofs he was off and suddenly two more men appeared and followed him to cover him. Jennie screamed, and her sisters turned white and gasped but Tim flashing past Jennie to get outside fired a shot at the big man and he tumbled from his horse. He fired again and another man dropped. The third man wheeled in his saddle and fired at Tim but missed. The wind of the bullet was felt close to Jennie's ear and it hit the top of Jack's bed. Tim fired again but the man had darted around a bend.

"Stop him. For Havens sake stop him. Get after him. He's one of the fellows, who tried to capture violet, and captured me to rop rob our military mail. Stop him" Tim cried, and he fired again and again into the air to attract attention for the neighborhood appeared to be deserted. He could not persue too soon to have a chance to fire at the Glandelinian soldier.

"Stop him. He's a insulter of the Princesses too." Tim yelled again firing a shot. Then leaping into the saddle of his pony, and followed by Violet and some of her sisters, Especially jennie, Angeline and Daisy Tim gave chase to after the escaping glandelinian soldier. He had shot down and seriously wounded two of them.

"We've got to get him Violet." he cried. "We've got to get him."

"We've got to get him Violet." he cried. "We've got to get him."

Shots whether they're fired into the air or at anybody always attracts plenty of attention, especially within a christian encampment where during a grave war they usually mean something. However usually in cities there are so many noises being constantly heard, and backfires and tire blowouts from autos so nearly resemble the discharge of fire arms though so much louder that if a revolver or any firearms would actually be discharged in acrowded street it is hardly likely that it would attract notice.

Within the christian lines, because of what enemy spies and so on would attempt todo shots were rather a novelty and therefore when pistols shots were heard there usally were sm some good reason for them. In consequence wi when Tim shot two of the disguised Glandelinians down, and then tried to hit the other man but missed, and then fired shots into the air it was not long before the main Company Street in front of the cabin was thronged by boy and girlscouts of the Legorin Order. Boys and girls in uniforms came rushing out of tents on either side of the Company street (you dead beet)! Tim racing swiftly down the road after the escaping Glandelinian whom he had missed glanced to the rear, and sawthat he was able to call for reinforcements. A dozen girl and boyscouts had already jumped on their horses and was joining in the chase....."

"What's the two Tim!" asked one of the girlscout leaders.

"Those two Glandelinians in disguise I shot are the soldiers who had held me up when I let Violet escape." Exclaimed Tim. "There were three of them one of them escaped."

"We'll get the devil." was y l yelled back and several more child scouts hurried to loosen the tie straps of the horses to led or lend their aid.

"I'mnot sure whether we'll get him or not Violet" said Jim as he urged his pony on, while riding alongside of her own horse and both going the same speed. That man I missed shooting has got a good start of us, and that horse of his can go some, or I miss my guess. Besides he's a regular ox and can continue going for hours at a time. We'll have to drop him."

"Maybe we're all right, and there isn't beetter ponies than ours." Violet said"

"but sometimes for us either in escaping or persueing it's like putting a little runabout auto up against a big racing car. It is not always equal. Still we'll do our best."

Several more child scouts were now joining in the chase. The first one who had heard what Tim said, had passed the word on to the others, and the pursuers so hastily organized understood what sort of a Glandelinian spy they were after. The two wounded ones had been carried away and their horses taken possession of. Some of the boyscouts were Standards these being rough characters--that is rough in the sense that they lived in the open most of the time and were always ready for whatever came along. Some of them began firing their long range rifles, but there was no chance of hitting the fleeing Glandelinian soldier,,, as he was now out of sight beyond a turn in the road. Realizing this the child scouts fired in the air, hoping perhaps perhaps that the sound of the shots would scare the spy and cause him to halt. But the man ahead was made of as stern and as desperate a character as were the majority of t his pursuers. He must have understood that Tim had recognized their big leader and themselves themselves too and he realized the penalty if he were caught. So he made up his mind that he would not be captured. Tim was nearest to him, and he caught occasionally occassional glimpses of the fellow for he saw him beating his horse to urge the magnificent animal to still greater speed.

"There's no use trying to catch him. "Though t Tim" he's got too much of a start, and his horse can beat anything around here. I guess he knows that. Still Tim would not give up and he would not have got his man if something unforseen had o not happened.

He he The spy had seen Violet and her sisters with the boy and a fierce hatred of the little girls came over his face. While still riding furiously he unslung something from a bag and pulled out a long red object. The four girls and Tim paled with horror as it was dynimite. but before he could throw it, Tim had raised his rifle suddenly, and fired a good shot, bring the man off the horse dead. The Dynimite was thrown but it did not land where it was supposedvto fortunately and the concussion of the explosion made Tims horse stumble and fall, throwing Tim cleanly over his head. As hi he was flung his rifle flew from his hand hand and the stoc struck Violet on the shoulder almost knocking her from the horse she was riding but however doing no injury. Fortunately for Tim he landed on a rise of ground covered with soft earth and a bed of high massive cuss so that his fall did not even hardly jar him. The pony too was not hurt, and soon scrambled to his feet, Tim imagined with asort of apologetic expression.

"Oh I hope my rifle didn't hurt you Princess" said Tim regretfully.

Violet only laughed.

"It seemed sort of funny anyway" she said. "Your rifle made a cartwheel performance before it landed on my shoulder. I'm happy to see you didn't get no hurt. You were thrown pretty violently. "

Tim had limped tward his steed and patted him saying;

"I understand you couldn't help it Johnnie. It wasn't your fault."

Then Tim saw that one of his saddle girths had been injured or broken. With that unmended even temporarily it would beuseless to try to ride the horse on the return. The saddle would slip from under him, and tattttat bare back riding insuch a situation isout of the question.. Tim realized this, and when Jennie and Diasy came up with the squadron of child scouts, andand it was determined to go on the return when it was seen that the man had been shot dead by Tim. Tim however secured the dead means horse and offered it to Jennie to ride, but she said;

"I'm too small for such a big horse Tim. It's only for a giant of man. We never ride them only ponies."

"What are we going to do about the deadman. "Said Tim. "We can't leave him lay there at all."

"Those Glandelinians ain't worth being buried by us "saidone of the girlscouts holding her nose high up in the air. Let hi "Let his comrades bury him. There is no use in delaying ourselves on that trifle sort of matter."

"No "and you'll be needed to carry a message to general Ttttttttttant Robert Vivian" Jennie replied. "The battle will be lostsoon unless the dear Parent of ours get's a good plan from us. Let the scoundrel be buried by his own comrades."

So they started to retrace their steps. ...

"Well not one of them got away Jennie. "said Tim.

"I'm glad of it. "she exclaimed impulsively. "I sometimesbelieve Tim you're Penrod in disguise and fooling us. You shoot like him."

"What?" he cried.

"I mean you are like him. "she added. "You saved us from that dynimite he was going to throwthatwas quinceds of trade themagnifichaveghed you Tim."

to throw at us . but he might have hit You Tim."

"Oh much obliged for your loving care" he laughed. "But I wish we could have gotten the others. We only got three and there were a doz n of them."

"We "said Violet. "Tim it was you who got them. You fired every shot."

"Anyway if I got them" he said "It would be a big feather in my cap."

"I don't care for caps with feathers. "Jennie retorted. "But what inthe world do you suppose that big man wanted Tim? and why did he pass himself off as a military inspector and say our Father sent him."

"So he could have a chance to spy into the records of you and your sisters. and he may have thought there may be something of value in the waiting mail that you and your sisters may prepare, which he may hoped to have had the chance to slip away with if he got you and your dear sisters outof the place.... That was his game. You see the gang of Glandelinian spiesif such they were did not even makewhat might be called expenses out of their spying plans. or out of their military holdup of me. They had their troubles for their pains, and I suppose they were wild when they found out the valuable letters in the mail they stole were only dummies..."

"He came near it though" Daisy said. "Only for you I suppose he might have forced us to go out by some plan, but there was not much he could havestolen. But from somewhere , did get a sort of letter written to me in English. If he had taken that---"

"He wasn't searching for any thing as code letters" said Tim. "I'm suspicious that I now what he was after--- it was some important letter he believed may be forwarded by one of t you to your Royal Father. Well the rest didn't come here, more's the pity for we've have had them too, though we may encounter them later."

"And it's my turn on a trip" said Daisy. and I've got to get ready for the trip."

"Are you intending to go alone" said Tim.

"I did intend to" she said with a sly look at him followed by a mischievious smile" ut I believe if , don't let you come with me as a guardian you'll be so terribly downhearted that I'll regret it."

"I would be more downhearted, if you did go alone and something happened to you. "he said. "Remember your sisters. Don't cause them unecessary worries about you."

"I won't" she laughed. "In this situation I wouldn't go alone under any conditions."

He in his heart was glad that Daisy was the little fighting Princess they said she was. His pony was sort of shaken by the fall, and a little lame.. Tim himself felt sore and stiff, buthe decided to accompany her nevertheless, and to ride the big horse, which may give him an advantage over the foe.

Before they started some courier came up and said Emperor Vivians army was falling back.

"But he'll get the enemy yet. "Said the man.

"He's army won't if the foe gets a good start on him. "Thought Tim.

Then just before Daisy and Tim started Joice stopped them for a moment.

"Just a word with you Tim dear. "said the Princess with a smile. "You remember the bogus letters and papers that were stolen from the mail bags you found I suppose?"

"I should say I do. "Tim Exclaimed. "Why have any body found them and captured the Glandelinians..... """ "!!

"No indeed" she smiled again. "But it doesn't matter much about them. I want to tell you now that some real good papers and letters--some that contain great information about the enemy are forwarded to us by Jennie Turner and may be along any hour now. And if we give them to you I want to as you to be specially carefully about them."

"I certainly will Joice dear..."

"I now you will Tim dear, but I want to caution you., not only about them but about your own safty. There are a number of verydesperate Glandelinian spies and agents who would go almost any length to get possessin of those documents. So Tim dear when we give them to you, be on your special guard and---and---"

Joice suddenly ceased speaking and glanced suspiciously around. They were out in front of the cabin near a clump of bushes. Without saying anything further she suddenly drew her pistol, and instantly darted out of sidebehind the shrubbery to the surprise of Tim, her sisters and Jannie. Tim and they too then were on the ala alert, ready to follow, but there was no need. Joice came back with a grim smile on her pretty face (de lace)

"I thought I heard andsaw a movement there, as if some one were listening. "she said. "put it was a false alarm."

"Are Glandelinian spies and agents and other clever enemies trailing you and your dear sisters as close at that.?)))("

"Ye , Yes, and more so, "was the answer. "There's a big fight onto try and get the positions away from our Fathers Army and his followers but if I can help it I and my dear sisters are going to beat our enemies..... They'dgive anything to get the information that is to come to us through a courier sent by Jennie Turner, and that is why I and my sisters are always on the watch, fearing some one w may over hear what , or my sisters may say."

"But I thought you didnt Know what was happening along your Fathers army line." Said Tim.

"So I and my sisters do, and we're one of the very few little girls who do Know the exact location where the disaster is threatening him..."

"Then why are you expecting information through from Jennie Turner, that will disclose the spot where the disaster is happening..?..M?"

"You don't exactly understand what I am saying, "was the reply..(fly) "You see

After the courier who first observed the reverse located the movements of the enemy against our fathers army, he died from wounds he recieved. He however s had some item documents givig giving the location of the enemys own lint of reverse action, and we came in on the news. Now in order to have everything perfectly legal for us to interfere on that part of the battle line, it was necessary in this particular case, to send to Jennie Turner to have our statement on the situation made good. To do that we had to describe exactly what was transpiring, where our fathers army is located. We also had to send this information to the government officials in the christian lines trying to trace where Angelinia Aronburg is. put of course our secret is safe with them. The trouble is however, that Jenne Jennie Turner is now sending back to us our original plans, which gives us a chance to do something in order to help help our father repulse the enemy, and with them come our proofs of what is happening. Of course all these papers contain the written description of Emperor Vivians location and if these papers falls into the hands of the Glandelinians who are striving against us, they'll be enabled to win the battle totally. That is why I am so anxious not to have the expected letters lost.. so if we get them and sent them to father through you, take good care of them Tim dear."

"You can be positively sure I will indeed." exclaimed the boyscout leader.

"Oh I do not need to worry about you Tim dear. I and my sisters know we can easily trust you just as I and they could have trusted our brother Penrod were he to do this duty for us. It's the Glandelinian secret spies and even patrols that we are worrying aboud. They held you and Violet up once Tim, though she escaped, and told us, and and----- -"

"They won't so easily have a second chance at it." exclaimed the boyscout leader with flashing eyes. "I'll be on the watch, and carry trusty handgrenades.""""

"Well surely they're very foxy and cunning." went on the Vivian Princess. "It's treachery more than anything else you have to fear now, and my sisters too, treachery and guile. They'll try them nowsince they have found out that their military hold up methods did not go right."

"Well they may try them again." said Tim" but they sure don't catch me nappingagain."

"Oh I guess you were not napping Tim."

"No not exactly. It all happened to me and Violet so suddenly, they didn't give us a chance, though through a sudden scheme I caused Violet to escape. Though I suppose that was their game. Well I'll do my best this time."

"I sure believe you will Tim and know it too. Now as I said I don't now just when those important military documents will arrive alive. If I did I'd be there my self, and bring them through. I wouldn't as you to take the risk. "

"Oh the risk is a part of our war game." Tim said;;;

"I understand it is, but I don't believe a in anybody, man boy, or girl or ourselves---taking too many.. But not nowing when they will arrive I'll have to trust the regular courier service. Only one Thing Tim. Don't bring them through at night. I mean by that don't make a night trip for my papers. It would be too dangerous. Of course if you have to go on a night trip in case the battle goes on yet and the documents arrive bring them along with you only under an navy escort of your most savagely fighting boy and girlscouts the Pogarians. but don't go on a special trip on their on account, as there is no such rush about them. I suppose you can depend on all your own boy and girlscouts as they escaped the poisoned breakfast."

"Well I should say I could." declared Tim eagerly energetically. "Jennie Dranner is my assistant leading girlscout there and----"

"Oh I forgot. She's a relative of yours isn't she."

"Yes, she's my sister" answered Tim.

"Well then that's better still. I'm not greatly so worried about the transf trans ferring from the main chistian camps. It's from there to here the documents will be captured on us, if at all.....:."

"They won't be captured at all." declared Tim.

Of course he was boyishly enthusiastic and the presence of so sweet a little girl friendmade him so. for that no one can blame him. He was deeply interested in his duties for them. To him it meant everything, and for their sake he would do any thing.. He wanted to bring the documents through through to them safe, and on time every trip. And so far he had more than made good. That one hold up did not count against him, but had caused him rather to be a hero in their eyes.

"Well I guess that's all I have to say to you Timmy dear." concluded Joice. "I don't want to delay you or Joice any longer. As I said before I cannot say just when the papers will arive. and when they do--well take the best care of them you can."

"I wonder how it would do to try another ruse, and hide them say in a loosely tied parcel that appears as if it didn't contain anything more valuable than a pair of old shoes.".!

"that might help things. Use your own judgement Tim. but if it happens you have any one of us along with you give them to her for safer retainment. but I and my sisters will leave it all to you. Only bring us the papers, and don't let the foolish glandelinians get them....."

"I won't."

"Shake" Exclaimed Joice, and their hands met in a firm clasp.

Then he and the other Princess rode on..

"well Daisy." he said "the games on."

"what game?" she asked. "I hope you don't mean any more bogus inspectors are coming coming to interfere with the plans of my sisters."

"no indeed. I mean that at any time now that package of documents of plans may reach them. when I bring it put it in your safe."

"And what are you going to do with it Tim dear?"

"Carry it to Emperor Vivian as your dear sister Joice said of course."

"Oh Tim dear. I'm scared about that. Suppose something happens?" half whispered Daisy.

"well I hope and pray it doesn't, and I,m going to do my best, and pray my best to have the chances to see that such a something doesn't happen. But if it does well I'll have to put up with it I suppose." Tim said with a shrug of his shoulders.

"I almost hope the old package doesn't come." murmured Daisy, with a pout of her pretty little lips...

"Ogh that wouldn't do for the sake of your fathers army." said Tim. "It very valuable and important for if he doesn't see them sooner or later I'm afraid our side is going to lose this dreadful battle. And that is what you and your dear sisters started this duty for since Jack got ill--to transport to our generals speedily, valuable andimportant letts of warning, ordersand so forth. I and you My little Daisy will come outall right I guess."

"I---I----I---- nope so." she faltered.

For several minutes while waiting to see a chance to greet a general they watched the battle that raged at a safe distance with the help of their field glasses, hoping anxiously for a sight of the results as the news had been reported, but they could notsee any signs of Emperor Vivians army giving way, though in the direction where Hanson Vivians army was there was something that appeared to be a retreat, and great pandemonium and confusion. But if the scene was a retreat it surely was not coming their way, though Tim secretly planned what to do at certain points of the road should a retreat really occur. Too he must beccareful too not to meet with any Glandelinian patrols for even within certain sections of the very christian lines you might unexpectedly encounter one and he might be possibly held up again and probably Daisy too. He thought of all this and then realizing that Daisy too may be able to read his thoughts he finally said as if in answer;

"Though it is just a question just as your dear sister Joice or Violet may say, whether the Glandelinians would try the same tactics twice. I doubt it though for they may not believe it wise."

"They may try some other and more desperate game." said Daisy. "They could ambush us."

"yes that may be but if you're really, angel possessed wouldn't you come through the deadly ambuscade safely."

"I might and I mightn't." she answered. "If I did it is certainly a positive fact you wouldn't. That's is what I'm afraid of."

"You Daisy are worth more far more than I am."

"you are just as much worth in the eyes of God as I am" said Daisy. "I could never feel happy again if such a friend as you are we have, and others too who are the same were killed. We feel terrible yet even since Joe greene was mortally wounded. No I don't want anything to happen that way. We got to be careful and pray hard for safty."

"he,ll have to be strictly on the watch for both then." said Tim who was reallly getting anxious now..... Tim and Daisy was still watching the scene and started to go forward again, when a dusty lavander uniformed messenger rode up on a tired and lather covered horse, and saluting Daisy and Making the Sign of the Cross. asked of the Princess;

"Are you Princess, and your boy companion and friend acting as special couriers.!"

"Yes" answered Daisy as both children rode forward. "what is wanted!"

"Emperor Maisons and Vivians armies are being busted up by a terrific charge upthe slopes of the hills." the messenger said. "I was sent here to get you or your sisters do do to do something in order to bring help, and to say that General Kindermine himself wants to see you."

"what's to see me!"

"No. you andall your sisters."

"But we have a wounded boyscout in our hut and every one of us can't leave him, and none of us will leave any one of any one of our sisters benind either." said Daisy."

"But he wanted to see you all."

"no" said Daisy almost angrily and very decidedly "I won't do it." I'll go and see him in person. "Penrod told us to stay away from the battle line and it was not an entreaty but a command. We obey either him or Father. I'll go with Tim. Why does the general wish to see us."

"He's got a letter that is marked "Rush" and he wants to know if you and your if you and your sisters could ride out there, get it and bring it on to general general Concentinian Aronburg to bring his army on."

"Well I suppose I and Tim can."Daisy said," but that isn't necessary for all of my sisters to go. Whatdoes the general be thinking of. And it isn't regular regular either as we never proposed to go on long distances courier go journeys.
It's dangerous.It isn't regular and its out of my line too isn't it?"

"No one told me to tell you he knew that. And he said he would have sent the letter by me only there's some very valuable information in it, and he wanted a regular person to carry it for him. So will you go out there?"

"Since it seems for one reason or other that he cannot trust you"said Daisy somewhat scornfully"I think I'd better yes. But my sisters are going to stay where they are and not be forced to leave the wounded boyscout captain behind. How far out isthe christian army under our father?"

"Hi. His army is recoiling from the location of Sacrammento Hill or something of that sort.The distance is short only about five smitts smitt miles.Half way between Big Girl knool, and Chamberlane.."

"All right I'll get the letter."decided Daisy giving a strange glance at Tim."You sir are to come with me though. And show the way.Do you believe we can find that location alone."

"I'll do so princess."

"But why doesn't h the general trust you with the letter.?"

"He's afraid I can't bring it through. The enemy can't put things over on you or your sisters but they can on us."

"I suppose"said Daisy"The general believes we're made of magic or something."

"He might."

In due time they arived at the vinicity where a portion of their fathers army was retreating, and as the two children watched the scene in horror they rode up to where a general was approaching fast.The letter and two other envelopes was (if not were) transferred to Daisy, and she realizing it was for Concentinian Aronbury started onward with it for his destination..

"I wonder if the most important letters can really be in the small bag the general handed to her"Thought Tim as he urged his horse onward beside Daisy."There is no way of telling and if they are I'm afraid for her safty.I'm going to be a cousin of Mrs Owl right now."

She understood his thoughts, and wondered if the time came for it he would reallly prove it. The christian line under their Father the general had said, had been bro en up half way betwen Big Girl knool and Chamberlane.There were two other divisions also being disasterously worsted the last one being about some distance in front of Kittens Riecherts.As Tim and Daisy were passing beyond the eastern territory of Chamberlane and heard the awful noise of battle in that section Je Daisy suddenly noticed that her own horse was limping slightly and was suspicious, and called Tims attentionto it.

Tim halted and got off and examined the horses foot.

"Hullo what's this.! A stone under the horses shoe."he exclaimed."Your horse had had gone lame(not to blame), but th not quite so badly but that with the prompt removal of the stone the animal could be ridden.

"I'll fix it for the horse"said Tim.You do not need to get down unless you want to my little celestial flower"to Daisy,and he guided both ponies to a shady spot on the trail and proceeded to get out a simple boyscout kit he always carried with him for such emergencies.Tims first idea was that he could soon and easily remove the stone from between the hoof and shoe.But when he started busily at it with a peculiarly shaped hook, such as is used for that purpose the lad found the work was going to take much longer than he had expected especially as it usually took a strong man to really do this.

Daisy came down to help him by holding the horses leg.It was desperate work

"Let it go and try and reach a blacksmiths shop"Suggested Daisy.

"We can't very well do that for the horse would be lamer than ever"said Tim, and then we'd have to stable him, and we can't leave the horse with our mail and go and get the smith to come out here. And I'm scared to death to send you Daisy, and scared to death to leave you here alone and go myself.So I've got to try to do it myself and pray that we'll succeed."

"But we'll be a little late with the letters."protested Daisy.

"It can't be helped "said Tim regretfully."It 's got to be done.ItIs got to b It's got to me be done and I'm the one it seems who has got to done it."

"But it's delaying!"

"It can't be helped"insisted Tim."It will give us a truthful excuse for not getting to general Concentinian Aronburg on time, as we have had to go out of our usual route anday to get the letters.They can't expect us to do two peoples duties in the time of one, and especially when you're pony goes lame, and we can't leave the pony behind either. If we rode together on one pony we too would be at a disadvantage if we were assaulted, as two couldn't fight well on a horse together."
Tim toiled over the stone desperately but which persis e persisted just as desperately in staying where it had become wedged.

"Well Little flower"he said to Daisy I don't seem to be coming along very fast" and I guess it tires you to hold the horses leg.Confound the luck anyway" and he sat down to rest, for the day because of the hot forest fire winds coming from the far east was not for even so late in the year when cold weather should be setting in, and in spite of being being in the shade, he felt the heat very much, because in fact it was not coming from the sun. Daisy and her sisters were hardly ever bothered much by heat, and could stand ice cold temperatures and even zero temperatures on their bodies without effects.

"What can we do."said Daisy distressed."Couldn't we force it and---"

"I don't want to loosen your horses shoe too much or it will come off"He said;
"and then we'd be in a worse situation than ever.It would come at a time as this.
And yet if we don't---"

"I don't see how we are going to get anywhere"she finished.

"Well"we must get at that confounded stone"continued Tim."It won't get us anywhere sitting here this way either.We'll have anoty another try."

However the two horses did not seem to mind the rest for they were cropping grass by the was wayside.As long as Daisy's horse rested on no weight on that foot he or she was all right..It was when the pony trotted or galloped with Daisy in the saddle bringing pressure to bear, that the lameness was noticeable. Again the two children a busied themselves with the task. But Tim shook his head over the work for it seemed more and more impossible to get the stone out without removing the shoe, and that would mean going back to the blacksmiths shop in camp to have it nailed on again.

"This is a regular nuisance that this should happen at such a time."said Tim."But of course it isn't the poor horses fault."

"There's some body coming this way."Said Daisy."I hear hoofbeats."

The sound of the hoofbeats grew louder, and caused the two children to glance up as they were bending over the shoe.They saw riding tward them a tall rough powerfully looking stranger, and at first glance they could tell he was a foriegner of Irish birth, and his face showed he was "No Fighter"No. He carried a long rifle sort of Arabian sort, a sabre, and a brace of pistols but he wore civilian clothes. The latter drew up his horse, looked long and admiringly at Daisy, then nodded nodded in a real friendly manner and said it;

"You seem to be having some sort of a trouble there."

"Yes sir indeed"Tim admitted."Pon'y of this little human flower beside me has gone lame."

"Why do you always call me a flower" Daisy inquired with her sweetest smile.

"Because your name is of a flower."he answered smiling back."

"What's the matter with your little sisters horse?"asked the man.

"I'm sorry to say she is not my-------"

"She is boy whether she is a relation or not.We're all brothers and sisters in this country.Why it's Princess Princess Daisy Vivian."He finished."What happened to the horse?"

"Got a stone under his shoe, and I don't seem to be able to get it out."

"A bad thing in your business I should judge"the Irish man went on." You a little Princess acting as courier are you and having a bodyguard eh?"

That could be told by the glance at the military mail bags."

"Yes"daisy Daisy admitted, for the man seemed anxious and honest to be friendly.
"We were to ride between here to General Concenti i Concentinian Aronburgs army."

"Sort of our of your way, here are you not.?"

"Yes we had to ride out here to get the letters.Christian army breaking do n down at Sc Sacramento Hill.I'm going with Tim to the general.That is I am is my boy friend Tim can get this stone out."

"Say little angel flower if you and your friend don't mind let me have a chance at it."suggested the man getting off his horse with an ease that showed he was as accustomed to the saddle as anyWestern cowboy Cowboy."I always know things about smithy work and I've got a better hook than the one you are using."

"Well if you don't mind I wish you would have a try"said Tim himself straightened up his bent and aching back/"It seems to have gotten the best of me."

The tall ox built stranger patted Daisys horse, and the little girl on the head, while the horse sniffed at him and seemed satisfied.The horse could tell at one sniff whether a man was a secret foe or not.The pony showed the man was a true friend by rubbing his velvet nose against the mans coat.This was his way to becoming friends.The horse did not do with with every one either, and both children felt more interest in the new comer on that account.

"Now let me see what we have here."the man went on"as he lifted the pony's lame foot foot."Oh my name's Mic-Cann"he added as an after thought."I'm a foriegner I'll admit that"he went on, but the enemy has a big price on my head."

"And mine's Tim Groveton and this is Princess Daisy Vivian, the little flower Daisy Bud of Abblemnia"he finished with a almost mischievious smile as he completed the con introduction.

"Glad to meet you too.I'm rid ing your way, and for your protection if you don't believe I'm intruding I'll go on with you after I get you fixed up, or rather the little Princess's O pony."

"Thin|you can do it!"Daisy as ed anxiously.

"Uh yes indeed!I'll soon have this out.You couldn't get it yourself my boy""To Tim"Because this was far beyond your strength.It's difficult even for me to get it strong as I am.I'll have to loosen the shoe pretty good but I'll fix it too.you can't get this stone without loosening the shoe.It's impossible."

He proved that it was true in about a few minutes later by exclaiming;

"There it is.It was a sharp stone too..."""

He held up the stone that had caused all the trouble.It was of a peculiar shape which accounted also for the manner in which it had become wedged fast.

"Thanks and God bless you "the two children exclaimed together."Now the question is about the shoe.Is it so loose that I can go on"added Daisy."

"It is too loose to go on but I can fix that easily for you"the Irisman said."I carry a spare shoe or two myself.They wouldn't fit your pony, for they are too large.put I8 I've got a hammer and nails in my saddle bags.I rode about a bit scouting on the enemy here and there, and my nag often goes and casts's a shoe, so I go prepared.I'll have this one tightened up in a jiffy."And as he toiled he seemed to love to be as close to Daisy as possible.This man was crazy over children, and had the peculiar belief that God was in Daisy. Tim and Daisy watched him interestedly.The man was very capable, and it is often the custom of all christian cavalry soldiers of both sides to carry with them spare shoes, nails and a hammer to reset a shoe of their mattth mounts when far from a smithshop.In less than a minute the shoe was as tight as necessary, and Daisy could again mount her pony and ride on.

"We are a thousand times much obliged to you sir"Said Daisy to Mic-Cann."It was quite quite a job, wasn't it?"

"Well yes, in one way.put to your boyfriend not me.But it's terribly warm and I think after that we are entitled to a little refreshment. What do you say?"

For a moment Tim and Daisy did not understand.

"Refreshment Tim repeated."There's no place around here, where you can get anything toeat or drink.No place short of going to Chamberlane and that's too dangerous.Even thoughwe may be hungry enough for that."

"Hungry.Goodness not.I'm not hungry myself.I wasn't talking about anything to eat and if you're carrying letters you can't delay for that. I meant something to drink."

"Oh "said Tim a queer sort of feeling coming over him."Well there's no ice cream sodas places around here either, and Daisy and her sisters don't care for that." and he smiled.

"Ice cream soda! Heavens no.I'm talking about some other drink what we Irishmen drink here. And I don't need any one to wait on me either.I carry it with me for its safer in case of emergency"and he laughed in what he evidently meant to be taken in a more friendly fashion than before."Here have a smile with me the two of you."he went on producing a flask."It's stuff I can recommend."he added."It will do the both of to you good after toiling useless over that shoe. Come on help yourselves, and then I'll take what you leave, though there's plenty in that bottle, and more where that came from."

He held out a dark big flask to Tim.

Tim backed away and shook his head.

"No much obliged."he said firmly.

"What."The man said in real surprise"you don't drink that either?"

"No "tim replied, while Daisy seemed alarmed."It wouldn't do in our business you understand.Besides we don't drink anyhow."

"Oh Heavens.one good draught wouldn't hutt you. After going through what you did you two need a good drink and it's cold too.

"Perhaps we do"said Tim with a smile, wiping the sweat from his forehead,"but all us Abbiennians do not want that sort of drink..There's a cool spring just a few steps on and its the coldest and best waterfor miles around.We are going to have some of that, and give the ponies some too.Your horse too would appreciate it, believe."

"Humph.Water is allright on many occassions but when I got this I don't care always for water."was the answer."Then you won't drink Coca Cola with me."?

"Coca Cola?"

"Yes. what is the matter with that.It's better than water and cooler."

"I--I---thought---though"stammered Daisy;"---

"I get the point"laughed the Irishman"It's my fault for not thinking to explain before. You thought it was Brandy or Whiskey or other booze.I don't drink that Devils water"he added fiercely." I'm no fool.It's Coca Cola .I retain it in this big flask as it holds a lot.put booze.Ha.He. No wonder you wouldn't accept."

Tim did not stay long enough to see further what the man did but walked to the spring with the two horses and Daisy..Her pony did not show any trace of lameness now for which both the Vivian Coil and Tim were glad, as they both had a hard ride ahead of them. As the children were both getting themselves a drink, and letting their ponies get some from a pool below the spring(bell to ring) they heard the sound of a galloping horse, and looked up in surprise. Their first thought as that Mic-Cann had ridden off in haste after having helped himself to a drink of coca cola from the flask, but somewhat to their surprise, they saw the man who had removed the stone from the pony's hoof still standing besides his horse. (This was the man who had when a prisoner of the enemy told a number of Glandelinian generals in "Plain United States to go to--well you know what I mean only its too hot just now to mention it.) The galloping came from another rider who seemed in haste.He waved his hand to Tim and Daisy and cried;;

"Wait. old on.Wait."

"Well I wonder what's up now."mused the boyscout."He seems to want us both."

"I was afraid I wouldn't succeed in catching you two brave children."exclaimed the young soldier who had ridden up in such haste.Tim recognized him as lieutenant Mat Martenez one of the lieutenants of the military Corps of Signal Stations.

"Do you want us both?"Daisy demanded.

"Yes.The general who delivered to you the letters for general Aronburg for got to give you some important military mail stuff when you rode out tward the battle lines a while ago.The christian army is in a bad situationnow, and the general sent me to see if couldn't catch you.He wants you to ride back tward Sc Sacramento Hills department, if you will, and get the stuff he forgot to give you.."

"Why in the world didn't he let you bring it?"Asked Daisy"not much relishing the ride back.It would delay her still further, and she had enough valieble valuable military mail in her possession nowwithout wishing to be carrying any more.

"The general said he didn't wish to have me carry it, as I'm not suppose to do that.Besides he wants you to reciept for it.But if I couldn't catch up to you I guess then he intended to hold the stuff over untill your next trip."

"Is it so important that I must retrace my steps."demanded Daisy.

"The general saysConcentinian Aronburg must have it right away or the battle is lost."

"Oh well as long as it is only a ride for a mile on the backward course I suppose we better do it for the sake of your fathers army"Tim reasoned to Daisy who appeared as if she was going to refuse."Then to the rider,"You would not have caught us only Daisy's pony went lame and we were delayed getting the stone out."He said."This Irish gentleman helped me."

"Oh it wasn't much."said Mic-Cann nodding to Mat Martinez.The latter appeared to know him well for he gave him the most friendly greeting.

"Yes I believe we'll ride back and get the other."Daisy finally decided.It had come to her mind that perhaps the forgotteon packages contained something very important that general Concentinian Aronburg would badly need.They might have been sent by special courier by Emperor Vivian, and not in the regular bags.

"It would be best for us to go."Insisted Tim"Even though we would be delayed."

"And if it is too late, and if they are the letters I'm believing they are,We'll have to be deadfully careful."Daisy Decided mentally.

"Well I'm glad I caught you."Martinez said, as he turned his horse about. "Yes it would have been too bad if you had had your fast ride for nothing."the boyscout said."Well my dear little Daisy Flower, we'll hit the back trail again for a little while."And Tim swung himself up into the saddle after having helped her to remount. Then somewhat to the surprise of the two, but no regret, when Mic-Cann mounted, he also turned his horses head in the direction where they were going.

"Are you going on that direction too?"TIM asked him.

"Yep.I guess I might as well."

"But I thought youwere going elsewhere as you said."

"So I was.But my instinct seems to tell me sooner or laterfor you two or any one of you things may not go well and you're wise if you allow me to accompany you there.And there's an eating place near general Turnures army isn't there."

"Yes"answered Martinez himself."ut it isn't a very good one."

"Oh well when a man is good and hungry he can't be too particular.I guess I can stand it."

The four therefore rode on the return together, and in a short short time had reached the signal station some distance to the rear of the bloody battle that was raging. They heard news that a portion of Emperor Viviana army was on a retreat not being able to withstand the "storm"of the enemy, and the man of the signal station who handed Daisy a large sealed envelope expressed regret at having to bring her on the retoin.

"It was all my fault too."the operator of the signal station said."I ought to have remembered about this special env envelope, for they told me there was some special hurry about it to get to you.put I was sort of put out by the news of the enemy threatening to win a victory, and therefore it slipped my mind/ 261.,, I'm glad you've got it now."

Daisy gave it the "Once over". The envelope might contain letters though it was not large enough to contain maps of any size. And to her surprise, it was addressed addressed not to Concentinian Avonburg, but to her sisters at Camp No 1. She had been so sure that it was some valuable news for general Concentinian Avonburg that for a moment she almost expressed her astonishment. But some others were standing by, and she felt it much better and safer to remain still. Besides the letters to be sent or carried to general Concentinian Avonburg might be in her regular military bags which she carried on her saddle, those bags not having been opened since she recieved them from the general....

"Well I guess dearest Princess, now you are all right."The courier went on."you can get on your way Princess.I won't have to send for you again."

"I hope not"she answered."We're late enough as it is."

"I'm sorry Princess.The battle is the fault."

"Well it couldn't be helped I suppose.I don't want to make a perilous trip that may be too dangerous for my safty if I can help it, not for myself, but for my sisters."

"Do you and your sisters often do that?"asked Mic-Cann.

"Only occassionally."But since my boy friend Tim was help o up once,I don't care much for this sort of duties."

"Were you really held up my boy?"Mic-Cann was very much surprised and interested.

"Yes"Tim said, but he did not go into details for he and Daisy had no time.

"I say for Heavens sake since I thought of it"exclaimed Mic-Cann as they were about to ride off again."It wouldn't be a bad idea for you to have a lachsmith examine that shoe I fixed.I did the best I could, but I can't guarentie that it will stay on after what the stone did.There's a smithy acrosse the way."

"I believe I will do that"Daisy sayd.

"Yes it won't be any joke if your horse casts a shoe when you get on the mountain mountain trail."added Tim. I'll go with you to the shop."

"The smith was busy, but decided to do it right away when he saw it was a little Daisy vivian, but said it would be some ten minutes before it was completed and also declared she came in time.The shoe was coming loose badly.

"Say wh l whileyou two are waiting."sugge ted Mic-Cann who had followed the two children over to the smiths shop"why not come and have a bite to eat with me.You appear very hungry though you say nothing about it.you wouldn't drink Coca cola with me, but you can't object to eating.I'll pay the bill."

He seemed so much in earnest about it, and so friendly, that Tim and Daisy really beginning to feell so hungry and to be nearly getting f l faint did not like to refuse, and yet didn't like to impose on his hospitality either. After all Mic-Cann had been very helpful to them, and the matter of coca cola was alright.Had they understood it was that in the first place they would not have declined.

"I am very hungry"Daisy began"But we don't care to impose on you and--and--"

"Oh well come and have something anyhow"suggested Mic-Cann."I'm not stingy and I would do anything for you and your beautiful little angel sisters.It won't take longand by the time we're through with our dinner, your pony will be ready for you.Come along."

"All right"Tim agreed, and he and Daisy followed their new acquaintance acrosse the Company Streetto a small army restaurant.Tim ordered a number of sandwitches and a cup of coffee, Daisy ordered some milk and cheese sandwitches and a dish of peaches, but Mic-Cann ordered a more substantial meal.

"And we'll have ours in a hurry if you don't mind"Tim said to the waiter."I've got to get back on the road with my friend."

"Have it right away"was the answer..

Tim sipped his coffee, and ate the one sandwitches.He was waiting for the beverage to cool somewhat before taking the swain remainder, when Mic-Cann nodding in the direction of the entrance to the restaurant, tward which the children had their backs said;

"Is that a friend of yours?He seems to be searching for some one."

Daisy and Tim turned.A man was standing in the door way of the eating place his eyes roving about as though looking for somebody but Daisy and Tim did not know him, though the stranger just then noticing Daisy gave her a most friendly smile. Mic-Cann had turned his head that way too, and while the three were noticing the stranger, a hand three times slipped something into the cups of each.

The three finally set to their meal again, and soon Tim said;

"We'll finish now and get along.We don't want to delay long.If you want to come along I'll be glad to have you too."

"Well good luck to you."returned the man."I'll stay and finish my meal and trail you later.Glad to have met you.If you're in any trouble I'mm be on hand."

Fortunately as they said good bye and went out the man himself ate so much of what he bought that he didn't even so much as sip his coffee.Tim said "much obliged to you for helping Daisy with her horse, and for this feed."

"I don't call that me much of a feed.Leave me the checke waiter.Well I'll trail you and come if you need help"he called with a wave of his hand as Tim and Daisy went out.Daisy found her pony's shoe had been properly tightened, and the animal was now ready for her.Tim paid the bill to the Smith, and both jumped up to the saddle and rode on through the town again.

"We'll have to recover lost time."whispered the lad to the little girl, after seeing to it the bags were securely fastened, and that she had the sealed envelope which the thad rudden on the retrace to get."Yes Daisy we'll gain up time so that in case we do have to go on a dangerous trip we won't be delayed too long."

"Queer chap"that Mic-Cann"he mused to himself "It was good of him to blow us to a meal But I can't say I love such an eating place."

"I now what you are thinking of "said Daisy and I agree with you. That was about the poorest coffee I've had in a long while though seldom I ever care for it.Whew.The bitterness of it is in my mouth yet.I'll wash it out with a good draught of water when we get to the spring again Tim.I wonder what's Mic-Canns business is, and where he is headed for.He must be pretty hungry to order so much eating stuff."

If Daisy or Tim could have glanced to their rear they would have been surprised to si see the Mic-Cann hastily leave the resturant soome after they themselves had come out shooting at a man who had been caught trying to put something into his coffee. And the same Mic-Cann left most of the dinner untouched. The man escaped him.

Suspicious right away that the coffee of Daisy andT im had been drugged, he tossed the waiter a tip, jumped into his saddle and rode off to follow the two. But not in the direction they had taken but a cut off path so as to intercept them and catch them before the drug began to take its effect. Fortunately for Tim Daisy being Angel possessed was not affected by by the drug or Tim would have been up against it. Daisy too had only taken a sip or two anyway as usually she and her sisters are no not coffee lovers."he drank three glasses and a half of milk instead.

"My my Daisy dear"said Tim talking to her as he galloped along"You're right that coffee certainly was bitter beyond anything I ever tased tasted.But it seems to be getting worse--that taste in my mouth.I believe it's giving me a headache too.I certainly do feel queer Daisy dear--sort of dizzy and something like darkness seems to settle before my eyes.It's not getting Dark is it Daisy.?"

"No indeed"she answered looking at him strangely.

"Maybe its this awful awful heat.I'll cool off at the spring"he said."But I tell you Daisy Flower I sure do feel queer."And Tim passed his hand acrosse his forehead..

Nearing the spring, where he and Daisy had taken a drink before that day, Tim was about to dismount to get some cooling water, but just then such a strange feeling of the loss of strength and dizziness suddenly came over him, and Daisy seeing his white face and realizing his condition, and suspecting that sotthinb something, had been wrong with the coffee, for when she had swallowed it she had discovered a taste that she had never noticed before in coffee she said;

"Don't get off your horse Tim, please don't for Heavens sake.If you do you won't be able to get up again."

"Well then I won't he murmured weakly.But Daisy flower what in---in --the world is the matter with me I wonder?"

"I do not know for surewshe answered,"but it comes from that coffee you had."

"And you drank it too Daisy.Oh if it happens to you too---"

"I doubt if it will"she answered decidedly."When I don't like don't like the taste of anything I'm suspicious and don't chace it."

"You--You--don't chace it."

"I meant I don't take any chances."

Then ill as he felt himself becoming like a flash an idea came to Tim. Then too the meaning of it came to Daisy instantly.

"You've been drugged."she said."Something was put into our coffee by some one when we had our heads turned. It was some body we didn't see."

"I believe--so"said Tim hoarsely"Some glandelinian-- spy.That was his game. He drugged our coffee that time when Mic-Cann had his turn around.It wasn't him because he couldn't do it and be turned around, and he paid more attention to the stranger at the door than we did. Somebody unseen by the three of us put some drug into our coffee.How much did you swallow Daisy."

"I took a few sips but the taste made me spit it out"said Daisy.

For a moment both thought of the strange and desperate scheme that had been played on them, and it made them both so angry and furious, that Tim succeeded in fighting off the feeling of dizziness and weakness. Daisy dismounted and brought him some cool water from the spring, but swallowing the water did not do him any good.For the feeling came to him again with increasing distress.

"That was the game"He murmured to Daisy scarcely able to even see anything now.

"I wonder if they doped the coffee of Mic-Cann too"said Daisy to herself.

Some spy must have watched his chance when Mic-Cann urged us to take something to eat with him, and while our heads were turned put some drug into our coffee. Thanks to the angels I didn't swallow any. If Mic-Cann did he won't be able to keep his appointment with us. No wonder the coffee tasted bitter and queer. What a simpleton poor Tim was to swallow any of it, but he did not know."

Tim to her horror was now reeling in the saddle. She sensed that something was wrong with her friend, and stopped the horses though there was tears in her eyes and a tool of apprehension in her face.

"No, don't stop us please don't Daisy dear. Let's go on. Let's go on." Urged Tim."

"Oh what in the world are we going to do?" cried Daisy who was abstracted. "We are on a lonely trail, with this valuable letters for general Arunburn and the the important parcel for my sisters. That is what that spy counted on Tim dear. He thought we's three would fall by the wayside and then he could come up and get what he wants when we are unconscious. But Heaven be praised I didn't swallow any of the coffee. I dont like coffee anyhow. Neither do my sisters. But what is he it wants. Those important letters of course."

"That is what he is after." Gasped Tim. "He's drugged me. He no doubt intended to give us time to fall in a faint, and ten he'd come up and get the mail. But Daisy I have not got no mail. You have it in that little bag that isn't opened. He must have found that out some way, and have been on the watch for us. If you didn't take any of the coffee and feel alright why not go on ahead Daisy and save yourself from being robbed. If I go senseless I won't be able to protect you anyhow."

"No" said Daisy fiercely, "I won't. I can't deserted you. What are you thinking of. I run off and leave you. He won't get those letters. I'll not let him rob me of the mail and I'll protect you too"

"But a little girl defending a boy. Why paisy it's ---" Tim tried to put some fierce energy into his voice but he couldn't continue further and it died away faintly.

"How can we stop him!" Cried Daisy desperately. "If you fall off your horse or have to get off and lay on the ground unconscious I can't go on. "You are almost fainting already. Oh Dear God help us. I've got to do something for him. That dirty G a G landelinian snake of a dragger. I've got to do something! What But what. He can't stay in the saddle much longer. I'll have to transfer to his horse with my mail and ride while bringing my along."

She stopped the two.

"Let's go on Daisy. Let's go on little flower." he protested.

"We will but I'll have to ride with you to hold you on" she said almost whimpering for she was terribly upset that such a predicament had to come upon him.

"Can you really manage to hold me" he protested. "I am much bigger and heavier then you are. And if I left the saddle I would not have strength enough to get up again." he reasoned with her."

"But I I I've got to do something" said Daisy as she fastened her horse to the other other behind. "I've got to do something."

As she made the preparations she murmured the words over and over again until they rang in his numbedy brain as the refrain of some song, and he imagined an angel was singing to him. Daisy was terribly distressed and did not understand the situation at all. Even Tims horse could understand something was wrong for he whinnied once or twice. But Tim was too ill to answer him or Daisy even just now or pat him caressingly as he always did.

"We've got to do something" she said "As she now sat in the saddle behind Tim and held him with one arm. "We have got todo something to save the letters. This is terrible." Tim was too ill to even hardly whisper. Daisy tried to listen and to ascertain is the Glandelinian spy who had played this trick on Tim was coming behind on the trail, either singly or with a company of followers, for she realized that the Glandelinian spy would follow to reap the fruits of his daring military deed, and yet too may not even with her alone to cope with may not be bold enough to come singly. Violet and her sisters even alone never was afraid to fight five or six at close quarters and the enemy had soon enough discovered that. But there was no sound save the echoes of the hoof beats of their own horses. It was getting on toward the afternoon. Despite the fact that she was holding him desperately with both arms she was far from strong enough to hold him long, and Tim was reeling in the saddle now in spite of her, and if he fell he would pull her off with him. He could hardly hold himself upright even with her holding on to him. Even Even in spite of that once or twice he nearly fell out, but clutched the pummel in time. And also once or twice the pony stopped but Daisy urged him on. She understood her only hope lay in either reaching her sisters headquarters, or in encountering a christian scout patrol who would see their plight and come to their rescue. But there was not much chance of this last, for there were no patrols in this localities for it wasn't necessary. Then as she thought of what it would mean for her to lose this important parcel and the letters if the spy secured them. A desperate plan came into her mind.

"Why not have Tim Dismount and we can hide the horses and mail and probably I could lay in ambush for my persuers" she thought.

But then come the realization that may be fatal for her if she got the worst of it. Then another thought came into her mind suddenly.

"I'll tie ourselves both to the saddle" she whispered. "I've got plenty of rope for that. I'll lash ourselves fast. Then if poor Tim does get unconscious, which I'm afraid is going to happen, I won't fall out. And when I tie ourselves fast and poor Tim is unconscious I'll go on and carry the mail--and him and if I'm assaulted by Glandelinians I'll use his hand grenades. That'll stop the crazy gray reached soldiers. They call me and my sisters Gutter snipes. Well I'll be one and strike like one. I've got to bring the letter and parcel safe through to Vlocet, and my sisters in their headquarters, and the horse will have go have to go on without my guidance. The horse also knows the trail, and I've got to bring the mail through. It's the only way to save it."

Tim also felt it was useless any longer to try to fight off the effects of the drug, for it was too powerful and strong for him, and as he realized he had been given a heavy dose, and could hardly see now, he readily consented to Daisys plan... Tim always carried with him a light but strong rope, for often he had to tie military mail pouches on the saddle behind him. With hands that trembled, Daisy used the rope, managing to pass it about their legs and under the saddle girths passing it in four or five turns. The made themselves both fast in the saddle, but especially Tim so he wouldn't fall out. Then when the last knot had been tied and made secured, she let Tim slowly fall over in a forward position on his ponys neck, Telling him better let the drug have its way, that she'll bring him and the mail safely through.....

"Now I surely must go on" she herself said feebly. "I must go on to my sisters at the Log Cabin. It's my only chance. I will have to force our two horses to run now as they never ran before! I've got to escape with these important letters. I with the help of God and His Blessed Mother must continue on. Please Dear Blessed Lord, if Thy Will don't fail me in this emergency or it will be all up with I and Tim and also my sisters sisters. Please Dear God if It is Thou Thy Will don't fail me now."

While she was saying this prayer, Tims eyes had closed, and he felt himself going off into unconsciousness. Then the brave little Princess urged the horse forward full speed. Somehow too the pony also must have understood, and Daisy also understood that all haste must be made on the trail. She was carrying very important letters and mail, and she therefore urged the horse forward at top speed on this occassion. And so with the unconscious form and Daisy too strapped to he the saddle, with Tims head pillowed on the horses neck Daisy increased the speed Of of the pony with the purpose to foil the plans of the Glandelinians plotters. On and on the two horses galloped over the hilly trail, but as Daisy still partly held Tim he did not sway from side to side as expected, but remained safe because of the holding holding ropes.. It was about this time that the spy who had safly escaped the shots of Mic-Cann, and who by a roundabout road had reached the trail leading from Chamberlane, to Big Gidiknool glanced at his watch in a secluded place, where he was waiting and said to himself;

"Well this time the drug out to be having its effects. I guess I'll go on and find what it did, and in deed I ought to get the letters and that parcel without any trouble at all. I certainly dosed their coffee good and strong." and he smiled in an evil fashion. Springing into the saddle he urged his horse along the trail. He he did not hurry, for he wanted to give the drug time to go through its full and stupyifying effects. This Glandelinian spy was a different sort of worker for his cause from the other Glandelinian spies. He did not believe in in their rough and ready me methods, but instead used sneaky means------such as powerful drugs, that were often far more successful.

Had Daisy swallowed the coffee maybe he might have been successful, and then maybe not.

"This sort of holding up these christian couriers doesn't pay when you can get the same results without attracting so much attention and taking such risks." He murmured as he rode on. "Now I'm wondering if I should secure that last parcel they gave to that little Vivian Girl Princess. There is no use searching that boy with her I only drugged him too so that he couldn't defend her even if the drug did not effect her which most likely I'm suspecting it won't. The Christian dogs say she is angel possessed and also her sisters and I almost believe it for what they so often escaped from without even being rescued. But as to the last parcel I don't believe any military maps will be inthat dough. They must be in the big. I hope I have a key that will fit the lock. I don't want to cut the bags if I can help it. If I can come up when both of the little Christian hellhounds are senseless, pick the locks, and get what I want I can search the poches or pouches again, and they won't found it out that they have been robbed for some hours. That That will give me that much more time to get away and secure safty in delivering them to Manley.

If it is also possible I'll carry the two of them within the Glandelinian encampments as prisoners also. Yes that's my best plan." And as the Glandelinian spy rode along he examined several small leys which he took from a pocket. He had made his plans carefully. However it was not until the Glandelinian spy had reached a point close to the spring, that he began to be at all surprised and concerned. Up to then he had felt sure of his desperate work.

"Why indeed I ought to come upon them before this long ago" he reasoned, wonderingly. "That dug I gave them would surely put a strong man out of business, let alone two little brats as they. They also ought to have fallen off and become unconscious before this. I wonder if I did put drug into their coffee."

He examined the drug bottle, and then went over in his mind the different points of his plot. It seemed perfect beyond measure. But then where in the world were his two victims who should have been lying unconscious by the road...?

"Somethings wrong!" The spy exclaimed as he passed beyond the spring. He glanced around and searched with his eyes in every direction. The trail and the road was very dusty but he could see no sign of a boy having dismounted or any indications that the lad had fallen and gotten up to the saddle again. And Daisy wore something on her shoes which prevents her from showing whether she got off or not, and so there was no evidence that she had dismounted either.

"Somethings wrong." the spy repeated." aybe that little girl brat didn't get the effect of the drug through magic because of angel possession. Maybe oh I forgot. Those Vivian Girl Princesses don't drink coffee. Confound the luck she spoiled my plan." Then he put spurs to his horse (on the run) and galloped down the trail toward where the two had gone... He intended to follow.

"Tim and Daisy is very late isn't they!" asked Jannie herself as she sat with Violet, and her five sisters in the room. Violet had finished her sewing of a small rip in Jack's coat, and stopped at Jannie made the remark.

"Well you understand Jannie dear she and Tim had to ride out and get the important letters from the generals in charge of the disabled portion of the embattled christian line." replied Violet, as Jennie herself was putting some entries in her ~~military~~ military datty dairy book." And perhaps they had to go much further than the messenger said. There's been plenty of time though."

"Well they are sure late though" Jannie repeated. "I hope they don't have to go on a night trip to general Concentinian Aronburgs army. It's dangerous for sure."

"So do I hope it is not so" Jennie murmured, as she thought of the time Tim and Violet had been held up by glandelinian scouting parties. "It is not likely that she would though under no conditions. You know jannie dear Penrud said to every one of us not to do anything too dangerous nor go too near the foe lines or even the battle lines to day, and under no conditions whatever. He would himself get all the information we need for us."

"You can never tell when some most important matter will come in though."

"Said Violet herself after a pause during which she had gone to the window and Jannie with her to peer down the road in the direction from which Tim and Daisy would come." And isn't Daisy expecting something important from Father for general Concentinian Aronburg..?"

"Yes, and that is the main thing I am worrying about." confessed Jennie herself. "If those letters come in Daisy sure will want to ride off with them to the general at once, before it gets night. And she don't be able to do it. And we won't know when the messages do arive, untill the bugs come here and for any of my dear sisters opens them."

"Well during battles it is sure a most dangerous duty, this military pony express." sighed Joice.

"It wouldn't be so dangerous if it wasn't for those dangerous spies, and the other glandelinians who want to secure the letters" Hettie said her eyes flashing.

"It mades me so mad when I think of what an unfair advantage those glandelinians try to take of us little girls that I wish I were a Blengiglomenean Creature so I could help you all disperse them."

"My. My. Laughed Joice. "That would be a good one if you were. But I guess we are all better off inside here, than out on a mountain trail during this battle."

"Yes I suppose so. That is all we little girls are good for anyway, to sit wait and worry."

"Any one dear Hettie would believe you're twice as old as you are." said Angeline with a smile at her youngest sister. Hard is that he and Daisy coming?"

They alll started toward the door, but with a sigh of disappointment, Catherine said it;

"No it's only Jean Saunders."

The girlscout leader entered with her customary nice smile.

Daisy and Tim not here yet!" she demanded with some surprise..

"Oh I wish you wouldn't say that please" Catherine exclaimed and her voice was not her usual one.

"Why what's the matter!" Jean asked in great surprise and some alarm.

"Oh it causes me and my sisters to be so nervous, when any one speaks about Daisy, and Tim not returning." It is --just--- as if ---something--- had happend to them." she faltered.

"Oh goodness me what could happen to them!" asked Jean seeing with her sudden Americanian quickness" which way the wind blew and felt sure there was some thing wrong at that. They never worried that something was not right somewhere.

"Nothing of course Catherine went on." They just rode out toward my fathers army which just now is being worsted to get some news and letters stating to general Aronburg that the christian army is breaking down. Or maybe Daisy must have stayed with her father and Tim must have ridden on to deliver the message intending afterwards to come here and stay here all right. He is crazy about us, and I guess I don't blame him. He sure loves our company."

"Of course he does and who wouldn't" agreed Joice. But to herself she added-

"I do wish Tim and Daisy would come."

There was nothing to do however, save wait, and wait most patiently, and that is often the hardest sort of duty and work as it is certainly the most nervous especially when you fear a real loved one and a dear friend is in grave danger. Violet, and her sisters busied themselves about the room, Jannie helping and asking and the advice of Violet or Joice or any one of her sisters on certain matters connected with the reports, she had to send in to various Christian officials.

"I suppose there'll be another bogus inspector along some time to day to go over our accounts." Jennie ventured to say to Joice.

"Perhaps" Joice admitted." And if any more bogus ones comes on the scene--well not let them fool us this time--and at that time I hope Tim or Penrud is here."

"Yes, Tim injured that chap finely" said Jennie. "They say" he'll never recover from the bullet wound nor his companion. Serves them right though."

And so they waited for the return of Tim and Daisy.

Meanwhile what of Daisy and poor Tim. The brave girl was urging the horse forward much faster still holding with one arm her senseless burden. She directed the horse on the easiest parts of the road, causing the horse to avoid the places where he might stumble and fall, for she realized that she had to sure use a guiding and careful hand now. Anyhow she sure knew what to do and she was very intelligent for her age. On and on galloped the two animals going on the best speed they could, though the road was hard and steep in places. Suddenly from the road in the rear of her, Daisy heard the sound of galloping. She glanced toward the rear over her left shoulder. Another rider or riders was coming. Who it might be she wasn't sure if it was Mic- Cann she would be happy as he could give her aid but if it were Glandelinians. But she had always trained herself never to let any persons she wasn't sure she could trust pass her or catch up to her, and not only that though she was the next youngest of the Vivian Girls, she was against the enemy the most fiercest and most savage and in a close fight she often had been able to outclass six Glandelinian soldiers single handed. If it was only one persuer well he was a fool. But she never did allow a person she did now know to pass her. It was a always a matter of necessity for often she believed those behind her especially coming fast were persuers. And she increased the pace of the horse by flourishing her little riding whip in the air to make it snap.

And then at a level place on the road, and was one that was long and straight, where a good view could be had ahead, there swung into view behind the two fugitives a horse carrying a man, who was urging his horse on with whip, spur and voice. He gave a start at seeing the two riders.

"So that's why I didn't find the brats as I had expected to do" Exclaimed the Glandelinian spy for it was he who was galloping behind the unconscious form of Tim, and the dangerous little angel child. "Through that Vivian Girl who is not out, he is able to maintain to his horse, but surely he must be all in. Confound those Vivian Girl Guttersnipes anyhow. I'm sorry I didn't pour the drug into her mil but I thought sure she would drink the coffee instead. She's very dangerous they say, and I'm all alone but we simply must get that information about what General Concentinian Aronburg intends to do and what her sisters are to do too, and this was the only plan I thought would work. I wish too those confounded ~~angle~~ angels possessing that brat would mind their own business. I'm risking my life in doing this just as much as they do. Confound this spying business anyhow. But as much as I hate to say it, that little Vivian Girl Guttersnipe has got grit and spunk to ride on holding an unconscious boy in front of her. She's at some advantage because she couldn't fight me in that position so I'll do my best to overtake her."

From where he was the spy could not see the device of ropes, Angeline had used to give herself more easy chance to hold onto Tim and to prevent him from falling and pulling her off the saddle with him. The Glandelinian spy merely thought that Daisy was holding Tim or that Tim was only partly under the influence of the drug, and that she was saving him by clinging with her arms about his body to hold him up.

"I wonder if I can ride the two brats down." mused the desperate spy."I've just got to that's all.It's dangerous I suppose to tackle that little wild cat but I'll have to do it that's all and if she worsts me my comrades cannot say I didn't try it. Besides I can see now also that I let them both gett too much start, but I sure did believe it would find them both senseless beside the road. And the interference of that confounded foreigner caused me delay too.I hope he doesn't persude me for he's too strong a foreign devil to fight with alone."

But the spy reckoned witnout his host. Daisy was not going to allow him to gain up with her.At first understanding he was the spy who had drugged their drugged their coffee she had a tempestation to stop and instead of reailng fighting either capture him or make him run for his life which she really could have done, but she was alarmed over Tims condition, and besides the going was far better now, and the little pony had the advantage of not carrying as much weight as did the larger horse.Moreover her horse was naturally fleeter.So though the spy urged his own steed as he had never urged it before, the gap between the fugitives and himself did not close up.In fact it really did widen, and when the spy saw that he became desperate.He was tempted to shoot, but suppose he missed and she returned the fire. And she never misses.

"Who would believe those two desperate little gutter spies could beat me this way?"he complined to himself bitter."No human being , I thought could c retain that their senses after that dose I put into their coffee, and I'm sure I saw her swallow it, and I even put some of it into her milk too I now it did and she drank it all too.I put more drug into her milk than I did into her coffee and she swallowed the milk to the last drop. and it ain't affecting her in the least.It would not have done them any permament harm, though I would be sorry it didn't for my life is just as precious as their's and they're spies too to do this messenger duty against us and bringing ruin to our armies.I'll have to go through desperate measures with them.If they were close enough I'd give them some of my gas bomb grenades.They'd sure die then and horribly of suffocat ion which could not be remendied.But They're too far for me to throw one. Confound those angels that possess that girl.If they would only leave her and mind their own business .Why don't the devils drive them off.Can't I suppose as a Crazy Christian bible says.But why in the world don't he at least fall off.I wish I could dare fire.But if I miss and she fires at me I'm done for.I'm afraid of that little Amazon and I have a right to be. She's got the fury of angels in her and that causes her to be so dangerous."

It was notuntill sometime later thay by glancing through a field glass as he rode on that the spy learned why the boy didn't fall off, and his anger almost then turned to admiration.For as firm as he was for his cause and a wicked cause too he had once been a good man, and he could admire grit and fine qualities in others, though he could not exercise them himself...

"I've got to get those two little Christian dogs soon or we'll be plump into their headquarters department and the child scout camp of those dangerous Legorians, and then the jigg will be up I fear"said the spy fiercely. They "My officers will say I bungled the job, and they'll discharge me from the service as spy and scout and try other crazy men for spies I suppose.For those letters are in the bag she's got and we must have them of the battle is lost.Even delaying their delivery won't do me no good.A delay in their delivery will be better for that crazy Dog Emperor Vivian for concentingan Aronborg will hit us like a tornado."

But as he galloped on for another quarter of an hour mile it became increas ingly evident, that the horse ridden by Daisy was not to be overhauled, and too he was suspicious for now he saw she was brandishing her long lance and glancing with a sort of mischivious look in herface tward him several times. And the louder the noffin hoofbeats his horse sounded, the faster her pluckly little horse ran, though of course he was now tiring.But he was game all the way through a ndnever would give up while he had an ounce of strength in him.

"Well there is only one way to end it and I'll chance it."said the spy aloud. He drew his revolver."I hate to shoot a fine little pony as that"the man went on "but I've got to stop him somehow, and I'm afraid I can't ride him down.It's the only way."

"Carefully he aimed, and was about to pull the trigger, but a shot came suddenly from Daisy and he was empty handed.

"Confound that little possessed fool."he hissed."It's those angels in her that made her do that so sudden.If I could have slew her confounded pony he would have went over, and the two little brats may have been slain too.But because of those confounded possession angels I can do it. he plump struck the pistol out of my hand and didn't seem to aim either. Everything goes against me.If I can ride them down they'll have to get away I suppose but I can't do anything as catching an angel possessed brat like that, and I'll tell my General so.I can't fight angels."

Then to his horse he exclaimed;

"Now you brute, I'm sure going to make you run.//

10-145

He whipped his own horse cruelly, and the animal in terror did respond with a burst of speed as into the very company streets went the two fugitive horses with the one unconscious burden.The race was almost run, and it was high time for the pony was all flagged out.Straight through the Company Streets they went bearing unconscious Tim.The Glandelinian horseman however seeing no body in the company street continued on, intending nowvto capture them as the horses were slowing down, believing Daisy was at an disadvantage. She surely was at a disadvantage------not/.

"I won't give it up for I cannot do it and go home and tell my General" he muttered.I must get the letters some way.They are right nearly in front of that cabin, and lots of things can happen in my favor on the road.I'll chance it in spite of the meddlesome angels and if I capture her in spite of them I'll tell my followers and they'll believe It is something new, for capturing her will be capturing the angels..Reaching the rail where Tim always tied the horse at one side of the cabin, Daisy stopped her pony. But she saw the spy coming headon. she suddenly wheeled her horse leveled her long lance and with a defiant laugh dashed pell mell at him.He was forced to defend himself fiercely and parried and thrusts with his own long lance.He was a powerful man but he could not hold out again her, and in a final bang together of their lances his went flying in cart wheel performance across the road and stuck point on into the bark of a tree,. He cursed and drew his sabre and made for her like a wild insane man. But Daisy was good at the sabre, always had been but far more expert now since her lessons from Tim, and seeing the result, he wheeled his horse, and before she could turn or sense on what he was doing he urged his horse over a fence, and raced across the field as fast as the horse could go. she would have fired, but her pistol during the fray got wedged into the holster, and when she finally drew it he was out of range, and glad indeed that he had escaped so easily.

A goodly number of child scouts had ran forward at sight of the fray and were astonished at Daisy easy victory though she and Tim were tied to the horse.

"Comes on them"the Glandelinian spy said as being softly away he reined in his exhausted horse, and swung down the trail riding slowly."She turned on me like a wild cat sure enough. she's some fighter despite her size and a good strong brat too stronger than me it seems.It's those angels.I ought to know no one can lick an angel."

Daisys horse now had spread his legs far apart, for he was trembling trembling from weariness.

"Oh it's Daisy who fought with that man "cried Jennie who with her sisters had seen the fight having glanced from the windos window to see the meaning of the galloping and all the excitement and of the fight and strange cries."It's poor Tim with her. Something has happened."she faltered as she saw the uncon scious form in the saddle."Oh sisters, Jannie.He--He-s dead."

Jannie and violet and her sisters were soon at the side of the unconscious unconscious rider, while Daisy was now swiftly unroping herself and Tim.

"No he isn't dead"Daisy shouted above the hubbub."But he's in a bad condition.I and he were drugged, but the drug in swallowed in the milk didn't work on me. though I do feel at times a little giddy but that is wes ring off now and I feel fine.NHere"she added to some of the scouts,"Some of you give me and my sister a hand, after I loosen him up, and bring him inside.Never mind me I'm all right and not even scratched.Poor lad. He has had a hard time."

"Did the soldier attack you!"asked Jennie.

"No I did.I wanted to capture him as it was he who drugged us.But he got away before I knew he would ride over the fance.I couldn't follow that method with Tim in this condition.The horse would stumble."

While they carried poor Tim inside, Daisy had dismounted and recoiled the rope and put it in its proper place.They laid the boy on a couch.Jennie and Juice used what simple means and remendies they had at hand to rouse him from his unconscious state.Daisy then brought the exhausted horses, Tims and her own to the military stable, for both steeds were in need of much rest.

"What was it Princess Daisy.What happened to you and Tim!"asked several of the crowd of boy and girlscouts of the Lagorians h that had gathered fearfully and anxiously outside when they had at first seen them the two animals and the two riders on one galloping with both tied to the horse, and then seen Daisy change the persuer and make him run for life.

"I don't know what happened."Replied Daisy."I and Timate some lue lunch with a stranger called Jacann in a small restaurant, and afterwards Tim became unconscious and had to tie him to the horse horse.The one whom I changed drugged his coffee."

"More likely it was one of those Glandelinian treacherous spies."suggested a boyscoutt in the anxious and apprehensive throng."Though how you tied him and yourself to the horse is more than I can figure out."

"Well You and Tim sure ca me through a ll right"another boyscout said."And you brought your letters safe.God Be Praised."

"That's what she did indeed"cried several.

Meanwhile inside the little cottage, Jennie and Joice and even Daisy now were working hard over the unconscious form of Tim but to no success.

"I' guess we'll have to send for our own army doctor, Jennie dear,"Daisy finally said."We have tried ammonia and camphor, and he doesn't come too.He was drugged badly."

Oh Joice dear."Faltered Violet almost whimpering.Poor Tim."

"Eh, what,s the matter now?Who is calling me . ! somebody from Heaven"Inquired Tim himself in a faint voice(to paint) It was as though he had murmured in his sleep.Then he s lowly opened his eyes...

"Oh Joice dear.sisters dear.It's all right. He's coming too."Jennie exclaimed excitedly."We won,t need a doctor right away.Oh Tim dear what's happened to you and Daisy?"

However Tims senses were slowly but slrely clearing though for a moment as he looked at them they seemed to him more as if they were really little angels than human beings and he fancied he saw wings on them. Also his heard hurt him very much, and he was dizzy, but that terrible strange sick feeling was passing awey. He was in a terrible daze yet, and the voices of Violet, and her sisters seemed far away indeed.

"Why I'm here----in the headquarters of---- of-- why are there angels---I--I why I8m'in the headquarters of the Princesses of Abbieannia."Tim suddenly exclaimed with more energy than before.His eyes were wide open now, and he looked about the familiar room(the boom)

"Of course you're in the headquarters of very beautiful little angels"said Violet with her customary giggle"for she was now happy since Tim was alright. "But Daisy's mail.The letters."Tim suddenly cried sitting up(not down).The motion sent such a rush of blood to his head that he had to fall limply back.

"Iell be all right in a minute "Tim said after a pause seeing again their anxious faces."But what about the mail which I seen Daisy get from the general?Tell Tell me that.Did she bring it through safe."

"That's what I did, and saved you too."Exclaimed Daisy bathing his hot fore head with cool water.

"yes it was safe in her saddle"said Jennie smiling into his eyes, and you and Daisy were tied fast to your pony."Who in the ttttttt world?"

"I did it myself"Daisy answered carelessly."But I'm glad I brought the letters in safely .I was afraid I could not do it with poor Tim in that condition but I did."

"Y Do you mean to say sister dear you roped yourself and Tim fast in that manner?"demanded Jennie, somewhat incredulously while her sisters looked at Daisy as if they could hardly believe it.

"I did indeed"Daisy replied.

"Why the idea"said Violet glancing at her sisters and then at Daisy"We thr thought the Glandeliniens did it."

"I did it to hold up the boy from falling and also to fool the glance linien s pies."said Tttttt Daisy.

Tim himself was feeling better every minute now, and when he had recieved some of the s pirits of ammonia, Jennie held out to him, his head cleared very much.....

"One of them put a game up on me and Daisy and Mic-Cann."Tim explained."He no doubt must have unseen by us slipped some drug into my coffee.Queer stuff it must be for the coffee tasted dreadfully, and it certainly put me out, but I don't feel nearly so bad now."

Just what sort of a drug it was that the spy used on Tim and Daisy was never revealed.He had put more of it into her mil then he had into Tims coffee and the strange fact that it didn't work on her but did on the boy was still keeping the same spy guessing. Myn ow no doubt the man may have been a sort of chemist spy and prebably was more acquainted with the secrets of drugs better than any average criminal. Hq tever it was he gave Tim it left no harmful after effects, and for that the boyscout and Violet, and her sisters were thankful to God, and said a good heartfelt s prayer of thanksgiving.

"Do you want a doctor?"said Joice"He'll send for our own physician our own private family doctor, if you say so Tim.He's good and saved us through many a bad spell."

"No I believe I'll be ttttttttt allright"he answered."I'm feeling much better by the minute.Oh but I was ill."and he shuddered at the recollection."I believe Princesses it was you who brought me to.But where is the letters?"he demanded, and tyithis time he followed his question by sitting up."Where is it?"he repeated repeated ."

" Daisy brought it in."Catherine explained.

"We have not opened the letters and the parcel yet."Violet exclaimed.

"We we didn't put in Jennie.There "There was so much excitement when we saw what state you were in that we let the mail wait.There is a crowd outside wishing to hear the story of what you went through and how you escaped."

"Well I'm not able to tell them anything."said Tim."I know just as much how we got through as a worm does.Let your dear little Daisy flower tell them."

Violet and her sisters looked at each other and Jennie then seemed puzzled and demanded;

"What Daisy flower do you mean.We have no flowers in the room."

"Tim pointed to Daisy."You are all little rose and other buds to me." He exclaimed

"You got it good this time"laughed Jannie to Violet and her sisters."Many others call me Rosebud. Even Tim does. Now Daisy is a flower too."

"Well "said Daisy herself"I don't feel as if I wished to tell them."I want to sit here and rest. Is our horses all right?"

"Yes"said Joice."I'll go out and tell the boy and girlscouts someting some thing of what had happened.Later on they can probably hear the whole story.But should I not notify some of the Gemini, and have them get after this Glandelinian drug fiend?What became of him."

"I never saw him."said Tim.

"Neither did I"said Daisy"not at least in the resturant.We didn't see Mic-cann either for the last we saw of him was when he was sitting in the restaurant.He said goodbye in the friendliest fashion and promised he'd follow after us as a body guard.He didn't come and I believe he was drugged too.And to imagine of the scheme the spy played on us three.He doped my coffee too but I did not like the coffee anyhow and didn't swallow any.I only had two glasses of milk."

"And didn't he see you again?"asked Hettie.

"No Tim and I didn't see him."Daisy answered."But I was suspicious that the spy had drugged his coffee too.He must have had it all figured out "she went on."He "He must have planned to come after us after we had fallen unconscious.But if I did swallow any of the drug it did not do me any harm but it put poor Tim out.Believing we would fall out I suspect the spy meant to steal our letters."

Tim did not now how the spy had perused him and Daisy, and how Daisy had attacked the spy and routed him.

"Are you sure Daisy flower the letters are safe?"Tim asked again.

"Yes"Replied Daisy."I'll bring it in here and let you see it if necessary."

"No I believe I'll go out to it myself. "Replied Tim."I'm feeling almost my self again."

"Better take a little more rest."suggested her sisters to Tim together.

Joice then had gone outside to explain the trouble to the waiting crowd of boy and girlscouts who seemed and were very anxious for fear that Tim was seriously ill or something and were greatly worried.However hwhen they had heard the story they all felt better at Tims recovery and dispersed. some of the younger boy and girlscouts went over to the table where Daisy's and Tims horses were resting... They couldn't resist the desire to see and marvel over the two brave ponies that had done so much to safeguard Daisy, Tim and the letters she carried..... Tim had meanwhile risen to his feet... but however he had over estimated his strength, for he tottered and would have fallen had not Jennie and Violet put out their hands to steady him....

"Be careful."Jennie cautioned him.

"Humph.I'm getting to be a regular girl myself."Complained Tim, somewhat ashamed of his weakness...

"Tsk Take care, take care"Jennie playfully retorted..."Girls are a whole lot better than boys, in many ways."

"I surely now that from experience, and especially you are and your sisters" confessed Tim."If it were not for you and your sisters,I don't know what any of your companies of child scouts, and even your generals would do.But I guess I can walk now..Queer how that strange stuff ,, whatever it was put me out so badly."

"Here drink this"suggested Violet, and she held out a cup of strong mil y less coffee she had brewed..... .""

"Coffee"Exclaimed Tim(Bim) with a grim smile."Are you sure it's all right?"

"No drug in that."Jennie herself assured him with a smile."We'd like to drug the coffee of some of those spies who drugged you though"she admitted"and put them to sleep for a long period.But this coffee is all right.We don't drink any but we use it as a stilument and you need it. It will bring you to and you'll feel better.Then I'll get supper for all of us.Hit's my turn anyhow.We more touring to day for any of us.You can eat can't you."?

"Yes I believe I'm pretty hungry for my appetite sure!, does not seem to have left me in spite of what I went through.I didn't eat very much in that confident and neither did Daisy. We were too anxious to get away with the mail."

Tim swallowed the coffee, and it made him feel much better.... Then he said; "W for the letters. I want to see it opened Princesses, so I'll be able to for our own sakes and safty what little Daisy F lower brought through."

"But you're not going on through to general C oncentinian Aronburgs army to night are you?"Jennie demanded enxiously while her sisters looked very sober..

"I guess not"was his answer."Can't tell much though, untill we see what is in the letters.I may have to."

"Well we'll just not let you."ec exclaimed Joice Vivian with great vogor and with a pretty pout. "If there is anything that has to go through I'll do it or if we won't want to we'll get some of the child scouts to do it. We'll even send the Gemini if necessary. We're through with couriering for the time being.What have we got so many messenger carriers for any way."

"Oh I can't give up that way!"Time protested."What if anything happened to emperor Vivians army.!He was being worsted Princesses you heard that."

"Well maybe there isn't anything to carry"suggested Jennie."I'll open the mail bag and we'll examine them."

She turned the Key in the lock of the first pack, and spilled the contents content's out on the sorting table.. Almost the first thing she and her sisters saw was a large blue flat envelope six inches in length, sealed with purple wax. Tim and Daisy suddenly to turned it over..

"It's for general Concentinian Aronburg"he exclaimed as their faces whitened at the sight of it."I wonder if these can be the most important letters and plans he is expecting.He must be i or it must be and that is why the spy tried to get them."

Jennie and her sisters said nothing neither did Jannie, but looked at Tim with fearsome troubled eyes.....

For a moment Tim was lit looking at Violet and her sisters, and they at him ,and then at the large envelope which they guessed contained the long expected information.The purple wax, with which the envelope was sealed, gleamed in the red sunlight just coming into the windows from the west where it was setting on the horizon down,. It was a strange dark ness too for the sky was overcast again with smoke clouds.

"Yes these must be the papers and letters general Concentinian Aronburg is expecting." in said musingly."I wonder what I had ought to do about them!"

"What is there to do now anyhow"I said Joice while her sisters looked very worried and scared.

"Well I believe I ought to bring them.I feel all right now.The effects of that strange dope had passed off, and ---and--"

"nonsense"exclaimed J oice vehemently"You shall do nothing of the sort.No trip to to Concentinian Aronburgs army to night.It's too dangerous."

"But he may want them."insisted Tim."and Daisy promised to bring them through to him. But I rather she and you should remain safly here, and that I must go."

"Please don't for our sakes "pleaded Jennie."If you were Penrod I wouldn't be afraid he can do anything inspite of the enemy but if you get caught----" oh I can't think of it."

"We can put the letters and the envelope in the safe here"said Violet"and then one of us will bring them to the general F irst thing in the morning. You understand we were told and pleaded with by Penrod not to go too near the battle lines now to do any stunts during the battle that might cause us disaster not to do anything unless it was absolutely necessary, and it isn't.The longer it is delayed the better for us.The spy don't want these letters delayed either in reaching their destination as it,ll also mean the ruin of the Glandelinians.There too among these messages isn't anything here that must Go through before morning, and we're safer here since the battle is so furious." and she and her sisters rapidly sorted over the letters and other military matter to prove what she said...

"And didn't one of those signal Station angents tell you not to take the risk of a night trip just for these messages!"asked Hettie.

"No.They said it was marked rush but nevertheless-----"

"Then that doesn't justify your going neither any one of us either."said Catherine."In fact it would not be fair to us Tim for you to chance bringing these after dark when you understand..our bitterest enemies are after them and that these enemies will work more at dark than in the day. These enemies though spies act as ~~the~~ though they were professional hold up men. You and Daisy and your friend ,ic-cann who helped you with your horse, have had a narrow escape this afternoon, you are weak, and-"

"Oh I'm all right now"insisted Tim."I feel fine. "

He ce t certainly appeared that way.H s His health too had enabled him to recover quickly from the effects of the drug, the life he lived in the open air with so many child scouts, doing much to help his system throw off the effects of the strong narcotic.Tim appeared able to go on a night ride.

"You may feel fine"said Angeline who till now had not said a word, for she didn't say very much, and now determined to carry the point for her sisters, "but there is no telling when there might be a relaspe or ha what they call it a reaction, and a return of that dizzy feeling.It might happen too you know. If you fell off of your pony in the dark at some lonesome point in the road, you might not only suffer yourself, but if would give Fathers, and our own worst Glandelinian enemies the very chance for which they are scheming."

"Well that is so too."Tim finally admitted."I haven't thought of that."

"Then you won't go to night!"asked Jennie.

"No I believe perhaps I had better not. In fact you and your sisters are such good company and Penrod isn't here to share it I ought to share it for him.I love flowers and love to be among them.But is there a good place here to keep the envelope and the letters.?"

"We have a small safe "replied Angeline. "It isn't a very big one, and I suppose a real buglar though there are none if our country, but if there were he would not have much trouble in opening it.but there are no buttttbuttttt burglars in here---there may be desperate secretly disguised Glandelinian spies but they're not bandits or burglars, and they would not understand how to work the combination.. Besides we'll be on the watch, and you'll stay here all night night Tim of course, instead of going to your own tent.."

"Oh yes much obliged, Princess Angeline.I'll stay as long as I'm not going back to my own camp.I'll stay always if you want me to. And if any attempt is made to rob the safe, well there will be some trouble"and Tim took out his weapon to be sure that it was fully loaded.

The matter of Tims staying having been decided, he helped Violet and her sisters tidy the rooms, at least he did it all for them, and then he helped Catherine sort the mail that was to go to the respective generals, so that there would be no delay in the morning... For that morning Early Catherine was to go on her turn, and he was to accompany her and to make an early start. "We want to get those letters in the hands of general Concentinian Aronburg just as soon as we can. "he said."Then the worry will be off of my mind.""""A

"And it sure is a worry and a very great one"Hettie admitted."Any one might believe for sure that to have a courier route through any section of this territory during this battle wasn't very important, but things seem to have crowded in on you lately Tim dear."

"you and your sisters all the time the war went on have not had it altogether easy yourselves"said Tim ,as he thought of what he had heard they so often experienced in their dreadful adventures."And ever since even now since Penrod has come back to you there has been something to worry you and your sisters..."

"Well it isn't your fault certainly"she said."It seems just a combination of evil circumstances, all the more less connected with what nature the Glandelinians have whose men captured or parade us.but perhaps this is the end, and from now on everything will go along all right.At least I hope so."

"So do I "declared Tim with great conviction."Now I believe I'll go over and have an examination of our ponies.I may have a bit of hard riding to do to morrow, and want him to be in good shape."

"Do you believe they'll try again to get these letters away from you and Catherine?"asked Daisy gazing around the room apprehensively, as though some one might be hiding in the gloomiest shadows.

"There's no telling"Tim responded."But we two are not going alone.I'll have a strong escort of boy scouts this time and plenty of girls too.They're fiercer than us boys you know."

Indeed he was glad to get out in the air again for a littl little while even though it was very warm, and a strong breeze was blowing from the east, and the air though not cleared away from Time hend the last lingering feeling caused, by the drug...

"Well Mable old boy they didn't get us that time, did they!"he added of Daisy's horse as he went into the stall, and petted his own and Daisys faithful animal. Those "Those glandelinianscdid not get us though though they tried to h as hard as they could.Daisy have them a run for their Crazy evil cause alright, and Catherine and I will do it again if they tried it once more.How are you anyway!" He talked to the two ponies. as though the brave animals were human. and A and perhaps the two ponies understood more than Tim gave him credit for doing.. Certainly they had proved their intelligence that days Having seen that his mount, and Daisys too and the others on which so much depended, was well bedded down, and had enough food and water,, Tim went back to the cabin.

"And now,its the situation of the battle now for a pleasant evening."suggested Jennie.

"We will have a game of checkers Tim."exclaimed Violet. I believe I and my sisters won't win this time, though for some reason you likE Penrod never gives us a chance to win such as do play with good little girls."

"I'll [illegible] of [illegible] on my side"he said smiling."And the next play are [illegible]."

"No indeed"Violet exclaimed, with her pretty way of [illegible]."If I or my sisters can't beat you evenly we don't want to win at all. Just because we're are little girls, you'll handicap yourselves.That way we'll win on [illegible] the wholesale."

"Oh well have it your own way,"he agreed smiling at her energetic words."we'll play and then supper will be ready."

In the game went on with the Seven Vivian Girls against Tim and Jannie, for Jannie played with him.

"Well Tim dear isn't this much better than riding on the lonesome mountain road, fearing every minute you are going to be held up!"Asked violet when one game had been finished, violet,and her sisters aiming as usual.

"It certainly is"he agreed, as he glanced around the pleasant room."But then you understand, military business before pleasure."

"Not when it isn't absolutely necessary."remarked Jolce.. Supper was soon ready and the rest of the time after supper violet and her sisters, either sat quietly sewing or reading somet, something, while Tim also studied over a book that Violet had brought him. The living rooms of Violet, and her sisters and Jannie were upstairs, where they had Jack, who was quite well now.There was a spare room that Tim used,when he remained over night with his Princess friends.

"I don't believe I'll not sleep there to night."he said, when preparations were being made for retiring."

"Why not"asked Jennie."I thought you would rather sleep with us than in your tent."

"It is not that"he said"but I want to be done here near the small safe"and he nodded toard the steel box in which the letters to General Arnbourg and the envelope had been placed for security untill morning."I don't believe of course anything might happen."he went on "But I shall feel better if I'm down here."

"But sure Jim you're not going to sleep on the floor I hope"protested violet.

"Well a good blanket and the soft side of a pine board will do for me"Jim Jim answered with a laugh."I have often camped out and slept on the ground frequently enough not to mind one night of discomfort.Don't worry I'll be comfortable enough here."

"But there's no place to sleep, no bed"objected Jolce and Jennie together.

"We can bring down the old cot if Tim insists on sleeping down here."Catherine said.

"Well I should like to if you don't mind"Tim said."But who is going to carry the cot down.There is no man here."

"It's a light cot.I and my sister Violet could carry it down."suggested Jennie.

"Nothing doing"said Tim "I'll carry it down myself, and if I can't carry it down alone I'll call one of the boyscouts to help me."

And so it was arranged.Violet, and her sisters went upstairs with little Jannie, and Tim without undressing stretched out on the cot, pulling the thin coverings over him for he did not need many for as long as the wind was on the east the weather was not unlike the approach of winter because of the big forest blazes in Calverinia.If the wind turned northwest there may be a change but not as long as it stayed east.

"Maybe I'll have plenty of trouble for my pains"Tim reasoned to himself"but I'll I'll worry the less this way.I'm a light sleeper and the least sound can arouse me.I wonder if they'll make any attempt to get in here."!

"He hardly knew what to think. When he recalled the despe ate chance the secret spy had taken to get possession of what he must have suspected was in Daisys hands, Tim was sure the attempt would not be so easily given up.The Glandelinian spies would go through"hell fire"to capture what they're after.but as the enemy military plotters had so far been successfully evaded and their schem schemes set at naught, it might be that they would give it up now. Surely no one would have the nerve to try and break into the headquarters of violet and her sisters.That would be suicide as they too are light sleepers.

"It' about six of one and half a dozen of the ither other"Tim mused" and I believe the odds are in my favor.They say if you associate with angel possessed persons you'll have plenty of good luck. So I'll rest easy."

However Tim did not feel at all sleepy.Perhaps the after effects of the drugs were such as is often the case to produce an abnormally active state of the brain, and the brain must be quiet to have sleep come.For a time Jim lay quietly quietly on his cot.Then he had an attack of the fidgets, and he tossed restlessly to and fro. Upstairs all was quiet and silent, and he hoped violet and her sisters if they had gone to bed were sleeping in comfort.Now and then too Tim assured himself that his revolvers were ready at hand. As the hours were ticked off on the clock in his room(the room), Tim became more and more nervous /

"Heavens on earth this sure won't do"he finally told himself."I won't be fit for much duties to morrow morning if I don't get some sleep, and I may have a hard day of it.Guess I'll get up and have a few swallows of water mixed with a little brandy.I've heard that's a good thing to do when one can't sleep.It must be the after effects of the drug.."

"He tried to move about cautiously, so as not to disturbe violet,and other her sisters.But as it often happens when one moves about in the dark objects or hit or run into that one hardly believed were in the room.The things therefore all seem to mass themselves underfoot.Tim banged into a sort of a thing called a Hall tree, and it went crashing over onto a table, making a "whisper" of a sound.

"Oh"scr amed Jennie from the room above."Sisters.Jannie.Tim.The spies have come."

"No it isn't the confounded spies, it isn't anything--I just got up to get a drink"hastily explained Tim rubbing his head where the hall tree hit him, and listning he had remained still."Sorry to have disturbed you."

"I and my sisters have not been asleep."Jennie confessed, calling down the stairway."Isn't it nearly morning."

"It's only a little after ten."Tim reported turning on his flashlight and glancing at the clock by its light..

He then returned to his cot after getting the water, and soon found him self going off into a comfortable doze.He really needed good natural sleep after his experience that day, and a little later he found it stealing over him.He turned on his side, and before he was aware of it, became sound asleep.How long he was asleep Jim never realized, but he suddenly awoke with a start and for some reason or other he was aware that he had been aroused by some strange sudden noise something as of a tool having been dropped carelessly followed by a muffled curse.For a moment he was so confused, that he could not think clearly, or recall where he was, and almost imagined violet and her sisters were looking down on him beside the cot. to see if he was all right.

He passed his hand across his head,,,, and this slight action seemed to cause his brain to do its own duty.Then there came a strange rasping noise which made him sit up.He was instance aware that something unusual was going on. and too he noticed a dim light in through the room where the safe was.As Jim now violet and her sisters had left none burning, and as there are no street lights inchristian encampments unless they're permanent ones, Jim began to at once realize that some one had brought a light into the room since he had fallen asleep.Tim was about to call out believing perhaps violet or any one of her sisters had come down stairs, but he restrained himself.

"I'll just go and see who it is."he thought."If it is one of the Vivian Girls, I'll surprise her by giving her a good loving hug, but if ----"A wild idea suddenly came to him.He reached under his pillow and brought out his army revolver."

"If it is any of the spies I'll be ready."he murmured..

Moving with the silence of a cat, Tim who had not left his shoes on when retiring tiptoed to the door between the two rooms.. As he advanced he could easily hear a succession of small strange noises.One was a sort of purring sound.Then came the tinlke of metal on metal--a faint sound that would not have been heard but for the deep silence over the place for even the sound of battle had died down and the two armies were resting on their arms.Then Tim saw a sudden movement of light as though some one or some object had come near enough to it to produce a shadow. Then as Jim glanced in he saw the outlines ofof of a man's head, and the man dressed as a civilian seemed bent over, or stooping.He wasn't very tall, and neither was he stout.Again came the sound of metal on metal.All at once came the thought into Jims brain.

"The spy scoundrel is going to blow open their safe rob the Vivian Girl Princesses"was his thought."It one of those glandelinian spies.I've caught him.He has drilled the safe and is going to blow it open."

Tim therefore managed by going slowly and trying each board with his advanced foot to guard against a creak finally to reach the door that opened into the room where the safe stood. and there all kneeling on the floor in front of the safe, was a man in plain clothes and not even masked either. He was in front of the safe, and a partly opened dark lantern gave light enough for him to see what the man was doing. The safe as yet was not open, but as Jim noticed as he was about to give the command"Hands up" he saw the man suddenly spring up and slide on rubber soled shoes to a far corner. There was a tiny curl of smoke near the door of the safe.Tim realized too late, what it was the fuse attatched to a charge of nitroglycerene.The safe was about to be blown open. and then Tim or ere before Jim could have a chance to perform spring forward and tear loose the fuse, the explosion came.It was loud too as a thunder clap, and the force of it hurled Tim rearward knocking him down. His his hit

His head hit on something very hard, and for the moment he lost his senses.

Tim however did not remain sense senseless long, and when he did recover he became aware of a confused shouting seeming, from Violet and her sisters, the loudest seeming to come from Jannie and an acrid smell of smoke filled his nostrils.

"Tim, Tim"He heard violet, and every one of her sisters shouting together."Tim what was that explosion down there?Tim are you hurt?!::!"

By a great effort overcoming the faintness that seemed to be returning, Tim scrambled to his feet.He saw it was dead black in the place now.

"I'm all right.I'm all right."Tim cried."But something has happened."One of those I see have been here all right.Stay up there until I light a light and then call you."

He struck a match, for he had a box in readiness in his pocket. A glance into the room where the safe stood, showed what havoc had been wrought by the terrific explosion.The windows had gone out not a piece of glass remaining and a part of the ceiling and walls had been shorn of their plaster. And it was not much of the change that had been need.The door of the safe was blown off, and damage had also been done to the furniture and fixtures of the place.The interior of the strong box----for it was that and nothing more, being an old fashioned safe-- was plainly exposed to view.Tim was in front of it on the jump.using his flashlight he peered within.

"They're gone.They're surely gone" he cried aloud."That spy's got the letters and the envelope.And me slee ping right beside them.This is fierce.Something must be done." done."

With trembling fingers, and a deep sense of humiliation and rage in his heart, Tim lighted a lamp.But then even with this greater and brighter light there was no trace of the missing letters of the envelope .Only those had been seized.A little money that was in the safe, and other articles was not taken. But now violet, and her sisters, frightened and alarmed over the loss, were begging to Known what in the world had happened. There too was no trace of the man himself but he had left a big gray hat in the room.He had forgotten that in his haste to slip out while Tim lay unconscious.Tim indeed surely didn't feel as if he was a hero just then.

"Oh Tim what in the world is it?Can't we come down?Are you hurt?"Jennie who was standing at the head of the stairs in advance of her sisters called out. beseechingly.

"No I'm not hurt.Come down if you wish angels. They blew open the safe."

"Oh."exclaimed Joice, and there was fear and alarm in her voice.Certainly any one braver than angels may fear those dangerous desperate Glandelinian spies, who would halt at nothing to gain their ends for their unholy cause.For a moment Tim gazed dumbly at the ruin wrought.His eyes sought for some trace trace of the letters and envelope he and Daisy had done so much and gone through so much to bring through with safty, but which after all had been stolen while he slept.Certainly it was an unfortunate and distressing affair.

"Oh isn't it awful"gasped Jennie, as she and her sisters almost whimpering pushed their way through the confusion of injured furniture in the room and examined the looted safe.It's just terrible."

Tim in the meantime had thrust his pistol outside, and fired six shots in quick succession. The explosion by which the safe was shattered did not seem to have roused any of the camp because probably the report was too muffled to carry far. But Tims shots, ringing out in the open, were heard and soon child scouts came running out of tents many demanding to Know what was goin going on.

"The safe of your Princesses blown and robbed by a spy."cried Tim."It was to my notion done by one man, though there may have been more.We must get after them."

"That is what we must"Cried Francis Pickford one of the first on the scene.Tim slipped on his shoes, and with a lantren hurried across where his own horse and those of the vivian Girl Princesses were stabled. As he approached the place his heart sank as he saw the door was open.

"If he has stolen the horses"he faltered.

That was indeed what the Glandelinian spy had done but not Tims but Violets horse.Only Tims horse, and those of her sisters remained.Tim felt a fierce longing to do something desperate.This was the last straw.

"Violet's horse gone.Her horse gone."Tim repeated blankly.

He did not want to believe it, but there was nothing else to do.The spy had made his escape on violets fast steed.By this time all the child scouts who had been aroused by Tims shooting were out, and they came hastily dressed mostly girlscouts as this was the girlscout section of the camp the boys being further off.They crowded into the small place and looked dismally and disdainfully at the demolished safe and to looked tearfully at violet and her sisters.

"That job was done by professionals all right"said Tim who had entered and informed Violet her horse was stolen."That's no amateur business.He just put in a hole he bored, and touched it off with a fuse.Yes it was some job."

"Some job is right"Jennie exclaimed, rather indignantly."And he stole that valuable envelope of ours, and those letters.It is some job."

"We'll have to go after them hard"said Tim ."I saw only one, but he probably had confederates.Now boys and girls get your horses be well armed, and we'll hit the trail.For your sakes Princesses dear you and Jannie must join in the pursuit. There's only two courses he could seize upon, and we'll cover em both.You come along too Jennie Turner since seeing you're here, that is if you feel able."

"I see you got a cut on your head Tim."said Jannie.

Tim put up his hand.It came away bloody, and Violet and her sisters screamed.

"It's only a little cut I recieved when I fell, when the force of the explosion hurled me down"Tim said. up to then however, so great had been the excitement he had not been aware of the slight injury.

"Well flowers of Abbiemnia are you ready"He demanded.

"Yes "said Jennie who had been the last to put on her cartridge belt and rifle, and pistols.

"Well get on your ponies then, secure your lances and sabres for readiness, and come along Tim urged them."I'll try to identify the fellow if we catch him as he didn't wear anything over his face.Hurry violet dear.Hop on your pony and--"

"I can't."Violet explained."You told me don't you remember the fellow stole my horse."

"That's right too"said Tim bitterly.For that that we certainly must get him.If he is also a horse thief, as well as a safe blower we sure will get him.Scatter scouts.Be lively.Violet I'll ride another horse and you may ride mine.Come now everybody and be well armed.We're doing a dangerous stunt and need all our weapons and don't forget your grenades.Henry Turner you lead one bunch over the Henriet a road, and violet and her dear sisters with me will head another on the Chamberlain road.But most surely the fellow will retreat to the hills and hide out for a spell."

"Surely he won't dare go to Rainbow Hedge."said violet.

"Why not Princess?"

"Because he has those valuable letters and the envelope from us to General Aronburg and christian guards are too heavy at that place and he can't get through.He wouldn't go there."

"I don't now "said Tim."He wouldn't stay there, but he might go through that way."

It did not take long to organize the two strong persuasing parties, and Violet and her sisters led one with Tim being with them.violet rode Tims horse, and though it was good enough and a splendid one as horses go, it was not at all as her beloved charger St John as she called him.

"I wonder if I'll ever get him bav back"Mused the little Princess, as she trotted along beside the others.

A"A measely Glandelinian horsethief."muttered Tim."We'll get him if we have to comb the whole country for the spy.In the christian lines justvas in the West of America horse stealing is a crime on a par with murdering during war time, for during war a mans horse or a mans life depends on his horse, and if a spy steals the horse away, he may be also responsible for the death of the man or person. That is why within the christian lines horse stealing is visited with more fiercer and swifter vengeance when the culprit is caught then when doing it out west. since there was a strong moonlight that night, and a great glare in the east there was fairly good light to see to follow the mountain trails.The spy had not much of a start, but he was riding Violets fleet pony, and therefore that meant a great deal, for there were few horses in that part of the country outside of those of her sisters who could distance him .Over the roads they rode, and as they went the hope of soon catching the robber spy grew grew less and less.

"I'm afraid he has escaped us all right"Tim"said Ruefully."But we'll give no rest to our horses or ourselves untill we get him for I won't give up now. I'll never let a spy and horse thief get the best of me.I just naturally hate a horse thief, and a person who robs the safe of seven good little girls."

"That's right"Chimed in several of the girlscouts. There were no places or rather only one or two along the mountain road, where inquiries could be made as to whether or not the spy---or some night rider had passed.But at such lonely lonely cabins as Violet and her sisters and Tim and their friends did come to they found them deserted.

"I wish now"said Tim"that I had brought the letters and envelope through to night.I might might have made the trip safely."

"I don't hardly believe it"Francis Pickford told him."I guess those spies were watching the road, and therefore when they found you didn't go through with them, and being desperate in their plan to secure them, they came in and blew open the safe."

"I suppose so "murmured Tim. It was a long time before morning would come and the children of the child scouts with which with which Tim and Violet and her sisters were riding and come almost all the way toward Chamberlane?77 and so far had not had a sight of the Glandelinian spy or any of his war, confederates, if he really did have any, which was scarcely to be doubted.

"But I certainly won't go back "Tim said."I have signalled to the chief if the girlscouts Lucillie Jorden to organize a regular hunt with her whole force before we started out, and to scatter through these hills.But we were foolish in our excitement to forget to bring with us anything to eat, and even at this time I'm getting mighty hungry, and no one I'm sure can hunt a Glandelinian spy and horse stealer on empty stomachs."
"That's right"several of the boy and girlscouts agreed.
"Why not continue on toward Chamberlane?" requested Jane Melfort."We can get to Chamberlane sooner than we can to Rosa or Tops."
"That's true"added Tim soberly."I'd have you all come to my own camp but there's nothing there to eat since so many of my followers are being cared for in the base hospitals since they were poisoned during the morning meal."
"Oh we can get food easily enough"said Jean Saunders."I guess Tim it will be well to go on toward Chamberlane if your fair friends the Princesses don't object.
We want to spread the news there anyhow, and get a strong body of soldier cavarly out after the after the Glandelinian spies from this end. And I suppose you'll have to report the robert robbery to Emperor Vivian won't you?"she asked Tim/
"No he won't it ain't necessary"said Violet with spirit."It's our own loss."
"Yes"said Tim sadly"I'll have to admit that they got the best of me these those Glandelinian scoundrels."
"Oh shucks, it wasn't your fault at all."Declared Jean Saunders."Those spies were bound to get that envelope and those letters, and if they din't succeed in one way they would have done so in another.You couldn't help it."
"But I was asleep right alongside the safe."
"Yes but they must have chloroformed you.Such things you understand have been done."
"No that wasn't done to me."declared Tim with conviction."
"Well you have surely have done through enough in that dragging business, to make anybody tired enough tosleep hard."one of the nearest boyscouts said."No one can blame you."
"No indeed"agreed another."
But Tim blamed himself.He felt that he had surely failed in his trust before his friends Violet and her sisters.He did not understand what to do, and even his brain seemed absolutely beyond doing anything for.If he coul could only capture that Glandelinian spy, and get the letters and envelope from him.As he went along with the others over the mountain road by the help of the moon light and far distant forest fire glare he glanced eagerly about as though he hoped to see some signs of the much wanted Glandelinian spy.But the road was deserted save for the boy and girlscout squadron.They rode into the encampment near Chamberlane, Chamberlane, and that place was soon buzzing with the startling news.As soon as possible a large number of men were started out through the mountains to cover even the many bridal paths and trails seldom used, and to go everywhere else possible.All strangers who could therefore not be able to give an account of themselves were to be brought into camp under suspicion.Violet and her sisters saw how worried Tim really was, and they themselves too looked very grave.
"Don't worry about it so much.Of course it isn't your fault Tim"Jolie herself said"and I not even my sisters are not in the least blaming you.It was partly our own fault for putting them in so insecure a place as a safe. We ought to have retained them ourselves."
"I wanted to come through with them during the night---but"--- "It certainly would have done no good at all, and you would have been attacked and and hurt maybe slain. I'm glad that did not happen.Of course for us losing the papers is going to bring it on pretty pretty bad for ourselves and father for now we will not even have a the chance of ever winning the battle.But it can't be helped.You, I and my sisters did the best we could, and no one could have done more.That was a good brave thing you did, also slowing Daisy to tie you and her self onto the pony saddle when you felt you were going to become unconscious."
"But it did not have any good results in the end"said Tim bitterly."and now Violets horse is gone too."
"That's too bad.But we will sooner or later catch this fellow for we'll never give up untill we do.We have often escaped from the enemy but we never allowed any one to escape us yet"said Daisy. So the parcel and the letters I had were not only one the spy captured.?"
"Well Daisy I believe I didn't stay on didn't stay untill all the mail was searched searched for."answered Tim"but I'm sure that was all that was missing from your small safe.I had hoped that this might be another set of dummy letters."said Tim"and that your other and real important letters might be in the one which you had addressed to the Princesses alone which I and Daisy brought through.
That is all of it."

10-150 278

"There is no such good luck"Exclaimed Daisy again."The envelope addressed to General Concentinian Arnsberg contained the real and important letters and military plans that I and my sisters have been expecting from Father so long.
They were our own and he had them in his possession and at our wireless m quest sent them to me.There was some plans for me and my sisters in that big envelope you mention, but it isn't important.If they stole that it would do them no good."
"I wish now"the boyscout leader went on ruefully"that under any con dition I had kept the parcels in my own possession.
"I one way"said violet"I wish now that I and my sisters had had a dummy set of letters come through, but I and my sisters pulled that plan through once already and we felt sure it would not have the same effect a second time.Well it's all in the war game, and if and my sisters and Father lose this inning we may be able to recieve redress later. But whatever happens Tim don't in the least feel that we even in the least suspect or blame you.
It was really our own fault.But we didn't believe Glandelinian spies had the ways of blowing safes.Infact inthis country we had never heard of a thing such as blowing safes before.Only robbers in foriegn countries do that sort of thing.Therefore we do not blameyou."
"Well it's awfully good of you to say so Princess princess"replied Tim Gratefully,"but I can't help feeling bad about it."
"Oh I feel as bad about it myself"Daisy said"and so do my sisters."But there is no use in crying over spilled l molasses."
"I believe you mean milk"Tim corrected with a smile.
"Well perhaps I do.Anyhow the only thing to do now is to see if we can round up those Glandelinian spies.For there were more than one of them though I only saw one at the safe.I have an idea who some of them are too.The hunt must go on.As soon as it was seen therefore that a hasty and extensive search was not going to result in the capture of the spy and his Confederates, a well planned and organized hunt was mobolized even the Gamini selected to help with podny Graves leading, and to cover as much of the surrounding country as possible.Tim and violet and her sisters were to conduct the whole thing. Tim feared that something might be said of the affair and that one or so of the Princesses would be forced to discharge him from the child scout service for having allowed their safe to be robbed, but as a matter of fact techenically he was not in the least to blame and they began to tell him most spiritedly so since they saw they could not shake of him off his sorry. Violet herself after conversing with her sisters secretly then said to him;
"The matter taken is not in your charge was not in your charge, but was in the safe in our little room where we put it, and your responsibility ended with the delivery of the letters and parcel. And in one way neither were we or any one else to blame.No one can censure us either for it is our own loss and the letters belonged to nobody else.We can only pay you only pay you the greatest compliment, for with you and between us the greatest precautionar precautionary measures had been taken, but that the robbery of our letters h and plans had occured in spite of them.Besides there was no military express stuff stolen but only our own mail.So no one of the military have no complaint against you or any one else for they have lost nothing, and couldn't then even blame you if they had.There is no body going to displace you, especially even if the robbery had occured on your route and they had stolen them from you and Daisy.For what Glandelinian spies do is not your fault.So you can retain your position with us Tim and don't worry over the matter though it is grave and serious.We are glad to have you and Penrod will be glad to hear of you when he comes back from his scout duty. It isn't often we get such brave lads as you, and you're a great contrast to that coward who deserted us some days before. And when Penrod comes to us again, and wants his place again since he is our dear brother, of course he will have to have it, but he'll find you an opening to be with us on many a companionship trip also.So don't worry over those letters again.
My I'll bet we'll overtake the spy sometime, and also something seems to tell us it'll be you yourself that will capture him.I'll give you a good high commission and let you take Penrods place which he had with Angelinia Arnsberg.That's the highest for a boyscout I can give.That you can have if you'll, and then you'll be with us as much as she is,"
"I certainly would like it"Tim exclaimed warmly."But I planned this search good.In addition to the squadron organized in Chamberlane, and elsewhere the authorities of the Lazyroom and Standard girlscouts and boys also sent out inspectors and scouts to try and round up the Glandelinian robber spies.
This I done by signal before we started out, so that within fourty eight hours from now on the mountain roads and trails will be well patrolled by all nd scouts to get to capture the spies. nd in the hills off the trails are others on the same command. I ished I could have organized a secret search, but I didn't have time. But we'll capture them never fear. But I tell you one thing they'll neve r get away."

"There is something strange that I seem to feel and sudden sense" said Violet. "It's my angel possession condition that causes it but I feel that way now."

"Wha t do you feel" said Tim. "That strange happiness coming on."?

"o not exactly" she smiled. "I believe even now no use had yet been made of the stolen duc documents."

"How do you sense that?"

"Something seems to tell me that it is so by the vigor of the search."

"nd that is a good sign" said Catherine To Tim "I have always been in touch with matters, and even now I and my sisters through some strange instinct would know as soon as s ome us e was made of them. The people who could best use these documents, would have a band of Glandelinian trailers out against us in a jiffy, a terrific assault would suddenly be made upon our Fathers armies even now, and would be in possession of our positions as soon as the battle only rep reopened. But they have not got them yet that's sure. nd you understand yourself that strangers can get into our camps far much easier than they can get out. o the Glandelinian generals have not got them that's sure."

"What In the world does that mean?" demanded Tim

"Just this" said Daisy herself. "Those who would gain the greatest advantage from the possession of our papers and letters, which would give them control over a good section of our christian army, did not do the actual spy steal ing themselves. They hired tasse professional s pies to do it, and from the the fact that no action has been made even now against our own Fathers army makes me and my sisters feel sure that the Glandelinian spy who blew open our little safe and swiped the letters and the parcel has not had a chance yet deliver them, to even get out of our camps. And you know yourself Tim how dreadfully extensive and strong watched out encampments and christian lines are. It would take hours to get out. And our messenger duties had been per form performed within our own lines too."

"You mean that the Glandelin ian spy has them in his possession yet.."?

"That's about it Tim" said Angeline.

"Yes and I feel" said Jennie too "that he is probably hiding out somewhere in the hills and yet within our very lines too, waiting for a chance to get out and to his own camps where he can deliver them. He dares not to mail them, and he can't get in touch with his Glandelinian g enerals who hired him to do this for them. nd if any of our sea rchers see him first, why we'll save the day yet. nd we're praying to ourselves that we'll succeed in capturing him."

"Good" cried Tim. "And I wish it would be my good luck to nab him. nab him.

""Yes and Violet too wants her pony also."

"po I!" Cried T Violet "and I sure do." and there was no mistaken her longing.

"If you do" said Jennie, we,ll ha all give you a good hug and kiss. Don't bluss blush im. It's nothing and you sure would enjoy it. ou had often been tempted to hug us but we saw you were too bashful to try it though you did deserve it. We'll let you if you get Violets horse even if you don't capture the spy or the letters. but if you get the whole three it,ll be better for you still."

After a little while g oing on ahead Tim decided to scout some distance ahead and told violet and her sisters he intended to do so and then if nothing was seen c ome back. They decided to wait his return though he promised he would be gone some twenty minutes as he decided to go s ome distance. Thereon he started off. As he was riding along the trail he stopped to water his horse at a lonely section of the camp, where some s oldiers who were on guard duty had told of hearing some one riding past, as believing it was some night courier.

Tim told of the incident to the Princesses and then the man got suspicious.

"Why say boy, there was a strange feller here some few minutes ago now come to think about it. We stopped him and grilled him plently but he seemed to give satisfactory answers, showed me a pair of Rosary Beads, and an elegant prayer book and a small box od miraculious medels. He seemed too as if he was in very hard luck."

"What sort of a man was he!"

"Oh I'm sorry but I didn't give him much examination and too it was dark too you understand though it is getting lighter now."

It was true for the dawn was heralded in the east, which the heavy smoke clouds turned to reddish brown and chrome yellow and also rose madder colors growing more colorful as the sun tried to peep above the horizon.

"Was the man on a horse. If so what sort of a horse."?

"Horse! Horse.? no .no boy. They man was on foot. He brought no horse with him."

"On foot." Cried him. "That's certainly queer to me."

"I th.ought that too." agreed the sentry officer. "And it certainly is very much more queer to see a man traveling on foot in such a section of country now, during such perilous times riding is universal and on fast horses. I remarked of him where his horse was, and he said he left it some distance down a road to feed on full grass."

"Down what road?"

"The main road."

"That also is very queer" Tim said frowning in a perplexed way. "What was the reason he did not care to ride up here. No excuse for going on foot in dangerous territory when you can easily have a horse."

"The sent y sentry answered;

"That is what I thought too. But as he seemed all right I didn't want to quest lion him too much for he showed to be a Catholic for what he carried. And he did not seem to care for too much questioning either.."

"Which way was he now going just then!" asked Tim.

"Ward Henrietta Junction. It was not more than two minutes ago."

"I'll follow and see who he is." thought Tim and as he rode off a sudden thought came to him.

"I wonder if this could be a clue to the spy!" he mused to himself. "A rosary beads, and a prayer book and some box of medals was also reported missing from the safe by police. nd a queer thing about his not coming up to the sentries on a horse. Why should he do that unless he was afraid the horse would be recognized and who in the world here don't know violet's splendid pony. Why sandusky----Great Scott" suddenly exclaimed Tim aloud. "I believe he understood why. He has St Johns and didn't dare let the sentries see him with it. That is it. I believe I am on the trail of the man who has violets pony and the letters. And I know now to stop that pony too if he has it and I can't catch him."

Tim called to his own spl endid horse, which really was a speedy mount.

"Let's go on old boy" he cried. "You may not be as good as Violets b a beautiful horse, but he may have had a hard time lately being kept out among the hills nearly all night, and I'm sure he cannot gallop now as fast as he usally does. We may catch him easily if th at fellow stays to the road, though ordinarly Violets pony would run away from you easily enough. He's fleeter even than those ridden by her sisters."

On they swept down the mountain trail. Tims eyes war watched eagerly as he made turn after turn at top speed, but for some length of time he did not observe any sign of any sort of a rider ahead of him.

"I am very well acquainted with this country and I'm sure there is no way of getting off on a side road for the next half mile" reflected Tim as he rode on.

"If I can come up to him in that short distance I'll have him before he sees me coming."

He felt to s see if his revolver was in readiness. He was determined to shoot down the fellow if he couldn't catch him for it was a desperate situation and it would be if he didn't chance to surprise the fellow for any enemy spy would not let any one capture him alive. And too good luck was with Tim and also good judgement as he made the last turn in that part of the trail from which there was no escape by a side road he saw just ahead of him a rider on horse which Tim recognized in a moment.

"That's violets pony." he cried. "I've found him."

Of course Tim could not be sure that the man on violets pony was the same one who had robbed the safe. But Tim was well acquainted with violets own steed, and when within Christian territory any man she her enemy soldier or civil civilian is found riding a stolen horse it is prime evidence against him. e therefore if captured has to prove his case and is subject to arrest on sight. Of course it can be a fact too that a man may have recieved the horse from the thief without knowing it is stolen, but he has to prove this to be the case.

"That sure is Violet's pony, and I am going to get him soon" thought Tim. "And I'm going to try and get that man too dead or alive. Faster boy. Faster."

For once in his life Tim used his riding whip. but he life all Abbieannians was humane. His horse surely responded with a burst of speed, but now the man ahead hearing gall op ping hoofs coming swiftly behind him urged on St John. And St John still could run. Though Tim saw with regret that Violets pony had suffered still the wonderful speed of the animal had abated not at all.

"He's going to get away from me." Said the lad as he saw now the horse ridden by the spy was running.." and that is the man or else why should he try to escape."

Then Tim began to use his brain. He understood that violet herself had trained St John to halt instantly when she called either his name or "Woah Whoa" to him in a certain tone. If the animal were going at top speed, and violet had had ever shouted that word The horse would brace up with his forefeet slide with his hind ones, and bring up standing like a train of cars when the engineer threw on the emergency brakes.Of course Violet was never in the saddle when she worked this trick on her horse..Had she been she might have been hurt and crippled for life if not killed. But she had given her pony this training so that in going down dangerous slopes the horse would learn how to bring himself suddenly to a halt.

But Jim at first doubted if he could do it for his voice was not Violets and the horse would only probably obey that voice.

"I wonder if he will anyhow and I can make him hear.""Thought Tim."If I can and he'll stop even at the sound of my voice, there will be something doing in a minute."

Tim saw that he could not hope to overrun the man ahead of him by an ordinary chase and he didn't want to do any shooting, for he wished to show that la at least boyscouts can and will capture desperate Glandelinian spies alive. The horse Tim was riding was not fast enough. and at a short distance ahead was a place on the trail where the suspected spy could escape by a side road. "I'll mutter a prayer for success Tim"thought to himself and he said "O Mary Concieved Without sin, pray for us who have recourse to Thee "Three times and then with "Here goes"and in his loudest voice he cried out;

"Woah Whoa St John.Whoa St John."

To his surprise and delight something strange happened at once.The pony however recognized it was not Violet calling him, but he did recognize Jims voice, and the steed had been somewhat affected by Tims companionship with his little mistress, and therefore the pony which had been running at his best in order to not let any horse behind pass him, pulled up so suddenly and so short that the man was flung with great force from the saddle, and over St Johns head. Over he went like a catapult hurled stone vainly trying to save himself, and the next moment he landed heavily on the side of the road and did not move.

"Well Mr Glandelinian spy that ends your riding for a time"Thought Tim grimly.

Then he rode forward, while St John with a whinny of delight turned back to meet the boy who he felt sure would restore him to his mistress. which he was lonesome for.

"Oh St John old boy.You did it fine."cried Tim.Then pausing only a moment to caress the recovered pony, and forgetting the promise Violet and her sisters made if he recovered the pony Tim hastened to the side of the man who had been so suddenly and disasterously to himself thrown off by the horses sudden sudden stopping.The fellow was a stranger to Tim, and wore a brown beard. The man was unconscious, and with little compunction, Jim readily searched thr through his pockets.He found a pair of rosary beads which he recognized belonged to Hettie, the Prayer book was his own, and the medals too. In an inner one he came upon two letters and a large envelope.With beating heart Tim pulled out the bundle.He recognized each one in an instant.It was the very ones stolen out of the safe.A glance at the seals convinced the boyscout that they had not been broken.

"Thank God for such good luck."he cried devotely."I'm certainly in good luck to day.They always said those who are good to the Princesses always have good luck, and it was mine to accomplish this..I've got Violets horse, got the papers too, and the envelope, and caught the robber too, and---and--- what,s this.A---A---Why if it isn't an envelope addressed to general John Manley.Why--I---I I must show this to the Princesses.I'll bet he was the one who blew the safe too.I've got him right.St John old boy, we worked the trick to perfection."

Tim thrust the strangely recovered letters and envelopes into his shirt sleeve and pinned it together after safe keeping. and then gave more attention to the man.He lay senseless, and from the manner in which one arm was doubled up under him; Tim felt sure it was broken. Tim relieved him of his cartridge belt and weapons and rifle and got busy. His first care was for Violets pony, who was delightedly rubbing his nose against his new found master. and too the horse did not appear to have suffered anything whatever as Tim had suspected..

However he did not intend to ride the pony but his own, and he rode on toward where he had left Violet and her sisters and the squadron, bringing Violet,s and riding his own horse. He was back to Violet and her sisters i in less time than he said he would return and she was overjoyed in seeing him Seeing him coming with her horse and could hardly believe her eyes.

"Say Tim dear"gasped Violet"you don't mean to say you have the horse."

"I sure have and see what I also brought"he said."

"You mean to say too you have the letters and envelope"cried Joice."And Catherines Rosary beads. And-- nd--what's this a letter to Manley.? Hey Why that's great. And its all here too--every paper"she added as she tore open the seals and examined them throughoutly"Now everything will be all right Indigan can in the battle I hope.That fellow you caught so cleverly did not have any time to deliver the goods and didn't dare go where he could do so.It was a great trick. you did Tim.Great.We'll retain our promise as soon as we get home.You are a marvel and almost make us believe you're Penrod in disguise and fooling us."

"I certainly wish I was."Said Tim."But I'm not."and he was evidently pleased with his success." Violet and her sisters went forward with Tim to where they had on here he had left the lamb, and when they got there he was still senseless. He was brought back into the christian lines and probably though he didn't deserve it he was nevertheless given first aid.It was found out by the doctor who was employed that the man whom Tim had caught by the cleverest of tricks of causing the pony to stop so suddenly,, was not mortally hurt, though a badly fractured leg which would cause him to be a severe cripple for life, and other injuries were to lay him up for life.Nobody it shows had any good luck who did wrong to violet. and her sisters..The doctor predicted that the man would be bed ridden for life. He too confessed he was the man who had stolen the papers and letters out of the safe, and a member of one of the gang of spy patrols that had been engaged by the Glandelinian generals to get possession of the letters so that paperor Vivian on the following day could never have the chance to re cover recover his lost ground(not the hound) and as Violet and her sisters had surmised, the roads and trails and so forth had been so quicly and closely watched and guarded that he had had no chance to communicate withthose who engaged him to give them the papers he stole from the safe.He and others too had planned together to waylay Tim and Violet, for in any manner they could get possession of the documents.The man said however that he though a Glandelinian was humane nevertheless and no matter whether he had really got the papers or not he wouldn't so much as lay a hand on the Princesses, but that his followers were frightfully dangerous and would massacre them. This much was learned from the man, and though he did not disclose the whereabouts of his Confederates, they were captured simultaneously with Tims capturing him and this is how it was accomplished.

Indeed the robbery of violet and her sisters was the inspiration of the fiercest and most diligent and greatest search in all history of wars that early morning.A hunting line of boy and girlscouts and a myraid of soldiers and cavalry that stretched for fourty miles ploded through the rugged Big Girl Knool territory to find these Glandelinian spy patrols. It was in these districts that the Glandelinian spies had gone no doubt.As soon as the news spread of the robbery of the safe belonging to the Vivian Girl Princesses there had been within an hour thousands of men and soldiers and boy and girlscouts on the search, forming a line with a firm purpose to get the spy and his confederates.In no case where were they a few feet from each other, and in this way they were able to cover a huge section of the country without seperation or without missing any part any trail or any road.It did not matter how much time it wouldcost them as long as they captured the spies in the end.Too they all realized it was not going to be any fun nor picnic either for they all understood of the many Glandelinian scout patrols in heavy numbers that infested this area and that dangerous fray may occur. The huge line armed to the teeth and many lin miles in length, spread out, and started its swift movement across the whole territory. All of the searchers rode fast horses and they stayed only a few feet apart where they could do so as their leaders had ordered so that there would be no chance of overlooking the escaped spies had they by chance not escaped the mountain territory.

Tim had led this persuit and he had the reputation of being acquainted with this part of the country; for in his earlier career time and again he had ridden into them with a squadron in search of some Glandelinian child murder ing fools who after a massacre of children sought to escape the vengeance of the Abbiemnians by hiding in this desolate section.Tim had had need of all his knowledge this terrible and sad time. For mile after mile the line had gone ahead, and at times it seemed that the struggling wall of mounted men and child scouts would go asunder.Observers bring up the rear to stop gaps, should gaps be formed would see a small group of searchers suddenly fall to the rear and disappear only to reappear a few minutes later.They had gone on or into a deep grove to search or possibly they had hunted through one of the hundreds of small caves in the region.One group of veteran boy and girlscouts rode up and down behind the line forcing their horses to jump little crevasses, climb the gulches, and swim the cold streams .These child scouts were chosen by Jim and Violet and her sisters because all had ridden horses through lands as thisbefore.They too had to exert all the skill learned in hundreds of military horse men drives to stay on their horses that morning.

Two hours had passed and still the line went ahead.From time to time the weary searchers would gaze eastward to the glare of forest fires so far away.morning came after five hours of night searching, but the line went on.All through that long half night the hunt had continued with that fourty mile line searching every cave and cavern and grove or glen and gully hoping to find the spies.

By that time the searchers and their horses had been exhausted but as Violet and her sisters and Tim were adamant and wouldn't desist the line had went on. So at the same time Tim captured single handed the spy he sought on Violets horse the searchers encountered the other others too but in as desperate a gun battle as cowboy posses would have with outlaws in the west theycouldn't capture the Glandelinian spies and had to continue shooting untill they had slain every one of them and suffered a loss of life and in wounded amongst the searchers, including boy and girl scouts too.The bodies however were brought into camp to be identified by Tim, and Tim identified some who had held him up with Violet and the other who had been with the one he shot who acted as the bogus inspector sent by Emperor Vivian, who also was one of the men who held himup.One particular spy was arrested who was identified by Hibbert Mac-Mic Mac-cann who had did the drugging of the cups of his own and the two children and he admitted he had planned for some time to drug the three, and had seen his opportunity that day before when Violet's pony went lame and which had then been ridden by Daisy.Not only was the letters secured to Violet and her sisters and the remainder of the paths rendered safe by the capture of the spy patrols or their destruction rather, but several others things were cleared up.It was also one of these spies who had loosened the boards in the bridge, just as Tim Tim and Violet had suspected.

"Well that sure is fine now"said Tim when the news came to him after the princess es had retained their promise to him."It's all your doings Princesses, in helping me catch that fellow."

"Helping you"said Violet in astonishment."We were far away from you when you did it.you captured him by yourself."

"Yes but you're responsible for it anyway"said Tim. "If you had not learned your horse the trick of stopping suddenly the spy would have gotten away, and the letters lost to you for good.put it wasn't."

"But you thought of the scheme"insisted Violet"and as a reward for your bravery and services Tim I'm going to give you a chance for companionship with us even when Penrud comes . I expect him this afternoon or to night."

"Oh I don't want any reward.It's the countrys cause I love."

"But you're going to need our companionship"and Jennie pinched Tims blushing cheek.

Her sisters however didn't say anything but smiled happily. By this time too poor jac fortunately had fully fully recovered and was able to renew his former duty of courier which saved Violet and her sisters further from such duties duties.

In the meantime the courier duties performed at the later part of the day had done a whole lot of good for Emperor Vivians army . Though it had been threatened with dire disaster, nevertheless fearing that the letters Daisy and Tim had brought would be stolen had secretly telegraphed Concentinian Arenburgs their contents saying it was impossible to have them delivered to him in person, and therefore sizing up the situation Concentinian Arenburg had sent heavy reinforcements under general Fulivor to come to the aid of the defeated christian lines in the immediate front where the camps of Violet and her sisters were situated. All day long the contest had raged along a most extensive front with indescribable fury, and was nearly twice as severe as the recent battle of Cedermine in one day.The noise of shrapnell fire seemed to burst burst the atmosphere asunder.

It was hard to estimate what had caused the battle to assume such an awful measure, but nevertheless it was believed that there were such great numbers in the action that with everybody in it the battle assumed such a violence.It was rumored that general Izner Kyletze was the main commander of the Glandelinian army, though too the three Menleys and all the other well known general of the enemy were there. The enemy strove in one of his maddest maddest charges to capture the christian batteries under cover of a severe artillery fire of long range guns but to no avail.A rumor that Emperor Vivian was severely wounded, was unfounded, and yet it could have seemed so for often he had been wounded in the war, so often that it seemed he ought to be used to being wounded by this time.

But the ny rumors were false.All along the line the enemy directed a terrific artillery fire of the most greatest intensity ever seen in artillery storms and received an equal reply so that the din was beyond description and convulsedthe ground as if there was an earthquake.

One another another of the ammunition wagons blew up, causing exploded by the hundred, and high inflamable stuff as well as trees and shrubbery caught fire. -General Grudor seeing that the guns were unable to pursue, the Glandelinian batteries to charge hells fury upon them decided to order the infantry to resume the attack, and to strike especially Allenbergers lines with the intention of drawing Vivians fire to another quarter.General A Antone Mandin advanced his columns down the sides of the smaller portion of the hill and they rushed forward to storm Allenbergers lines, which immedd immeda immediately seemed as if swept by vast tongues of flame, but with swift and intolerable fury the christian columns pressed on, the nearest r brigades being decsimated rapidly. Yet the christians continued to advans with a fury that was amazing, and though now their front line was torn to fragments the Angelinians h died did not halt. General Rhyrus divis ions encountered a fe fierce annihilating fire and they were forced to retreat but returned a storming fire under cover.

The main line however increased the violence of their attack and now torrents of shells and sanister addedfrom Vivians batteries, the firing along the whole of Allenbergers b army frontal positions assuming a most blasting and annihilating ferocity, but the christian columns reaching the works threw themselves upon the Glandelinians though now their frightful losses was more terrific..... With the utmost fury of demons and angels together the Angelinians strove to scale the enemys positions but the graycoats kept up a desperate resistance, the dead and wounded Angelinians lying in long heaps and windrows were they had fallen. Many companies and brigades which exposed themselves reeled away. Thousands after thousands of the Angelinians under general Fortescue poured over the works in their frantic fury, and indeed along this point the desperate Glandelinians tried in vain to check the assailants. Several lines in gray stood as immovable as a rock but their numbers were being reduced in a most frightful frightful manner.

The Glandelinian cannoneers struck to their guns stubbornly mowing down masses of their assailants,,,,,,, but the survivors only mingled with them in hand to hand struggles.This part of the enemys line seemed in the danger of a reed before thathe whirlwind,, as they made a feeble barrier at last before the waves of purple and scarlet who now threatened once again to en carry all before them.....

Yet the apparently victorious Angelinians beheld with ineffable dismay that overwhelming reinforcements were rushing swiftly to general Allenburgers aid. Many of the captured guns were swung around upon the reinforcements, and though every die discharge went right through the advancing Glandelinian columns and tore scores of huge lanes through their line the surviving Glandelinians could not be checked. The cannonfire roared in the most terrible detonations, which was echoed back by thei the fiercer and sharper vibrations of general spokens heavier cannons as they blazed terrifically forth with the most intolerable roar.The very battle field and the country for three hundred miles shook vehemently from the concussion, and now an corruptitting crash and uproar was everywhere.

The heavy columns of graycoats rushed forward with the fury of a multitude that is driven to a frenzy of a panic, swarming up to the very works like a surging tidal wave, and no longer did the poor Angelinians think of victory as the enemy with high universal yells swarmed over with fixed bayonets....

The Angelinians retired in good order, and then made another madder charg charge which again broke the enemys lines to pieces, and rushed forward they closed with the reinforcements and soo soon again the Glandelinians were retiring in confusion, the confusion soon becoming a stampede. Thousands of glandelinians hearing the corruptitting crash of musketry close behind them fled in a mad panic.Indeed they had broken into a panic that could not be stopped or checked, the panic ey stricken Glandelinians again trampling over the fallen in a f reckless manner, while frightful showers of shells added by a t tempest of canister, and vast volleys of shrapnell crashed among them mowing down columns.Trees were splintered by this bath of destruction which was spread far and wide. The panic increased as now the dead was seen to lay in scores of thousands, and over the wheat fields and tward Jennie urner the enormous crowds of Glandelinians vomited themselves, amid the bloodcurdling curses, and shrieking yells of their wild persuers.Many officers dreaded that this kind of a serious retreat would mean some kind of a serious disaster, and tried to rally them but they fell. The Glandelinians had lost over I,500,000 in this bloody and disaster ous assault, and many of the Angelinians under general Shuman rushe rushed into a gully where the foe had retreated for cover from the annihilating fire and this large force of Angelinians deconded upon them and took them all prisoners.....

General Sprudors main columns on the gastoria portion of the Sacramento Hills had rushed down to help in spreading the panic, cries resounding from all sides.How indeed to the enemy the battle seemed lost.

"Help for Allenberger Antonio.His divisions are being routed."

by the christian dogs."

"Fall back slowly and with solid lines."Ordered general Allenburger to the remainder of his command still on the ridge as he saw grenadors columns preparing for a general attack of great violence."We must repell this second assault at all costs."

Allenberger saw the danger just in time for heavy reinforcements had also occupied the gastoria portion of sacramento hill and that sprudor would probably crush i his from front and overlap his whole line.Then all would be lost.

His men were already slackening up in the retreat though of course the rallied divisions could not check the rout of those driven into panic, and Allenberger rode up to a group of officers who were complaining about his orders and said:

"We must retire or sprudor will overlap us.We don't want to be annihilated like sheep by those christian dog demon wolves."

"But general Antonius divisions will be annihilated if we charge those h heights again "Said general Odin.

"I know but if we continue on our foolish retreat the christian howling demon wolves under sprudor will overlap us and we would all be surrounded and either captured or annihilated. The christian dogs are not so easily to be beaten.Hark at their storming batteries.Not a moment is to be lost.The retreat must be checked...."

In about fifteen minutes general Allenbergers divisions though still slowly retiring were being rallied, and the soldiers fearing that the main christian force would descend from the heights upon them like a swoop of enraged glengiglo swoop creatures spread out in the plains and prepared to make a desperate stand.Several generals threatened to resign because Allenberger was still withdrawing his men from the attack. His divisions hastened onward. The advance now of sprudors army began and it became fierce and terrific.The glandelinidu batteries from the main positions at pig girlwood played on them with telling effect but now they again could not be stopped.

Several of the purple lines were torn tattered and bleeding from heavy shell fire but amid the carapilitting detonations of shells all around them, ashove them and beh nd behind, they still came on, Allenberger being encompassed with doubt and horror and begun to think his retreat was a foolish one and decided to make a general stand,until Hanley could give him further aid. A catastrophe was threatening the landelinian army so fiere was fierce was sprudors advance.It was a awful hour indeed. Even now christian batteries opened fire and now the Angelinians caught up with the rear guard of Allenbergers army despite the fact that they recieved a storm of bullets from a million rifles at once that mowed them down in myriads of platoons. Many columns of the retreating landelinians were slaughtered and mangled, and the christians still rushed on.

One division of the Angelinians mingled with Heddo Fo Estrabrooks Glandelinian columns and soon they were mingled in a deadly serimmage.

The dead and wounded of both sides lay so thick that they almost concealed the ground. Large divisions of glandelinians under general pendinge were starting forward to Allenbergers aid, and skikios batteries started to pouf pour from a new point a tremendous tempest of canister and grape into the very faces of the Angelinians. At this many columns of the Angelinians fell back from this new fire, and started to stream back to the shelter of sacramento ridge Allenbergers army now rallying.The smoke of the firing which was now stopping still hide both opposing forces occasionally, and Allenbergers men now being under cover of pendings batteries which had heaped up the dead andwounded in purple were now reforming, but as two of his best brigades were surrounded he did not as yet know what to do.These glandelinians who had been surrounded hadsought in despa despair to press back their desperate assailants, and thousands fell.Thesurvir survivors vainly endeavored to escape hewing avenues in the solid purple lines but they were so terribly reduced by the shells which were hurled among them by Baldwins batteries that they were at last compelled to surrender and just at the time when the firing gain lulled and Allenberger was rallying his shattered divisions. Sprudors front lines had been during the struggle thinned terribly, but while Allenbergers army was being rallied under perfect cover, Sprueder was rei receiving heavy reinforcements.Now after half an hours lull in the fighting Allenbergers army had formed into a solid impenetrable line.Bernard had already reformed over five hundred thousand of his panic stricken men, who then fell back under cover untill they could recieved reinforcements. Though all fighting between infantry h had ceased the cannons of both sides were still considerably active.Several of Allenbergers divisions which had met with the most terrific slaughter during sprudors per suit were being marched to the rear to be reformed. Even and anon the sound of furious clattering fire made Allenberger hasten his preparations, as he knew that sprudors divisions having met no heavy fire as yet during the whole battle now would soon advance fast and storm his own lines.Also along gastings lines all was silent also along general pendons lines quiet reigned, many of their wounded hurrying to the rear for treatement. The Angelinian Angelinians soon started to rush down the sides of the hills, to attack Allenbergers lines, and now desultory firing broke out, which soon became again in full sway, and the battle was on again.....

CHAPTER [illegible]

THE SECOND FRIGHTFUL ASSAULT.....

Tb This time with a yell of wild fury which seemed as if a hundred million demons had been let loosefrom hell.the Angelinians came rushing forward with the most tremendous fury, and now gastings batteries also let ruin o their storm of hell, eighty nine thousand guns opening upon the Angelinians without a single shot being missed, and with thewost deadly effect.Sprudors charge charge was the most magnificent, and the most terrific ever seen in the war before, and though the enemys gun fire tore huge avenues in their columns they could not as yet be checked and they only came on with wilder fury the soldiers running as fast as a panic stricken mob.The advancing brg brigades brigades under Thompson Turner ghanner encountered a fire th that they could not face and they halted and fell back swiftly.Hymns purple columns still came striding fiercely across the shell torn wheatfields which was like a shell infat inferno, his divisionsseeming to vanish into the jaws of terrible destruction. Baldwins batteries on the christian side now opened fire to cover the tremendous onslaught and his own storm of shells fell heavily among Gastings batteries but the guns were not as yet silenced.

Dead and wounded already lay in windrows again, the showers of shells and shrapnell crashing among the massive lines of infantry causing along the whole o line the heaviest losses making great confusion of commands and seried rushes of the christians here and there.Still they were not checked but came on with redoubled fury. The glandelinian commanders became frantic and more and more of the glandelinin divisions were being reformed and Rudolph batteries now coming up from pig girlwood were drawn hastily into position, and stormed away to respond to the terrific commanding of Baldwins batteries and a rurfore of titans commenced.

The second struggle of the battle was now in full sway.Alex andriers Rushes glandelinian batteries was now also brought up and these being mostly machine guns were also opened upon the advancing christians with terrifying fi fury, but general Francis Schmidts Glandelinians under Knoblauches wereatruck heavily by a column of Abyssinkilians under general Henry Berger the furious and dangerous Gemini leader, and both forces closed with a wild hand to hand struggle and the fee almost annihilated were compelled to retire in confusion. Simultaneously a column of I9,000,000 Angelinians under general Randall closed with another section of the Glandelinians under Rodolfo Constantin but were almost annihilated, these Angelinians losing almost three quarters of their number, and general Megears divisions of I0,000,000 men supported by I,300,000 cavarly also closed with the enemy after meeting a very serious fire and there ensued a horrible superhuman death struggle hand to hand in which the Angelinians drove back the glandelinians in terrific confusion both leaders on combined sides falling at the same time but general Megear on the christian side was mortally wounded. The glandelinian batteries banged and crashed with a thrillion furies of titans of hell and heaven together, the noise sound as if the sky of planits were bursting in into millions of pieces, and general Melvatts johnstons and gatts, with Grisfolds plags were placing large columns under Constantine pucklet and warders and Charlemanns Guarians on Heddas badly torn up position and an immense force of Gargolians under Mc-Hollester Krandis Aronburg, and Lucille orden in a large orea orchard, and at this point the Angelinians came on in a tremendous cyclonic like advance and the slaughtered here was cessored in description the glandelinians opposing here meeting complte annihilation.It was awful.

All of these Glandelinian generals were among the dead. This horrible slaug slaughter of his troops disconcerted general Allenberger, and the sudden ol collision into which his troops had come with the Angolinian hordes of red demons was doubly terrible and already his left wing was re lled up rolled up and retiring in great confusion. Thousands of Glandelinians hurried tward the pale stricken columns trying to rally them but the re treat continued. Every Glandelinian division in the whole of Allen Allenber gers army had lost their supreme commander,, hundreds of other generals had fallen, and spruders and purgers divisions were still advancing resembling a vast nation in line formation coming on at the double time. Many Glandelinian companies had met their destruction in ty trying to check this human tidal wave, and all seemed lost for still on and on came the advancing christians. The Angolinians under general Sullane were a advancing upon general Allenbergers main center with greater fury than the Angolinians were pressing on elsewhere elsewhere, rushing on with a storm of the most piercing yells.

Sullane was killed, and general Flynn took his place and continued his advance through that horrible sea of firing. The Angolinians were dis olving now in many wedges but Flynn shouted as they started to recoil! "Come on boys give those Glandelinian curs hell" And he fell also amid the dreadful carnage. However general Shanner took his place, a d the Angolinians still rushed on with indescribable fury, swarming over the works and waving their torn and ta tattered battleflags which each had a thousand bullet holes in them or torn to shreds, and wet with slim and blood. W Shanner fell riddled by bullets, his men going down in whole lines. Spru der though severely wounded was able to retain his command, and now the enemys lines unable to stand that horrible baptism of hell and almost crushed to fragments fell back with the utmost haste before the advancing army of victorious Angelinians who tore the air with their horrible yells.

The retreat was now a panic. General Allenbergers whole center was rolled up in the wildest confusion ever seen seen in war. A scene of confusion and flight never witnessed before in any battle of the war even a ain now followed. Generals fell by the score in trying to rally them. Even the whole left wing of general Allenbergers army had been crushed to fragments, and they moved back in a regular human mob, panic stricken a perfect stampede being in regular motion as seen in cattle when stampeding before a great fire on the plains. The surviving officers made the most desperate efforts to rally them, mk making promises, threatens, and wild and frantic commands, but fell one by one. It was an inferon for the distance of thirty miles, and the scene was if as if the world was coming to an end and The other wing of general Allenbergers army which did not as yet retire in such utmost confusion, and their lines stormed with a withering fire. Several columns of this wing tried to rally against the advancing Angolinians but the christian fire swept them down in the most frightful manners and the survivors were scattered like chaff thousands of the terror stricken Glandelinians thinking of nothing but flight and escape. The persuing Angolinians now meeting no Glandelinian cannon fire at any point and being fully supported by their own from Baldwins and Ramons batteries swept on unchecked and the whole fields became crammed with purple and grayscoats as they closed together in human torrents to the Angolinians capturing prisoners by the wholesale. General Bismarkens Angolinians rapidly spread out in persuing the Glandelinians in their front and tried tried to head them off and capture the whole lot. The Glandelinins were then met by another column of Glandelinians who were advancing from another direction, and now the scene of panic and confusion became more horrible than ever. The Glandelinians were hotly pers persued by an over whelming force of Angolinians in their rear and in their front, and so in attempting to retreat another way trod upon the wounded and dying again , hundreds of thousands throwing away their muskets in their hasty flight, and never in all the war were such horrible mentories and yells heard from the Angolinin Angolinians who were now carrying all before them. Even bloodcurld ing shrieks from the Glandelinians rent the air, groans of pain, yells of terror and rage. The main portion of Allenbergers army was retreating more rapidly now than they had ever t retreat retreated during the battle being completely without the protection of their batteries which the christians had captured in their headlong charge.

The Angolinian cannon were still in action pouring a storm of shells and shrapnell upon the retreating Glandelinians, the christian advance being now at its utmost fury and at this very moment it seemed as if all the elements of civilisation were broken up by the very destruction of the world, despite the fact that the firing was not so continous now though still heavy. The smoke was so thick that nothing could hardly be seen at the distance distance of a hundred feet for a while. A thousand panic stricken Glandelinians swept by Allenberger who was trying to halt his main divisions to make a desperate desporate stand and retrive this fearful disaster. One part of the retreating Glandelinian forces was still within full range of Baldwins batteries and shrapnell and shells were ta tearing through their lines by hundreds per minute threatening the Glandelinians with annihilation. The only division of Glandelinians which had not given way during this great rout was that under the Glandelinian commander Samuel Paltze and these had stood for two hours against whirling storms of canister and shells, and now several of these columns had been spreading far out to prevent too much losses but were bewildered by Baldwins guns, and yelling like demons the christian forced suddenly poured among them and scattered them and capturing many Glandelinians as prisoners. On the Glandelinian side general Allenbergers army had been badly crushed to fragments altogether, and was put out of commission by the rout for all the time, and general Allenberger being wounded added to the complication of disasters. General Katelinin took his place only to fall also.

Nothing could stop Spruders advance upon these Glandelinians under Allenberger and so Hanley was so compelled to withdraw this huge division of panic stricken men to the rear and under cover and ordered general Constantinin Costellio to repell the fierce advance of Spruders army. The Glandelinian fire of Costellios line however receded befo re the advance of the christians, and Spruder had also recieved heavy reinforcements during his advance and continued to press forward unchecked, determined to strike a heavy blow where ever they could. As Costellio was making his battle format ion his lines became wreathed in smoke, the firing now being more intensified and the very heavens in the direction of Gl Costellios batteries when they broke into action seemed to be rent with the deafening uproar. Stupendous and reverbrating roaring crashes of musketry volleys also burst forth from the Glandelinians, and as Baldwins batteries broke out anew the noise of this firing was drowned out completely, and now general Cluntersons Glandelinians also took up position to repell the christian advance.

Despite all this the christians continued to advance, and though several divisions of Angolinians were crushed to fragments when the Glandelinian counter charged they were not daunted and the Glandelinian assailants became terror stricken and fled in utter confusion.

The whole of the left wing of Costellios army was enshrouded in smoke this part of the line firing so furiously, but the advance of the christians could not be checked, and at last the Angolinians under Henning reached the Glandelinian position defended by Glandelinians under general Rumpy. All at once along R Rumpys lines there appeared stupendous streams of gun flashes, which undulated to and fro, a writhing cloud of smoke from the thousand volle s volleys obscuring v everything from view and when it lifted an appalling scene was exposed to view. Only one third of Hennings divisions were seen retreating, the rest were lying on the ground dead or dying.

Spruders main line however continued to advance, and Gen es divisions came upon Goulds lines of grayscoats, who opened a simul taneous withering fire, the Angolinians dissolving like snow bak na banks. Genes solid lines were fairly riven, and everywhere all along the line ranks of men were falling steadily. General Archbold took place in Costellios command the latter being wounded severely, and was surprised at the boldness of the christian advance. The Angolinians were now coming nearer to Faustis Glandelininns who was arriving with all his men and large numbes of artillery.

The carnage was now increasing with tenfold fury, the fresh artillery adding to the frightful havoc havoc. Many of the brigades of the christians almost melted away in the face of the murderous fire, and everywhere for eighty miles there was a storm of deafening detonations from cannons and shells. The whole front line of Spruders right grand division had closed with the enemy, and tore , and shattered the whole enemy line so badly that it staggered, but they at the command of their officers held their ground desperately untill overlapped and then recoiled. The Angolinians at other points came rushing on and general Dogulas Fairbanks alagro large divisions reached the main line of Costellios Johnstons AOmarians which blazed and roared. Then up came the whole of Spruders lines, both sides disolved into smoke as it seemed then suddenly the horrible din that ensu ensued slackened. What was the meaning of it? The generals of both sides soon saw as the smoke wreathed away. The Glandelinians were wavering at all points, and hundreds of purple columns flying the Glandelinian flag were retinig in utmost confusion, the Angolinians poure pouring over the works like a human w flood and crashing down upon the retiring Glandelinians with the fury of a hellish avalanch.

Spruder Aronburgs Glandelinian cavarly simultaneously had been repulsed with the loss of more than three quarters of the entire division of both horses and men in the horrible melee of a dashing counter charge, and had to fall back with the rest. It was now the retreat of another big Glande Glandelinian division.It failed even more disasteriously to do the work that general Allen berger hd failed to accomplish. For twenty miles everywhere desolation of trees was exposed, and the ground was encumbered by a perfect sea of dead,wounded,dying Glandelinians and the works was a windrow of dead and wounded of both sides.The losses of both sides were equally as horrible. This fierce onslaught of the Angelinians showed the beautiful courage of the Angelinians and indeed it did seem that fate favored them for their daring. Many gaps were torn in the retreating graylines by the storm of minnies and general Yaks divisions were shattered by the fire of Baldwins batteries whose flaming position seemed to roar like a titanic volcano in eruption, and his Glandelinian columns also recieved heavy showers of canister from the dashing machine guns which followed the advance, and from chain shot which mowed their ranks down by the hundred.Thousands of Glandelinians and Angelinians were crushed and maimed. The Glandelinians under general Howard were constantly harassed by the christian assailants and many of the panic stricken Glandelinians grouped under the impossible shelter of trees amid the mighty tempest of battle.A large division of Glandelinians under general Mackentire were broken by the christians under Mackarmarrow who tore their way through with great violence, throwing them into a complete panic.

Another slight lull ensued as Manley withdrew this shattered army from the christian front.Two disasters in one afternoon. Most of his Glandelinians had already been withdrawn to Catrorin Creek, and here Manley concentrated the main body of Omarians and Mc-Hollestinians under general Cannon Bicknell a and placed here a new line of batteries which was intended to try and stop the christian advance at this point. The gasping forms of hundreds of thousand thousands of the wounded was pitiful, but the Angelinians confident of victory continued their advance, the new force of Glandelinians now swarm ing to the f defense, their long solid line presenting a frightful aspect as they started to blaze with fire.

The mighty multitudes of Glandelinians under general Horn became shocked at the sight of the sea of dead and wounded Glandelinians left by the two retreating divisions which had met the disaster and they were almost on the point of retreating. Freshmanns Glandelinians however opened fire with greater intensity, and the whole first line of advancing christians again melted away but the main portion pressed on without check, and now the cries of the hundreds of thousands of mangled forms was more appalling than ever the wounded rolling and writhing upon the blood-soaked ground.The Angelinians returned as fierce a storm of fire and soon the Glandelinian works were cov ered or almost buried in the dead and wounded of the Glandelinians and christ ians comb combined..... Twenty five more Glandelinian ge erals lay prostra ted in death near the christian lines. Ten christian generals had also met the enemys fire face to face and met a like fate.One third of the nu ber number of christian officers who led this tren tremendous charge were either dead or wounded. Munzoys Glandelinians were retreating now as the a Angelinian Angelinians were advancing upon their center and almost three quarters of their number had been almost mowed down the christian fire sweeping away every mass of men it swtuc struck but Hawkshaw with his Glandelinians were being brought up to help repell the assault, followed by fresh divisions under Audery Costello and Ninoibeds, but despite all this the Glandelinian commanders realized they were being overwhelmed.

The other portion of the christian assailants had reached the enemys new line of works only to dissolve into fragments, but nevertheless the main body pressed on,, and general Hawshaws and Hawkshaws Glandelinians became panic stricken also, and not being able to meet the oncoming avalanch of Angelni Angelinians retreated in really a wierd confusion, and everything alog along this point seemed to fade away being hidden by the blinding wreaths of smoke.....The Angelinians were still advancing in the shape of purple billows and swept over the enemys works,, mowing down whole masses of the Glandelinians.....

The right wing of general Archibalds Glandelinians held the position stubbornly but many of the Glandelinian divisions were torn to fragments, and it did indeed seem as if general Archibalds Glandelinians were in danger of being surrounded, their very main line seeming to open into many large gaps.General Bernard Dunns Glandelinian divisions seemed also to be engule enfulfed in a vortex of destruction.....

Surrounded as they were the Glandelinians fought with the fury of great desperation, but the whole gray line seemed engulfed in the frightful carnage, but still the surviving columns,,,, ,, still stood their ground nobly.So fiere fierce was the firing that the whole scene of carnage was redoubled, but the Angelinians reaching the enemys positions again after a repulse fell upon the su stubborn Glandelinians under Wailen, while simultaneoult another Angelinian column crashed down upon the Glandelinians under Neldon Costellio Johnson who made the most serious resistance ever seen, but it was useless. The Glandelinians had lost more than three quarters of their men in repell ing this stage of the christian assault, and surrounded as they almost where they had fought desperately and counter charged time and again but all their attempts were bloody failures.

ut at the Glandelinian center the Glandelinians were still holding though atta attacked by the christians with murderouscfr fury. Indeed there seemed to be a regular intoxiated rush of christian soldiers headlong to a speedy result speedy result without the slightest moment to think. The Angelinians were indeed charging upon the e e enemy it seeming to the enemy to be in the jaws of death to try and hold their positionmuch longer.....

The defeated Glandelinians under Neldon Costellio Johnson were only driven half way from their position when the entire division of Hearsts Glandelinians came up to their rescue, and soon these were making the retreat ing columns turn the other way in double time. The Angelinian cannon on the right and left, had again burst into action, but the Glandelinians still held on firmly though the Angelinians fought them furiously, and now the Glandelinian batteries under general Leo Costellio also opened fire upon the attacking christians, and sweet to the ears of the Glandelinians was the scream of their own shells over their heads against the chain of christian batteries playing on them., and against their trenches. IOO gathling guns also broke loose with their renewed concert of hell, and cannons of heavy calibre added to the frightful din. Hundreds of round shot ricochetting over the ground like hot liners from baseba ll bats, made many a Glandelinian soldier headless, opened up many abdomens, taking of manny a leg or an arm.Yet the Glandelinians only laughed at them.They felt that they were bould to win this battle under any conditions whatever. The most murderous musket volleys ever described, now came ripping into the gray lines.Even long broadsides of shells and shells of gang gan material and shrapnell came from the right of Spruders advancing batteries, then a storm of canister again took the place of shells mowing the graycoats down like fresh green ga grass. The Glande linians under Hearst was annihilated, and the Angelinians under Barger reached the enemys position amid the uproar of hells dmanation, and now general Wagners divisions of Glandelinians were in fearful peril of being ovw overwhelmed and annihilated. The Glandelinians along the left had also been so terribly reduced that they were compelled to give way, but the senter and right kept up their stand against the fisco attack, wit h the frenz frensy of despair.

Large divisions of infantry and artillery in front of general Bargers brigades which were at the head of the charge seemed hanging on the edge of a precipice with their t r teeth as it were, and striking their last desperate super human blows against those yelling, plunging ,a maddened pur ple figures that rushed on in multitudes. The scene was like a perfect orgy of devastation. The Glandelinians along this point had only twenty guns remaining out of IO,000 . The very lines of Glandelinian infantry seemed undulating in ghastly lurid sheets of flame, and the smoke was so thick that the enemys position looked long a long conflargr ation. There were innumerable rents in the lines of gray from a million bullets, Hearsts divisions recieving the full force of the christian fire and attack. The Glandelinians had only one gun remaining now and the formost of the assailants now reached the position pouring tward the desperate Glandelinian defenders in enormous torrents.Whole mult multitudes cumbred the ground anew and now general Nicholas ha had only one gun remaining to his own battery. A shell exploded near him and a fragment opened his abdomn abdomen. The brave Glandelinian general held hi his intestines in eith one o with one hand while with the other hand he ran the gun forward.

''I will give them one last discharge''He cried.''

He dropped dead with the discharge.

The plateu of the enemys sailent like position alo g the Glandelinian front was fairly paved with the dead and wounded of both sides, but Barger leaped the blood covered fence in front of the Glandelinian works followed by over nine hundred and fifty thousand men.

''Give the Glandelinian dogs of hell the cold steel.''He shouted.

The Angelinians surged upon the works and the Glandelinians were at last thrown back by the fury of the charge.

Darger leaping the works laid his hand on the gun of a captured battery and placed the tattered Angelinian flag on it, while over his head still floated the beautiful flag of Glandelinia which he had captured. General Hearst of the Glandelinians dropped pierced by a hundred bullets while sixty g thousand of his men were shot down with the summariness of an execution. The progress of the advancing christians was now more successful than before for through the struggling purple lines came heavy reserves at the charge. The Angelinians were still the assailants and now they attacked the Glandelind Glandelinians with appalling fury.

The Glandelinians under Archibald had repell this great christ ian attack with over I7,000,000 men and now only threemillion six hundred thousand were remaining, and still they maintained their fierce defense be cause their leaders were too stubborn to order a retreat.....

Baldwins infantry hd now rushed forwar and his batteries prepagated the effects of their insedious firing. Other divisions arived to be swallowed up in smoke of musketry. Many of the Glandelinian columns still continued to disolve and immense multitudes of Glandelinians lay every where even in the trenches, hundreds of rrgiments had been annihilated, and now the main line of Archibalds Glandelinians began to waver in general and as they retired they looked like a whole melting line of men.They had only fourty thousand and fourty men left now.Over 6,345,494 grayscoats had been killed, and the rest of the fallen were wounded and dying.

Archibalds Glandelinians now retreated also in panic they also having been able to repell the wild christian advance, and had even failed to turn wither flank of Hansons army.

After this great success general Vivian held a short consil with Hanson and the supreme christian generals.He was in for making a general onslaught upon Manleyss main position at once but his officers would not hear of it. Camillias divisions of Turners corps which had no taste of the battle as yet was just reaching the field by way of Jennie Turner.

Confident over his great success already accomplished general Hanson himself decided to make a general effort to pierce Manleys general line. His told his generals about it but several declared that it was imprtal folly the folly of a man trying to walk the third rail.But general Vivian knew he could accomplsih his plan and to stop now when all this success was accomplished would mean terrible disaster. Even delay was dangerous and so he decided to send Camillias fresh divisions of high spirited troops, and not march them away in a foolish retreat.

Camillia was impatient and general Vivian was glad at heart. It was already two oclock and all was quiet for a time along general Federals and Manleys lines. And to Ewell Ridge. The broken cannons on sacremento ridge was being removed by the Angelinians and Baldwin was concentrating the full strn strength of his batteries on the captured hill. General Vivian at Hanson s instruction was making preparations to open a general art illery duel to prevent Manley frok recovering from the dreadful shock he had recieved from the tremendous assault of Gruders columns which were holding tenaciously the positions they had captured. He intended to concentrate the artillery fire upon Manleys main center, which he intended to have Camillia attack. If he could not silence the Glandelinian batteries then there would be no use to make this general assault.

Manley had also intended to open a general artillery duel timing it for two o-clock and all his main batteries b were being placed into pos ition on his center. General Vivian intended to open fire at two thirty o-clock but started sooner than he intended and at two fifteen. All the difficulties of the ground between the christian lines and the point of attack was revealed. Large woods, immense streams, and many small but steep hills impeded the movements of the Glandelinian artillery and necessitated a fight for the Glandelinians with infantry against batteries while general Vivian could fight with infantry cavarly and batteries combined. Beyond were long lines under general Geary Phelan. General Vivians center was defended by many tiers of artillery, supported by four long lines of infan try, and heavy reserves of infantry were arranged in many columns on the crests of the heights protected by a long rail fence.Across the low land was a long wooden and barb wired fence to obstruct any march of Manleys troops. If the Glandelinians ever took it into their heads to charge the christians they would have to a advance of over a mile of open ground in the face of a terrific rain of shrapnell and canister, and face the musketry fire of many lines of christian infantry.General Vivian had a position that not even the biggest nation could oust him out of. Even immense detatch ments of infantry were thrown forward to support the artillery.

CHAPTER [illegible]R.

THE RIDGE OF HELL

II6,I20 cannon stretched seventeen miles long.Sixteen batteries of the seventh corps were forming position on the sacremento railroads with the rest of the artillery of this corps stationed near it. At the right of Trimble Trimbles lines Handons b batteries were stationed.General Wilsons guns were posted on the summit of catspaw hill to the south, and on his left was Pettigrews c cannons of heavy calibre guarded by Wilcox and Michael Swary Swartze battalions. General Vivian intended to cannonade general Manleys cen ter with all his artillery available to reach the point. General Camillias assault was to be sustained by the batteries held in reserve under general Sieguary.General Vivian also learned that general Crawford had scouts out all night proceeding the first day of the battle and had summoned him while the preparations for the artillery duel was being made. In answer to his question general Crawford said;

''Yes general I have had my scouts out all night and they have discovered that you have an excen excellent opportunity to make a movement around to the left of Manleys army and while assaulting his center manouver his right into attacking us.Though would immediately finish him.''

''But are you sure I'm going to carry Manleys center even by drawing za part of Manleys army away from him!''Said general Vivian.

Crw Crawford answered;

''General I have been a soldier since I became a man and I have been with sod soldiers engaged in fights and should know as well as any one does what soldiers can do. It's my opinion that no 7I,000,000 men ever arrayed for battle should it be done so, can carty carry our own position.You know from your arrangements that your guns would mow down all that got within range You can easily carry Manleys center.''

General Vivian convinced that this was true did not say anything more but rode to general Strathis brigade commander.

''General Vivian''Said gthis general''I nearly reached the crest of that hill this morning in defending the sacremento hill.My but those Glandelinians are stubborn.''

''Do you think you could go there now and carry it?''General Vivian asked.
''No general I think not. I don't think an attacking column as small as mine could face that chain of batteries and inf infantry and live.''
''I know it''Said general Vivian.''But could not those points be carried by the attack of an overwhelming force.''?
''No sir I do not think so?''
''Why not?God is with us and will help us to win.''
''Because general the Glandelinians have had all night to intrench and rein force.''
At this moment some important movement was evidently taking place opposite general Vivians left center.The enemy were seen concentrating on their ridge and placing a great number of large batteries into position. General Vivian then rode to see general Cammillia. who was with his divisions ashort distance to the rear. General Vivian did not tell him his object but only tried to guess how Cammillia felt about making the chr charge. He seemed very sanguine and thought himself in luck to have the chance.Then general Vivian felt that he could not have any delay or let the attack suffer by any indecision on his part, and that general Crawford might know his intention he wrote him only this;;

''General when our artillery fire is at its best I shall order general Camillia to charge.''

General Vivian then asked general Handon to give the order for the charge when the artillery fire seemed to take effect. Handon answered;
''All right general.....''It's not so hard to go to the enemys center, as it looks for the enemy to come over here.I was nearly there with my brigades yesterday..''''

''The main thought of mine is to stay there.''Said general Vivian.
''The whole Glandelinian force seems to be gathered there in a buch bunch.''
''You can do it and stay too.''Was Handons answer.
It was now fifteen minutes after two... The so, solume silence which had reigned over the battle field was now suddenly broken by several cannon shots. A few minutes passed and then again the Angelinian artillery sent its ominious message thundering through the valley and echoeing and reechoeing from all the mout mountian sides.While the smoke still lingered over the l plain, the whole line became ablaze, and every hill top lined with artillery sounded again like a series of violent volcanic eruptions. It was the first heaviest cannonading ove over heard during the war, and the explosions of shells succeeded each other so rapidly that the roar was as continuous as t a thousand drums beaten frantically by two drummor boys on a each drum.....
333,562. guns on the ridges in possession of the christians also started up their own reply to the enemys now thundering cannon, and soon in answer to the Angelinian artillery nearly all of the Glandelinian batteries were ke keeping up an unceasing roar, and the most merciless artillery duel of the first bloodiest battle of the war had begun. The christian line remained steady although it was exposed to the murderousfire which passed over the christian artillery, and struck the infantry with terrible effect. General Vivian realized that general Manleys batteries were responding with titan fury for the din was tremendous. For two hours the terrible artillery firing continued, and then the firing of artillery on the side of the Glandelinians began to slacken, and this made general Vivian hope that their guns were silenced or out of ammunition.But spies had told general Manley of general Vivians into ntions, and so Manley had ordered the heavy firing of cannons to be stopped.Hot guns were given t ime to c cool, and frah fresh batalions of artillery were brought up to take the place of those s disabled. The Angelinian troops were forming just below the brow of the ridge.Cammillia twenty brigades were to attack in front whorethere was a bristling hedge of Glandelinian artillery and infantry.Joy and Kindernine were to charge in in second, third and fourth lines of battle.Gannon to join Kindernine.Germaine Trimble was behind the two supporting divisions to take Kindernines place. Kindernine was appointed to lead the charge with Cammillia and he rode up to general Handon for orders.Handon was depressed over the fact that he know the enemys batteries were not really silenced and said;
''I do not wish that your men be sacrificed general Kindernine, so I've sent a note to Crawford telling him to watch carefully the effect of our artillery fi fire upon the enemy enemy and that when it begins to tell he must take the responsibility and notify you himself when to make the attack.He has been directed by general Vivian to charge with you at the head of your line with a battery of one hundred thousand, eleven pound howitzers, fresh horses and full caissons.''

A courier rode up and handed a note from c Crawford which read;

''General Kindernine if you are coming, come at once. or I cannot give you proper support for the enemys art illery fire is not slackening at all.At least I,000 guns are still firing from the center of Manleys posit ion itself.''''''''''';)('a 14/"

Kindernine handed the note to genral Handon asi asking if he should go forward.General Handon held out his hand in assent but did not say any thing.Kindernine galloped off and soon what proved to be the death march began.Handon went alone to Crawford.
''I fear that the ammunition will not hold out.''Crawford said.
''Stop Kindernine then and replenish your ammunition.''Said Handon.
''It will take too long.''Said Crawford as the drum drum boom of Glandelinian cannon now crashed to the far front.''It would give the opposing army time to adjust itself and there is very little ammunition with which to repelaish and general Vivian is too far away with his other columns just now watch ing Spruders advance.''
Together they stood by the thundering christian batteries, when the ma magnificent christian columns went past, the officers saluting as they marched on. General Kindernine led the troops mounted on his spirited charger, gallant, e graceful and courageous as a knight of chil chivalry.His hair which was long and black floated backwards in the wind as he rode down the slope of death.

CHAPTER ~~ENTHREE~~ FIVE.

Chapter 18

THE MASSACRE

Kindernine was greatly surprised to see his friend general Hanson Vivian rid ing at the head of his own troops a as he had been reported wounde the day before and lying in an ambulance for hours.He had made his men put him in the saddle that he might direct the assault in person so that it might be a success. Kindernine joined him and rode with him a short distance, when they wished each other goodbo bye and said a sad farewell only fortunately to meet again on the slope or summit. at the crisis of the carnage. The long solid lines pressed on in magestic order like moving walls of purple waves.All of the religeous banners and the beautiful battle and regimental flags waved over them. At the head of each regiment f, floated the beautiful sacred Heart flag of Abbisannia.....
The advancing columns neither paused nor faltered in their advance or sgarge. All of a sudden broke the awful roar of fourty thousand cannon, and the fiercer and sharper detonation of exploding shells. The Glande linian batteries blazed away in the most terrific manner, but the Ange linians spread out in seperate divisions and then began to rush forward with tremendous fury. Frightful showers of round shot bounding along tore through their ranks mangling whole divisions.Scores of hundreds of shots ricocheted around the advancing columns, and a frightful shower of fresh shells exploded, darting flashes, before, behind, and overhead. Vad Vast volleys of great gang-gang shells, and chain shot tore right through the advancing lines at every discharge of the enemys cannon crushing and destroy ing columns.
A mightier earsplitting roar of artillery broke loose to their left and columns disolved by tens. Kindernines divisions seemed in danger of annihilation a, and even shameful was the numbers of Cammillias men that also went down.

A large thi k line of skirmishers prostrate on the grass suddenly arose within fifty yards.A murderous hail of bullets came from the line of skirmishers and many ranks went down. T he skirmish line then ran on ahead but soon halted and poured a second murderous volley, and continued firing as fast as they could reload, retreating at intervals.The Angolinians though hundreds of their their columns went down or were shattered and mangled by the artillery fire continued to advance not returning the fire of the Glandelinians.

Past the batteries and half way over the fields, and past big and little Girlknools they rushed and then came the order;;;;;;;;;;;;;

''Left Onlique Oblique.!''

Coolly the mo e movement was made the Angolinians hastening onward. A part of Kindernines column c caught up with the opposing skirmish line which retreated in confusion losing many prisoners.The dead and wounded now for one hundred and fifty yards lay like grass. From the left of the hill of the enemys position burst the fire of hell as it were from fourty thousand more cannon.Sheets of canister, shells and shrapnell poured into their very faces as it were, and the purple coats began to disolve in whole brigades. Hansons men fell in thousands at every step, the very officers fal i falling like grain before the sweep of the scythe. The dead and wounded lay in hundreds of heaps but the survovors pressed on, whole lines now going down.

Thousands were mangled by the furious rain of shot and shell which again c hewed immense gaps in the advancing line. Hansons whole front had a already melted away, and Kindo Kindernines encountering an annihilat ing fire went down in scores of thousands at every yard.

Terrific torrents of shells tore through Camillias lines threatening his divisions with descimination, as there was no pause in the awful cannonading now. The booming of a new and far distant cannonade could now be heard to the right, mingled with the grinding and hissing roar of the shell torrents, the Angolinians seeming to advance into the turbulent abyss of death and destruction.

For the length of the whole line of march the dead and wounded lay in q windrows, the showers of shot and shell crashing through the massive columns, and again whole brigades melted away. Presently came the command;

''Front forward''And the columns resumed its direction straigh straight down u upon the center of Hanleys position. The firing of the Glandelinians artillery had now increased to terrifyi g terrifying fury, as IO,000 more guns now concentrated, their whoAwhole fury of shot shell, canister and chain shot upon the advancing christian line.Purple coats now s seemed to go down by the hundred thousand Officers of high rank or low were fast being swept away.Poor Camillia went down mangled and bleeding, his whole division being descriminated.Along the plains to the left the line of purple coats were being descriminated, many columns being mangled, and up and down his lines rode Kindernine calling out;

''Faster men faster.Close up, and step out, but don't double time.''

The terrific cannonading of the Glandelinian batteries was now at its utmost fury.As thy they started to ascend the ridge a murderous storm of canin canister gr greeted them, and now immensecmult multitudes went down.

Again the whole elements of civilization seemed to be broken u p or threatened with annihilation.A rush of scores of thousands swept past Hanson, a rain of canister mowed them down. The storm of canister increased but the Angolinians continued on. The mighty and deafening uproar from the Glandelinian cannon continued,, and the whole of Triples line consist ing of 6,600,000 men was completely descriminated, the carnage being spread far and wide.

The Angolinians were now nearly to a long stone breastwork.From n behind this rose a long massive gray line and along the w whole of this line a long sheen of thick white smoke appeared, pierced by millions of dull flashes, and as from the very mouth of hell came a continuous exploding roar of musketry reseb resembling a million cannon blowing to pieces. Crawford went down mortally wounded, and his whole column withered away. Thousands of volleys met Hansons divisions from the gray lines and now his men went down it seemed in many multitudes.

Along the whole gray line there was a titanic uproar.A simultaneous wither ing fire of musketry broke out along the whole of Estrabrooks line, and the Angolinians here fell by many scores of thousands at every step as it seem seemed, the solid line of the christians being fairly scathed, and still many more thousands of men were falling as the advance continued on. The scene of carnage had increased to tenfold fury, and ranks big or small went down like grass.

A scathing fire was opened all along the line of purple coats when Kindernine galloped up and called;

''Cease firing.Save your strength and ammunition.''

Under such perfect discipline were these Angolinians that without slackening their pace they reloaded their weapons, shouldered arms, and went on at a quick step. The Angolinian artillery from Baldwins batteries had all this while supported the assault, but the enemys guns were greater in number and the light pieces which were to have guarded the infantry had been diabled by the enemys artillery fire, and none could be found to take their place . The awful roar of the Glandelinian musketry and artillery fire com bined had redoubled the din now din now and the Angolinians were falling in numbers too frightful to relate in detail.Dauntlessly the lines pressed forward as grand an army of christian heroes as ever made a battlefield famios famious.

Thewhole front line of the christian assailants had been redo reduced to fragments.Yet the brave survivors pressedon though the storm of canister and minnies threatened to sweep awq y every division it struck. Terrible was the screaming and detonations of the shells, but still on pressed the Angolinians,, the formost division now reaching a low long fence upon the other side of which parallel to it a plank road ran straight through the field.....!!.. It was the work of a few minutes to climb over the fence into the road, but in that short time the dead and wounded lay s high as the fence itself.There in the road under the fiery storm of hell from the batteries on the heights amid the terrible almost per preternatural deafen ing roar of the battle, a and the cries of the hundreds of thousands of wounded,, and dying,, they heard the commands of their company offics officers;;;;;;

Then came the word''FORWORD FORWARD''''''

These heroes of Christ alinged and reformed their ranks and ca mly awaited the general command forward, and then with perfect precision, with all the grace and accuracy of the parade ground the brave columns of christians again took up their death march.

They came on s swiftly and irrestibly like avalanches of men.

''Faster men faster.We are almost there.''Cried Kindernines clarion voice above the roar of the battle. Then he went down and back and forwards among the lines dropping so fast into dead and wounded with the faith of a little child in his hero heart.There was a muffled thread behind, a rush of trampling feet and Hansons brigades from the rear closed up behind the shattered and mangled front line.Gallant general Hanson with his Cornoot ,like hat on the point of his sabre took command of the entire division which had been reduced from fourty to thirty million men.As often as the storm of hell made avenues through the lines, a cheer would come from private, corporal, lie utenant , captian, and general alike.The long line shortened but never w wavered. Closer and closer they drew to the foe.They now broke for ward into a double quick, while terrific storms of canister and grape whirred and whizzed through the air..... On they rushed tward the stone breastworls breastworks where the glandelinian batteries and infantry w were pouring destruction.A hundred and sixty nine yards away a large flanking force of Glandelinians came down on the run, halted suddenly, and fired into the rear of the advancing purple line. The purple line at this section reeled and staggered, and the right of this column of counter charging glande linians pressing upon the center, making the column at this point two thousand deep and three miles long which wavered to and fro, a vehement struggle now raging hand to hand, the fighting bing terrific.....

A million muskets crossed in wild tumult, hundreds of thousands of bayonets rang steel on steel, men fired furiously with pistol and rifle to right and left and front, and into each others faces, they fought desperately hand to hand.....

The Glandelinians in front fell behind theu their guns in dead by thousands which were piling up the dead and wounded Angolinians almost in touch of them.

When the shattered, torn, tottered, and bleeding christian line was within a few feet of the stone breastwoo breastwork three thousand guns b delivered the last fire shoo shotted to the muzzk muzzle and as a whole column of Angolinians three hundred thousand strong as if in execution Hanson with his sword in hand, sprang over the stone breastworks crying;

''Come on boys.Come on for the sake of Christ.We'll give the Glandelinian hellhounds the cold steel.Come on boys and follow me.''

General Crabapple on the enemys side mortally wounded ran his last guns dw down to the breastworks saying to his men;

''Come on and we'll give them one more good broadside.''

The battery blazed, and a line rolled away. Hanson reached the battery trouched Crabapples gun and two other generals just then fell dead side by side. The center of the gray li line was thrown back by the force and fury of the christian charge. The progress of the christian advance was for the time arrested by the deadly fire of the glandelinians n and now fresh troops arived and threw themselves upon the Angelinians, Manley ordering his divisions to hold their ground to the last man, and led the counter charge of the new comers.The Angelinians hower however were swarming over the new works and now the fall of many of their best leaders became known to the lande linians and back from the flaming crest fe, fell only a remnant of the brave Glandelinian defenders which had performed such deeds of val valor in defending their hard pressed position, and which made the whole Angelinian world marvel..... From both flankes now seeing that the charge is won the Angelinians pressed on with the ardor of victory and the whole column of Glandelinians faced about.The glandelinians retreated swiftly to their second position of works really close between big girlknool, Madge Evans, and Jennie Turner and all the way of their retreat they fled under a murderous fire, while general Murphys men with grim skilful interference covered the retreat. There was no good news for general Manley from any quarter as yet. His great but wicked heart was broken, and needed to be broken for his wicked sins. But his head was up as he calmly looked the inevitable in the face.

''My fault men.It's all right men.''Cried general Manley tears in his eyes as he rode up and down among the staggering winded, remnants of his fellow glandelinians.

Early that morning he was hoping for victory, now his only thought was to savehis army.Every now and then his glances were alert for the flash of z swarming bayonets on the heels of the glandelinians, and his ears were alert for the murrah of the renewal of the desperate charge. Victorous in ords order of battle the Angelinians on the captured ridge looked down on the rout.But they did not follow as their losses was too heavy and they waited for the arival of general Vivians army left behind on sacremento Hill. ZSeeing this Manley realized that every moment of delay of the christians was precious for him.When all the survivors had returned general Manley came forward alone to meet their leader. Bicknell or Federal was not with them having been bon borne off in an ambulance.

''General Federal and Leonia Meldonia Bicknell are severe y wounded.''Said a colonel who alone survived of any officer of rank.

''Colonel Garnett.''Said general Manley.''All of your men have covered yourselves with glory.It will always be an hor honor to have been with Bicknells men.''

''General Manley''Rep ied Garnett .''All the glory in the world could never atone for the win widows and orphans this massacre of christian troops we committed have made.''

This desperate assault had lastedlasted thirty minutes and the enemy in defending the ridge had lost 9,900,500.

CHAPTER TH[illegible]. 19.

WHAT IS GAINED BY PERSEVERANCE.

During the time of Camillins great charge it had also been reported that general Hanson had been severely wounded, but he had not been wounded though it was was true that he had been stunned when the christian won by a branch of a tree which had fall,e fallen on his head. He was around again about three o-clock.....

He immediately went to general Vivians headquarters. Gn general Vivian was still more hn ppier over the failure of Manley to hold against Camillins tremendous attack, and as the remainder of Hansons and general Vi ia Vivians army had now come up come up general Vivian gained more confidence and decided not to stop striking Manley untill he was compelled to retreat. Even tward three o-clock Violet and her sister s made their appearance at general Vivians headquarters and reported the condition of Manleys lines which the Gemini had given to them....

''It's strange I had never known that you were out spying while this great charge was going on.''Said general Vivian.''So you were almost captured and the Angelinians rescued you.''

''Yes answered Violet.

During general Camillins great charge upon the enemy there had simultaneously occured one of the most greatest cavarly engagements that ever happened as far as the war had progressed. The glandelinians who fought this great exgagement directly in front of the Two Girlknools were a part of Federals hooded Gargle Garlolin s mostly called Gargolians, and these kind of Glandelinians always have been known to have a more determined disposit ion than a million desperate desmonds and pudulph Rassendales put together. They had followed the Angelinians secretly in the rear with the intention of striking a blow that would prevent the charging columns ff from carrying the enemys position but a large force of Christian cavar y mostly consen tinians had decended upon them with the fury of a armed mob of demons on horseback, and the glandelinians after fighting hand to hand for three hours, had been compelled to retreat a little ways while their officers had een compelled to signal for help. One of the hooded gargl Gargolians un furled a signal flag and immediately waved it frantically tward another large wall of Gargolian cavarly that was approaching s o slowly, for the signal man knew that if the Angelinians gained the cavarly engagement on them it would be all off altogether .

And yet amid the dreadful clashing of sabres and smoke of carbines, and roar of yells, and the neighing horses the soldiers who were approaching had not needed to be signalled to for they at once knew what was up and advanced fr furiously charging themselves like a surge of wild demons The general of the charging Glandelinians suggested to general Louderback to take ordinary or precaution and save a small group of men to cover a possible retreat.

''General Remember a good reserve.The Angelinian dogs are a good four to our one ' and the main line of Concentinian cavarly is coming quickly to their aid.''

But Louder back happened to be the maddest man on earth at that time over the losses already inflicted by the dashing charging of the christian troopers and charging furiously against the christians he yelled;

''Too hell with a reserve.This is to be a death struggle. Vengr Vengeance for the death of our my commanders.''

And another generals voice boomed out;

''The sword of the Lord and of Gideon.''

The Glandelinians made the maddest cavarly charge upon the christians ever known before the men seeming to be at no ones command in their raging mad ness, the Glandelinians being so furiously moved by rage and excitement that they seemed to abandon the use of firearms and spure themselves forward like a cyclone of horses and men like a living missle of such momentuim that once launched, was forever forever beyond any ones recall, and that to be stopped must be destroyed. The charging horsemen were crowded over ten to eleven deep in a long line two miles in extent, and boot to boot in a thundering second line came the other sw swarm of fierce demonine Gargolians sweeping toward the firing christian cavarly lines like the first wave of destruction swept upon Calverine during the Mt Calverinian erution clouds of dust whipping aside in large gusts and disclosing the tossing manes, the distended nostrils and the red eyes of the steeds, the flash of sunlight on blades of sabres, and lances, the faces of men furiously moved the bristling red and white silken guidrions, snapping their thousands of swallow tailsabove the cloud, or the heavy standards streaming their red, yellow and blue cords behind them.The x deafening roar of millions of pound ing horses hooves was like nothing else in the world, and drowned com pletely the wild crash of millions of carbines along the purple line of Angelinian cavarly, and the red line of Concentinian cavarly. The first sweeping wve of cavarly in gray seemed to fairly wither under the christian fire of pistols and carbines, their officers tearing into the wild incon ceivable chaoes, shouting vommands and waving gleaming sabres.

The shock came as from a gigantic tidal wave.With a yell of a million hurricanes the glandelinian s survivors struck the first wave of purple coats and closed through it in a solid mass of screeching, screaming, yelling, howling, and crusing mobs of demons in human form and the crash of weapons meeting togother was audible anything else.Horses who were still bestridden went end over end in the air, clouds of swords flashed together making a conflargration of sparks, hundreds of thousands of pistols were fired at point blank, and there was an indescribable conglomerated mix up of purple, red and grayecats in a pandemonuim of con fusion a hundred fold. Thousands of mangled men were trampled underfoot or the hooves of horses, and amid the wild uncanny din could be heard the groans of the wounded and dying.Thousands of horses gone mad fri from the confusion of sound reared on their hu haunches haunches screaming and fighting each other with hoof, tooth and bodies.

The men even on horseback even on any exchanged blows with fists pulled each others hair, used pistol butts, tried to scrotch r each others eyes, cut, and bite each other, and stabbing each other with daggers or clubbing each other with carbine butts.At the line of desperate contact, sabres men rifles, and horses seemed tossed up like spume on a wave crest and so many hats flew up into the air from the christians that it seemed as if the fighters were hit by a severe wind windstorm.The first wave of purple coats and Concentinian cavarly amidthe dreadful carnage seemed crushed to frag ments, or literally trampled into the dust, and the grayco columns went onward and tward the second wave wi with a yelping roar. From the second wave of horsemen in purple and red they met more serious resistance, the howling backing purple and red line presse pressing forward and through the gray surges tearing their way through and through with all their might, and there was gain an indescribable mixup, the Angolinians keeping up the attack with the most appalling fury, destroying and being destroyed, and there was indeed about a greater number of duel in this cavarly engagement that ever seen in any war of the worlds as it were.Men even wrestled on their horse, and in many a tussle the Angolinians pulled the hoods off from the heads of the glandelinians, and so desperate was the struggle that the uniforms of both sides was liete literally in rags.After withg fighting with all their might and fury the Angolinians managed to cut down the glandelinian waves of cavarly and rout the survivors.The Angolinians did not persue being content with beating back the glandelinins as it were.But the christian losses was ten to one of the enemys cavarly.

In the meantime while Hanson and Camillia had been making the great assault upon Manleys center the demonstration had caused what had been expected and wished for and that was making the glandelinian right wing attack general Vivians a almost unassailable position. While the christian troops under Hanson and Camillin were half way across the death plain reports came to general Vivian that a lage force of glandelinians had been f seen for ten minutes sweeping across from the region of Kittens Riecherts and was now v attacking general Vivians left wing.Those w glandelinians were reported to be under the command of Compress and guman side. Humansides glandelinians had really attacked but had encountered a [illegible] the christian artillery and infantry.The Angalinians along this portion of general Vivians line were holding their ground side stubbornly, and shoulder cusly with the begginning of the attack several of the Columns of the Glandelinians had succeeded in breaking through general [illegible] Rudolphs line tearing it asunder when they closed. This threw his Angolinians into great confusion, but as the assailants came into immediate contact with Rudolphs second line they were held at bay.About thirteen thousand cannon were brought up by general Reeves who fell mortally wounded just as his guns opened fire. General Compresses Glandelinians whi were second behind behind the first o columns arived to the attack which was redoubled with terrific ferocity, and now a portion of Mortens purple coats were also forced to retire and Rudolphs left wing commanded by Richard Costins was severely broken by Hennings graycoats, but in a few minutes new divisions of purple coats came rushing to their support, and for a time now the Glandelinians could not penetrate any further.

General Vivian had been notifed of what was going on and ordered general Fairnell to advance his forces to Rudolphs aid.The fury of this section of the battle of Big Girlknool had increased by this time, the Glandelinians having been added by Arkies columns which were attacking in heavy masses. At quarter to Four Rudolphs d saw Fairnells divisions coming at a trot. General Fairnell came up and began deploying his armies, on Mortens side of the works and also sent a large division to support Rudolph. For an hour before his arival heavy fighting had been going on. Just as it seemed as if the christians were restablishing his lines general Rudolph fell dead shot through the head.

The Glandelinians were pressing on furiously and general Iron with his entire command of Glandelinians was captured.Corys christian divisions was now also engaged with the Glandelinians, the carnage having become terrific. The enemy continued to still advance with the most frightful fury, and now general Merdicks divisions of Angolinians had beendriven from their works almost annihilated, the fierce Glandelinians having attacked them with all their most indescribable fury. Also the fury of Compresses charge was extraordinary and Neldons works was also carried, though their trace could hardly be found so thick were the masses of dead and wounded and dying in gray and purple. Large brigades of Angolinians under Brig.Gen.Mc-Phersion however came to their aid with four hundred fresh cannon, and now a massacre of graycoats ensued .....

The fierce Glandelinians under general Donal Francis Hansonia also came up to jo in t in the attack and these advanced gallantly upon general Vivians left wing to redoublethe assault, the Glandelinians hwe acting under general Brandons orders.The christian line was hard pressed but large columns of Abyssinkilians under Henry Liebermann, swarmed to their aid and the Glandelinians withdrew leaving four hundred thousand dead, and 4,567,234 in wounded. Nevertheless as the main body of the Glandelinians was quickly ariving the fierce attack was resumed.....

At this part of the attack and from the christian resis qnce the front line of the assailants disolved army, but nevertheless the rest of the graycoats cont inued to press on and fell upon the purple line and as the graycoats went down in more frightful numbers, large columns of Angelinians under general Granton rushed to Jennings aid, and Schroeder also came up with his artillery and the fire from the cannons of the christians committed great havoc but nevertoless could not check the assailants and general Foltin who had penetrated the christian line with over fifteen thousand of his men had been overwhelmed by heavy christian reinforce ments and taken prisoner with his fifteen thousand.

Yet it seemed impossible to check the wall of advancing graycoats and to even stop the pg progress of the Glandelinians. At general Vivians left grand division the fifth corps of Headlessburgs Glandelinians were a advancing across the fields hurrying forward swiftly to join in the desperate attack. He saw also that the eleventh corps and Doubledays brigades were also coming up and he saw that the battle was going to be a harder fought one than the morning. Archies spense had been in command since Rudolph fell and the Angelinians there were still holding thi their positions stubbornly.Two of general vivians divisions were posted on the Plians where Daisies and Ferns were growing and the others in reserve on the plains where many wild roses were growing. Russuel and Miller heard the cannonade and had been marching since three oc-lock o-clock and general guarantee had also arived to the aid of Archie Spence but had come up too long to be of any good service and found that the attack of the enemy was driving forward with great violence and to him it seemed as if the enemy were attacking with almost preternatural fury.

More christian cannon were ariving under general Atno Antonio Callio, but Russels and Millers Glandelinians were now sweeping forward with such great force that Spences left was being heavily overwhelmed and had to give way but fortunately the batteries on general Vivians right under Snindor opened fire upon these Glandelinians in a oblique fashion, but though they went down in multitudes the survivors still advanced with the fury of a hur ricane, and now now and heavy forces under general Fallton were also rushing forea forward with tremendous fury and as they came within range of Archies center the very mouth of hell seemed to open with the christian fire of x annon and musketry and the first columns of the assailants were shattered and mangled frightfully, but the advance of the main line wasso vehement that they c uld not think of fa lling back unless the other Glando inian columns did. Many of the officers tried to rally general spences right wing which had been driven back by Reeves Glandelinians but now the Glandelinians were pressing on so vigoriously that they were still successful in their attack, and several of the christian generals fell. The long double line of Abyssinkilians under Concentinian Aronburg met the assailants with all the stubborness they could, but the assaulting columns were breaking a part of Aronburgs lines and the generals were making a frantic pleas for help. Indeed the Glandelinians were attacking the Angolinians with the utmost precipitation and now a portion of Aronburgs line also gave wave as they were threatened with annihilation. Major general Millier did not want to be seriously engaged withgeneral vivian untill he had heard from general Hickey.

However he was impressed with the importance of general Vivians position, and directed Harry who led the charge in person to take possession of all costs. The battle was now in full sway along general vivians lines, and now with still more awful fury the Glandelinians under Rs Russel were press ing upon the Angelinians and as Archie Spences left was now imprisone between Millir and Hairbreadth Harry more than compensating for general Spencers reinforcements, Archie Spendon was holding his line for the arival of Wardsworth Maxwell, and so fierce was the struggle that it seemed as if the nations of the world was fighting the battle instead of two nations. Archie Spendon was not observing the peril from the south and directed general Meany to post Oldfield on Plian number three which he was about to do, when Russels Glandelinians appeared upon the desired poijt point.

General Meanys army was now seriously engaged with the enemy, and many of the wounded were already dying upon the field General Miller had placed his batteries on the longest plain within good range of the christian line lines and now these opened upon the stubborn columns under Aronburg. Soon one thousand guns in that field roared with fearful detonations and made a long line of smoke clouds, but though the purple coats were bing mowed down by the thousand, a Angelinians cano cannon also found that range of that battery and also hammered away, but they also had to respond to Hairbreadth Harrys batteries, and this made it impossible for them to be any longer fired upon the assailants. and their own lines were being cut to fragments by the torrents of canister, and the close fire of the desperate assailants. General Aronburg had never seen such slaughter in all his service in the war thus far, and one gun after another of the Angelinians were blowing up, nd and fearing that they would all be disabled Aronburg had them withdrawn. The assault of the enemy continued with the most relentless fury, and the poor Angelinian general was almost crying.

He had sent appeal after appeal for help but it did not seem to come. All of the wounded able to weild a gun were placed behind the firing line and ordered to shoot down any man who would attempt to flee. The christian line commanded by general Aronburg had been over three million five hundred thousand strong and now only two million ninty thousand were left and still they were fast melting away. Aronburgs front lines had entirely di disappeared before the terrific fire of the enemy, and nearly every one of his officers were killed wounded or without horses.....
In the meantime general Anniversity h had advanced large forces against general Vivians extreme right grand division which was struck at four thirty. Baldwins batteries had opened fire upon these assailants, ripping and tearing many of their columns to pie pe pieces and now the whole of general Vivians right wing also was in a tumultous uproar and never before in all the war up to this time was there ever seen such a battle. Columns along Aronburgs line had been w mowed down by the score, his whole line being rent and broken up by the great assault of the enemy.....

Indeed the assault of the enemy seemed to be completely un unmanagable and Aronburgs left wing finally being overwhelmed gave way the enemy capturing the works..... His center was almost so surrounded. Piles of dead and wounded covered the works, the glandelinians attacking Aronburgs center with the utmost fury, and their ranks were dreadfully torn. Indeed Indeed the glandelinians advanced like a raging avalanch of human w floods,, and scattered a portion of Aronburgs left wing. Aronburg tried to reinforce his right and left but the advance of the foe seemed not to be checked..... I,000,000 of the assailants pressed furiously upon his right yelling like that many demons, attacking with the most terrible energy.
There was only one million fifty thousand Angelinians left now to Aronburg who faced over IO,000,000 of the assailants, and his left was infiladed by the Glandelinians who stormed with their attacks,..... The struggle was rag ing with a fury beyond description the Glandelinians attacking tenaciously. The situation of Aronburgs christians was more serious than ever now with their frightful losses. Even several shattered columns on spencers left threatened to give way when overwhmed overwhelmed, and soon did so despite the attempts of the slightly wounded to stop them by clubbing them back and threatening to shoot them down.
Indeed the Glandelinians were swarming forward like furious torrents of human beings, and still Aronburgs line was being more badly shatt ered to pieces by the attack of the assailants who ploughed their way into the line of christians, and now never before was there ever such a confused mic mix up of gray and purple coats, and the opposing battleflags. Muskets crossed in deadly ernest, swords clashed, pistols blazed faced to face, and the men even fought with fists and wrestled. Hundreds of thousands of the Glandelinians had themselves fallen. .....
How Aronburgs situation was more serious..... The assailants were even swel swelled by fresh regiments and they seemed to attack with irrestible fury des ite the withering fire that tore their advanced columns to pieces. Indeed the assailants met a hurricane of musket balls and ca canister, and the left portion of the assaulting line was crushed to fragments, and even mangled but they they did not waver. It was indeed a miracle that the brave general Aronburg survived through such a storm of carnage.
The flashes of Millers cannons glistened with unwonted brightness, and immense showers of shells crashed among the Angelinians, and poor Aronburgs army was being indeed crushed and smashed to atoms. Genera l Handegelinia was wounded four times, and now again a glancing bullet struck him in the head cutting a long gash.....

His last injury was quite serious but for fear of causing a panic he stayed with his fast failing ma rm. The cannon firing of the enemy was becoming exceed ingly annihilating resembling a gigantic line of fire and smoke that made a storm of loud thunders in perfect salvoes of bri broadsides, the roar of the Glandelinian cannon being murderous and most appalling and the detonations echoed far and wide. Violet and her sisters with her boyscouts had seen the condition of general Aronburgs lines though they had been dangerously close to the dreadful battle storm, and not long after he was directing the fire of one of his main batteries genera l vivian recieved this message from one of his brave .little daughters;;;;;;;;;

''General Aronburgs army is almost annihilated. They must have aid or the enemy will capture the position at that point and there will be a big gap exposed in your main line that will cause the loss of the battle. It is reported also that one of general Aronburgs best generals is seriously injured five times..... .....Violet and her sisters/....''

General Aronburgs line had indeed been torn to pieces as quickly as the few handful s of survivors had reformed their shattered lines and ranks, the works being strewn with multitudes of dead Angelinians, but the few survivors still held their ground tenaciously as they had recieved no orders to retreat though they longed to do so . Large forces of glandelinians were also pressing heavily upon general Joices lines, and this brave christ ian general being fully exposed to the enemys fire, the purple coats forced him to lie down.... General Aronburg had sent himself many messengers to general vivians lines to tell him of the situation of his own lines, but they had failed to reach him. The note however from violet and her sisters had got ten saftly into his hands and he was trembling after he had read it. Almost immediately afterwards came another message;;;;;;

''Your excellency general vivian;
General Aronburgs whole line is overlapped and will be driven from his position if heavy reinforcements is not sent immediately. The enemy have opened eight hundred thousand cannons upon Aronburgs lines, and the carnage is now heartrending. The assault of Hairbreadth Harrys divisions is destructie destructive and tremendous, and even many guns concentrated by general Miller has opened a withering fire upon the right of Aronburgs line which is almost annihilated. General Hangelinia i is seriously wounded, but will not leave the firing line for fear of his few regiments retreating. Aronburgs whole line is overwhelmed and will be captured or annihilated if aid is not sent immedaitely.....

G General Abner
Anderson,,.
Commander of the first brigade.
Angelinia.''

In the meantime the Glandelinians under general gruesder Flynn had mowed their way through the extreme right of Vivians line also which held with the help of their own overwhelming numbers very easily and a fight of demonish fury raged hand to hand the carnage being dreadful as muskets were used as clubs, bayonets clashing against bayonets, and there was a brilliant display of sabres and daggers,. Pistols were fired at point blank and the enemys s r sprang f furiously at each other, clutched in fearful deathstr ggles. The fury of the glandelinian onslaught however though made against overwhelm ing numbers of christians caused a part of the christian line to waver the glandelinians seeing their advantage charging with increasing fury and violence, swarming clear over the works yelling like deamns, plowing their way through the christian colum s columns killing hundreds, and still pressing on the Angelinians fighting savagely to drive the ma them back or at least check them.

Many of the Glandelinians were striving with might and main to reach gens general Jolco who was surrounded by the Angelinians.....In the meantime general Michael Walsh had been sent w his entire command to the aid of general Aronburg and these soon came into view rushing forward to the rescue as qj quickly as their legs would let them. The situation of general Aronburgs line was now extremely dangerous the Glandelinians over their loss losses seeming to break out into wild paroxysms of rage and uncontrollable fury fairly plowing their way through Aronburgs lines as a often as they were driven back. It was the longest and most desperate hand to hand fight ever seen since the war began.General Mi chael Walsh now arrived, arived the carnage and the fury of the conflict becoming still more terrific as these were thrown upon the immense multitudes of Glandelinians.However the Glandelinians at this point still outnumbered the christians and not the new comers with a perfect storm of fury and Michael Walsh fell mortally wounded.General Austinia took command in his place and re d restored order in his lines. The gray columns were pressing through a portion of Austinias divisions with such fury that it seemed as if the Angelinians were thrown into a panic, Milliars batteries also adding to the carnage which staggered the christians.However other div isions of Angelinians under general Rob Rothmum now arived with general Francis Chanters artillery and soon a storm of canister and minnies tore the Glandelinians down in the most fremne droves.

Coming next were large brigades of Abyssinkilians and Abbican nians under general Charles Mitchell, and then came the battalions of artiller artillery under Lucille Shoop and Henry Darger Odgers.

These guns opened a typhoon of fire, and annihilated Millers supporting infantry lines, driving his guns back almost to Aronburgs pile a distance of twelve miles. In the conflict however generals Hartine and Odgers were wounded as soon as their ari artillery opened fire but the Angelinians did not falter.

Fortunately also the Glandelinians could not advance any further having only succeeded in smashing down Aronburgs lines but not driving any general por tions of the christian line back and hundreds of the ranks of the glande i linians were mowededown and general Hanconia johnston also recieving heavy reinforcements from the divisions of Dondobians under generals Rhodes, and Scholar Johnston managed to hold his own ground against great assaults at all points though he wrote to general Vivian this message;

''Your excellency general Vivian.

''I've re recieved reinforcements and am able to hold my ground, for the enemy are not advancing any more now.But the en attack of the enemy ha not slacke ned in the least.The battle seems to have assumed a most indescribable fury and Aronburgs army has been almost annihilated before he recieved reinforce ments also, and he himself is wounded severely. Hell has seemed to open all along the , line.I have recieved over 10,000 cannons of heavy calibre, and they seem to fairly shake the men down with their concussion, which echoe and reechoe far and wide.Millions of muskets have been fired incess antly all this time and I am almost deaf from the earsplitting din of great and tremendous explosions.My left wing has been shivered and shattered into a thousand small fragments like glass on a pavement, before the arival of the reinforcements and even now the firing of the enemy still at close rang range is almost annihilating A few more divisions would I'm suredrive the emay enemy back.

Your assistant commander.
General Johnston.

Indeed masses of the graycoats in making one tremendous frensied charge had been mowed down at once, and even on the center of Aronburgs lines though slightly checked the enemy were still attacking with stupendous fury being under general Herald, despite the fact that their lines were being riven again and again with large gaps so that they looked more like a long honey comb than a line of men. The enemy were attacking under a perfect stream of fire and several divisions of the Glandelinians had finally become panic stricken and ret reated in some confusion..... However heavy reinfor ce cements of christians under general Disqualified came rushing to the aid of the christian center. and soon these new lines burst into smoke from their fierce storm of firing. The enemy had wavered at many points now but the enemy under general Ottoman Hamish had gained and still held the points along the stream called ''Warren Run'', and it seemed as if he could not be dislodged at all when Doubleday Federal at this moy moment came sweeping i his army in long lines up the Aronburg and Costellio fields and these threw themselves wildly upon the Glandelinians under Ottoman Hamish. More rein forcement s arived; and pressed the Glandelinians back from Warrens Run.Over-whelmed Hamish's Glandelinians retreated in confusion.Along all of general Vivians lines the struggle was still in full sway but now of course the Glandelinians began to show their wa wavering effects despite the facts that Leoc Costellioes artillery tore up the christian lines with a severe shell fire, but now the Angelinians began to advance de despite their line being rent and torn by Leo Coste Costellioes artillery storm. While this p occured Heller Johnstons divisions were moving their way way across the Cemetery c creek and from here they opened fire upon the advancing christians and soon this part of the field seemed to be on fire. Many columns of the Angelinians dissolved but they pressed on in immense divisions, and gradually the whole line of the enemy fell back abandoning the attempted assault, and general Vivian directed a tremendous assault which carried the other portion of general Manleys position, and thus night closed the tremendous conflict with Manley badly shaken up.

CHAPTER T [illegible] SEVEN.

WAS THIS A BLOODY ANGLE.
OR WAS IT THE SLAUGHTER OF HELL.

Manleys Glandelinians under Huebaum Manley however during general Vivians and Hansons engagement with John and Jacken Manley held the towns of Big Girlknool and Little Girl knool proper at which both generals Vivianis and Hanconia made futile efforts to drive him from.Manleys positions here was on the fields called the Fields of the Dia Daisis and the Ferns n connected with Big Girlknool and Little Girlknool, from Chamberlans to Sacremento Hill where general Huebaum Manleys main line was drawn up. Vivianis and Hanconia had a force ten to one of Huebaum Manley, and while generals Vivian Hanson Vivian his brother, Spruedor, and Cammillia, had crushed generals Johnst on Jacken Manley and his son John Manley, captured Sacremento Hill, and two immense positions, and also the main and last position of the enemy, and though general Vivian had repulsed general Manleys last charge, these two othe other christian commanders failed most disasteriously to overthrow Huebaum Manley and met a series of disasters, and a bloody disasterous defeat to boot.As soon as Vivianis that early morning had started his forces forward to the attack Huebaum Manleys batteries between the two Girlknools had opened fire on them, the Glandelinian batteries under Baldwin shelling the whole reregion into an inferno of great explosions and fires and committing the most terrific carnage.

Manley followed the advise of general Alladdon Warren who moved his great line of Glandelinians from the , low positions it had first throw up to a commanding point at a place fu filled with Fruit trees called Vivian's Apple Orchard from which a part of his army was concentrated into a large plain and wheatfield forming a deadly sailent at the Apple Orchard.

Thirty thousand three hundred pieces of heavy calibre cannons defended the orchard su ported with three thousand gathling guns, and in the wheatfield were three thousand two hundred howitzers, while in the plians were large motars and great guns of the batt leship type.

A strong position indeed.

The tide of battle screaming and roaring with inconceivable fury rolled with fearful velocity tward and through the Vivian's Apple Orchard, and dashed in a perfect storm of horror upon the fatal angle. General Henry Mustaphia was killed on the side of the Glandelinians before the terrific counter charge began, and Federal Double Dayson johnston took command of his division. Manley at this crucial moment placed another full bria brigade at the angle giving orders to the Glandelinian commanders there to hold the post till reinforcements came, or till the last man fell.

One part of the angle was on a high rise of ground and general Red Rin Ridinghoods batteries struggled up and circled the crest while Wolfs divisions rushed up the cabinet and came face to face with the Ange, Angelinians belonging to vivianis command. They were storming their way at this momentup the otherside. The Glandelinian muskets were emptied by a most tremendous volley that cleared the fore m foremost part of the whole sailent of the christians but there was no time whatever to reload, the hand to hand fighting exceeding all description.

General Mc-Gilvory Silverhair us urging on his soldiers through that roar ing inferon on the east end of the bloody angle salient was killed by a withering storm of fire as the Angelinians climbed the low crest.General Bull Turner fell upon the summit, then Warren Kerrian and Red Riding hood were severely wounded. The Angelinians however paid the carnage of hell were cut in to two by general Frank Nelsions brigades by accelarating the movement of the center and retarding that of the main wings. Costellio Leeson responded with good effect to the fire of the Glandelinian artillery in the angle of the Vivian's Apple Orchard but was killed by a sharpshooter.
The main column of the Ang elinians advanced against Alledan Warrens angle accompanied by general Hanson Mortens six battalions and the carnage was fearful as the Angelinians brought up and opened fire with sixteen batteries of their own artillery. The frontal columns of the gratcoats seemed to dis olve in the face of Mortens advancing batteriy fire but they stuck to their position stubbornly. Immense divisions of the Angelinians came swarming forward charging in one vast multitude as they spread out into a long line, which thr though torn and mangled continued to advance. With an awful roar the firing of the glandelinians increased and this one multitude of christ- ians began to disolve away.

Already fourty thousand guns were opened upon the main christian line of assault and the assailants were being swept away in multitudes. Division after division of the Angelinians were sweeping on, thousands being mowed down by the enemys ravaging fire that streamed from the enemys lines and here like at other portio s of the great battlefilled the carnage bea became indescribable.

Trees were cut down in every direction.....And from the enemys infantry poured terrific storms of minnies but on streamed the christian lines one hundred more of the enemys cannons flashing frightfully through the wall of smoke, fresh volleys broke outanew and a vortible tempest of canister mingled with the terrific hail of shrapnell and shell bombs. All of the glandelinian batteries were now thundering away, and the Angelinians themsel ves covered by the fire of their own artillery pressed on relentlessly, and now along the enemys right itself a perfect stream of dead and de des truction was poured upon innovationes lines, but nevertheless the survivors pressed pressed on up to the salient and now the struggle was something terrible. At this moment Innovationes fell mortally wounded.However his men advanc ing with contemptious fury drove the glandelinians back but now a most appalling sight was revealed.The Angelinians met a new tempest of bullets from appreaching Glandelinian reinforcements, and whole brigades melted away.The glandelinian batteries continued their fire and shells now fell like rain stripping all the trees of their braches branches. General Robert Costellio took general Innovationes place and ordered the Angelinians on On pressed the Angelinians in long bril iant brilliant lines and now general Vivianin sent several other divisions to aid Costellio.The whole front of Costellios lines was shattered by the fierce collision but now Calsoe and Stanning swept tward the enemys lines the reinforcements opening an annih ilating fire.Generals Wog Wedge and Entrabrook Johnston swooping forward with tremendous fury n encountered the enemys cannons and their forces mel ted entirely away. Wed Wedge being killed. Five thousand fifty more guns came up and opened fire of annihilating violence, and several large brigades mov ing at the intersection of Noldons Crossroads went down into mangled and bleeding sors corpses. So fierce was the carnage and annihilating of christ ian brigades that it seemed now a massacre, logs and trees were catching fire from the effects of shell explosionsand burning braches fe ll everywhere. For the length of ten miles the christian ranks had went dr down into mangled and dying but now the survivors swarmed over the Sailent and still pressed on bravely against the enemy and now the thundering of thousands of cannons to the right and left, and the roar, succeeded i each crash in a continous roa roar, the sound seeming to be a as if the world was blowing to pieces,, and to add to that indescribable din other fresh volleys broke out from general Bavarias fast concentrated line of Mc-Hollestinians.At certain points however the glandelinians began to retire their lines having been torn and mangled by the great fire of the christian infantry. Hundreds of burning trees and long lines of brushwork added to the horrors of this frightful battle of Big and Little Girlknool....

The whole right wing of the Glandelinians was now driven but the other portion still held the sailent, the christian batteries were swedling their din to titan throes, and now over I,I00,000 Angelinians were advancing against Costellios Glandelinians and were completely mowed down the few survivors throwing themselves flat to escape this merciless seathing fire.....

With irrestiless energy the main columns of christians advanced, though brigade after brigade was swept away. and the whole of general Cars ye line was crushed to fragments. Six other divisions of the Angelinians were also torn to fragments but the reckless survivors came on with relentless fury and Buster Shoemans line a reaching general Johnstons strong position closed with his Glandelinians and became a series of divisions shattered to frag ments. The Glandelinians however a ong the center as the Angelinians were still attacking with greater fury gave way, the Angelinians also falling upon their left-with the most murderous fury.Along this point it was impossible for the glandelinins to stand before the charge of the Angelinissians and hemmed in by a maelstrome of firing they were compelled to retreat the ga,llant Addon Warren falling.
The Glandelinian officers made desperate attempts to rally ad reform the men but such a hot fire was poured into their ranks that reformation was utterly impossible, and they retreated in confusion.....
In the meantime general Shouterland's purple columns also rushed forward tward the two intersections of Big and Little girlknool and the plains of the Daisies and Ferns between.Here the Angelinians swarmed everywhere in this inferno attacking the glandelinians furiously all along the line. striving with a ll their might amid the hundreds of toppling trees and burning grasses to carry the works and here the battle was terrible. Jessie Wilson, Calson Pea Pesu Peary, and James Wright advanced through the sea of pasies and Ferns in the face of a withering fire of great intensity and for a time here ad amid the dreadful carnage the glandelinians were hard pressed.The whole line of battle here was a in a hellish, damnating uproar, and inisedese intense became the fire of general Trimmes Glandelinians that regiments of Angelinians were mowed down by the score. Nelsion Costellio Lines was driven back with frightful losses in officers and men by the fierce A yankikilians Wilson capturing two thousand two hundred canj cannon his men taking possessin possession of the works in the centre of the Daisy and Ferns Plians.

The enemy however came back in a tremendous counter charge attacking with the fury of a thrillion demons, and though the christian fire torn tore their lines to pieces, and caused windrows of dead and dying to strew those beautiful plains now becoming a perfect inferno of hades the A glandelinians yelling with all their might resumed the assault with redoubled violence and overlapping the christians compelled them to fall back themselves killing and wounding thirteen of the christian generals in that fiery furnace of damnation. Thousands of glandelinian ranks in this seething sea of musketry and cannon fire had been torn down completely by this christian fire, but though mostof the Angelinian divisions also shatt ered and torn up were retiring back clean to Maries Corn And Daisy Lanes Pears Glandelinians had encountered an annihilating fire, and were all shot down, while the christians under Henry Peary had also encountered an annihilating fire from the glandelinian batteries and had failed to advance losing one hundred and thirty thousand men in a single half hour, and three hundred and sixty five thousand of his second division had been mowed down in making a desperate screaming hoi hellish charge.Simultaneously across these beautiful plains a great multitudes of Angelinians continued on, a part of this wave pouring across the Mc-Hollestor and Pandora Railroad tracks for a time driving the glandelinians back in a panic but were also soon checked by the glandelinian cannon that literally poured hell into their ranks and cut down whole columns as fast as the ranks themselves.

Wrights Glandelinians were annihilated, and the christ ians under Wilber Wright made most energitic efforts to cont inue their once headlong charge but the fire of the enemy was so hot and seathing, that it cut down the flowers and ferns as a scythe cuts grass and shot down so many of the Angelinian ranks that they also had to reel back Wrightbeing reported severely wounded.....The left portion of the christian batteries had been silenced by the terrific drum drum fire of the glandelinian cannon and general Baldwin Henryson and Luckwick Aronburg; and general Wrighty on the Glandelinian side were severely wounded.Leo Costellio was also disabled and at one point where the Angelinians had succeeded in taking possession of the dearly bought glandelinian works the glandelinians here also had made a tearing counter charge pressing clear over the works despite the fierce resistance they met the fighting here being terrifif terrifie in the extreme. I,300 new guns mowed the enemy down in frightful numbes but the advance of the foe during their counter attack was unmanageable, their own fire storm becoming so terrific that Baldwins christian line was crushed to fragments.Baldwins christian infantry had numbered I6,000,000 men when they took the enemys position and now they only had twenve thous twenve million left and still the survivors were fast melting away.

The fierce Mc-Hollestinians continued the assault bearing down every thing in their path but however Baldwins christians still retained their ground fighting untill so few was left few were left that they never again entered battle for three months. General Hanson Heldotia had repulsed his Angelinian assailants and it seemed indeed as if the Angelinians would easily retain the bloody angle. General Double Day of the Glandelinians had the other portion of the bloody angle and the surrounding woods by the plains, a section of the position in one of the plains and one on the Kauffmann roads between the two Girlknools which the christians had not yet captured and also fine fresh positions for new artillery. The Angelinians only occupied the captured trenches on the left of the enemys positions with a small outlet to the Big Girlknool Pile by which he could easily cut off al of Huebaum Manleys communications from the rear. Three of general Pucktails Glandelinia brid Brigades from the right of the line had simultaneously penetrated a portion of the christian line, but had been repulsed only for lack of support. The losses on both sides in the bloody battle at this portion was frightful but not more so to the christians than the enemy who suffered three times more. Major general God-Love had come in upon the scene while the christians had made the charge that resulted in the capture on of one portion of the sailent, De boden and Mc-Law Saunders both brothers also arived to the scene being sent by Viviania, and general Vivianis had a large force of fresh infantry that had not yet been in the bloody battle.

At twenty minutes to Four the struggle for the possession of the sailent was at its fierces t fury. Leo Costellios artillery had opened a general fire upon the position in possession of the christians, the Angelinians responding with the captured and their own cannon which for the length of ten miles s swept the platen and all the plains especially where Leo Costellio was stationed. Leo Costellioes infantry was sent forward in heavy masses with the instructions to recapture the captured angle at all costs while those still in possession were instructed to also advance forward and strick the christian rear.

These divisions obeying orders rushed swiftly to the attack. All of a sudden came the awful sound of one thousand gathling guns and several of the monster ous columns of the Glandelinians melted away. The very mouth of hell seemed now to open along Double Days line itself and a storming barrage of shells tore among the trenches but failed to do dislodge the christians. Two lines of men were sent forward by double day to help in the assault and they came back never. On pressed the other section of the Glandelinian wave however the assaulting line was fairly given away, but at last they reached the works in scattered fragments. General John Jonnings came to the rescue with all his men, Mc-Callen arived with more artillery and opened fire upon the dissolved glandelinian divisions whose survivors were already swarming over the works

However hard pressed the right wing of the christians in possession of the Sailent bec began to give way the grayscoats pressing on furiously. General Dispatches Glandelinians whose line was about five miles long was also shatt ered into fragments but the survivors rushed on mowing down every one of the christian soldiers that dared to expose themselves. Glandelinian brigades were now melting away themselves. But the foewere being successful for now the whole of the purple line was giving way retiring in confusion. The Glandelinians did not persue and for a time now all was silent. The enemy had succeeded in crushing general Vivinnia. Now for the engagement along Hanscnias a lines.

CHAPTER ~~THIRTY EIGHT~~.

A CANNONADING THAT WAS HEARD FOR THREE THOUSAND MILES.

Though the action had been over at many points Hanscnia was the fiercest engaged of any one in the whole entire battle. General Pemberton had arived with a fresh division of artillery after Hanscnia had crushed one charge of the enemy and these were opened at that section of the Bloody Angle. The uproar of Pembertons batteries of artillery was deafening and earsplitting the mightiness of which no language could describe. Pemberton had also ordered his main line of infantry under generals Darger glater to s concentrate on general Hanscnias centeral lines held by general Schloeder. Slaters men advanced like a furious human storm and fearful more fearful than elsewhere in the battlefield was the carnage that ensued.

The Angelinians advance with the same tremendous fury as seen elsewhere on the same battlefield the Glandelinians opening a recoiling at artillery fire masses of christians dissolving in scores, but the Angelinians reached Dargers lines and charged again and again in the heaviest masses, but we were repulsed repulsed with tremenfous loss. The Angelinians however paid the terrific slaughter again came rushing forward with the same tremendous fury the horrors of the carnage seeming to become intolerable.....

The whole gray line was ablaze the horrible carnage extending as far as eye could reach..... General Pemberton on thoside of the enemy went down mortal mortally wounded, the other Glandelinian general Doubleday was killed and Slader though severely wounded was able to retain Command.

The nos monsterous columns of the Angelinians though their main line was disconfided, torn tottered, and bleeding had struck Dargers force with terrific ferocity. General Jacksonia pargin was at this time advancing a new force tward the support of Leo Costellios Cn Center, and Slader Johnsons christian collided with him and the scene was worse than an ambuscakio ambuscade of hell. The Angelinians attacked his force on all sides Dargins best aid Heller johnson going down amid the dreadful carnage. Dargins men were surrounded, and ran out of ammunition and it seemed impossible for his survivors to hold their ground, though they fought desperately and furiously with clubbed muskets, asked sticks, stones, large rocks, sabres, daggers and pistol butts driving back the Angelinins three times. Surrounded by overwhelming numbers general Dargins divisions were captured, the Angelinians also getting possession of the angle here and pressing after the main line of the retiring Glandelinians. The ground for the length of fifteen miles was red with gore and thickly covered with the bodies of theslain of both sides, and fires of great size were burning. Leo Costellioes divisions were also drawing back slowly twardthe wooded sections of the plains, but nevertheless the advance of Pembertons divisions were well deployed and some portions of the christian attack was now checked.

Nevertheless the Angelinians were filled with admirtion at the great courage of the glandelinians who were fighting with the utmost fury of hell and all its evil beings. Hundreds of thousands of trees, nay millions upon millions in the vinicty of the bloody angle were severely torn and rent with he shells and even pierced with countless minnies untill they also like the trees on other battlefi battlefields looked like hickory brooms.

Among these wooded stretches the gray and purple coats lay in monsterous heaps multitudes laying dead and wounded in or over and across the works. Fourty regiments of christians with all their commanders were comple tely destroyed.

Leo Costellio was really severely wounded as reported and two of his Brigadier generals were killed. 100,000 dead graycoats lay near the scene of the "Dargin Ambuscade" and multitudes of wounded were laying among them.

Huebaum Manley realizing that Ghenerau Bicknell had sent Ambrose Fuller to support him against both Vivinia and Hanscnia decided to have a general attack made on Hanscnia's whole line. But as this immediate christian posit ion was commanded or defended by a long double heavy chain of artillery he decided to silence these at all costs first. The same Folly general Vivian had made against Sacramento Hill and Huebaum Manley did not realize it. At four Thirty Five Manleys batteries started their terrible hell of damanation at once and soon the whole of Huebaum Manleys positions seemed as if swept by a conflargration of flame and clouds of smoke. Sixty thousand six hundred and sixty guns from their angry mouths poured a heavy storm of death and destruction for the length of thirty miles upon a good portion of general Hanscnias lines. Uncanonlingly luminious clouds of smoke appeared from other portions of Manleys positions followed by the still lour louder roar of Manleys artillery, and a rain of shells and shrapnell and ee we even chain shot waxed so fast and furious among Hanscnias artillery and infantry men that the losses became terrific. The christian gunners were seen striving to get their own main line of art illery into position to answer the fire and now multitudes of the infantry who strove to help them cumbered theground very rapidly. The christian officers ordered the infantry men to lie down or to take any advantage of protection offered to them by the shelter of the rocks and ravines, and larger trees and overhanging rocks but notwithsta d e notwithstanding every precaution there was never seen such destruction of life and property in all the war before. For many minutes the terrible uproar along Manleys line of cannon continued steadily the air fields, and plains were full of great explosions so that it formed a sea of thick smoke and now the Angelinians were succeeding in getting their own artillery into position but the ground in front and rear was paved with the dead and wounded purple coats showers of shells and shrapnell sweeping like a hailstorm among the guns and killing hundreds .

The center of the infantry line of Angolinians had to be drawn back comple tely to avert its annihilation from the annihilation of the glandelinian artillery sotm storm. Suddenly a very horrible roar as if hell was let loose broke out along the line of christian cannons and this din swelled to that of the noises of the enemys crazed hollering cannons beomes deafening to the distance of six hundred miles.Yet more and more were being unlimbered and put into action which became like the dumounting warfare of titans.

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE.

A CANNONADING HEARD FOR TWO THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED MILES!!

The enemy however had more cannons than the christians and opened upon the christian position ann increased nvmber of heavy guns which seemed to make the horrid noise increase a hundred times louder. Solid shot, chain shot and shrapnell shells tore their way to the rear of the christian line threat ening to tear u ip everything in the whole region and no one could even count the trees that when down before their frightful storm of explosions, and even columns of purple coats went dow n mangled and bleeding and cassion after cassion by a hundred blew up mingled with the frightful explosion of ammunition dumps.Though wounded as he was the christian artillery commander Aronburg Baldwin remained and screamed commands above the frightful tumult of so many t housands of big guns .Big divisions of infantry were shatt ered into fragments by the storm of shot and shell which mostly missed the christian artilery artillery and hit the christian infantry far to the main rear.The shells bore down everything in their path, scores of thousands of men were being dreadfully cut up and mangled, and also horses, and now a fresh roaring artillery fire broke out from another portion of Hansonias line which soon swelled the din to a seeming unearthly roar altogether.

The awful roar of the artillery increased stn steadily and hundreds of casions among the christians were blown up, and in twenty minutes nearly every point of the enemys position in front of the p lines and fields fronting Hansonias line seemed ablaze with more cannons and there was an uproar as if hell had charged heaven. Thousands of pieces of war material and gun carriages were shatt ered to pieces and lines of christians about general Hansonias headquart ers were annihilated by a shower of explosions and above all the hellish and thun derous roar broke the louder and reverbrating crash of general yivianias chain of batteries drowning out every other sound, and n w terrifying and most indescribble became the discharge of artillery which rivalled in fiercer grandeur whose noise was redoubled by the storm of shell explosions, and both generals Hansonia and yivianis had to leave thet their headquarters as the storm of shot, s'e ll,and shrapnell fell thick and fast around the buildings ripping away the roofs, blowing in the windows and razing the wa'ls. After one hour of this horrible concert of hell the din began to gradually slacken especially along the enemys lines.The christian cannonading then ceased also, though at some points a few hundred guns were stetill in action.Later this artillery duel alone was reported to have been heard for over two thousand-eight hundred miles. At the moment the artillery fire slackened the immense glandelinian divisions under Ambrose fuller were seen to be moving forward emerging from the long stretch of woods and rusho rushing swiftly and firmly forward.Fresh battalions and even cavarly were galloping into position to take the places of of those out of commission. On the christian side hot guns were being given time to cool, hundreds of thousands of rounds of ammunition was brought up-and everything prepared for the coming tremendous counter charge of the glandelinians.....

A ONE OF AMBROSE'S FULLER'S FAMOUS CHARGES .....

Fullers line of charge extended fully fifteen miles and it was the most splin ded sight ever seen in the war and a thrill of admiration on ce again passed through the hearts of the christian infantry men as they saw this perfe perfect tidal wave of glandelinians come surging forward in one larege massive line. Fullers men on coming forward nearer were being q quickly arran ged and formed into a double wave and the advance of-these glandelinians almost resembled the character of the charge of the glandelinians under genera general gomgotze at Angeline junction but was more sublime and terrific. To reach Hansonias lines the glandelinians a had to av advance over the flower and fern covered plains for the distance of three thousand nine hundred yards and hrhad a great battery storm to face, and rugged grass to plough through.

Hansonias army was well prepared for the attack but had been almost unab,e to meet it it came with such a tremendous shock. Mc-carthy was on the right of the fields of flowers with the large infantry forces under Russel, and at a long angle with the main line but the enemy coming forward with the speed of an army of rocets swept their way clean through Mc-carthys line and threw it back in confusion. Hanson yienna commanded the center of Mc-Carthys line with many divisions in front and neither could these hold. General Luckwick Baldwins signal stations however were in oper ation and Baldwins position suddenly seemed to be swept by sheets of flame then burst the horrible deafening roar of 7,000 cannon and a very sheet of explosions tore through the enemys advancing lines with an intolerable earsplitting roar of destruction, the enemy going down in vat multitudes but on and on came the survivors with a tremendous rush, then broke the loud intolerable and deafening gra ndeur of Rudolph Hansons batteries and now whole waves of glandelinians melted away.

Recklessly the foolish survivors pressed on silently, their steady rush being not the least affected by the annihilating fire of the christian batteries which seemed to shoot the plains and fields with a storm of horrible explosions and the smoke of m explosions seemed to swallow the whole scene up.

The artillery fire now increased.Aronburg Phelans divisions of 10,000,000 Glandelinians on Ambrose Edwins Fullers extreme right pressed on with the same tremendous fury as the other columns tha through that sea of horror and fire,, and near er and nearer despite it all came the wall of rushing scream ing graycoats, and now fast poured fearful volleys of grape and canister.

Ambrose Center under general Meldonia Facilitiaus Log Long-street rushed toward Hansonias center but encumbered a drum drum fire of cannon-followed by a curtain fire of machine guns and musketry and none of these glandelinians ever escaped the bath of destruction and Logustreet was borne from the field of hell mortally wounded. On and on pressed the other waves of Glandelinians with a int olerable fury that made the Angolinians doubt whether they could successfully resist this fierce onset, made by Glandelinian troops of all sects.

A very stream of shells was poured upon general Turners glandelinians which tore their very divisions down complete,y and now 10,000 more cannon concentrated a very hell of death and destruction n and every column struck was wiped out completely. Excitement and untold horrors prevaled everywhere for the first heavy blow was thought to have fallen upon Hansonias left from the dreadful increase of firearms in that direction, but it did not strike there for the enemy bei bending k more to their own left came headlong upon Hansonias right, and the scene was fiercer than ever while Calvan Shoosas line became aflame with musketry, then along other portions of the christian positions broke the loud thunder ing roar of great explosions and six h hundred and fifty great mines tore up a whole line of the guarians. All of the christian batteries were now pouring their hell of death and destruction, then came a roar like the bursting of a thrillion cannon along the whole of Hansonias line, and up into the air directly in front or in the middle of the plains shot mighty columns of smoke and a whole wave of glandelinians ten miles long melted enite rly away into windrows of the fallen.It was not a charge.It was a horrible massacre of glandelinian soldiers. Other volleys of mine explosions occured in quick succession and a cloud burst of debris and fragments of bodies pelted both sides. An oblique fire of ten new batteries of cannon simultaneously poured upon the torn, tattered, and bleeding surviving waves of men in gray a new sheet of exploding shells and officers and men went down like rain in a cloud burst.

The reckless survivors reached the infantry line of Abyssinkilians and returned a most insedious fire but most annihilation also. Over the works lea ed the remainder of the glandelinians charging at this portion but away they melted. On pressed the main wave and now general Wilters division encountered a simultaneous fire all along the line of more yivianias christian line hundreds of scores of their ranks being mowed down at once and these who survived unable to endure the terrific annihilating fire threw them selves flat, while many threw up their arms in token or of surrender but lost either hands of arms. It was exceedingly awful.

Manleys batteries were now opening fire to support the terrific charge but they could do little to stop the horrible massacre as now it was too la late. The main wave of the assailants however continued to rush on Ambrose Fuller advancing straight upon yivin yivianias line.Hundreds of his generals were moving easily and composedly along their line ordering the Angelinians to hold their fire until the glandelinians were near enough to see the whites of their yes. eyes.

The christian cannon fire was now at its worse and assuming a most indescribable fury a fusillade of 36,000 cannon seeking to make the din of titan throes of many volcanoes in that one point. The hostile lines continued the onrush untill they were within one hundred feet of the christian lines.A hundred thousand bolts seemed to be let loose along here vivinias line as the Angolinians suddenly arose and opened a simultaneously withering fire of 10,000,000 muskets shattering the whole line of main assault along this portion to fragments. The second wave hoved into view and under this annihilating storm of artillery they threatened to waver, and now a thrill ion cannon again seemed to be let loose as both sides opened an indescribable withering fire which echoed and reechoed far and wide the uproar of the fiery storm of musketry and cannon not now being able to have description.

All at once the battle assumed its a full army along the whole line the firing of millions of muskets seeking to fairly split the earth like a million dreadful thunder rolls. There was a terrible swing made by the advancing columns after this most terrific blow received by them, which flung general Hedda Zimmermann columns clear toward Hanscnias left. The Angolinians here were well posted, and their right to front, and rear seemed to turn into a long fissure of bolls blast furnaces as they opened fire with musketry. Thousands of ranks of glandollinians fell riddled by bullets all along the line, the ground and plains already being strewn or almost buried with the dead and wounded and dying. In gray.Simultaneously a withering tempest of bullets was poured upon these divisions from another quarter, and again simultaneously and all at p once a more tremendous storm of shot shell, and even canister fell upon these torn and demoralized waves filling the air with smoke and flame, and this portion of the glandollinian wave started to waver and then begin a backward flow.

The other surviving wave however still rushed on under all this hail of fury and reached a portion of the christian works belonging to Baldwins men, but Baldwin had thrown his own batteries of reaping guns into position just in time and an annihilating fire mowed down all of these glandollinians who tried to cross the works. The slight number of survivors who did remain because terror stricken over the horrible massacre, and broke into utter and tremendous panic, Phollands and gater both glandollinian generals going down badly mangled.

Ambrose Fuller himself was wounded but he was able to retain his command and made the most desperate attempts with the help of the other surviving officers to rally the men but could not succeed, despite the fact that othe of other waves were still rushing bravely on.

A withering roar of musketry was breaking out again and again, and still again but now these glandollinians leaped the works and never before was there such a fierce and terrific struggle. The glandollinians in closing with the christian line mingled in a herculean scrimmage, being face to face with the Angolinians plowing thr their way through fighting with all their own energy From the explosions of b cartridges the clothing of the men were afire, their clothes were even torn in the scrimmage and the Angolinians themselve fought like savage demons to drive back their most stubborn assailants but the graycoats had bravely planted what was left of their bloody battlefings on the breastworks.The christians indeed were pressed back by the tremendous fury of the onset, the cannoneers being bayonetted, clubbed or shot down as they stubbornly refused in that furnace of battle to leave their still thundering guns. The attack of the Glandolinians had indeed been extremely ferocious and dangerous and it seem ed as if the christian line would now be entirely broken.Simultaneously large forces of glandollinians under general spencer were advancing swiftly to cover AmbroseFuller's left but these columns met an annihilating fore from the christian guns u der general Spool. Many of the christian guns however were now too near to take much effect upon the assailants who continued to rush on in the headlong charge and with extreme dangerous fury. Indeed uncontrollable as the fury of their attacked seemed to be and dashing tward the christians as fast as s a stampede it did seem impossibe impossible nevertheless that they could long endue the endure the christian resistance. The whole line of christian infantry was now keeping up a fire that made a roar that made the world seem to come to an end.

Indeed the surviving glandolinians attacked the christians with such fury as to drive a portion into a panic but still their own left was in the face of a roaring annihilating fire of I,000 gathling guns and this part of the torn tottered, mangled and bleeding wave of glandolinians were stag gered, and they reeled and fell back in a most indescribable confusion and panic scores of thousands raising their hands in token of surrender only to be shot down in that fierce storm of fury while others wisely threw themsev themselves flat on their very faces to escape the storming merciless fire of the batteries and christian musketry.

Other columns of Angollinians now came dashing up and counter attacked the Glandolinians under spencer mingling ferociously with them and finally checking them. Ten batteries of heavy cannons a a also arrived now and under this deadly fire the rest of spencers army gave way their ranks still going down in many hundreds.In the meantime general grey and Jean Jones was advancig advancing with 30,000,000 men to cover fullers left but generals Jenson Harris and joyne reynolds with 19,000,000 Angollinians also came advancing over the flower fields intending to reinforce Here vivinianand here the battle assumed a most violent and general fury.Though more in numbers the Angolinians could not as yet drive the glandollinians back though a portion of the enemys right wing had been also badly cut up and destroyed. The Angolinians along this point withdrew but the glandollinians as yet did not press their adv advantage but kep up their heavy firing. In the meantime the glandollinians had carried also the line of works which the christians had formely captured driving the christians from the position However there were no guns to capture for general francis vivinia, the also general that he was had them withdrawn before the assailants came to close quarters. Heavy reinforcements of Angollinians under general Perkins arrived to support the shattered forces of general vivinia the Angollinian reinforcements themselves attacking the enemy with indescribable fury swarming over the works which the Glandollinians had just recaptured and the glandollinians might as well have tried to stop a cyclone. The whole surviving line of Ambrose Fullers division was crushed to fragments, and the survivors now broke into such a new scene of panic and confusion as never athenamed before and which outrivaled some of the enemys roiterous retreats at other portions of the bloody battlefield. The whole remainde of Ambrose fullers columns broke into a precipitate flight moving in a human avalanch at the speed of two miles a in ten minutes, with the long lines of purple coats tearing after them a pellmell.The Glandollinian generals made desperate efforts to rally the panic stricken men but amid the dreadful carnage they fell one after another. In about thirty minutes, the whole fields and plains was swarming and fairly crowned with h the panic crazed glandollinians in desperate flight several columns having rallied but failing to make a stand as the Angollinians carried all before them. The pursuing Angolinians advanced rapidly but after passing beyond the flowery plains and fields the enemys cannon opened a general fire upon them and compelled them to halt, and back to their own positions they flowed prepared to meet any more attacks the enemy should make and to reform their own shattered lines. A messenger just arrived as Hanscnia and the other two christian generals were reforming their armies and handed him him a note.He read as follows;

''Your excellency; General Francis Hanscnia;;;;;

I have seen the repulse of the fierce charge of the divisions of waves of all sects of glandollinians under Ambrose Edwin fuller and advise you to follow up your sweeping success with a determined counter charge upon Manleys lines. We probably then can drive his armies from his ps positions and make him retreat southward. The two whole armies engaged with me and my brother are being badly shattered, you have also shattered Quebaum Manleys army also and he cannot hold if attacked before he can reinforce, Ambrose fullers men.This attack I advise you ought to be made without any delay whatever, as every moment is precious.

General Robert
Vivian.Second commander in Chief.''

Hanscnia as soon as the forces of christians were freformed at once gave the order;

''Forward.''

And ''Forward'' was theworld all along the line and on over the fields and plains and right tward the enemy rushed first Vivianias infantry. Vivianias army had only a few rounds of ammunition and as the glandollinian infantry opened fire the Angolinians had to save their ammunition for the close quar ters engagement and then take to the bayonet. The Angolinians were not checked in their advance though their lines were torn asunder, and thousands mingled mingled in a desperate hand to hand struggle which lasted twenty minutes and then overwhelmed by approaching reinforcements the Ango Indans were com pelled to give way, the Glandelinians only following a short distance.Seeing that the charge was repulsed Lord Lut Duboru Manleys position still held hurled one of his main wings upon Adele-de-garbe.Hell and millions of its damnation seemed to break loose and for an hour Adele-de-garbe kept his lines firm though it was severely handed in the direction of Cains Orchards. Adele-de-garbe soon however was in danger of being overlapped and sent an appeal for help. This arrived under general Berner Fallan and after fiercer fighting, the Angelinians were again repulsed with murderous loss and again both christian columns being exhausted with their losses were compelled to once again draw off.

CHAPTER FORTY-

A HELLISH BATTLEFIELD BETWEEN THE TWO BIG GIRLSCHOOL AND LITTLEGIRLSCHOOLS AND THE PLAINS AND FIELDS OF FLOERS FLOWERS.

After a short lull the glandelinian forces unde general Meldon plarener moved forward to resume the attack in which they themselves had been repul sed and Jennings, Pemberson, and Soldiers Abyssinkilians repelled them with al all their fury and ferocity, n aking the glandelinians back, and crushing one of Meldons wings to piece pieces.Simultaneously general Hanconia Phelans heavy forces took a hand in the desperate fight cutting a part of gentallios christian army off from pliens columns of Abbisinnians, and receiving great reinforcements from general Huebaum Manley general Meldon once more gave battle in general fury and the big forces of Angelinians and Abyssinkilians under general John Eyoun was almost annihilated, the surviving divisions gradually retiring with the victorious glandelinians now pursuing closely. General Hendersons glandelinians forces had crossed the Big Girlscool creek under heavy fire at the very same time and after very sanguinary fighting compelled the Angelinian forces under general grew to capitulate, while after more serious fighting the glandelinians compelled the Glande Angelinians under general Plows to retreat, and simultaneously rolled up the divisions of Abyssinkilians under general Leopolds, and it was repor ted that general Malcoss glandelinians were cutting off Hanconias communic ations with general Hunson or Robert Vivian who were fighting the battle at other sections. The glandelinians here however were checked with heavy losses.The slaughter on both sides was terrible but nevertheless after a heavy concentration of troops Malcoss glandelinians were compelled to retire.

While these attacks were in progress Huebaum Manley becoming alarmed alarmed was moving forward heavy forces with the intention to resume one of his well planned attacks, which was to be made in general and end the dispute. He had hoped that the first great blow which he had intended to deliver would be in a way to seperate the Abyssinkilian and Angelinian troopx under general James Gannon from Hanconia so as to cut off their communication from each other.

He did strike, and struck suddenly and with all his might in the direction of the divisions of Abyssinkilians under general Greatheart which were holding a position at the sacred Heart Orphan asylum region and the enemy crossing the ol plians at the point of the bayonet drove Great Hearts forces back in a pandemonium of confusion.At the same time Germaine and Jimmie vivian had made forced marched toward Flourtine creek pushing back the heavy attacking forces of glandelinians under general Farroll.In the meantime another wing of Huebaum Huebaum Manleys army had reached the banks of the Main Bir Girl Knool creek and during a frightful onslaught met complete descrimination and and had to retire.

General Germaines plans (Christian general) was to throw his center and right with the aid of Hinderninss and Hinderniss Saunders main force upon the attacking enemy and drive them back while his own left under Zimmermann Henry was to guard against the coming of Omarian aid. Zimmermanns troops had been about twenty four hours late in reaching the field, and had been in two hours preparations before their officers got their order and so unfortunately on account of very serious resistance they were slow in occupy ing the section asigned for which was heavily shelled by the foe batteries, placed to occup that location but at last after desperate fighting and suf fering excruciating losses they finally drove the Glandelinian assailants back and took up their position with a new scan of dead and wounded. A Glandelinian force (,000),000 strong supported by eight thousand cannon began the great attack on Hinderninss whole command stationed near Little Girlscool, the Glandelinian cannon battering the two cities into fiery ruin.

FRIGHTFUL SLAUGHTER ON BOTH SIDES.

Zimmermann had double that number but then to his dismay the others had been completely drawn off by general germaine and hurled upon the Angelinians at Hildreds Plian, but nevertheless for a time he did have a numerical advantage advantage over the Angelinian forces he immediately engaged, a and which decided ly got the worse of it a most good drubbing at that when heavy forces of Abyssinkilians appeared. General Mairuse gostallio was support ing the Angelinians at other portions of the field but he had been severely wounded and general jennings Brydanian infantry of consentinians was now being hard pressed, and were compelled t retire across the Ava Maria stream while in spite of heavy rd reinforcements general Francis Bateman army was cut to pieces by a headlong charge of the glandelinians the survivors being forced to retire.

General jimmie vivian with all his forces started to engage general Gannon whole glandelinian army.The glandelinian here had a heavy advantage of artillery and cavarly, and other machine gun support and were about to gain the day when suddenly a large force of Abyssinkilians under general Hero Franklinia and Napole Hanconia came up.

The immense divisions under general Napol with Angelinian aid contested the bloody fields with the most indescribable fury ever seen and in spite of all the terrific slaughter by glandelinian infantry, and the onways heavy guns they regained all the lost ground though many of their officers had fallen. The only advanced ground still held by the wicked Glandelinians was a farm to the right of the fields o and plains of the Dasies and Corns.

GANNON IS DRIVEN BACK A LL A ALONG THE LINE.

While this wh awas going on general jimmie vivian on the christian side, and general Gannon on the side of the glandelinians were trying each other out like two armies of prize fighters. B For all the times the Angelinians greatly outnm outnumber outmuthered the glandelinians who gave the fierce Angelinians battle with great bravery and most singular skill, and it would certainly have gone hard with them and they would have faceda tremendous disaster beyond comprehending had not one of general jimmie vivians aids failed to come up.Gannon had sent many messengers to ask for aid and support from Baldwins guns but none came but nevertheless he was able to hold hi his ground against the overwhelming numbers.There was indeed a most horrible pandemonium of an uproar of carnage in the direction of the christian bat teries and Gannon realized that Baldwin of the Ango. Angelinians must have his own hands full, and that now the Angelinians were without the support of Baldwins artillery and that they would have to fight without artillery support.So Gannon hurled his attack with redoubled advance and violence but was overlapped by the overwhelming christian forces who took him on the flank and he was compelled to at last give way and was forced back for a time all along the line.He then retreated toward the southern portion of Big Girl Knool.General Hanconia vivian saw this, heard the frightful roar of general Baldwins artillery and realizing that the immense glandelinians was attacking Baldwin to prevent the christian from support by artillery saw that he must do all he could to defend his own right from being overwhelmed by the assailants coming against him, and so he sent general Fredrickson Parcon with about twenty million men, and learning that Gannons retreating divisions were being rallied he saw that everything possible must be done to averta disaster to the christian army.

A few minutes later the advancing christian forces had been joined by Abyssinkillians under Fredrick Hance, and general Jack Dane and now general Gammons Glandelinians was caught between thetwo big girlkools and Little GirlKnool and the other bodies of the enemy acting up not with fiercer resista resistance than ever and here the fury of the battle seemed to be terrific. Gammons whole ri ght flank rocieved the fiercest attack ever seen i since the wars commenced out, the attack being made by the whole christian left wing unde under general Jeremenon Franklin. The Glandelinians also were supported by artillery and so twenty thousand cannon were opened upon the attacking christd christians while general crasus Glandelinians attacked the center and left of the Abyssinkillians occupying the inferno like plains carrying the christian positions under Henry Rayner and Tp Topsy but could not as yet take the main line of intrenchments.A forces of Abyssinkillians simultaneously wre cit were cut off from big girlkool but contested the positions stubbornly hell seeming to break loose here also the Abyssinkillians mowing the stt stubborn Glandelinians down in immense multitudes of the assailants as if they were flies.

CHAPTER FORTY ONE.

THE TERRIFIC SLAUGHTER BETWEEN THE TWO BIG GIRLKNOOLS, AND LITTLE GIRLKNOOL..

The Abyssinillian and Angolinian divisions were however reduced to mere fragments and were compelled to flee before the onrush of the glandelinian assailants but general Augustine St Clair ca came u upewith twenty six brigades and concentrating his own forces waited untill the glandelinian assailants came within close range then let loose his storming fire of hell mowing down whole lines of the enemy.Then with wild yells the christ- ans counter charged driving the surviving assailants back, cutting the surviving glandelinian waves to pieces and driving them back clear to their own line in disorder.Legros and Tom golon came up with fresh bodies and tried their best to check the tremendous rout but both generals fell severely wounded amid the dreadful carnage. Augistine St glare pressed on with his Abyssinkillians who went on like a sweeping hurricane or tornado and supported by cavarly fell upon the enemys main line with merciless fury capturing three million, two hundred thousand men cutting and shooting down all the cannoneers of all the entire glandelinian battery, and killing all the horses with the intention of rendering the guns useless, and indeed so far into the enemys main line they went that several forces had to be sent to their relief but the enemy made a storming counter charge poured upon Agustine St Claros man a desolating fire that swept smote his whole line to almost nothing, and the glandelinians also sceing up under Pruse, Brue and Horton Hanlon finally drove the Angolinians under Auge Augustine St Clare back with intolerable losses, and simultaneously the Angolinians und under jimmie vivian were completely annihilated by the glandelinian cannon fire along the stretch of the Evangeline St glare, and Mc-Hollester and Pandora railroad lines which ran parallel at this section of the battle field, field, general jimmie vivian narrowly escaping capture. To offset this the furious glandelinians simultaneously put up a stronger artillery fire from the direction of Waldons crossroads which was kept up half the time making both a tremendous din and inconceivable slaughter, while new onslaughts were directed on Agi Augustine St Claros del depleted forces under Parisin Augustine having been wounded and borne off from the field in a critical condition.Large bodies of glande indian cavarly, infantry and battalions followed by dragoons assailed the Angolinian gunners on the right of general James Gammons position held by Abyssinkillians. The glande linians by sheer bravery and by making an irrestible onslaught of tornado like fury gained the christian position in the face of a storming hurricane of canister, followed by a storming horror of shells and shrapnell, and then by a curtain fire of muse musketry, and took the twenty thousand cannon the Angolinians being completely descriminated to pieces and totally routed by the glandelinian and Cmarrian infantry and cavarly, through which the counter charging forces of christians despite their most might and main efforts could not penetrate and which shot them down in hundreds of thousands in a few h minutes and chanced them all the way clear from the whole battle & field, capturing mil lions of prisoners and arms, and putting that division of christ ians out of service for the nine months to follow, the Angolinians having lost all their commanders and even jimmie gammon was wounded, and only by superhuman efforts of the Angolinians was he saved from capture. Germains vivians became squares of infantry fared no better, the enemy capturing all of his positions and even the girlknools, his right grand div ision having encountered an annihilating fire and so was compelled to retire before the glandelinian forces under general generals Parisin, Buel and Aldolph Millian, the latter having ben been sent to Parisins assistance, and general Melloo who was sent to the assistance of germaines right grand division had his own right wing turned by the glandelinian fo forces under Evans and destroyed.

CHAPTER FORTY-TWO .

THE SEVERE PUNISHMENT THAT BALDWIN WAS COMPELLED TO ENDURE:

Now for the bloody details of the struggle for the possession of the christian artillery under general Jacob paldwin. For four hours this was de fended with the same heroe heroism and bravery and fierceness which with which the center of the whole christian line had displayed, paldwins right Center desperately resisting the repeated sledge hammer blows of a great part of the whole glandelinian army and only the stubbornness with which the Glandelinians were always noted enabled them to stand the horrible losses inflicted, and punish Baldwins army severly severely .A lag re large body of paldwins cavarly and infantry twenty too one of the enemys were not able to even stand before before one charge of the enemy and fled in the wi wildest terror and confusion and scattered to the four winds by the enemy many thousad thousands of them even surrendered to the enemies of God not that they wanted to but because they would have been fools not to.The main line fled in wild confusion and panic and never were rallied. Balw paldwins whole remaining line was annihilated and al, of his guns were in possession of the enemy giving the evident reason why he could not support the hard hit christian armies.But while his own troops for a while had gained some temporay success against the enemy general Germaine vivians losses had been unspeakably terrific in the extremeand general Fenton who he a had sent early to engage the enemys advance from the region of the sacred Heart Orphanage used as a fort by the christians had also suffered a crushing defeat , and the other army d coming to the rescue had been annihilated. After a series of more fearful counter charges Baldwins batteries and positions had been captured by the enemy, and the Abyssinkillians under generals Henryque St Clare, and also Alfred St Clares Angolinians, had been disgilus ioned in trying to rescue Baldwins scattered christian force.Germaine vivian saw indeed that it was utterly impossible to make a break in Hanleys line, that Hicbaum Manley was able easily to break the whole of Hannonia and the two lines under the vivianins altogether, and did so.

However general Hannonia on hearing of this determined upon a forl folorn hope.Putting general Lupowicker at the head of his main command, he sent him down fiercely against the whole glandelinian center between the three Girlkon girln Knools while he assailed the left with another force.Desperate as was the hope it was a disasterous one and there is no need to say anything more only that these forces never camebeck. The attack of the enemy on the whole of vivianins force was succeeding simultaneously that this disaster occured to general Hannonins body of men under Lupowicker, and Gannon of the enemy having finally repulsed his own desperate assailants came up and with the armies under general Pope Jennings engaged the Angolinians in a bloody hand to hand fight which drove the Angolinian forces in confusion from the fields. Germaines biggest squares now repelled the attacks of the glandelinians more fiercely but meet met in the center by heavy artillery fire, and attacked on his left by a heavy force of infantry and cavarly the christian squares were pressed back with the most excruciating losses ever seen and finally gave up the struggle fleeing in the utmost confusion, and leaving their dead and wounded everywhere in their flight.

Gannons glandelinian artiley now covered the offensive and attacking the remaining Angelinian forces the remnants of Vivianna left center, and a new force of troops vivianis had brought up from pinkcull. With their Mc-Hallentinian divisions supporting them a general advance was made against the remaining christian line of the two Vivianna which after a further gallant stand was finally also cut up and thrown into confusion.The time had come for the retreat, and general vivianis reluctant,y gave the order.It was first accomplished first with an accomplishment of descipline but soon as the victorious glandelinians pressed on them the Angelinians abandoned their arms, arms and the captured glandelinianpositions in which they did have possession all this time and fled in a rout across the fields and plains, entering the city of Biggo girlknool at seven oclock. The victorious glandelinian hosts poured through the city of pig girlknool pursuing the christians very closely.The Angelinians in leaving so hastily had sacked the big city and hundreds of important buildings were on fire. General Callahanis of the christians was taken up from the sea of blood, storms of fire and dead bi bodies severely wounded by the enemy and made a prisoner.

Indeed everywhere on the battlefield was heartrending desolation.Trees on all sides of the plainsland been shattered and bruised, flower fields and plain s were strewn with the multitudes of the fallen of both sides co comy combined an d drenched in torrents of blood ,and covered here and there with intestines.Indeed never in the war before was there such a scene exposed to view, it indeed resembling the dantra destruction of the entire world. Whe le towns were in ashes, and even the three Girlin ools.

Never did such a pang of sorrow strike p oor general Vivinia.He was at this time far from the s ready scene and if he could could only reach the shattered lines still in retreat before more threaten ing danger occured he believed his armies would be safe from total rout. Riding to his shattered but still standing headquarters he learned that general Augustine St Clare had been wounded and could not be seen. The sight along Hansonins line was a holy terror to him indeed!Hundr eds of thousands of slain not picked up yet by the victorious enemy were lying about in seas, and the extra scene of wounded were writhing, moaning and screaming in terrible agony.Indeed the scene here was like a dead and living hell com bined as the greatest number of both sides were believed to have fallen here. Not a tree had its branches left, many were split, crushed or charred by fire.The ground ran red with blood and seemed paved at places with intes tines or torn and lacerated flesh. Hundreds of thousands of badly torn and mangled horses with their intestines protruding lay at point s here among the dead and wounded m amid the multitudes of broken cannon, muskets, gun carriages caseions and other war material. It was indeed a perfect sea of dead-dying, and wounded amid confused and tangled wreckage.It was awful. BIG girlknool would be a memory long to be in the minds of those who fought there. On his return from Hansonins lines Vivianis met the other general Nore vivianis who had early in the batt e rushed forward the heaviest forces to repell the charge of the enemy.

"I believe that this was the greatest battle that has ever been fought in the war before "Declared general Francis Vivinia."Have you general seen the conditions along the general Baldwins lines!"

"Yes"Answered Nror vivianis."It was enough to sicken the fiends."

"The dead and wounded are too many to be left behind and yet its got to be done."Said the first vivianis. sadly."We cannot stay long here with out badly broken forces."T

"Theses sights beats anything I have ever seen."Said the second Vivianis. Others parts of the batt le raged along the Jonnie pichse Creek. This bat part of the battle was fought by the glandelinians against the christ ians under Ladon it raging also in front of Big girlknool this engagement engagement beginning at eighty thirty in the morning October 31th the large columns of Hanleys glandelinians advn advancing to the attack at this point also with all their might and main and every division of Ludens army made preparations to meet the assault.One immense column of after another of the enemy s rushed to the attack in wei wedge like formation the main divisions of the assai ants rushing forward like a storm tossed sea of wave waves and soon came within range of the Angelinians.

Then from Ludens whole line the fire was terrific and the falling of the grayscats became so terrific that the first columns gave way and retreat ed in amazing confusion, while to increase the tumult the christian cannon fire mowed down ranks like swaths of corn and the rifle fire killed larf large masses.

Though several of these main divisions of glandelinians had recoiled and were overwhelmed and trodden down by the pursuing christians the main line of assai assailants though they at first hesitated f inally were reinforced by Hanley who sent forward 30,000,000 ni men and these finally carried the christian positions at all hazards.The battle at this point extended for about thirty miles in a hell of firing for a whole day and though whole columns continued to dissolve on both sides the live long day general Hanleys great charge was perfectly successful and the christians had to yeild.

The battle indeed was separated into several divisions. Wienstien, Hanson Vivian, Spruder, and general Robert vivian won completely.Whillimsburger Zimmerman had also been engaged with the enemy at the Big girl knool pass and had won a crushing victory.Tumerline who had struck vivianis also had paralized his advance on Big Girl Knool, and the conflicts ending seemed indeed to have a queer strange. Two main christian commanders who commanded all the armies operating against the enemy in the whole country had won a most crushing victory inthis battle, and two other main christian commands commanders who had command of all armies operating in eastern Calvorinia and southern Calvorinia Hansonia and vivianis had failed most disgraceful,y and were now on the verge of complete defeat. Violet and her sisters during the remainder of the conflict had went o ver to vivianis army and now wished they didn't. Indeed this battle ha s most mysterio s ending.Was it a success for the enemy, a drawn battle, or did the christians really win it. Hanson declared that it was a foe victory because vivianis and Hansonis were beaten.But how could it be when he and his own brother are the main commanders and won so gallantly as they did crushing both Hanleys at the region of Sacramento Hill!

This batt lefield had an extent of over fourty eight miles entirely and raged at many different points, and almost simultaneously. Some called it the second battle of Jennie gunner or Kitty kittens pinchers, and some others called it the battle of Madge Evans or Angelinis Agathis as it was the enemys main intention to capture the place had they won it. Vivianis and Hansonis called the great struggle "the battle of the Daisies and the Ferns"because his conflict raged mostly inthose fields and plains where those flowers and ferns grew.

After some debatements about a week after the conflict however it was readily called the Battle of Big Girlknool as most of the engagements and the fiercest centered at that city proper. Hanson generally called it "The battle of Big GirlKnoll and it since then was called by no other name despite disputes over the situation.What Hanson vivian calls it, by that name it goes. Theconflict had indeed been most terrific in the extreme.

CHAPTER THIRTY FOUR.

THE AWFUL SCENES AFTER BIG GIRL KNOOL. RELIEF SENT FROM ALL PARTS OF THE NATION AND THE WORLD AS SOON AS THE TRUE SITUATION OF AFFAIRS AT BIG GIRL KNOOL WAS MADE KNOWN.

HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS SUBSCRIBED, AND MILLIONS OF CAR LOADS OF SUPPLIES FORWARDED TO DESOLATED REGION. ALL CHILDREN IN THE NATION GIVE THEIR PENNIES.

SINCE THEUNUSUALLY VIOLENT BATTLE! along the roads near Big Girl Knool most of all the military throughout the country had issued an anal after appeal to the Govern e government of Abbieannia for help in more armies, provisions and the like, and the response was prompt n and also very liberal.The officials of the military were not afraid that the government and the people of Abbieannia andof the whole world would call them sensational for no one were better qualified to judge the situation after this tremendous batt e battle than they were.They had spent three weeks after the charnall hell for working for the good of the shattered christian ar y and they had accomplished everything that enabled it to go forward two more weeks later.The authorities in every National city the Mayors and the others organized all the citizens giving of their own money, induced all the others just as willing or unwilling or more unwilling than he to open their hearts and pocket books and in fact took no rest at all after the news of that big battle spread.As many had actually witnessed the terrific conflict and the awful disaster tothe christian army before the appeal was issued they knew the conditi ns of a ll things thoroughly and how badly the christian armies had been handled and whipped to the finish.

Therefore the very nation and the general public of the world had confidence in what the military officials said.The week after the battle the General Relief Com ittee of Big Girl Knool city issued the fol llowing;

''BIG GIRL KNOOL. (CALVERINIA)'
DECE MBER 6 DECEMBERTH 1913.
TO THE PUBLIC OF ABBIEANNIA:
Terrible indeed was the big Big Bgirl Knool Battle of Nove ber the 24th and 25 th.The enemy it is estimated lost abo l about I80,000,000 of which fourty or more millions are dead or died of wounds.I do not know is this estimate has been exaggerated yet or not but I was say the enemy won the best victory in the whole war so far crushing the whole christian army like an egg shell under a strong fist.A conservative estimate of the loss of life on our side is from 35,500,000 to 56,000,000 and at least 98,oo 98.,000,000 are woundedmany of them severely and that the remainder driven from their positions for the distance of fifty miles during the dreadful retreat are com pletely shelterless.

The whole army is utterly destitute.The entire remainder of the army is si suffering in great in great degree and though there is no snow on the ground yet the weather is intensely cold.Not a single town or city in the vinicity of the battlefield has been able to recieve all the wounded.Not even the work of Nature escaped damage and more than half of the whole christian ar y is completely obliterated.

There is immediate need for food provisions, and am munition, uniforms and army goods of all kinds.If the other near by cities and towns will open near by places for the wounded the horrible situation will be greatly relieved.It is a fortunate thing the weather is cold or otherwise there would be a general plague as the army being driven from the region there is hardly any means to get so many of the dead strewn over the country for scores of miles out of the way in the pro er time and the enemy just because they wish a pestilence to sweep us will not remove u them or allow the christians to do so either.Other places should send our shattered army water as well as provisions including all kinds of oils, candles and ammunition.Tents are needed for the army.Indeed never was Napoleon so disasterously defeated in any of his worse battles than our christian army here.General Manley is a perfect Napoleon of the Glandelinian Nation and so are his officers.

The royal ,ords and other members of E peror vivianaplace recieved a series of joint telegrams from any important ersonages at ,ig irl Knol describing the christian defeat, disaster to the christian army destruction of the christian army and all destruction causedby the battle and said t thus;

Millions are shelterless and destu destitude and a all tents are burned down the whole christian army being shattered, broken up, and torn to pieces and scattered into small bodies here and there and driven from the region for one hundred iles leaving seas of dead all the way.

Five hundred thousand sort lly wounded are sheltered in Little Girl Knool City which has h many buildings completely roofless.Many houses have their windows blownout by the concussion.Need over 10,000,000 tents, and 34,567,777 rations.All theatre and Citizens Relief Co mittee are doing all in their power to aid all the monstorous ar ies of wounded but stocks of undamaged provis ons are exhausted and rebel armies are preventing aid from coming to the wounded fro the outside.with all the millions of wounded housed, need extra force to keep all shltster in sanitary conditions and reinforce ments to prevent enemy pressing on and capturing city and all our miserable woun ded.Pressing all Glandelinian soldiers captured in battle no matter how wounded they are as long as able to work to aid the Angelinian divisions of soldiers in disposing of the awful oceans of dead of both sides as far as they can take the risk of reach them.It is said one hun red and fifty fifty thousand big fires are raging over a hundred miles of country, and 10,000 fires of ot er other kinds made made by the soldiers are burning vast heaps of bodies.Relief and heavy reinforcements urgently requested or we' ll all be surrounded as ene y will s on advance to besiege us.''

Thenu rthorities of Abbiennia sent the Government special Aron burg Limited Train in thirty sections from orothy Gale City to Chamberlane to carry provisions, ammunition, fresh troops, artillery and supplies to the shattered Christinn ar y which had retreated tward pig and Little girl ool after the disasterous defeat.Also the day the appeal was made acting Minister of War at A Angelinia Agathia surthorized the Chartering of many special ammunition trains from ombi City to carry quarter master and commissionary s upplies to the relief of the dentitute soldiers at Big girl Knool.Orders were also issued by the Abbiennian war Department for the immediate shipment of 10,000,000 tents, and 5olo 56,000,000 rations.These immense stores of army supplies were devided between Kittens, iocherts and Rose City but it was reported that half of these were destroyed or captured by the foe.On December the 4 th the general in chief command of the army issued the following statement;

KITTENS RIECHERTS.
DECEMBER 4TH. 1913.

CONDITIONS at Big Girl Knool are much more severe than first reported.Comp Communication however has been restroed between the army and the mainland and also the government and hereafter some of the transporation of supplies if not captured by the enemy asbefore will be less difficult if the enemy does not again interfere.The work by the millionsof prisoners of c e clearing the batt efield of the dead as far as possible is progressing fair y well and many of the generalsunder the direction of their chief commanders is having scores of thousands of sharpshooter troops partolling the camps and portions of the battlefields for the purpose of prevening depredations f by rebel vandals in disguise.

The most conservative estimates as to the number of dead already disposed of by buria l and fire places them between one week of work at two million five hundred thousand.Contributions from citizens of this state and also from other Statesof Abbiennia are coming in rapidly and liberally and it is confidently expected that within the next week the work of the restoration of the defeated army and the abso u absolute care of all the wounded will have begun in good earnest and with energy and success.Ofcourse the destruction of so much army property has been very great not less than five hundred million dollars but it is hoped and also believed that even this great loss will be comp el completely overcome through the enrgy and self reliance of the nation and o her other big armies.G.General ,ivianonna on the same day the Big girl Knool Relief Co mittee sent out statements also it being that general ivianonna army is recieving numerous telegrap s of condolce condolences nd and offers of all assistance necessary.All near by cities are supplying and will supply food, clothing and ar y provisions for immediate needs.Cities and towns further away can serve us best by sending money, troops, and ammunition.We have more than 25,678,989 wounded to care for and clothe in Big girl Knool and neighboring toown Big girl Knool City and neighboring towns to care for and feed for onths and to furnish with army goods.Most of these are still without shelter and the others will require the need of the help of the other towns for shelter.From this the world will understand how much assistence we need since out army was pra practically destroyed.This Committee will from time to time report our needs with more particularity.We refer to dispatch of this date of Labor general Francisanna which this committee fully endorses.All communicants will please accept this answer in leiu of most direct response and be assured of the heart-felt gratitude of the entire army now shelterless, half destroyed and without hope of ever being reformed or able to engage further in the war it is so badly crip led and beaten.

GENERAL CHARLES BROWN
GENERAL CLARANCE HOGAN HOGAN.''

GENERAL Concentinian Aronburg was informed by National Ar y Contractors on the day the appeal was sent out that the Viv an Girl Pri ncesses themselves had through telegraphing to Angelinia Agathia purchased 50,000,000 ar y ar my rations for the shattered and crushed army at Big Girl Knool.The rations were started under heavy guard from the Evangeline St Clare Railroad Station in Angelinia Agathia City at 3.P.M. the s same day.

Violet and her sisters went directly to the ar y contractors who supply the ar y army with provisions and ordered rations indeitcal with those furnished for w wounded soldiers consisting of medical su plies, bandages and foods consisting of bacon, canned meant meats, beans hard bread, and hard tack, oatmeal, bran food and coffee.Angelinia Agathia sent 4I,256, 89 dollars to the governer general of southern Calverinia, Carnegie town gave $I20,000 in cash, Count De Biff telegraphed from ,orbi to His Lords at Angelinia Agathia to send $I,000,000 at once which was done, Alden City sent $I,700,000 i mediately EDelphia wired the governor of southern Calverinia $5,000,000 without delay, every company in the various cities and towns gave one million dollars, the Mic- Hollester and Pandora Railroad Comany $5,000,000.The city of Pandora started trainloads of war supplies and also provisional sull supplies southward as also did the city of Jessicia, the railroad s hauling the long lines of cars fee of charge, also newspaper concerns either gave money or started relief trains with doctors, nurses, and medical supplies with orders to beat the best record time to Big Girl ool city.Jennie Wren Town began with $I,000,000 and subscribed that amount daily for many days, Angeline Junction Telegraphed $2,500,000 and then made it $I5,000,000 30,000,000 rations and ninehundred thousand army tents were sent fro. F Dorothy Gale fro the officer office of the Abbiennian quarter master, the Majo Mayor of porothy Gale was told by its citizens to send twenty million dollars at once and he did so, nearly all the theatres then operating in Abbiennia gave heavy benifits to the cause,the cities of theState of Angelinia having $5,000,000 left in its child slave Relief fund sent that, people of northern Calverinia sent fifteen million to the Governer at Big Girl Knool, Calmanrinia raised two million in cash, the governers of near by of near by cities of theAbbiennian states issued proclamantions calling upon their people to subscribe to the relief funds the mayors of most of the cities did the same the consequence being that the National armies at Big Girl Knool had recieved in total over $64,670,000., nd it had been estimated that fully twenty two million five hundred thousand would be necessary to carry the suffering wounded through the duration of their interny interment for hundreds ofvthousands f them of them were horribly wounded and unable to help themselves.There were fully fifty mill ion wounded soldiers in Big girl Knool and other big cities who were dependant upon the chairty of the nation.On Friday night the military surthorities decided upon two important important plans of action.The first was that they would allow all the provisions and army clothing shipped from all points to be concentrated at Big Girl Knool for the use of the christian armyand that they would also grant that army the use of three hundred thousand citizen laborers a day if possible for a period of thirty days, the same to be paid one dollar and fifty cents a day per man man for that time out of the relief fund.Prisoners were t to be forced to work or stve starve.In addition there to all requests for for money from the Big Girl Knool relief committee were to be granted.Their second decision was that they would personally look after the needs of the 34,567,389 destitute soldiers in the unsanitary quarters along the Big Girl Knool road provide them with tents and provisions and keep them going until they got on their feet again.Other surthi surthe i Other persons of high ranks were to e keep track of the big Girl Knool situation while the city person of high ranks looked out for the outside posts.That evening a large Local Committee from big Girl Knool was sent to general ,ivianuma to take charge of the recie ing and distributing of su pplies t that arived there for the enormouns army of wounded soldiers whose situation was more serious than those of the wounded at Cedernine had been.No o ooner there hordly stopped provisions from ariving but here they were really always stopping them and still were.

A serious matter confronting the au rthorities not only in the armies, at road po points but in big Girl Knooland her neighboring cities and towns was the unusual rapid gathering of tough Glandelinian spies and vandals in disguise, all kinds of rough spie characters general generally and also ghouls and vipers which after the herculean and di sasterous battle were swarming about on many false pretenses and creating a worst reign of terror than a million volumes could describe.
Others even drifted into the big town of Kittens piacherts and on to the neighboring towns by the hundreds, and thousands in the hope of pick pocketing some official and the like among the crowds for valuable information. All this unusal gathering of disorderly Glandelinian spies made the police officials and the military rather very uneasy as to the army's future.the police and troops in these cities and towns were constantly on the alert to kee down this trouble, and prevent all possible work of these dengerous spies.Yet they could not get the u e upper hand untill all the citizens of the towns and cities started mobbing and lynching and cross quarterin the spies.These fellows would attempt to ruin or even poison the food prov visions and set fire to other supplies sent by the generous people from the outside and when ever were caught were shot mobbed or lynched without delay.The following was sent out from big girl Knool on December the 7th which showed how serious the situation was and of the horrors and violence of the battle itself,;

''BIG GIRL KNOOL.
CALVERINIA.
DECEMBER7TH 1913.
TO COUNT DE RIFF.
Your Lordship;
After the fullest possible investigation here we feel completely justified in saying to you and through you to all the Abbiesnnian people of the nation that no such battle has ever raged in any section of our world, or community in the history of our country before, or ending with such disasterous and disgraceful results.The loss of life is a palling beyond words, and can never be accurately determined.
It is estimated that more than 18,000,000 are ar already disposed of on our side alone and over 8,000,000 of the enemy which had been abandoned to us. illions of more dr dead still ly lie upon the fields which are beyond our reach as the enemy wont let us get to them under any conditions.In the case of encampments the army suffered twice as bad and in the same style as they did recently at the bloody battle of Cedernine or Headwick junction.There is not a tent in the whole christian encampments abandoned b to the foe that has not been burned while thousands of s shacks made of branches and reeds have also been destroyed.
The property loss is on a vaster scale however the loss representing representing the accumulation of moremillions than can saftly be stated.Under these conditions with tens of millions of soldiers shelterless and destitute with the entire army beaten most severely and crushed to pieces and under a strain and stress most dice difficult to realize with the weather intensely cold we appeal directly in the hour of our great s greatest emergency to the sympathy and aid of mankind especially for the wounded.

General Concontinian Aronburh when he looked over the Big Girl Knool Battlefield three days after the conflict had wired the War Depart e Department at Angelinia Agathia that perhaps over 11,000,000 of the Angelinian soldiers had been killed outright.He was a conservati ve man as all Abbiesnnian army officers usually are and should be and when he signed a statement saying probably over 38,000,000 soldiers of the christian side alone perished or had lost their lives in the battle or died of wounds his signature carried irresistible weight wi with it.
Not only did the peo le of Abbiesnnia and the loyal parts of Calverinia sympitize deeply with the suffering wounded and the condition of the christian armies but those of other christian nations as well.King Donaldson of Blo - linia of Blomlinia sent the following kind message to E mperor vivian at Angelinia Agathia;;;

FROM KING OF BLOMLINIA.
NOVEMBER 2 9TH.
TO HIS MAJESTY THE GREAT GRAND EMPEROR OF HOLY ABBIESANNIA:
The startlingnews of the disasterous battle of Kittens piacherts near pig Girl Knool which has just devastated the region has deeply moved me and my whole nation.The utmost sentiments of traditional friendship which unites the two mighty christian e mpires can leave no doubt in your sorrowing mind concerning the very sincere share that the E mperor and the whole nation take in the calanity and defeat of war that is proving such a cruel ordeal for so a many millions of fmil fmalies in the Abbiesnnian nation.
It is natural that Blo linia therefore should partif participate in the sadness as well as in the joy of the Abbiesnnian people that so severe a battle as that should have ended as c a christian victory instead of such a horrible catastro he and war devastativing defeat.I t Take it to heart to tender to your Gracious Majesty our most heart felt condolence and to sent to the br bereaved families of the battle victims the expression ofour afflicted sympathy.
Emile Godfrey.
Emperor of Blomlinia.''

The Emperor of Abbiesnnia sent this reply in answer;

''THE MAJESTIC EXECUTIVE PALACE'
ANGELINIA AGATHIA
ABBIESANNI A.
DECEMBER 8TH. 1913.
HIS Majesty Emile Godfrey,
Emperor of Blo linia,
City of Glandorner/
I hasten to express in the name of the millions who are suffering from the effects of the battle at Girl Knool as well as in behalf of the whole of Abbiesnnia heartfelt thanks for your most touching message of sympathy and condolence.We would too be thankful if the victory had come, and hope the war will soon end.

e Even all the children in the natio helped the suffering wounded and the shattered armies with their pennies and dimes.All school children also saved to give their pennies to the surviving victims of the greatest of all battles so far.The idea was carried out everywhere and several hundred dollars was raised in this way in Angelinia Agathia City alone.The plan was adopted also in every city and town.When this was first made known the Abbiesnnian Post Office Insepe Inspector Aldon F Ricksonia wrote as follows;
''When a little boy I was reared in pig Girl Knool and lived there from my child hood untill growing to be a man was appointed to the Government service at the age of nineteen years and my mother, father, brothersand sisters and y my wife and children still live there.
when Delight's Junction had its great battle disaster of the horrors of Eva Urania there the people of the nation sent a most generous sum and with it was one madeup by the boys and girls of the schools in the various cities and towns.The teachers gave the children several weeks holidays for the purpose and the elder boys and girls organized themselves into a number of soliciting committees.In all for a days work the children of one school alone got together $450, which was turned into the general fund raised by the general Citizens and ar y armd army Committee.U In the many months that have followed since then the armies at Delights junction had pulled itself out of the trap but now the same armies had clashed with the one y at Cedernine Phelantonburg and Big girl Knool and also suffering disasters of the same kind but on a greater scale and with o more fatal results.Many forces have been brought to bear to accomplish this end but possibly the most potent one was the helping hand of the entire nation when help was needed most. Among those who also helped with their little mites may the children of the nation be fully and almost remembered. I most heartily suggest that all the children of Calverinia, and Angelinia be given an opportunity to aid all the wounded soldiers in every future battle untill the war ends many even now of whom after this battle are almost naked or in rags.

Aldon Jacksonia.
Post Office Inspector."

On December 4th the many persons in foriegn nations who were Abbieannians together with persons of the nations themselves whose sympathies were aroused by the growing fury of the war and apparent success of the rebels, and also the effects of the horrible battle at Big Girl Knool contritub contributed large amounts of monsey in a short time for the relief of the wounded and the benefit of the cause and other sufferers of the war. The Abbieannians hold a meeting in the Chamber of Commerce at Condencia which was largely attended. The Abbieannian Ambassador was a leader among those who proposed to organize for the work of aiding in the relief. The Abbieannians perfected a large sum and organizations and elected general Alfonso Presendent, George Bel la Banker, and Treasurer and Francis Willinia Secretary.
The subscription w list was then o e opened and the money raised.

The Aurthorities at Angelinia Agathia were informed by cable of the results. The King of Protestentia, Premier of Normonuia, the Emperor of Hic encline, the Emperor of Blo linia, the King of Jan Flatoonia in fact nearly all the heads of state in the world cab el condolences and all the legislative bodies of all foriegn nations then in session passed resolutions of sympathy.

By December fifth Big Girl Knool City had recieved one million onehundred and seventy four thousand wounded. Little Girl Knool 191,000 together with many carloads of supplies which were sent as specially armed trains and the other following cities had recieved all the rest of the wounded as follows;

As could be stated before the full total of the nub number of dead was unestimated. In no case however even if it is known would the Angelinian generals give out what the number of their dead really was. Railroad navagation and other laws were set at naught by the Abbieannian aurthorities in order to help as many of the wounded as possible. On the sixth of December the following telegram was referred to the railroad aurthorities by Emperor Vivian vivian who then was in the city of Angelinia Agathia and viewing places of importance only known to his him and his followers;

ANGELINIA AG ATHIA.
DECEMBER 6TH 1913.
FROM EMPEROR VIVIAN OF ABBIEANNIA.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY EMPEROR HANSON VIVIAN OF CALVERINIA AND ANGELINIA.
DEAR BROTHER!.

In consequence of calmity and disaster and fear of of pestilence numerous wounded still at Big Girl Knool wish to leave the army. Allour rail communication are cut off by the eney a large number of railroad tr trains are disabled or wrecked by the foe to prevent supplies from going to the stricken and no railroad trains are immediately available.
I your loving Brother and Emperor of Abbieannia respectfully request you to instruct the proper aurthorities toallow all trains able to ra run under guard to carry as many wounded as they canfrom Big Girl Knool city to Angelinia Agathia, and if possible to move with your army to the support of poor general vivianania before the Manley trat traitors recieve reinforcements.

EMPEROR VIVIAN.
ANGELINIA AGATHIA.

THE aurthorities of the railroads at once by the order of Emperor Hanson sent the following telegram to the Emperor of Abbieannia;

"TO EMPEROR VIVIAN.
Replying to your telegram of the th inst; If railroads that can run carry the wounded in distress from Big Girl Knool to Angelinia Agathia, or to other parts during present war conditions the railroad maga managers will consider favorably applications for said necessities.

PLEASE ADVICE ALL MATTERS.
MANAGERS OFVRAILROADS."

On this same day the Mayor of Big Girl Knool stated that the work of relieving the many wounded was making the most excellent progress; He said;
"From all parts p r p pa parts of the nation the most generous contributions are coming in sufficiently large to relieve the immediate wants of the wounded as too food and clothing and medicinl supplies and in the meantime the army at Big Girl Knool is recoverin g itself and I have no hesitencay in expressing of the firm conviction th at a strong reaction from an almost mortal blow to the army has set in and that in a short while it is hope with it is hoped with the arival of Emperor Hanson Vivians armies that Vivianannas army will be in a condition to resume its normal and progressive ad ance it has been making and recover all the ground it has lost.
After a full conference to day with an aurthorized committee from Big Girl Knool I am more than convinced that the surviving soldiers there will be able with the assistance given to handle the situation of the wounded most successfulffully and straightens n out its own sad positions."

HORRIBLE CONDITION OF TH THE ARMY AFTER THE BATTLE!

THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF JENNIE TURNER.

SAVED AS IF BY A MIRACLE.

FULLY I,500,000 bodies were buried in trenches ditches, and holes, and fully twice as many more were cremated on portions of the battle field of Big Girl Knool despite the intense cold of the early winter after it became apparent that the time necessary to bury hem all them all or cast them into deep waters of the streams could not be taken on account of the deep snow, cold weather, streams frozen over and frequent i winter wind and snowstorms.

There was also signs of advanced state of decomposition despite the cold weather.Many of the hundreds of thousands of glandelinian prisoners who handled the bodies fell from fright nausea or from being overcome by the cold. Angelinian soldiers then volunteered to take their places and the awful work went on.The hn hundreds of thousands of workers bandaged their noses and mouths with cotton cloths to keep from inhaling the fumes, or intense cold air and were relieved by other volunteers or prisoners every half an hour.

On account of so much deep snow and windy weather fires could not be started every place where so many bodies were found.The usual plan waste hurl into long deep trenches like at Cedernine all bodies within two miles of one spot and wherever it was available, collect them at different spots within fivehundred feet and then build the immense funeral pyres.General Greatheart and charles Brown reported that their scores of thousands of soldiers and as many prisoners burnedonehundred and fifty thousand bodies, and buried 55 5,666 the mahority of them privates and officers of the rebel side.
The workers however frequently complained of frost bitten ears, fig fngers and feet.Also the percentage of deaths among the N ationals was exceedingly frightful.Colonel Galer and his glandelinian prisoners burned and buried fourty thousand bodies on the meandows near the Big girl Knool road.

Hundredxs of Cathloic Priests in charge of Angelinian soldiers reported I28,000 bodies bu buried, and more than that bu burned or sunk into the river by weights.The army sanitary experts pushed the work of burning the dead.No other disposition could be considered.soldiers who had lost relatives and friend friends made no objection whatever and looked on the plan with favor.

disinfectants were used on the fields and in the cities and towns as neverbefore in the world.
The smell of the charnell hell was driven away and despite the cold air the whole region was filled for miles and scores of miles with the strong fumes of lysol, carbolic acid, acid, line, and every other kind of disinfectant known to man.
This was the general order issued by Brigadier general Weldon nicknell co mand ing the army forces at the wor k works;;
''Guards, foreman of large gands gangs, of heavily guarded prisoners and Angelinian working parties or others acting under the aurthorities of this army will use dilligence on account of the cold weather tward preventing any unnecessary hardships on Angelinian soldiers or impressing them for service on account of the intense cold mainly.The conditions with so many dead, deep wnow snow and cold weather however is very critical and it is necessary that sanitary conditions be taken to rid the fields of the dead as far as possible save the lives of as many wounded as possible and restore their health that all individual interests must give way to the general good of all.

If it is found feastable to secure volunteers among the Angelinian soldiers general impressment of glandelinian prisoners will will be avoided but the medical fraternity being in the full opinion that fulldelay will or may bring pestilence with the coming o of summer to finish the dire work of the battle, the interest of no soldier, prisoner or national will for one instant be spared to secure o volunteers for work but failing this every abled bodied soldier, rebel or National , wounded or not as long as he is able to work is to be put to work at the point of the bayonette clear as of the battlefield as po possible burn or bury in the trenches and ditiches the seas of bodies on it, and save if possible the entire nation and the world in general from the ravages of one of t o t h those well known war plagues.

I trust this position may be h thoroughly a ppreciated and understood by our officers so that all soldiers will govern the se themselves accordingly.''

The miracles of the bloody battle were so many that all these volumnes could not state every oneof them.Thousands of them will never be recieved with full credit by any reader no matter if he be easily led astray or not.

In the army Base Hospital at the north of Big Girl Knool city was a thirteen year old Boy scout belonging to Marco Penrods Regiment.
His name was refused to be given by officers for certain reasons.He wasfoun d on the morning after the battle lying wounded behind a dead horse on the Yellow Brick Big Girl Knool Road near the villiage of Kittens Piecherts which is three miles to the westward of Big Girl Knool City.His story was never chan ed changed no matter how often he was askedto repeat it.His story was that that sixteen of his followers remained on top of the signal station during the battle untill 3.P.MThen there was the mighty crash of an explosion.The Signal station went down and fell to pieces.The boy scout said he was hurled into the branches of a big tree which spared his life.Finally he got down secured a horse, and rode off with it with shells bursting allaround him and bullets whistling neat him.He rode two miles before his horse was killed under him and himself wounded.He was positively sure the other boys had been killed.
He had no idea where he was when his horse was killed or where it had taken him but when daylight came he was lying beside his dead horse by the big Yellow Brick Road.
The famous girl S y spy Angelinia Aronburg saw o more of the battle than fell the lot of most girls and boys who lived to tell it.
She had been spending the first hour of the conflict on top of the Rosen Burg signal station only a short distance from Kittens Piecherts.After that when the battle reached a higher stage she put on her uniform and went to Olymphia junction to signal by long distance to the vivian Girls to notify them th at an unusually terrible struggle was raging on the ridges near Kittens Piecherts.This was about 9.A.M. on the second day.At Olymphi a Junction she had to make a hasty retreat as a heavy column of Whitesis and Zimmerandan glandelinians were advancing.A at IO A.M. Gertrude Angeline as she is known by became alarmed at the tremendous fury of the battle and hearing that vivianins divisions were being defeated and driven tward Beppo Lansin, he became more alarmed and with some of her boy scouts left her new post and started on horseback tward the most thickly portion of the raging battle.
Officers who were operating telegraphs laughed at her fears declaring that vivianin was not even engaged.Out of a st f staff of fifteen officers in Pick nells co command only one survived.Gertrude Angeline raced under heavy fire alternately fivehundred yards untill she reached a high rise of ground where she was sure she could view the battle with more safty.
From there she sent oneof the boy scouts to investigate why the vivian girls had not n answered their signal and also told him to take a message to Concentinian Aronburg while she sent another boy to inform general Jack Evans that sh she feared something was wrong concerning violet and her sisters.
Then she told the rest of the boys to follow her to the Military Telegraph Exghange.
Within two hundred yards from where the st s start was made Gertrude s horse was shot under her and in falling threw her u into a brushfire.Her uniform was burned so badly that though she escaped being burned she had nothing left on her but her shoes and underwar with holes in it. h

She tookthe blanket from the horses saddle put it over herself and in this way reached the military telegrap telegraph exchange only to find it afire, and a man come telling her the h whole christian army was shot to pieces and routed in the wildest confus on which she saw was absolutely no f story or lie.Therefor she and her boy followers almost crying over the news went to Gales farm house.

This was only six hundred yards away from the battle line but Angelinia Aronburg said it was the hardest and most dangerous part of her trip with the air full of flying bits of stones and other debris hurled by explosions.
In this farm house they remained for two days untill the battle was over.When the sun had risen the enemy had gone out of sight and no glandelinian or christian army was in sight.she went to the site of her chosen headquarters but a bullet torn hitch post was all that served to locate the place.No trees were left standing for miles around and a dead horse lay by the post.Angelinia Aronburg returned to her own part of the country which she and her followers reached by evening.There she put on a new uniform.

There were many instances of devotion of officers to their generals, of generals to even their privates, of privates to iffic officers, could be mentioned.One wounded general with an officer who was his lowest inferior and his father too were both dismounted in the highest of the raging battle.From the thicke thickness of the smoke they were unable to see each other and were separated.Both were persued by rebels and both escaping believed the younger officer or the older one was captured.The younger officer escaped too however but in his run he was pounded and struck by flying wreckage untill he succeeded in reaching a house upon which the persuers rew ch reached and during all that frightful frightful run he held on to hispo pistols and when he was saftly in the in the house he barricaded every door and window and held the assailan assailants off successfully single handed.He came out of the ordeal cut and maimed and clam claimed it to be a strange incident indeed.

General „ivianannas headquarters presented a most strange contrast wit with the roof andwest wall back of the generals little private chapel being carried or blown away by a shell.The explosion was terrific the whole wall crashing down but the the alters of the Sa r Sacret Sacred Heart of Jesus and of others including of St Joseph and of the Blessed virgin were not damaged or the statues har ed or moved.When his headquarters went to pieces the members of the generals staff rushed out of the building to stop the rout of a division of troops closeby.They rallied the column and felt tolerabl tolerably secure.without warning the colunn before the pressure of the rebel attack parted into two rapidly thinning recoiling lines.Each section had a general wounded and dozens of other officers down.General Vivianann and Zeigler Kormann were forced to seperate the columns further the broken parts of the division going two different ways in their head long rer retreat.

General „ivianannas horse fell throwing his rider and he disappeared in the smoky murk of the battle.Not untillsometime untill November the 2 7th were the two generals reunited.Neither one were injured and both had reached a place of safty.Another officer withdrew his colunn from one position to anothe untill it occupied astronger one.Each fell back in its turn and then he went to the front and after three hours of conflict finally heard the yell of reinforcements and rallied the beaten troops.Other reinforcement sthen came up and rescued the from destruction.

Colonel Fredrick Zeigler, Major Farley Andonia and Captian Alexander escaped at th ten thirty five from the ravaging fire of the enemy by keeping their commands clinging to the lower portions of the works and when too hard pressed withdrew the to higher ground and threw them beh n behind a stronger barricade.

So e some of the wounded officers were found clad in under garments or wo were coatless and suffered intensely from the exposure and cold.Colonel Zeigler was struck by flying wreckage hurled by an explosion, but severely wounded as he was was assisted by some of his comrades to the rear, and to safty.An old officer who rallied the panic stricken officers soldiers was shot by enemy sh snipers.Zeigler was almost naked from the continual burning and tearing of his uniform and many of the desperately battling soldiers were in rags but their appearance was similuar to that of scoures of thousands of wounded, many half frozen were picked up for whom clothing had to be immediately secured.

At noon when the conflict lightly lulled the survivors at this point had sufficient space to fight more freely although filled with great anxiety and penned in on three sides by the rapidly advancing Glandelinians.Four hours later the few throughfares between the works were congested with oppos ing crowds of soldiers fighting fighting each other frantically.The immense droves of wounded, the forced seperation of the officers produced the most pathetic scenes, when officers mourning their friends and relatives and lamented the loss of al all their comrades.There was no confusion during the battle only a clining closer together without discrimination of class or sex as the enemy advanced foot by foot.

At eleven oclock the fury of battle deepened and the rebellioj rebellion troops occupied all the works and approaches the highest point in the christian line and the Glandelinian soldiers continued to advance, the positions in the e rear were filled with the retreating christian soldiers, and the officers secured better positions for the wounded ordering them to shoot all those who should attempt to retreat any further.As Twelve oclock approached con conditions became much worse overa several more scores of officers of all rank were wounded and one member a Member of the Gemini threw valuable papers intoa brush fire to prevent the persuing rebel s from securing them.

With each announcement that the foe was still advancing, many officers sent appeal after appeal for help.The survivers paid a high tribute to

to the bravery of the boy and girl scours at the battle and stated that although abject melancholy had fallen over all that the spirit of fivfortitude displayed by the child scouts nevered the soldiers to the most greatestvefforts.

The horrors of the battle were equaled on the succeeding days as the fields exposed the dead..

Of all the astonishing heroism and dogged tens i dogged tenacity of purpose noted in connection with the Big Girl Knoal battle, none was greater than that of general Jack Evans.As we all know by this time, General Jack Evans s is the general and chief guardian of Retainer leader for the Vivian Girl Princesses and he was missing the when the se o second day of the battle broke out in all its greatest violence and he could not find them anywhere.He was worried as to their safty and late that afternoon when the first news of the disaster to Vivienais army began to drift in and the battle was raging in full away along t other portions of the line and the eney pressing on everywhere with great success and he recieved word from one of Gertrude Angeline Angelines messengers that something was wrong as she could not get any answer from the vivian girls when she signalled to them, Evans announced to his commanders to assume charge of the army in his stead that as his own lines were not as yet in danger of attack he intended to started immediately for general vivians lines to see why the Vivian girls do not answer the Signalls of their best friends as they usually do.

He rode to as near the shell torn Big Girl Knool Yellow Brick road as he dared and fortunately found a large force of cavalry cavarly leaving for general Viviane center.He took personal charge of a portion of it, but on account of so many earthrending explosions tearing all before them were forced to stiop stop eight hundred yards before they even reached general Vivians center.Anxious as he was he was forced to ride eight miles under a dangerous gun fire arriving at that portion of the battlefield after an hours trying experience.At this point though there were many signal stations out of range of fire there were no signs of the Vivian Girls in sight , not even of their usual column of boy and girl scouts.He found a body of some of the Gemini near the burning town of Wittens piecharts and getting some surprising information from them procured a swift powerful horse from some of the cavarly, got astride the horse and with a body of two powerfully armed men on horseback set out on a difficult and perilous journey across the road tward the stream of Aronburge Run near Chamberlane Ridge still in possession of the enemy and thundering like an eruting volcano rising from the bottomless pit.Thus he labored for three trying hours shells exploding all around him bullets whistlin all about him, flying wreckage beating, flaying and scouraging him, dismounted twice, ten of his men killed and fourty wounded and facing perils that would ta take five centuries for me to describe here.At last after six horses had been shot under him and ten bullet holes were in his hat, and fourty hundred of his ten thousand followers killed and nearly five hundred wounded he reached what he hoped was his goal and he remounteda seventh horse and rode across the shell swept fields tward where they were said to be.After having passed on his way more than a sea of bowl bowels andmangled pieces of dead bodies of the battle victims the heroic young general set about finding the Vivian Girl Princesses or die in the attempt.And he succeeded after another most lengthy search in which he lost a great number more of his men and was slightly wounded once and two more horses shot under him.His beautiful little friends had lost all the boy and girl scouts numbe i numbering wight hundred in all.Two of the Vivian Girls had by some freak of an explosion wrecka wrecking a signal station they were on been utterly stripped of all their clothing and they and their sisters had an experience that re rarely is ever seen or could be scene in a moving picture show and which it would would take the bravest of all acters the greatest reckless bravery to accomplish.The two nude ones were wearing grass around their lions.They had been fortunately some of the battle survivors and the stroy of Jennie Vivian had indeed been most i pitiful;;

She with her sisters after witnessing the destruction of their boy and girl scout command been attempting to answer some signal they had observed near Company Street Number Eleven.The/ knowing it to be from Gertrude Angeline foolishly took the chances to climb to the top of one of the Signal Stations with the signal flags in theirpossession.

It was a dizzy height indeed, the ground was very far below them, but they were able to climb better than the soldiers of the signal corps could and they had not been in the least bit afraid of theleast big of falling.

Soon despite the raking shell fire above, around and below them, of and of the screeching tempest of bullets all around they made their end t their way to the end of the platform where a little view of the distant signalling could le more clearly be observed.There were little observation holes in the plat form and through these openings in the wall they could see the raging battle for miles around and also just the right spot where the signal was observed.

They tried each to answer the signal but the flags were torn by bullets and shot out of their hands each time and one of them recieved a scratch from a shell fragment on the neck where blood flowed at an alarming rate but before violet could stop it.

''We must go down''suddenly exclai exclaimed Violet after dressing Joices neck wound''The Glandelinian gunner marksmen are training some of the artillery at the station.There is no j use then of taking such chances as our army is being worsted anyhow.We can see all the happeningsup here as plain as day.And those Glandelinian gunners willkill us if they wreck the station with us so far up here.''

The girls she said hurried from the platform or from thatportion of the platform and along the rafters untill they reached an opening in the plat form.suddenly an explosion roared with a mighty crazy crash close to the top and theviolent shock or concussion caused three of the girls to a fall, slip and lose their balance.violet had just time enough to clutch one of the beams as she fell and she clung t it with both hands.Jennie missed the beam but managed to seize her sisters around the legs and she held on in despiar while bullets whistled all around.It was a miracle indeed that ho noe none of them were struck by shrapnell fragments or bullets as they hung there for they crashed as frequently as opo corn in a shaker around the station, and the bullets whistled a perfect concert.

In this awful posti position the two girls hung shouting to their sisters for help the third one fortunately not having slipped off the platform.

Her sisters despite the danger of being fully exposed to the enemys searching fire promptly came to the rescue and after some difficult work and after two of them had been struck often by flying wreckage hurled by great explosions, and after one of them had been almost knocked off the platform by a big flying board, and the others had been struck and injured all over by flying stones and after some more diffucit work and the strain of the double weight became more than Violets hands could bear drew them both up and then injured as they all were they climbed down hastily with the intentic to rush from the structure before it fell in time to cheat death among the fall ing timbers of the structure which they succeeded in doing.Even as soon as they reached the ground and the structiure fell with a thundering crask that shook the ground they p were persued for four miles along the Yellow Brick road by rebels and fired on dozens of times but were not hit.Once free from the station with the her sisters following hard and being hard pressed by the ene y after being persued so far they dashed to a large group of trees hard pressed by hundreds of the insurgents.They held the race to their own however despite their size, and despite their injuries and fatigue and by skillful maneuvering managed to get behind stout oak trees which recently had been torn by bullets.After resisting the persuers for an hour by keeping up a heavy fire of pistolry and sh ooting down any rebels Violet saw a haven in the highest branches of one of the tall thickly leafed popular trees and dur during the lull she and her sisters climbed uphigh among the sheltering branches.

As Jennie was the last to climb the stirring incident then hap e happened.As she reached thebranch a big shell ex ploded like an erupt on beyound the tree but pretty close and the force of the explosion tore it asunder and hurled crlouds of wreckage straight to the fugitives above.However simultaneously every one of the girls were either torn from the falling tree or hurled to the ground by the concussion, and as the tree stood seventy feet high it was a wonderful miracle they were not dashed to their deaths.

The awful effect of their high swift, but frequently checked fall stunned but did not render them senseless.Jennie alone desperately retrained her hold on one of the branches as the tree crashed to the ground and was hurled down among the dead and dying victims of the battles fury.None of the girls were hurt by their high fall but two of them were al o almost stripped naked by the branches and force of two ot her explosions tearing their very clothes from them.

Another hour of racing and fighting desperat ely withbenemy persuers, and dodging between many terrific explosions brought the desired end.

The girls, two of them naked,and the rest with their clothrs badly torn to rags final y reached the spot and stumbling into Evans and his searching party who routed the persuers, were finally taken tward the christian rear Evans decided to have their injuries treated as soon as he reached t he desired spot.

Jennie herself remembered nothing untill December Ith when she was taken to Evans headquarters after all the trouble was over with.she had a sl. t recollection of helping and tending the suffering wounded with the help of her sisters, and giving co mmands to the survivors of her other girl scout regiments.Her brain however did not function or execute its functions untill December Ith.But to go on with the experience to the end.Angeline's experience while the rescuing party was heading for the christian line fullgallop was a sad but freakish one.While the rescue party under Evans was dashing on she was thrown from her horses back by the the concussion of a fearful explosion and was hurled face frontward upon Evans shoulders alongside, her legs flying upon his shoulders like if suddenly seated there by an unseen power and the frightful velocity of which she went caused hi to be unseated from her horse or his horse rather and both fell while the two horses had been going full gallop, he on top of her face downward, his horse going onward for some distance dragging both along the ground with some awful speed and injuring both her and himself considerably and skinning their backs.

When he broke loose from the horse and helped her to th her feet half sobbing he was horrified to see his whole column of soldiers being torn to fragments and the other Vivian girls dismounted and all bleeding from quite a number of wounds, while Jennie was lying b s beside her horse completely unconc unconscious and bleeding fro a scalp wound.

One horse with his entrails protruding from his body had been wedged by the force and fury of the destructive explosion firmly between two branches of an immense tree fourty feet from the ground.one of the entrails hung down swa ying there like a long snake.The horses of all of the Vivian G r Girls had been torn asunder by the violent explosion and their entrails lay in all directions.All of the girls were stunned by the mighty crash and shock and for several minutes they were all envel ped by the dense smoke clouds that rr rolled upward like that seen during a volcanic eruption.The debris hurled by the explosion had been scattered for the distance of five hundred yards, and much of it was stilleven now fal ing like like a blizzard.The lives of the Vivian Girls were saved at the expense of Evans column which fortunately consider shel sheilded them considerably from the fragments.Evans managed to crowd the seven vivian Girls on his horse, but holding unconscious Jennie in one of his arms and on foot guided them to a ravine and here they remaineduntill the thundering crashes ceaded and then after Jennie was brought to returned to the christian lines where their wounds were treated.All the rest of his men then only numbering 300 men had been killed by the fearful explosion so that in all t his experience he had lost his whole column of IO,000 men.

General Daniel Jones sent to Big Girl Knool by Emperor vivian the day after the mighty battle to investigate the con i conditions of the battl fields there and the army reported to Emperor vivian at Angelinia Agathia on De cember 4th said among other things in his report;

''The sanitary conditions of the whole surviving christian army despite the defeat is very great indeed.Large quanities of lime had been ordered to the place but I doubt if any onewill be found to unload it from the freight cars and attend its systemitic distribution when they arive as these trains are constantly under musketry fire night and day.The stench of buring burning bodies despite the cold is almost unbearable and can be detected for miles.

It also arises from piles of purposely erected debris upon which the carcasses of soldiers and animals are thrown.These carcasses are being burie burned where ever it can be done with safty but there is so much snow that little fuel can be obtained and only one third the battlefield can be cleared as the ene y enemy is too close and is cohtinually put in a heavy shell fire over the country for a score of miles to prevent parties from working on the burial and burning of their own dead.And most of the wreckage of the camps had been used by the ene y to form new camps of their own.There was hardly any water fro zen streams or running streams had been poisoned by the enemy, for the remain ing army there is no water protection, and should a fire break out in the cities protecting the a woundedthe destruction of all the shelter and probably many wounded would soon be complete and vast forests as well.When searching parties of soldiers or guarded prisoners came across a swarm of dead soldiers they were either hastily buried or taken into an open space and wreckage piled over them.

This was then set on fire and the bodies slowly creamed creamted.The oder of so many burning bodies is awful.Why do armies have to fight such murderou battles as these!And is not war just as wicked and criminal as breaking the fifth Commandent!!The relief work if is fairly well organi ed organized. God alone can figure the enormous number of National wounded, and dead. Nothing yet has been accomplished except the immense distribution of food an among the wounded and the well.About all of the city of encampments not burned or totally wrecked by the fire and hell afters of battle has been since now in the possession of the victorious enemy, and therefore many of the soldiers not finding shelter anywhere outside of Big Girl Knool city are living or sheltering the selves in huts hastily erected, of or houses a of town towns that are badly wrecked.The immense army of wounded for fear the enemy will soon advance and besiege Big Girl Knool are being removed from the army and the cities and towns and sent to further d cities and towns by safe routes as rapidly as possible.Emperor Henson is sending an immense army tward Big Girl Knool but it is too slow yet.It will take three or four days before all who want to go have been sent from the christian lines to better places and safer places.Even at the advice of the christian generals all the people that is non-combatants of big Girl Knool and other places are leaving for better shelter for if the christian army has to retreat any further they will be compelled to burn the city to prevent the enemy taking possession.

A remarkably large number of horses survived the battle which did not happen to be so fo fortunate at Cedarmine, but there is no food for them, and there is danger that many of the the will die of starvation, and strange to say one of the rebel generals sent a letter to vivianin stating that if he'll exchange for the horses he can have some of his soldiers back in place of them.

I am thoroughly satisfied after spending three days and one half in and around Big girl Knool that the estimate of 35,000,000 dead is too conservative.It will far exceed that number.Nobody in the world can ever estimate or will ever know within 30,000 of how many lives were lost. Throughout the whole battlefield the countless numbers of dead bodies are being got rid of in whatever way possible and scouts are discovering that for good reasons the enemy are doing all in his power to get the dead out of the way too.

Both sides now are burying the dead and burning the bodies found near and around Kittens piecherts.At one spot within the space of several miles over two hundred and fifty thousand bodies were found, and buried or burned with the work continuing three days after the battle.

There must be hundreds of thousands of dead bodies beyond and along both sides of the Yellow Brick Road and back on the battle torn prairies that have not yet been found.On account of the cold and the deep snow and the frequent snowstor s raging it is impracticable to make a search.Bodies as thick as fishes in the sea have been found half covered with snow as far back as seventeen miles from Kittens piecherts and all these within reach of the christi armies.

It willsurely take the whole army to pick up all the dead on that territory if they wish to have it done ina short time.The frozen waters of the streams especially of Aronburgs run within the battlfield are still full of dead bodies now covered over by ice and in the water they are said to lay or float as thick as hewed grain, and lay as thickly together as snow flan snowflakes by the banks.On my trip to and fem the christian lines I passed the most immense procession of w most greatest procession of wounded going to I know not where and they were accompanied by a strong body of soldiers.I counted many of them from my trip in from the newly erected christian camps and I'm told this procession of wounded has been kept up day and night from big girl Knool to the train roads for Angelinin Agathia or Dorothy Gale.Armies of nond noncombatant refugees are also flesing for the railroad trains and elsewhere abandoning their city as or e ordered.The captian of a Regiment who had just reached the camps from Big Girl Knool City informed me that he broug t brought a whole army of wounded into the city of Mombi.''

As an illustration of h of how fierce one of the Glandelinian assaults had been a strong force of Abyssinkilians who held a position beyond Kittens Piecherts tried to get into their main line of works when the rebel attack came on.It could not withstand the pressure of the assault and had to v recoil to better cover.The smoke of the firing was very dense and all scenery and landmarks had been obliterared by explosions.The direction of the advancing rebel column could not be ascertained as they were obscured by the smoke clouds but they were rushing furiously tward the recoiling Abyssinkilians.

Before the speed of the onrushing rebel columns could be deterined determined they came upon the Abyssinkilians through the smoke unawares and the Nationals were crushed and driven out of the works entirely.As the Abyssin kl Abyssinkilian column was over 6,000,000 strong some idea can be obtainse as to the fury of the rebel troops as they surged over the works much inferior to that of the members of the Abyssinkilians.''

Probably one of the most thrilling descriptions of personal experiences with the fearf l battle ever written outside that of Evans and the Vivian Girls was that of Jennie Turner who was spending her girl scout adventures with her friends at Big Girl Knool.She wrote an account of her adventures to her special friends the Vivian Girl Princesses;;;;;;;;;;;;

FROM BIG GIRL KNOOL.
DECEMBER FIRST. 1913.
DEAR PRINCESSES OF ABBIANNIA:

I am writing to you to tell you that I have survived the battle and that I,m sorry to hear that you have had such a trying expr experience and that all of you are wounded and that poor Jennie is not in her right mind yet.However I hope before this time you will have recieved my wireless message telling you I am still alive and know I and all my friends including Gertrude Angeline and Angeline Richee are safe.For all this war so far it has been for me one of the most terrible experiences of my life.I hope with the mercy of God and His Blessed Mother that I will be spared any more such.

I feel I am something of a nervious wreck--small sores over my mouth f caused by stones hitting me in the face, eyes with hollows under them from lack of sleep having not slept for two days and nights and shaking all over.

Brave as I am I am still badly frightened.When I close my eyes I cannot see anything but immense seas of mangled dead,, wild eyed wounded men and the enemy in possession of allour works and positions and refusing to let our men to bury and burn the dead.

Oh my God but the second day of the battle was awful.It was like the Mouth of Hell opening up from the earth and volcanoes blowing them selves up into the air at the same time.I suppose it is best for me to start my letter at the commencement, but I 'm so badly shaken over my experiences that I don't know if I will ever be able towrite anything sensible.

On the morning of the 7th hour Nov. 25th the battle was resumed with a mightiness of which no language can described, and at the start the enemy beg to gain ground a little.So fierce was the assault general vivianonna and all his commanders could not keep their lines from being broken and their armies had been so horribly shattered the day before a t after being driven from Little Girl Knool and Jennie Wren Town Junction where this giant battle began.After the conflict grew worse and there was fullevidence that the enemy was going to win a sweeping victory for sure I took the chances to climb to the platform of a high signal station with several others, and there remained watching the battle and the movements of the immense columns of troops of both sides.All at once one of my boy scouts said;;;;;;;;;

''Look at that rebel column beyond.I mean those who appear to be the Zimmermannian Scoodliers. They must be in possession of our works.I'll bet thevbattle is already lost.''''''

The Glandelinians were in possession of the works from end to end driving our troops before them, and cutting up the christian line terribly.The foe pressed on rapidly as we watched the scene,, and my boys began to frantically beseachme to descend and run to safty before the station was surrounded by the victorious Glandelinians.

The Glandelinian columns with a noise of yells like the roar of a cyclone pressed onward and officers appeared as if by majig magic and strove torally the retreat c reating retreating christian columns.The attack was pressed on with the strength of a furious whirlwind and all the time the retreating troops and persuers came nearer and nearer.

The enemy was advancing still more rapidly as we watched the rebel soldiers and being alarmed by shells booming near the structure we e began to come down.The battle arose ton furious stage and all the time the enemy was winning the conflict.

We left the signal station before the danger was too near, and yet the ap approaching foe was so near that we only had time to dash into the entrance of a country h ouse a big three story one, and from the concussion of a distant cannonading it rocked like a cradle.A moment later an explosion tore the roof off ,some of the blinds was torn off by another, and all the windows were blown in.

Glass and debris was flying in all directions and the retreating christian columns or a portion in my location had come up to the grounds around and beyond the house, and swarmed into lines and large groups in the fields most of them preparing to make a desperate stand.Some of the soldiers then entered the house and told us we would have toleave and go to the thick woods across the field in our rear at the end of big Girl Knool Road, it being full of Nationals held in reserve.Some of the generals were wild about the sad conditions of their divisions which had not been able to withstand the rebel attack the whole line having been driven back.The men told us we must not walk erect as we cross the field, but of crawl on our hands and knees and if necessary cover ourselves with thick bushes or heavy sheet iron as we went along.I saw it would take hours to cross that deep snow covered field on our hands and knees, it being also a cold and perilous trip.It was indeed a very dangerous undertaking because big shellexplosions were dominating the fields and whole trees were whirled into the air, and ground debris of all sorts, and clouds of snow and smoke rose into the air like white and black eruptions and the fields looked like the floor of a vast volcanic er crater in dangerous activity.

Unless sheilded by something shell proof we refused to go across as it would be sucide.Some soldiers wrenched loose the sheilds of a disabled centemeter gun and with this over us they also decided to take the chances and go across with us on the perilous trip and share the same fate we might meet.The sheilds however were very thick more than nine inches in thickness and were very big and so we started on our way across though I believed some one could have heard my heart-beats in those far woods beyond amid the roar of the battle.It was like going down into the grave and I was never so near death in the war before.If the peril before me was not so great I would not have accomplished it but it was more certain death to remain behind and the rebels would give even their very lives to see my destruction.While we were on our way every resounding crash near or far made me feel as if I had my heart in my mouth and frequently great clouds of snow fell over us like a blinding cloudburst all that mass hurled by explosions.And the snow hurled against the sheilds made a noise like sand hail and the smoke chocked us and made my eyes burn and smart.The noise of the crashes made my heart jump and beat every time and my ears almost deaf.

I came near being buried by an eruption which occured only within a hundred feet of us.It was terrible by this time and to my impatient fancies the sheltering woods seemed a million miles away.One of my boy scoutsin his terror was crying about his mother and father that he had left so far hey behind in Pandora city., and I was begging the soldiers not to let go of the sheilds.I however felt like I did not trust them either for they were only shell proof that is against shrapnell but not high explosives.A dark cloud of smoke completely enveloped us and one of the soldiers put his arms around me and onward we went.At last we were half way across.Another shell eruption hurled a a torrent of debris all about and upon us.Something hit me on my back and laid me flat face downward.One man was killed and the sheild was blown off from us by the concussion.The others lifted it again and held it again the same way so we could be safe from the shell fragments.Then one of the soldiers was wounded on the arm and wrapped it up in his mackintohsh.He had to crawl over the rest of the way. I was already cold and by hands and feet felt numb and almost frost-bitten.I spent a long horrible time crossing over undef under fire but finally as we reached the edge of the woods another explosion dashed the sheild from us and though it did no injury to any of us it committed a freak.

One of the soldiers was deprived of his shoes and stocklings, and his coat was hanging on the p branch of a tree.Another was stripped of anything but his underwar.I was covered with mud and snow from shoulder to waist and from my knees down my dress was torn off and my left foot was without a shoe though where the shoe went I do not know.We reached the woods and found it pack with soldiers, and here also we all were under fire, but the shells only showered the troops with branches and twigs.This portion of the woods consisted of nothing but popular trees.Of course how we felt safe.

About 3 oclock in the after noon the situation of the battle had changed for a time the Nationals having tempor arily rallied and driving the foe back for the time being and as we stood at the edge of the woi woods we saw immense immense columns of wounded pass us.some of these told me their generals were wounded or killed.The roof and one story of one of their headquarters was blown away by explosions.

As soon as we could we returned to our camp but at the safe distance we saw it was in possession of the enemy.Such a camp however.Just like at Cedernine it was being swept by fire and everything not touched by flames was being despoiled by the enemy in possession.I had nothing of my private property left.And I had not had anything to eat since noon the day before and I was compelled to live on hard tack and brandy.Every time the soldiers of the reliefvparty would see me suffering from the cold they would make me drink brandy which I deatest.I and my scouts were allso weak we knew we must secure food and shelter so we went down to Big Girl Knool City and reached there two days after the battle.The scene all the time time of my ride on horseback through the battle field to the city was awful beyond comprehansion.Dead horses half buried in deep snow lay everywhere and the woods within the battle territory were filled with foliage and tree debris of every kind.In the sholters near the city itself countless numbers of soldiers were grouped about big bonfires cremating the dead, and half of these relief parties and workers were wounded.Wild eyesd ghastly looking men with horrid wounds passed by on stretchers, and officers told of whole brigades by scores having been killed.Hundreds of women and children from cities and towns near bh by were seeking refuge in the c u camps or big groups of the were moving off in different directions for the trains all fleeing from their homes as advised and many of these were stopping long enough to look for lost ones very dear to them.I could not stand any more and made some soldiers bring me into the city and taking possession of a vacant house I fell on a bed with hysterics.

A soldier to relieve me poured whiskey down my throat but it only make my head ache worse and made my anger at the rebels more furious.

Then I had about recovered when poor o little Mildred Maxwell and a girl scout with Angeline Lichee and also Gertrude Angeline came to my selected house, they telling me also they had lost all they had.

They too had hysterics and everybody cried, and I had another spell.All day long for three days wagon train after wagon train filled with dead most of them without sufficient clothing to cover their nakedless kane nakedness and soldiers with stretchers with dead bodies of officers with just a sheet thrown over them, some of them of high rank.I waited every minute exe expecting to see bodies cre a cremated in front of my headquerters. But this was not done.There is a young boy scout who stayed with me since the battle who had spent the day wor king on signal stations and all his boy and girl comrades had been killed. he is now all alone.

That night I slep on a cot with nothing under me but a rug and a sheet and I had to borrow something to sleep in.One officer who had lost his father has just come from Big Girl Knol.He plowed all the way through the deep snow and faced the awful bitter cold.He is wild and revengeful and says the enemy should not recieve qya quarter.This mor morning an officer took me and my friends to a better part of the camp where I would not continue to see all these horros horrors.Thank God and His Blessed Mother Penrod did not see this terrible battle.Am Coming to visit you as soon as I can and hope you are not so seriously injured as I hear.

2Your friend.

Jennie Francisco Turmer....."

One of the generals and his staff consisting of father, brother, and two sons, were at the front of the christian line when it coll asped before the enemy ce eme enemy attack.They drew their brigades to the shelter of the main works. These columns through a blunder parted,and the ones under the father and sons retreated in confusion, but the line under the brother held the works tenaciously, and the others were soon rallied.

One colonel became a raving maniac as the result of his experience. With his Father and uncle and brother who were superior officers he was leading in one of the fiercest charges of the battle, when in rushing up the slopes wi at the head of their men and meeting a withering fire from above, all their men were shot down and brother and father were killed.The Colonel survived without injury but lost his whole division of onehundred thousand men which had been annil annihilated in fourty minutes, and he now mistakes attending Angelinian soldiers in the bost hospital, or other persons, even child scouts, and once the Very Vivian Girl Princesses and also Gertrude Angeline and Jennie Turner for his father and brother and clutches wildly for them.

Colonel Francis Steeler and his regiment of sixteen hundred men while being in filaded sought safty in a ravine but were driven from that with frightful loss and then the survivors tried to seek cover in three successive natural defenses and thus in this manner was saved from complete annihilation.

General Daniel Jones with fifteen other generals finding their own positions insecure made a retreat into the works and there stopped the advance of the enemy.They alone in the midst of a smoking, flaming thundering and screec ing hell of battle held this position all day against overwhelming numbers and drove the enemy back with thousands upon upon thousands of companies fully slain.Some of these officers hoe however were fearfully injured. .....

A sad incident in the search for the dead, occured the next morning.

Many thousands of bodies per hour were being burned. Among these bodies was a young officer which a privateof a burial party recognized as his own father. The bodies had lain so long they were frozen hard but they were hauled to a big fire and the son stood with spartian like firmness and saw the bodies of the dead including his father reduced to ashes. He later told his superior office officer that for his loss he will never spare a Glandelinian soldier will not give him any quarterwhatever. One strange incident was of an officer who found a little child which he pickedup and carried to his headquarters.

She was not the least big injured but how she came to be here he could not make out...

LIVES AND PROPERTY DAMAGE SUSTAINED OUTSIDE OF CHRISTIAN LINES.

ONE MILLION IN DEAD CREMATED, AND MILLIONSIN EVERY THING SWEPT AWAY.------ ESTIMATES MADE.....

THE PROPERTYBLOSS by the battle outside the city of Big Girl Knool besides military, country, and private , and within cities and towns, in the location of the battle, and far distant, was not over$ 628,000,000. For extra loss out side of Kittens Riecherts, in Rosa town and other points in Calverinia together with the agri cultrual and stock raising districts the property loss was about or near 3 $34,789,654. Prob ably one hundred and seventy eight villiages and towns far or near the battlefield were shaken with bad a effects by the concuss ion of the battle, and in most of these places there was some loss of livew, either slight or severe among theinhabatants.

It was reliably estimated from the reports recieved at Angelinia Agathi Agathia the Capitol City of Abbicennia, and also at Dorothy Gale City, from thesebattle shaken places that the loss of life exclusive of the death list of the soldiers in the battle itself would be for the biggest town itself about fifteen thousand non-combatants. In many towns the percentage of battle wounded far exceeded that of the recent battle of Codernina of the same year.

Some small towns in the region where the battle raged its worst were swept completely out of existance and in total therewere nearly four mill o million homeless c noncombatants. The scene of desolation in the devastated district caused by the battle was terrille to witness. The battle covered the same space of ground as at Codernine and extended as far as Kittens Riecherts, a distance of over fourty miles, with Big Girl Knool near the battle center.

The battle was more than doubly severe however and three to four times as many were engaged on both sides. and all the farm land within the battle zone was completely ruined and large stretches of forests also. The same was true of immense stretches of woods near Cumberland city. The distress would the next coming summer be felt very keenly by all the planters and rich farmers and also poor ones throughout the region where the battle had raged. In the city of Kittens Riecherts from concussion of the battle the damage was over $22,000,000, at Chamberlane,, $I,270,000 one third of the latter city being virtually destroyed and onehundred and sixty thousand in people in that place not only deprived of helter and food for the time being by big fires, but all prop prospects for crops in the years to come.

On the 27th of Nov. Concentinian Aronburg sent out the following statement and appeal from his own station after a thorough investigation of the situation in and around Kittens Riecherts of which city suffered the worst;

"I arived in Kittens Riecherts from Lucillie Richsen and was astonished and bewildered by the sight left by the horrible battle on every side and near the railroad tracks.

Most of all our encampments especially those belonging to general vivianias army are in possession of the enemy the retreat of Vivian Vivianias army having been so rapid that about half of the surviving army is shelterless, and even destitute of the necessaries of life and with no means whatever to procure them. Everything in the land of everything in the way of farm land is deformed and destroyed andunless there is speedy relief there will be exceedingly great misery and discourage,e discouragement. The beaten and shattered army need and must have assistance especially Vivianias. Need reinforcements and material to remake tents and shelter. They need more food, fliur flour, bacon, corn and beans. The army must have fresh army arms, ammunition, and all things necessary so the army can be able to do something for itself very soon. Clothing, bedding material, and everything of the quarter master store is needed. Scores of thousands of the women refugees are for fear of the enemy's approach leaving Big Girl Knool and they are already suffering from the cold and exposure. Some better idea can be had of the distress when it is known that long lines of box cars are being used by the very soldiers as houses, and hay, strraw, or earth, or even h ard snow and ice as bedding. All the country districts are still strewn with snow covered corpses of the slain, and the enemy it is said is striving desperately to prevent soldiers from gathering up the dead. To go out in the field to do the works is certain death at some places. The prairies around Kittens Riecherts are dotted with the countless bodies of the dead who are still unburied, and frozen to the ground...

Fortunately on account of the cold weather and snow the bodies arenot decomposing so very fast and are not too difficult to handle but the ground is becoming frozen too hard to admit of bur a burial. I believe for the present at least that the fear of a pestilence from decomposing bodies lying every where is past. Yet the stench from so much disenfectants is scorching awful."

Damage to all kinds of army stock was exceedingly great scores of thousands ha Ha hundreds of thousands of horses cattle, pigs, and other farm animals includin including fowls having been killed by the shell fire or shock of the battle. Of all farm lands all fences of wooden material were splintered by shell fire or rendered useless, or to be made to look like hickor t hickory brooms by bullets and the devastation was complete. Farm houses twenty miles away from the battle were s shaken down by the concussion especially of gre at explosions in the battle zone and many a many soldiers who took refuge there for their wounded were killed there. The small villiages of Needleville and Basile were completely destroyed by the enemy, over onehundred and twenty non-combatants were killed most of the bodies being burned in big coal piles purposely set on fire. Every private home in that part of the country not destroyed by the enemy was taken possession of by the victorious Glandelinians and there was great suffering among the hundreds of thousands homeless people too. There was also much destitution among the survivors of Colonel Legrees Regiment in general Greathearts command. Colonel Legrees Regiment was one of the most gallent of general Greathearts army.Captian Richmonds company of that Regiment was wholy destroyed the officer alone surviving.HGeneral S ul Marcus heard of Colonel Sartari as Brigade where several hundred soldiers had been killed.Over three quarters of the survivors were injured.Seventeen officers were killed in Townerw brigade which was almost completely destroyed.Of Angeltons brigade five per cent were killed, andtheir bodies have been cremated.The loss of life in that brigade far exceeded the estimates given in the earlies reports.The search for bodies at little Brook resulted in over fifty thousand being buried. This little stretch of water was a beautiful stream in summer especially, and now it may be that for a while all its beauties are swept away.The casualities of Mic-Burns division was 55,000.Vola Cosmo Cosomo asked for help.Over one half of his divisi n divid on was destroyed and 83,000 of his en lostheir lives.

Reports from wienstiens army who began the titanic conflict near Little Jennie Wren Town on the Big Girl Knool Road showed that many of his officers had been killed.Thirty of his wounded officers were killed by the collaspe of a farm house in which they had sought means to retreat their severe injuries.

General Stagordine division bore the brunt of the battle and lat ninty thousand on men.Hundred s were killed in the regiments of Colonels Frank Caney and F n Francis Ellio in the same division.The headquarters of these officers were destroyed.Over five thousand fivehundred soldiers were killed in Whartonica brigade, two hundroc hundred being killed on his left.

Baytonia suffered the loss f nearly all his men and those who survived were campingoutdoors exposed to the snow and fierce stormy weather.Outside of the city of Big Girl Knool, and the town of Kittens Riecherts the r greatest suffering fro the results of the battle was between Kittens Riecherts and Chamberlano, and along a portion of the Yellow Brick Road.

The devastating effects of the battle did not reach any further than Kittens Riecherts, or in that immediate section of the Yw Yellow Brick Big Girl Knool Road.

Most of the soldiers in immediate relief were t those encamented near Big Girl Knool City.Even all the planters and all the farmers in that section had everything swept away by the battle of explosions leaving every one in that region facing starvation.An enormous amount of Fall crops had already been harvested a e week before the battle and the furious battle laid every thing low.

Sugar lands, quintana's, Wallars, and Grunviews corps holding their positions near those farms were annihilated.In this location not a farm house was left standing."any of the officers had brought their troops into that section to stand their ground and were swarmed over the fields when the first signs of a Glandelinian attack began brewing.And so fierce was the attack that few of the Angelinians escaped being killed and wounded or captured.

The wounded were not taken prisoners however but their outside clothing and everything else was taken from them and they were left out there to freeze to death.The survivors were left absolutely devoid of even the necessities with which to sustain life.To the cavarly and artillery the loss of horses in the battle was a most severe blow.

Live stock belonging to the army army were also greatly damaged and one thousand army provision wagons were ruined.And to beging all a over again the owners of all plantations themselves would have to rebuild houses, p purchase new machinery, and new draft animals also.

In the opinion of many, three or four years must elapse before all the farm districts within the s zone of battle c n ever be restored to their former conditions.On account of the war the awful scarcety of building materials was a hard blow for all farmers all owners of farms.Appeals for immediate relief were recieved from everywhere in the zone of the battle.

That whole year had given pro is promish of producing the best harvest for the harvesting seas n season in the previous thirteen years and the battle and the enemy had to ruin spoil it all.In leading a charge fifteen officers were killed at Allendales Farms.Another officer wounded was brought to the rear alive but exhausted and in a state of terrible nerviousness.

This officer said the Glandelinians advanced so rapidly that he and his two regiments were forced to retreat and sought to ambush the rebels in a wood bordering on the farm.His lieutenant a young officer was severely wounded during the retreat and rescueing him, he carried him in his arms, but a ball then struck the young officer in the head killing him.

Su The superior officer at the same time being wounded in the leg had to letthe dead man drop but though he did so he twice more placed him on his shoulders being determined the enemy would not secure the body, and thus while he still had the lieutenant in his possession he was twice hurled to the ground by the concussions of shell explosions and in this way the young lieutenant was mangled and the other wounded twice more.Another officer nearest him leading a small body of troops tward the woods was killed by the shell fragments, and another one was mangled, and next a cp captian was so mortally wounded thus leaving the colonel and a Major the only remaining commanders of the two Regiments.

Finally the retre ating columns reached the edge of the woods and as the rap rapidly thinning line continued to fall back it was broken in twain by the r pressure of the exultant assailants, the colonel remaining in command of one half, and the major of the other.The portion of this line being trapped was annihilated, and this was the last seenof the ma o major.

The colonel though wounded a third time held hisportion of the line together, but for a time he was so distracted in mind by the disaster as to care little what became of him as long as he saved his own men.He finally was rescued by a division of troops about 2.P.M.General Surfside in co mmandof this division also had his own hands full in a few minutes after.He had seventy five officers of allrank under his command and after his own part of the struggle only had one left.

The victorious insurgents almost surrounded his division and poured in a fierce almost annihilating fire from three sides and yet the main danger was of heavy columns of Glandelinians getting around to his rear.Only a few gatling guns could be available in the rear so these were placed into position by a number of sod soldiers who went into snow up to their waists but the constant and rapid handling of these pieces kept the Glandelinians from getting around to storm the flank and therefore after fighting its way out of the woods, the survivors of the division was able to make a safe retreat.In this woods every tree was damaged so fierce wasthe firing and many were completely demolished, including all trees honeycombed by bullet holes and gashe gashes.One girl scout was killed while on duty near here and not a tree was left in a wholesale wholesome colditions.

Two trains of cars were blown by explosions of terrific violence from a siding near the main line of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad w and were hurled against another train by further explosions and demolished or set on fire.Another dead child scout, the destruction of all regiments except one and the destitution of many survivors or all of them if the is the record of the work of the battle of general Arcadia Joyces command.

From fifty brigades came reports that whole companies or co mmands by hundreds were wrecked or wiped out n and demolished.Most of the Most of them reported countless dead and whole armies of injured.

Colonel James Dillionin made a trip on horseback from Big Girl Knool to Kittens Riecherts on December 5th and gave a graphic account of his journey, which was made under many difficulties .

''Nearly thirty five miles of railroad tracks and small towns and depor depots are devastated east of Kittens Riecherts''said he..''I rode my horse when it was convient, waded through deep snow and in the face of a fierce wind and snow storm walked and rode from Kittens Riecherts to Big Girl Knool and could not see anything in all that portion of the co u country xountry but death and destruction.

The fields and prairies are strewn thickly with snow covered corpses and I do not think I exaggerate when I say that not less 555,000 horses of cavarly and artillery are to be seen strewn a along the line of tracks and other various parts of the battle field.

The beautiful little towns along the railway lines are in possessio of co possession of the enemy and the sights and misery of all their own wounded is the most terrible that I have ever witnessed, but concerning it bein being the enemy it does not worry me any.When I reached a point about two miles north of Kittens Riecherts I saw numerous windrows of bodies on the farm fields and from that point untill Big Girl Knool was reached dead bodies could be seen from the railroad tracks and the Yellow Brick Road for scores of miles as thick as timbers in an immenselog jam.

Near Big GirlKnool nothing is left.About 950 cars of loaded army provisions and quarter master stores that was supposed to reach Kittens Riecherts on thr Mic Hollester and Pandora railroad on the day of the battle are burned, wrecked, or scattered over the fields and their contents will no doubt prove a total loss tothe christian army.

On December the seventh from early morning untill farin the afternoon general Vivianana was in conference with army relief committees from various points of the army along the battle swept Big Girl Knool T Road.Among the first committees to arive torrive was one from general Kindernines army.These officers consulted at length with vivian nna and as a result of this conference it was decided that all the general work or all the generals themselves should work half of the army in claring up the dead and of reforming portions of the camps s ill still in possession of the armies.It was decided also that instead of lockingbto all of the army for work in the emergency all prisoners sho ld be made to conduct the sanitary work while the army was given an opportunity t of looking after its own losses and renewing its positions and encampments without giving any more time tothe remaining dead at large.

It was believed with the wor work of all these prisoners it would require four weeks to clear the remaining battlefield of all the remaining dead at that and in the meantime the army could be working on in making new camps and positions and reforming their columns there.Another relief committee from Kitten Kittens Riecherts reported that over 52,345 non -combatants were also in most destitute circumstances, without food, clothing, or homes.Farm fields and late fallcrops had been totally dest o destroyed, all farming implements were damaged and the planters had nothingat hand with which to work the fields.

A relief co ittee from Big Girl Knool City reported 258,999 non-combatants destitue.Ont Other towns and villages sent in m committees during the day and as a result general vivian Hself ordered post haste shipments of supplies.The text of the message of sympathy recieved by general „ivinnanna from Emperor „ivian at Angelinia Agathia was as follows;

BIG GIRL KNOOL.
DECEMBER4TH I9I3.
GENERAL VIVIANANNA.
I wish to convey to your Excellency the expression of my deeply felt joy that the reports of the misfortunes that has befallen your armies at the recent big battle has been proven a mistake and that the defeat is only s i slight.

So o

some declare your armies had won a splendid victory but just the same I morn nour w mor mourn with you and the Army of Abbisannia over vivianis defeat and the destruction of his army and the terribleloss of life and property brought on by the battle but the immes immeasurable magnitutde of the disaster is equaled by the indomitable spirit of your army who who in its long and continued losing struggle with the adverse forces of the Angelinian rebels have proved itself to be victorious and tenacious.

EMPEROR VIVIAN.''

THE GENER AL REPLIED.

HIS IMPERIAL AND ROYAL MAJESTY:
EMPEROR VIVIAN:
Your Hairsty's message recieved or is recieved by me with much grateruiness as well as to the army and nation and in their name and behalf of our army which finally held its gound I thank you for your message of condolence and sympathy most earnestly.

GENERAL VIVIANANNA.''

3 Chapter 26

THE REFORMATION OF THE ENCAMPMENTS IN A SMALL WAY ON THE SECOND WEEK AFTER THE BATTLE CATASTROPHE. VIVIAN-ANNAS ARMY THOUGH HAVING MET ITS DOWNFALL, SHALL RISE AGAIN.
HOW THE NEW ENCAMPMENTS LOOKED TWO WEEKS AFTER THE BATTLE.....

BY the 9th of Dec. r or practically two weeks after the mighty battle, although even now all the deadwas not dismoned of yet, h had arrived many trainloads of tents and army por provisions, and all the officers of the army had recovered their courage and two or three quarters of the soldiers not too severely wounded were returning to the army, reinforcements were coming by the wholesale and new encampments were starting up although great portions of the battlefield was still covered with the bodies of the slain half hidden under the snow and the enemy were making all roads, and bird ways and also other approaches tward the main battlefield practically impassible for the purpose of preventing the christians from securing all their own dead.

Yet despite the deep snow and ever increasing cold weather many officers even at any great risk ventured out on scouting tours picking their way over great snow drifts.

The Yellow Brick Big girl Knool Road was by this time opened from Kittens „iecherts to Chamberlane, and the neighboring farm lands had been rapidly cleared of battle debris and bodies. However the stench from the burning windrows of bodies still being thrown upon many huge bonfu bonfires was nearly unbearable.The whole of „ivian-annas army was still doing its b s best to make its reformation but it was taking a long time to recover from the most terrific blow any army in the world ever could have recieved or did re receive.

''The whole of „ivianannas army has met a most severe and crushing defeat almost a total downfall but it will rise again in its might and also to be able to withstand further assaults of general Manley if properly reinforced and recieving enough an ammunition.'' said general „ichard Kindernine on the 9th of December.

At the first council of allsurviving christian generals and other officers on that afternoon two weeks after the battle for the intention of bringing order out of wars chaoes the only sentiment expressed was that though portions of the army did really hold its ground to the last, the whole in general had recieved an awful staggering and most disasterous blow, and had lost all their encampments to the enemy altogether which had been burned or captured by the victorious foe.The loss of so many lives, and militar militarty propery property is appalling so great that even now two weeks after the battle we have not formed anything like a correct estimate.With sad and aching hearts, w but with the most resolute faces the sentiment of the council was that out of the awful chaos of battle the whole army must rise and reform again or disband in disgrace and return to their homes.And that it surely does not wish to do.

The sentiment was not that of abandoning the dead and retreat in general, but rather bury, and cremate the dead, succor the needy help the wounded to recover, aid the needy of the wrecked towns and appeal for aid from all parts of the nation and then start to work resolutely to mend the broken chains of the army and also to reform the broken columns and fortify the positions near the city.In all cases the reforming of the army must begin.

In other cases the awful destruction of our army is only partial.The sentiment was Vivianannas army will, „ivianannas army must reform, recover and full filo its go gloir glorious destiny,Vivianannas army though meeting this disasterous and almost fatal downfall as disgracefulcas it was with such a inconceivable loss in general officers and men shall rise to its Holy Might again.

If we have lost everything else we still have the recovering wounded, we are recieving reinforcements daily, the men inhabatants are reinforcing us by inl enlistments and conscription, and we have the future to look to and its onlytward that future that we must depote the energies of our armies to winning this most holy of wars.We can never forget, and must not forget what our armies have suffered at this kittens Riecherts horrors, we can not and must most not forget the millions of our comrades who for their Sacred Cause gave their very lives in this most destroying of battles.But tears, grief, and rage must not forget our present duties.The blight and ruin which have destroyed so many of our towns and villages, are not beyond repair, we must not for a single moment think Big Girl Knool City is to be abandoned because of one great disaste o disasterous defeat however horrible that disasterous defeat has been.It is a time for the greatest courage and of the highest order.It is a even a time when women and even children of the stricken towns and cities, should also show the stuffthat is in them and we can make no loftier acknowledgement of the great sympathy which i the whole world is extending to us that than to answer back that after we shall have ds disposed of our seas of dead, relieve the suffering ouf o f our wounded and of the sick and destitute of the non combatants, we will bravely undertake the vast work of restoration and re-cuperation of the army which lies before us in a manner which shallconvice the world that no matter what disaster we suffer, all our armies have spirit enough to overcome misfortune misfortune and reform the selves.

In this way our armies shall prove the selves worth of the boundless tenderness which is being showered upon our whole nation in the hour of war and sorrow and world wide devastation.''

This sentiment voiced the feeling of the soldiers of the prostrate army pretty accurately for the survivors have begun to reform the columns and encampments and erect new camps at many places hundreds of thousands of tents already being seen although it was many days after that before all the battle field was clear of the dead.

A news paper war correspondent who had unusual facilities for getting at the true state of affairs summed up the situation on December 7th as follows;

''The first week of the suffering of general Vivianannas army has passed away and the extent of the battle disaster seems greater now than it did even when the one y first struck the awful blow.

t That 25,000,000 or more of the 145,000,000 soldiers of vivianannas army are dead are i or in al ost certain.Thirty five to fourty million are said to be wounied two illion mortally.And the money value of the damage to the militarty property and the damage to the property of the citizens of the various towns wrecked by the conc sion of the battle is so great that no one can attemp to estimate it.

In one thing the effects of the battle are most irreparable, most immeasureable in its dreadful results and shocking horrors.Many dead bodies still cover 6,973,244 square yards of ground and I believe most of this region can never be reclaimed from the enemy at least by the same christian army.Many towns and villages not far from Big Girl Knool is nowow in possession of the enemy.

Stunned and dazed the army of survivors of the battle have struggled and toiled desperately to clear the battle field of the dead, and to erect new o positions and encampments and make more places more hospitable for the wounded but I doubt if they even yet realize tothe full extent what a big battle they lost no disc disgracefully, or guess the suffering that will be in store for them when they fully redo recover their senses and they begin to miss their friends, comrades and lovedones who are dr dead.

However it is certain now that no matter what Vivianannas army has suffered it will be and must must be reformed under any conditions, and be as strong as before, and even now Manlwy must not be allowed to move upon the city of Big Girl Knool.But few of the generals of the army can hardly pay any attention yet to the efforts that is necessary for this restoration.To day most of the soldiers, poor poor things who are able are busy with the rough camp work especially of rebuilding, forcing prisoners to clear away battle debris, of disposing of dead still remaining, which are still being discoveredunder the snow, and snowdrifts, and of ers providing for their simplest necessities.

Some of the best officers who a few days before was the temporary resident of a splendid country manison with every militarty want provided for, may now be seen in a ragged uniform coat, making his way through the newly erected camp torejo n rejoin what is left of his camp and esteeming himself fortunatel if his regiem regiment or whatever camp he has, is still instact.

Even many officers who led their comrades gallently in the battle ,could be now seen even helping in the trying tasks, of rebuilding the camps, and in burb burning or burying of the dead and also seeing to it that the work is not being slighted.And around every one of the workers is the ruin and devastation still left by the battle.The broken and shattered forests, the scattered military articles, hundreds of broken cannons and gun cassions and fragments of wagons and materials of every description.Above all the many immense funeral pyres still burning and on which many bodies of the remaining dead are still being consumed make the battle p field a place of the most unspeakable horror, even to those whose hearts may have been heardened to the effects of all other kinds of disasters andctragedies.The horrors of the battle was followed for many of the non-combatants who fled from their homes, by a peril of hunger, exposure, n and deadly winter diseases caused by exposure.The peril also to life and property everywhere from the great hordes of Glandelinian Spy Vandals who were attracted by the conditions of the shattered christian armies to seek their prey is still at its height.The splendid response of the nation to vivianannas urgent appeal for help has removed all danger from further suffering of the army wounded and noncombatants from hunger, and exposure and the prompt action of our generals it is hoped will soon make the horrible scenes of the stripping of the soldier and officers corpses and the assaults on non- combatants no longer possible.All cities and towns within the battlr zone is still under strict martial law and now they will remain so for the protection of the inhabatans untill this war h has come to an end.

The cold weather is increasing sothat thereis no danger of a pestilence, but the danger from the victorious enemy is still great how ve however, andindeed the fear that their children may fall victims to the Glandelinian war scourage is gaining in strength and leading to an immense exodus of all the women and children, including the aged who are either seeking refuge in the strengthening christian army or crowding the few southeast bound trains to get away to the bigger c ities and other christian armies.

Added to the danger from the enca p encamped enemy in the distance is the danger at night from many raving w lves which devoured many of the dead.At night either on account of hidden enemy snipers, or wolves it is practically impossible to dispose of dead bodies and though it is said the condition is now becoming much better there is much of the evil still.

There is no danger of fevers, or diseases that could be bred under these conditions so far , on account of the cold weather now prevailing, and army physcians have issued statements calcullated to calm the apprehensions of every one in this matter.Among them are the state health officials who say as long as all the bodies are cleared away in time before the coming of warmer there is no great danger.They refer to the bloody and disasterous battle of gumbeam Creek or Deli h Delight's Junction ending at Eva Crania, which raged so early in the war which covered the fields for miles in four days with more that 23,456,789 dead and they were all got rid of before spring, and instead of starting diseases, served practically to put an end to the carelessness of generals and other officers.

The work of reforming the camps has been carried on with a fair degree of vigor and it is expected that it will be pushed much faster from now on.

The 10,000,000 laboring prisoners who have handled the dead bodie are now to be transported to their prison camps under heavy guard.Yet we will have to get up new encampments at any cost and with the greatest speed possible. If it is not done with all haste, and at the same time down well and as well as possible there willsoon be a whole army forced to seek shelter in the city and towns from the cold and winter storms, and then also the inhabatants will suffer.Such suffering and privations spread and it is not only for the sake of the army but for the purpose of the people of Big Girl Knool and in the towns and villiages outside that our generals urge above all things they want more provisions, and reinforcements.

The whole nation has been most kind in itsunusuall generiousity, and generous rep response to the appeals of the armies, from what I hear food, disin e disinfectants and everything that is needed are alrea y already here or on the way.

The whole country does not understand, it may never understand, unless its people visit the war torn regions the awful destitution prevailing there. Of all the unfortunate soldiers here no one has anything left except what is to be given them by the Relief Coj Committees.All the sold soldiers are in a condition of absolute want want thry lack everything in military material and provisions, and save for the unusual generosity of the nation our armies would be utterly without hope.

The many large gangs of prisoners still un at work under guard in the fields are still constantly finding badly mangled bodies.None of these relics of dead soldiers can be recognized, and many of them havi have nothing on them having been stripped naked by reb rebel Vandals, and without anything about them which would lead to any means i of identification.

They are disposed of as rapidly as possible but to work out in such cold weather is very difficult, and the Angelinian soldiers and prisoners engaged in it cannot endure it steadily for any great length of time.

''Pull them from under the snow as soon as seen and throw them into the bogs, trenches or into the flames as soon as taken from the snow''is the order and it is indeed carried out very effectually.''The best work in this direction was done along the Yellow Brick Big Girl Knool Road on the south side of the city of Kittens Riocharts.During the day bodies by the thousands were found at the most frequent intervals and just at sunset seventeen thou a thousand were found in the ruins of one small town.It is expected that legions more will be found to morrow as the gangs of prisoners that to day found so many thousands of dead bodies will be ordered out to look for more.

The portions of the army from Chamberlane and Ros a Town who have been here providing for order and helping in the work of clearing up the fields have become exhausted from the cold and it has been necessary to relieve them every hour.General Craddockers heavy infantry and his artillery and wagon trainsarrived to day to reinforce vivianannna.The immense exodus from Big Girl Knool and other neighboring htoo towns is still going on and the inhabitants greatly fear the approach of the enemy.Trains that can dare to run are crowded with fugitives to their fullest capacity and they make as many trips a day as the conditions of things will allow.."

"So far no calamity in the history of Abbieannia or of the whol world whole world approaches the results of the horrible battle of Big Girl Knool"such was the decision of general Schloedor of Kinderninos command after filing a secret report to the government at Angelinia Agathia in which he outlined the awful damage sustained by the armies and made confidential suggestions converning the advisabilities of continueing thoveffortsthat have been made there there annually."The army needs many more physcians, and nurses and also orderlies and nuns and prise priests"he continued"Those who would rush reinforcements to the army should also send quick lime, cl chloride of lime, carbloic Acid and all other disinfen disinfectants-and keep the non combatants under shelter.To day the battle field of Big girl Knool is a gigantic funeral pyre.From everywhere for score of miles ascends numerous large pillars of smoke as if from as many big buildings afire, and the air even at Chamberlane so far away is filled with the sickening order of burning flesh.

But above all making every one quite forgetful even in the presence of the vast fields of dead is the immense throngs of wounded that meet you in the towns and cities and villiages everywhere.Even as cold as it is powerful chemicals and disinfectants are required to prevent what this is sure to produce with the coming of summer--disease.In the face of these awful conditions the army is burying and cremating its sens of dead, buring the wreckage of the battle to disease of the dead, attempting to restore order, and bring about the refo reformation of the army.

No word of revenge or any complaints are heard.The woe which has come upon Vivianannas army istoo great for tears, or desires of revenge upon thevenemy and the dire afflictions of the soldiers in the loss of friends and relations is entirely forgotten, in the heroic fight that is being made for self preservation, and the reformation of the army and building of new camps.

Officers of the highest rank steal alo a long through the ranks of their comrades without clothing, save for a bit of torn and grimy cloth wrapped about them for a uniform of rank.Officers of a ll rank are in the same sorry plight and go about their grewsome task of clearing the fields in so stoli a manner that is it is utterly obvious that Vivianannas army has not awakened to the full horror of the situation.

It is not uncommon tohear worn and haggard officers and men refer to the loss of their friends, relatives, and their militarty property, or private property with so little evidence of concern that it would attract wonder and amaze ent were not the senses of all visitors and war correspondents and others b benumbed by the terror of the situation.It is the reaction that is feared most by those who are leading the effort to reform threform theshattered army.When it is the prisoners who will have to be removed for their own safty or God help them.All these soldiers of the Nationals are Abyssinkilians and have always been opposed to giving the Glandelinians quarter.Indeed when this work is completed and there is time to think, a heart rending wail of woe willfirst go up from the mourning christian army and gloomy desperation and fierce desires of revenge on the enemy is expected to quickly succeed the energy that is now fe manifested.The spirit of the soldiers of vivianannas Abyssinkilian army is aptly described by Colonel Calander a friend of mine. This colonellost his entire staff of officers, and none of their bodies were ever recovered.Whether their bloddis were blown to atoms, or buried under tons of earth and snow may never be known.

Terrible as was the blow the colonel was at his post with his shattered regiment the day of the second day conflict attired in a torn uniform, and through all that frightful roaring thundering screaming battle storm of Hades held his position.Ten assaults were made upon him and cut down to a man."

In his report to Angelinia Agathia city general Hindernino placed the loss of life at from 28,000,000 to 30,000,000. and disputed t disputed the idea that any other officer or general or even an estimator and others could estimate the military p loss in proper y property at that time.He predicted that it would beimpossible to estimate within $100,000,000 of the correct figures.His estimate was basedupon what was said to be better information than that of any person in the battle region, as he had made a complete tour of the battlefield on horseback, visiting every locality where ever it was possible to travel.No one else had made such an investigation.

The President of the Vic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad after looking over the situation at Big Girl Knool said the railroad losses would be about or probably more than 15,000,000 or even $26,000,000 in that region alone.

The costly bridges over the Aronburgs Run were in ruins and must be entirely reconstructed.

The Abbieannia, Bondinia, and Calverine railroad had considerable track destroyed by shell fire, while the Evangeline St Clare, and other roads such at as the Mildred Greenburg and Pandora and the Weldon lines suffered heavily.

All tracks of different lines between Chamberlane and Kittens Riecherts with all of the bridges were destroyed.....

VIVIANANNAS ARMY SIXTEEN DAYS AFTER THE BATTLE. GREAT CHANGES APPARENT. SYSTEMATIC EFFORTS TO OBTAIN NAMES OF THE DEAD OFFICERS.....

SIXTEEN DAYS AFTER THE BATTLE, general vivianannas army presented a far different appearance than the few days previous of the great conflict.Fresh batteries of artillery were in position at the newly erected breastworks and the army was greatly strengthened by reinforcements, supplies in wagon trains had come and ammunition also, and half of the number of slightly wounded were back on duty again.From the various towns and villiages one million five hundred thousand men citizens had enlisted into the army.

All kinds of military work was in operation in all parts of the rapidly growning new encampments and the eletric line and the army telegraph services had been partly resumed.

The progress made under the circumstances was very remarkable indeed.By any means it must be unterstood that not the whole of Vivianannas christian army had been put in anything like its normal condition but so very great a change in everything, so much order and system prevailed where forcml chaos reigned that general vivianannna and all the generals who had been giving him so much noble service had a good reason to be satisfied with what had been even slightly accomplished in the face of such fearful odds.

According to statements made by general vivianannna the Mayor of Big Girl Knool city generals Kindernino and others there wasxequally good reason for every one to believe that the progress of the work of reformation and strengthening of the army would from that time on be even more satisfactory for the cause..

On that morning the Tribunals began a systematic effort to obtain the names of all the high officers and generals who had been killed or wounded in the battle so that the information could be used for legal go e governmental purposes and for the benefit of those inquiring for them.

Yet the steady stream of refugees from Big Girl Knool and other cities, and towns was kept up for fear of the approaching enemy.There was not a single departing train that could dare to run, which was not packed to its platforms.Though the dreaded dreaded Angelinian insurgents did not give any signs of advancing after the unusual victory refugees continued to leave the towns for many days thereafter.

Indeed no more sorrowful sight could ever be witnessed or even imagined than the picture presented by train and wagon loads of refugees, all old men and women and poor weeping children with all the belongings they could could carry carry when the trains were pulling out strongly guarded and away from the cities or towns.

There was not a single face that was not turned toward the towns they were leaving.There was also to be seen every eye motioned with tears the pitiful pitiful sound of children crying, asking plaintive and pleading questions, and the like.

The rush from the cities and towns had been so great in the effort to leave behind the scene of the war storm and the dreaded fe foe camps that the great train known as the Aronburg Limited had not left Big Bir Girl Knool a single day without denying passage to a portion of those who wanted to get away.The partings at the railway depots were most pitiful in the extreme.Husbands so who were in the army, officers, or privates, as came to the stations and kissed their wee ing weel weel weeping children and wy wives good bey goodbye turning back to the hard work of reconstruction of the army and camps which confronted them with breaking hearts.Thousands of women overcome at the last moment were cared for by strange hands, while those who loved them, bound to the army by necessity, could do no more than watch from afar and pray.Instead of waiting untill Dorothy Gale City, and Angelinia Agathia were reached to begin work, steps were taken to care for refugees at many other various places, and during that time hundreds of thousands of cold and hungry refugees were fed, while large numbers of sick non-combatants and wounde d soldiersxalso ariving there were cared for.Many harrowing tales too many to write here in a hundred yars years of the recent condition of the shattered christian army, and of the vo violence of the battle, and of how great the victory of the enemy was, came from them.

For the army itself there was plenty of work on hand for a hundred times the force of men, and prisoners required.The area which had not yet ben reached on account of the hindering hand of the foe, embraced ten and one half miles of ground, especially by the Big Girl Knool Yellow Brick Road and near Chamberlane.There were enough provisions on had to feed fo the whole army for a month and three weeks.Howevee However there had been a great deal of trouble in properly distributing supplies, and army provisions the rush at the supply stations being so tremendous ly great and frantic, being much greater than at any time since they were opened.

It was indeed a mercy that the weather or winter w h weather since the ermormou battle had been clear and stormless and not too far below0. below.0. Had several big snowstorms and gales, and a extremely severe cold wave come, the sufferin for the army, and non-combatants would have been most terrible for the army had been without a reliable encm encamment so long, and the inhabatants of the the cities and towns had been forced to flee, and there was not a whole roof in some of the towns.There were I20,000 soldiers doing guard and police duty in these towns alone.

The forming camps along the Yellow Brick road between Rosa and Chamberlane and Delight's Villiage had been put into shape and all the soldiers there comfortably housed.There were fifteen divisionsunder general Maurice Costellioe , the Concentinian rough riders, general Ben Logan with fourty five Regiments, the Winkie Abyssinkilian Tigers under general Hendro Nero, Captian general Oscar Allenia with fourty five companies of Do dobians,, the Domdo ian Domdobian sharpshooters unde general „urner, general Burnshell with 35 Regiments of winkie Abyssinkilians,, Battry battery D. of Baldwins division, captian general G.D. Alcrove with ten divisions of Yri poligonlians and Battal ion B. commanded by captian major Bird Love Kauffmannia.

The fact that so many sullen and distempered prisoners and well as stubbornly willful clandelinian prisoners refused under any d conditions t do the work ordered was a grea t detriment to prepare the complete work of recovering all the dead on the field still remaining, but not only that but in the effort to prevent the coming danger of plague and pestilence with the coming of summer.

General „iviannana made the following st atement on December IIth.

''I have not enough provis ons to give the soldiers who are working in the erection of the camps and positions.I am not able to properly refuge all my severely wounded.I am not able to say ton single soldier in the army; ''Youwill be paid for your services to t your country's cause.I have not recieved the money to make good the pro ish.I do hope andbelieve the whole nation will understand the awful situation.We must have our new encampments erected to a finish at any cost and with the greatest s speed poss ible.The remainder of the dead soldiers of both sides must also be cleared away, and if it is not done with all haste and at the same time done well, there may be with the approach of summer a tremendous plague that will not onlydevastate our nation but also sweep the whole world with the most disaster ous results.The nation has been most kind in its response to my stricken army.From what I see , provisions disenfectants, and foods have been continuing to arive.But yet horrified and uneasy by the ea war and enemy successes almost everywhere since the war began the nation does o not cannot understand.All the people of the world cannot understand unless it could v s visit all the territory of Big girl Knool the dreadful situation prevail ing here.

VIVIANANNA. MAJOR GENERAL.''

AS to the danger of a winter pestilence, general Meldon Picknell commanding the military departments in Big Girl Knool said;

''I am personally in favor of burning as man o many of the dead as possible on top of all battle rubbish, and burning them as q ickly as possible.

With winter coming on, and with it seeming to be a severe one I do not believe there will be a war plague of any kind, but I think the things are coming to that pointwhere a winter pestilence of some kind may be possible, for instance a deadly cold sweeping thousands of soldiers and otherseway, unless prompt measures are t taken and there is nothing so effective against that as proper shelter for the army, and warmpth.One quarter of the army already, as well as hundreds of thousands of refugees are suffering severely from the Gri pe, Grippo, and severe colds, and even infections, the results of exposures.Burn everything, and burn it at once.Make even as big fires as you wish to keep yourselves as warm as possible.Set wreckage of houses on fire if necessary to procure the needed warmth.''

As three quarters of the priests in the army had been killed or seriously injured at their own duty during the battle,; devine services to the utter r regret of the army, were in the most cases suspended.There was only a few pris priests surviving in the army and therefore on the Sunday morning, Mass was celebrated at Vivianna's headquarters and a few other pla es, for all who could attend, the Vivian Girl Princesses despite their own k injuries also attending.One of the priests at the Mass to w which Violet and her sisters attended pr reached a most eloquent and feeling as well as most thrilling se mon, in which he spoke of the savage fury of the battle, tel ing ofone of his own brave deeds, then stating with sorrow in his voice f the awful disgraceful as well as crushing defeat and calmity for the christian army following, of the awful loss in lives and so on.Then after ex ressing deep sympathy with the survivors and the afflicted and dis tressed wounded, and the sorrow of the Vivian Girls, he addressed all the officers to encourage the army army and to go to work forming the camps, and reforming the army, and dispose of the rest of the dead.

That same day a military census of all the su surviving christian officers was taken to ascertain the number of them of all rank who were surviving or who had been killed or injured in the battle.

General Nero Gallagher who had been very active in all his ef orts to mitigate suffering throughout the region affected by the battle, recieved a telegram from Emperor vivian at Angelinia Agatha stating the aurthorities of that city would see that all wounded soldiers and refugees sent there, were kindly provided for.Also a message came to violet and her sisters requesting them to come to Angelinia Agatha and stay there untill they recovered as they had been severely hurt.

Dorothy Gale City was the center ofrelief distribution and also the key to Big Girl Knool.It was practically the only sure way in or out for weeks, except Angelinia Agathia, as the enemy had sso possession of all other roads.

Scores, nay hundreds of thousands of refugees passed through porot y Dorothy Gale city every day, and also stopped there. Dorothy Gale city was filledwith them but the larger number also of the wounded soldiers went right straight through to points further southeast.
